has been held that such a defence must be specifically raised supports the view that they have the capacity to contract. The considered judgment of De Villiers, C.J., in Oak v. Lumsden (3 Juta, 144), indicates certain circumstances in which, even before the Act, women were not entitled to rely upon these exceptions. And now this 20th section removes the necessity of women going through the form of specifically renouncing the benefits of their exceptions when they are parties to a bill or promissory note. But it has been argued with some ingenuity that in this case the defendant is neither the maker nor a simple endorser, and, therefore, she should not be taken to be "a party to the bill" under the 20th section. I fail, however, to see the force of this contention. The defendant has endorsed the promissory note itself, and not bound herself by any collateral agreement. Her liability, if it exists at all, arises upon the note and upon nothing else. I cannot see how she can deny being a "party" to the note—the extent of her liability as a special endorser is quite a different question. And, moreover, this objection is met by the 54th section of the Act, which says: "Where a person signs a bill otherwise than as drawer or acceptor, he or she thereby incurs the liabilities of an endorser to a holder in due course." The Magistrate was, therefore, right in deciding this point in favour of plaintiffs. The only defence remaining to be considered is the one founded on the fact that notice of dishonour was not given to the defendant on the due date of the note. Here, also, I think the judgment in the Magistrate's Court was correct. To ascertain the extent of the defendant's liability, we must look at the contract entered into by her. Had she simply signed her name, and endorsed the bill in blank without more, there might be some ground upon which to rest her claim for a discharge from liability. But it is not necessary to decide that question, as the defendant has specially endorsed on the note that she bound herself as surety in solidum and co-principal debtor. Similar words have received judicial interpretation in several cases, where they have been decided to mean that the person binding himself in this way assumes the same responsibilities as are incurred by the maker of the note. As want of presentation on the due date does not operate as a discharge of the maker, it would follow that it does not discharge the co-principal debtor from liability. The cases cited in argument on this point were not heard in this Court, but I am under the impression that they are in accord with decisions of the Supreme Court. At any rate, we have not been referred to any judgment to the contrary effect, and I see no sound reason for dissenting from them. In my opinion, therefore, the Magistrate's judgment should be upheld, and the appeal dismissed, with costs.

Maasdorp, J.: I wish to make my opinion quite clear upon one point in this case, and it is this: I do not regard the defendant, who had endorsed the note in the form in which she has endorsed it, as the maker of the note, though she may in some respects stand in the position of a maker, and incur responsibilities similar to those of a maker. It appears that under section 20 the benefit of these exceptions need not be renounced by a woman where she signs as a maker or where she endorses a note. I regard her, under section 54, as standing exactly in the same position as the endorser. Section 54 is to the following effect:

"Where a person signs a bill otherwise than as drawer or acceptor, he or she incurs the liability of an endorser to a holder in due course." This note has been endorsed by the defendant, and she has incurred all the responsibilities of endorser, but it is also quite clear that the endorser may endorse upon a note a modified endorsement—a qualified endorsement. I am, therefore, of opinion that, if her qualified endorsement had been that of a surety only, the question would still be open whether she could then take advantage of these benefits. I do not say she can, but I would like to reserve my opinion upon that point. In this case, however, after restricting her responsibilities by describing herself as surety, she then extends them by describing herself as "co-principal debtor," and it is upon those words that I hold she is liable to the full extent as an endorser. As to the question of whether she had had notice of dishonour, it has been held that where an endorsement is made by an endorser, with the full liabilities of co-principal debtor, in that case she stands in the position of the maker, and is not entitled to notice. Under these circumstances, I concur in the judgment, but I reserve my opinion upon the point as to what would have been the result if she had only endorsed as surety.

Hopley, J.: I concur in the judgment, for the reasons stated by His Lordship the Acting Chief Justice.

Order granted.

Mr. Bisset applied for the appointment of Mr. W. A. Currey as provisional trustee of the estate, the principal assets of which, it was stated, were an hotel at Robertson.

Application granted, Mr. Currey to have power to carry on the hotel and collect monthly rents as they fall due.

MANGOLD V. KEUN AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Uington moved for provisional sentence upon a promissory note for £76 4s. 7d., less £54 6s. 1d., upon a bill of exchange which was also sued upon, with interest.

Order granted.

SMITH V. LEVIN.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on an acknowledgment of debt for £30, with interest and costs.
Order granted.

ESTATE VAN DER MERWE V. HERNE-MANN

Mr. McGregor moved for provisional sentence upon a mortgage bond, the bond having become due by reason of non-payment of interest; Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Counsel said that the defendant had filed an affidavit to the effect that there were no arrears of interest due. The plaintiff had filed a replying affidavit stating that £17 odd was due by way of interest.

Order granted.

SEDGWICK V. SLABBER.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £800, due by reason of the non-payment of interest, and for property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

HAYBITTEL V. VAN DER WESTHUIZEN.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £730, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

SAPIERO V. SOLOMON.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, less £50 paid on account, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and costs of suit.

Mr. Bailly moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, due by reason of the non-payment of the interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

CHORITZ V SHOOLMAN.

Mr. Alexander moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.
Order granted.

OHLSSON'S BREWERIES V. BRADSHAW.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Witwatersrand High Court. A writ of arrest had been issued in the case in order to found jurisdiction the defendant having been resident at Camp's Bay for a time but being domiciled in the Transvaal. The plaintiffs had obtained judgment against the defendant for a sum of about £500, in the Witwatersrand High Court.

Order granted.

MARAIS V. VILLET.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on mortgage bond for £2,400, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

CAUVIN V. BONCKER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for judgment on a mortgage bond for £1,800, with interest, less £55 paid on account, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

COSTELLO BROS. V. OWBRIDGE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £103, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ARDERNE V. VAN WEENAN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

IREK V. CHRIEDON.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £530, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MALMESBURY BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. VAN SCHALKWYK.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £325, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MALMESBURY BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. VAN NIEKERK.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £750, with interest, the defendant being jointly and severally liable with his brother Lodewyk van Niekerk. Plaintiffs tendered cession of right of action against L. van Niekerk.

Mr. Gardiner read an affidavit by Nicolaas F. van Niekerk, from which it appeared that the defendant had obtained an order in the Supreme Court for a division of the farm which he and his brother had held in undivided shares, and against which the bond was standing. Subsequently, however, his brother surrendered his estate, and deponent was informed that no steps could be taken until after the third meeting of creditors. He urged that judgment on the present application should be deferred until after the liquidation of his brother's estate. Counsel submitted that the plaintiff ought to wait for his interest until the 15th July, 1906, and that the plaintiffs were not now entitled to a decree of forfeiture. The defendant had tendered his half-share of interest due. The plaintiffs had proved against his brother's insolvent estate, and they ought to wait until they saw what they got from the insolvent estate. All they could do at present was to come against the defendant for his half-share.

Provisional sentence granted, the defendant's share of the property declared executable.

ESTATE GOODSON V. LUCKE.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest and costs, and that the property hypothecated be declared executable.

Maasdorp. J., said a petition had been sent in by the defendant, and he would ask counsel to read it and mention the matter again.

Later in the day, His Lordship granted judgment as prayed.

KUPER AND GILLIS V. RAUBENHEIMER.

Mr. De Waal moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

SCHUTZ AND CO. V. PFUHL.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

BUTCLIFFE V. HIRCHFELD.

Mr. De Waal moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied judgment for £44, for jewellery sold to the defendant.

Order granted.

ESTATE WORDEN V. MILLER.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,100, with interest, less £28 10s. paid on account, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

SILBERBAUER, WAHL AND FULLER V. SULLIVAN.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £26 5s., and judgment for £39 2s. 4d. for professional services rendered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

HUTT V. BRENNING.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £250, with interest and costs, less £7 10s. paid on account, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

STROYAN V. BOTHA.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £700, with interest and costs, and that the property mortgaged be declared executable.

Order granted.

SMITH V. BOTHA.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,250, with interest and costs, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

S.A. BREWERIES V. SCHMOLLE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the sequestration of the defendant's estate as insolvent.
Order granted.

ESTATE MASKEW V. MORGAN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,550, with interest and costs, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.
Order granted.

LEEB V. VAN BEERDEN.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for £60, an amount of interest on a mortgage bond, and costs.
Order granted.

PURCELL V. MCKEY.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for £1,250, on a mortgage bond, with interest, less £31 2s. 5d. paid on account, and for £11 14s., paid on premiums, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.
Order granted.

SUTHERLAND V. OWBRIDGE.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence for £100, on a judgment of the Court, and that certain property on which the applicant had not yet obtained transfer be declared executable.

[Maasdorp, J.: There is no property to declare executable. It is clear he has not got transfer. You can take your judgment without any order as to the property at present. You can mention the matter again if you can show any precedent for such a course.]

At a subsequent stage, Mr. Van Zyl quoted from Van Zyl (page 250) to show that a special order was required to execute against the rights. This was the only property the plaintiff could proceed against, as it was the only property left.

The Court declared the defendant's right on the property executable.

HUMAN V. ROUX.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a certain acknowledgement of debt for £47 5s., less £6 7s. paid on account, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

CAPRON AND CO., LTD. V. G. AND H. ROWE.

Mr. Close was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Gardiner for the defendant, Henry Rowe Rowe.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on a bill of exchange for £255 14s., drawn by the plaintiff on George Rowe Rowe, endorsed by Henry Rowe Rowe. The other defendant had filed an affidavit, and the plaintiff wished to reply, and he asked that the matter should stand over.

Provisional sentence granted against George Rowe Rowe, and as against Henry Rowe Rowe the matter ordered to stand over until the end of June.

SMUTS V. LOUW.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence for £3,900, less £1,040, and £200 paid on account, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

GRAAFF AND ARDERNE V. HALWERISKY AND OTHERS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved to have provisional order of sequestration against the defendants' estate made final.
Order granted.

WILSON V. A.M.E. CHURCH.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved to have the provisional order of sequestration against the defendants made final.
Order granted.

WORDON AND PEGRAM V. GINSBERG.

Mr. Long moved to have the provisional order of sequestration against the defendants made final.
Order granted.

DE BEER AND OTHERS V. SCHWARTZ.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the discharge of the provisional order of sequestration and also for the discharge of an interdict, with costs of this application and previous motion.
Order granted.

ESTATE OF REED V. JONES.

Mr. Bailly moved for a provisional sentence on an acknowledgement of debt for £270.
Order granted.

CAPRON AND CO. V. BOWE.

Mr. Du Toit moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £109 16s. on two bills of exchange for £68 7s and £25 7s. 10d., and for judgment under Rule 329 (d) for £95 0s. 5d.

Order granted.

KOLBE V. KOLBE.

Mr. Roux moved for judgment on a Magistrate's Court summons for £6 17s., with interest and costs, and to have certain properties declared executable.

Defendant said he had made an arrangement to pay 2s. 6d. a week, and had paid for two weeks.

Mr. Roux said he would make enquiries of applicant's attorney.

EATON TRUST FUND V. WEIGMAN.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence for £600, less £21 paid on account, on a mortgage bond and for certain specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

HULTON V. ROBERTSON. { 1905.
June 2nd.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved under Rule 329 (d) for judgment for £30, money lent.

Order granted.

CAPE TIMES, LIMITED V. PLATEWELL BUILDERS' AND SUPPLY CO.

Mr. Bisset moved, under rule 329 (d), for judgment for £72 7s. 6d., advertising charges.

Order granted.

SCOTT V. SMITH AND WILLIAMS.

Mr. Bisset moved for judgment, under rule 329 (d), for £162.

Order granted.

JOHNSON AND CO. V. BURRILL.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment, under rule 329 (d), for £124 8s.

Order granted.

CHIAPPINI BROS. V. HARRIS.

Mr. Bayly moved for judgment for £228 17s., the purchase price of certain shares.

Order granted.

SCHOEMAN V. LATEGAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment for £140, the purchase price of certain horses.

Order granted.

WOODSTOCK MUNICIPAL COUNCIL V. DE MARILLAC.

Mr. Gutsche moved, under Rule 329 (d), for judgment for £40 8s. 4d., Municipal rates.

Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS.

Upon the application of Mr. Sutton, Lazarus Rossenstein and Bernard Rossenstein were rehabilitated, as was Petrus Jacobus Bosman.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BYRNE V. BYRNE. { 1905.
June 2nd.

Mr. Gardiner applied, on behalf of the wife, for a decree of divorce to be made absolute, for forfeiture of benefits by the husband, and for the custody of the minor children.

Decree granted as prayed, with costs.

MAIDMENT V. KENDRICK.

Applicant appeared in person, and Mr. Douglas Buchanan for the respondent.

This was an application by Henry Maidment for release from civil imprisonment, he having been attached for failing to keep up his instalments.

Applicant stated that he had absolutely no money, but, if he was allowed out, he could make £5 per week at a quarry in which he was interested.

Mr. Buchanan read affidavits to the effect that applicant had received various sums of money and could have paid.

Applicant denied this statement, and stated that his share of the profits in the quarry were being kept from him by his partner, and he wanted to get out, so as to obtain the money. If he was allowed out he would pay £4 per month.

Maasdorp, J., said he had come to the conclusion that the applicant had no property, but had a valuable contract, which he could not work while in prison. Therefore, the Court would order that the applicant be released and the order further suspended while the applicant paid £4 per month.

Ex parte EKERMAN

Mr. Gutsche applied for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Application granted.

Ex parte VAN SITTEERT.

Mr. Swift appeared, to ask for the amendment of a certain transfer and bond, and for registration of a certain contract. Petitioner had been in the habit of using only her first name Lucy, and omitting the second, Florence, and inadvertently signed a transfer with her first name only. She had now contracted a marriage, and required an ante-nuptial contract to be registered, but the Registrar refused to do so, owing to the difference in the names. An order was accordingly prayed for the Registrar to register and alter the document.

Order granted.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

CIVIL APPEALS.

RADEMEYER V. STONE. (1905.
(June 5th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Uniondale, in an action brought by the present respondent to recover commission upon a certain bill of exchange. The Magistrate had given judgment for the plaintiff in the action, with costs.

From the record, it appeared that the appellant signed a bill on the 13th November, 1904, promising to pay to the respondent, on the 13th February, 1904, the sum of £212 13s. 9d., for value received, and failing payment on due date to pay 5 per cent. commission and 10 per cent. interest, in addition to the afore-mentioned sum. The money was not paid on the due date, and the plaintiff thereupon took proceedings on the 20th February in the Resident Magistrate's Court to recover the capital amount, together with 5 per cent. interest and costs. An exception was taken at the hearing by the defendant's attorney that the bill had not been presented by a notary public as required, this having been due to the fact that the only notary in the town was absent for the day, and that the bill was thereupon presented by a householder. The exception was upheld, and the Magistrate found for the defendant, with costs. Subsequently the defendant paid the bill, with interest. On the 27th March the plaintiff brought a suit for £10 12s. 9d., being 5 per cent. commission for collection of the bill. At the hearing the defendant excepted on two grounds: (1) that the costs in the previous action had not been paid by the plaintiff, and that he was thus debarred from taking a further action; (2) that the summons did not disclose any cause of action, because it did not say that the plaintiff had incurred any expenses in collecting the bill. Plaintiff, in reply, said that he had been ready and willing to pay the costs, and he tendered the same. The Magistrate gave judgment for the amount claimed, with costs.

Mr. Burton was for the appellant, Gert Rademeyer; Mr. McGregor was for the respondent, J. T. Stone.

Mr. Burton said that the appeal was against the judgment of the Resident Magistrate upon the commission claimed by the respondent. He submitted that commission clearly must be taken to mean what commission meant in such cases, viz., commission for collecting the amount, and inasmuch as no person was instructed to collect and there was no collection, the plaintiff incurred no risk, and was consequently not entitled to charge commission. Counsel cited the cases of Steytler v. Smuts (1 Menzies, 40), Jones v. Rhynould (3 Menzies 463), and Falkner v. Behr (6 Juta 410), and submitted that it was reasonable to infer from all these cases that commission was for collection, and that it could not be recovered unless the risk were incurred. In this present case, he submitted, no risk was incurred.

Mr. McGregor contended that, the defendant having failed to pay the bill on the due date, he was liable to pay this commission. This was a specific form of damnum, and the parties had agreed to it as a sort of compensation in default of meeting the bill on the due date. It was a sort of compensation for the risk that was run and any extra trouble and labour involved when the defendant failed to meet his obligations. If the Court thought it necessary to regard the commission as being for collection, then he submitted that there was collection by the plaintiff himself and his agent.

Mr. Burton having been heard in reply,

Buchanan, A.C.J., in giving judgment, said that he thought a risk was incurred by Stone, and the Magistrate had grounds for finding the facts which he had done in this case. The appeal would be dismissed, with costs.

HARRIS V. LENTIN.

Stolen property—Bona fide holder for value.

The appellant had agreed to let H. have certain rings for half an hour, in order that he might find a purchaser for them. H. sold them to L., appropriated the proceeds and absconded.

Held on appeal, that as H. must be held to have stolen the rings, and as by our law the appellant was not bound to prosecute the thief to conviction before he could recover his property, judgment must be given for the appellant for the return of the rings or payment of £20, their value.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town in an action brought by the appellant for delivery of two diamond rings or their value, £20. The Magistrate had given absolution from the instance.

Mr. Gardiner said that the plaintiff sued the defendant in the Court below for the restoration of two diamond rings, or their value £20. The rings were obtained from the plaintiff by one Louis Hermann, late of Plein-street, who had agreed to take the rings on approval, to be returned within a half-hour if not accepted, the purchase price being £31. The rings were afterwards sold by Hermann to the defendant for £19 10s.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said he was of opinion that the plaintiff lost possession of the rings by handing them to Hermann, with permission to sell them to an un-named customer, upon which he (Hermann) did actually sell to the defendant on the same date. The plaintiff had failed to pursue the said Hermann to conviction. The defendant appeared to have purchased the rings bona fide.

Mr. Gardiner, for the appellant; Dr. Greer, for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the principal was Hermann himself.

Buchanan, A.C.J., asked why the man Hermann had not been prosecuted?

Mr. Gardiner said it was alleged that Hermann had left the country. Continuing, he submitted that after the half hour had elapsed the transaction became a sale, and that on the authority of Daniels v. Cooper (1 E.D. Courts, 174), plaintiff was entitled to follow the rings into the hands of a third party.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that, according to English law, a man who did not pursue the thief to a conviction was not entitled to recover his property?

Mr. Gardiner: I don't think that has been held in our law.

Dr. Greer submitted that the onus lay upon the plaintiff to prove that a theft had been committed of these rings, and that this had not been proved in the present case. There had been carelessness on the part of the plaintiff in entrusting the rings to the possession of an unreliable person, and if anybody was to suffer it should be the plaintiff.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The appellant in this case was a jeweller, and had certain rings in his possession. These rings are now in the possession of the defendant, Lentin. The rings were handed by the appellant to one Hermann, and he sold them to the defendant. The first question to decide is whether the appellant, Harris, has ever lost his property in the rings. Looking at what took place, I am bound to say that the appellant Harris has never lost his property in the rings. He said that he handed them over to Hermann, who said that he had a customer for them, and he was allowed to take them away for half an hour on approbation. I do not understand from the Magistrate's reasons whether he looked upon Hermann as a thief, and, therefore, held that as Harris had failed to pursue Hermann to conviction he could not recover these articles. Whatever the English law may be on the point, I do not think that principle is applicable to our law. In this case it seems impossible to prosecute the thief to conviction, because Hermann swore an affidavit on the next day and entrusted the case to the police, and the police were able to recover the property, but were unable to find the man. I think that Harris, therefore, is entitled to look upon Hermann as having stolen this property from him. The only question, but a more difficult one, still remaining to be decided is whether, under the circumstances of this case, Harris should be held to be barred by his conduct from recovering the property from a third person who holds it bona fide for value. It is true that Harris gives the rings to Hermann for half an hour, but that is the only thing against Harris. It is true that he enabled Hermann, by handing possession of the rings to him for half an hour, to go and commit a fraud upon a third person, but I do not think that is sufficient to bar Harris from recovering his property, which has been practically stolen from him. I think that the Magistrate would have been wiser if, on the facts before him, he had held that Harris was not barred from recovering his property when found in the possession of a third party. Of course, it is understood that I am deciding this case on the supposition that the third person acted bona fide. I think that defendant acted with a certain amount of negligence in buying the rings under such circumstances. The appeal will be allowed with costs, and judgment directed to be entered in the Court below for the plaintiff for return of the rings or payment of their value, £20.

Respondent's: C. Brady.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte MCNAUGHTON. { 1905.
June 5th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of James McNaughton, to look after rents accruing on certain property. Counsel suggested the appointment of Mr. H. Gibson.

Application granted; Mr. H. Gibson appointed as provisional trustee.

Ex parte MICHELS.

Mr. Sutton moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling on the defendant to show cause why the petitioner should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis.

Rule made absolute, Mr. Sutton to act as counsel and Messrs Findlay and Tait as attorneys.

Ex parte TERBLANCE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Bailey moved to have an award of the arbitrators made a rule of Court. The respondents consented.

Order as prayed.

Ex parte GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS.

Mr. Upington was for the Receivers and Dr. Rainsford appeared for the London and Westminster Bank.

Mr. Upington said the Receivers, in presenting their second report, now asked for authority to pay a dividend of 5s. in the £ on undisputed claims. The London and Westminster Bank now came in and said they appeared among the disputed claims, and they wished to be removed to the undisputed list, but there was a further difficulty, as John Walker had lodged an objection to all the debenture claims.

Dr. Rainsford read certain correspondence between the attorneys and the receivers, and submitted that the application of the bank was a very reasonable one. The receivers could not incur any liability, as the London and Westminster Bank were well able to pay any claim should John Walker succeed in his action.

Hopley, J., ordered that the Receivers be authorised to pay out 5d. in the £ on all undisputed claims, including the claim of the London and Westminster Bank, on condition that the said Bank gave a satisfactory indemnity in case of any objection to their claim proving successful. No order as to costs.

WOLFF AND OTHERS V. ESTATE VINK.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the applicants, and Mr. Van Zyl was for the respondents. Sir H. Juta said the late Mr. Vink executed a will, by which he appointed his children as heirs, and he left the usufructory to these children, with a fidei commissum in favour of the grandchildren. Last term, on the petition of certain of the grandchildren of the testator, the Court ordered their shares to be paid out on their mother waving her usufruct. Now, in this application, the lady holding the usufruct was insolvent, but the trustees were willing that she should surrender her right, because an arrangement had been made by which the children would pay all the creditors and release the estate from sequestration.

Mr. Van Zyl, who appeared for the executors, said they did not actually oppose the application, but they wished an order of Court to pay out the money.

Order granted in terms of the petition; no order as to costs.

Ex parte ESTATE LUKE.

Mr. Bailey moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to issue a certified copy of certain mortgage bond which had been, in the opinion of the executors, stolen from the office of the Eastern Province Guarantee Association at Graham's Town.

A rule nisi was granted calling on all persons to show cause why a certified copy should not be issued, one publication forthwith in both Graham's Town papers, the "Eastern Province Herald," and the "Gazette," rule returnable 13th July.

Ex parte NEWDIGATE.

Mr. Gardiner applied for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to issue certified copy of a certain bond that had been destroyed.

Decree nisi granted, returnable July 13.

Postea (July 13). Rule made absolute.

Ex parte POTGIETER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order cancelling an agreement of lease between the petitioner and one Louis Rosenthal, to whom certain property had been leased at Aliwal North. Rosenthal stayed on the property about six months, and then left for Johannesburg, where his address was unknown. The lease was for a period of ten years.

[Hopley, J.: How can a lease be cancelled on motion?]

Mr. Jones submitted that a sale had been cancelled on motion, and cited the petition of Henry Stevens (6 C.T.R. 150), and suggested the issue of a rule nisi.

Hopley, J.: I think it would be fair to give the petitioner a chance of having the matter settled on motion. If the respondent can show that he is desirous of continuing the lease, then the Court can order that the matter should be settled by action. It will be in accordance with precedent to grant a rule nisi, calling on Rosenthal to show cause why the lease should not be cancelled as prayed; the rule to be returnable on the 1st August, personal service on Rosenthal if possible, failing which, publication in the "Northern Post" and in the "Star," Johannesburg; personal service on Michael Jacobs, who might be the means of bringing this matter to Rosenthal's notice.

Postea (August 1): Rule made absolute.

In re COLONIAL ASSURANCE CO., LTD.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones said he was instructed to apply for the confirmation of the final report of the liquidators, but it had not lain for inspection on the occasion of the presentation of the first report.

It was ordered that the papers lie for inspection in the Master's office for a fortnight, and publication to be made in "Cape Times."

MAKGOSA V. FLAG MINI.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order of contempt of Court against the respondent, for refusing to comply with an order of Court to deliver up the applicant's child. When the respondent was served with the order, he informed the Deputy-Sheriff that he would not comply with it, until eight head of cattle, which were given as dowry, were returned to him. He alleged he was married to the applicant according to native customs, which the applicant denied.

Order granted, with costs.

Ex parte GROENEWALD.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (for Mr. Swift) moved for leave to pass transfer of certain property at Aliwal North to the petitioner, who was one of the executors in the estate. Sworn appraisers testified to the satisfactory price paid for the land.

Order granted authorising the executors to pass transfer to the petitioner.

TRIAL CAUSE.

PICTON V. PERRINS. { 1905.
June 6th.

Mr. Roux was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Alexander for the defendant.

This was an action brought by Stephen Picton, a grocer, of Kenilworth, to recover from Henry Perrins, in his individual capacity, and as sole proprietor of "The Peninsular Periodical and Press Company," £22 18s. 6d., balance for groceries supplied, and £78 18s. 6d. on an accommodation note.

The declaration set out that during the years 1899 to 1904, inclusive, the plaintiff sold, and the defendant bought, groceries on a running account, and on July 4, when he owed plaintiff the sum of £78 18s. 6d., defendant made in favour of, and delivered to, plaintiff a promissory note for the said sum, payable on October 4, 1904, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. On the due date of the note the defendant failed to redeem it by paying the said sum and interest, and on October 11, 1904, he induced the plaintiff, for his accommodation, to sign and deliver to him a promissory note for £78 18s. 6d., payable on January 11, 1905, made in his favour. Defendant promised to discount the said note with his bank, pay the proceeds thereof, the sum of £78

18s. 6d. to the plaintiff in settlement of his grocery account, and redeem the said accommodation note for £78 18s. 6d. at its maturity. The defendant duly discounted the said accommodation note with his bank, receiving the full sum of £78 18s. 6d. thereof. He thereupon drew a cheque for £50 and paid that sum to the plaintiff in part settlement of his grocery account. He induced plaintiff to deliver to him the promissory note made by him in plaintiff's favour on July 4, 1904, on the promise that he would pay the balance forthwith, as he had sold his house. Defendant failed to pay the balance of the promissory note for the grocery account, viz., £28 18s. 6d., notwithstanding frequent demands therefor. On January 11 defendant failed and neglected to redeem the second promissory note made for his accommodation on October 11, 1904, and plaintiff was compelled to redeem it at maturity, and to pay the defendant's bank the sum of £78 18s. 6d. Plaintiff thus became the holder of the promissory note.

The defendant in his plea denied that he owed the plaintiff on July 4, 1904, £78 18s. 6d., or any money. Defendant admitted he gave plaintiff a note, but the note was given for plaintiff's accommodation. On October 11 defendant discounted the plaintiff's note, and disposed of the proceeds as follows: £50 to the plaintiff, £10 set-off for commission due to the defendant in respect of certain shares, £15 paid to plaintiff, £3 18s. 6d. discounting charges. Defendant, in his rejoinder, set out that he had paid £1 4s. 4d. for groceries.

Evidence having been called, and counsel heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J., in allowing certain claims put in by the defendant, gave judgment for the plaintiff for £92 7s. 6d. with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP]

TRIAL CAUSES.

LEHMAN V. LEHMAN. { 1905.
June 7th.

This was an action brought by Adonis Johannes Lehman, of Wynberg, a coloured man, against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, on the ground of her malicious desertion. Mr. Van Zyl was for the plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register at the Colonial Office, gave evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Adonis Johannes Lehman said that a few years after the marriage his wife left him, and went to live in Cape Town. He had tried to get her to return home, but it was of no avail. They had had six children, of whom three survived, all being in the custody of his wife.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before the 22nd June, failing which, to show cause on the 6th July why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed.

Postea (July 6): The rule was made absolute.

GOTZE V. BERGL.

This was an action brought by Karl Gotze, of East London, against Alexander Bergl, late of Cape Town, to recover certain sums upon a promissory note. Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) was for the plaintiff; there was no appearance for the defendant.

From the pleadings, it appeared that a letter had been received from the attorneys of record to defendants, Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton, to the effect that they had withdrawn from the case. The defendant was now in England. The matter arose out of the purchase of shares in the Federal Supply and Cold Storage Company by one John Wedderburn, who was in July, 1903, in the company's employ at East London. Gotze was at that time the company's local manager. In May, 1904, plaintiff obtained provisional sentence against defendant on a promissory note for £900. In September he claimed provisional sentence on two sums of £150 and £100, and the Court then directed that he should go into the principal case. In July, 1903, Wedderburn made a promissory note for £1,150 in favour of A. Bergl; that note was signed by Bergl and endorsed by Gotze. The note fell due on the 4th October, 1903, but in the meantime, on the 24th September, there had been a renewal of the note similarly signed and endorsed for £1,000. Plaintiff, on the 24th September, paid £150 on behalf of Wedderburn and Bergl. The £1,000 note fell due on the 4th January, 1904, but again it was not met, and plaintiff then paid £100, whereupon a renewal was granted for £900. The original note was made to enable Wedderburn to get a discount, and with the proceeds of that discount to purchase shares in the company. Those shares were put in the Standard Bank as collateral security, but just before the last note of £900 had to be met, the shares were sold, and realised £594, the result being that plaintiff paid the balance owing of £305 5s. 3d. on the 5th April, 1904. The defendant's plea admitted his having signed the promissory notes, but said that he did so at the request of plaintiff and Wedderburn, and for their accommodation. He received no consideration for signing the notes. Plaintiff and Wedderburn jointly and severally agreed at the time of the said endorsement to pay the note when due, and to hold him harmless against action. He prayed, therefore, that plaintiff's claim should be dismissed.

Karl Gotze (the plaintiff) said that in 1903 he was in the employ of the Federal Company at East London. John Wedderburn was one of the officials of the company. As to the note for £1,150, Bergl first signed and witness afterwards signed. The note was signed solely for Wedderburn's accommodation. Mr. Wedderburn wanted to buy shares in the Federal. When the note matured, witness paid £150; Mr. Bergl said he was unable to pay, and he asked witness to pay the money for him. The bank would have pressed if witness had not paid the money. As to the second note of £1,000, witness paid £100 when the note became due, because Bergl was unable to manage. They all signed the renewal note of £900. This renewal note was paid by Wedderburn or Bergl. Witness paid £305 5s. 3d. Part had been paid off by the sale of the shares, and witness had to meet the balance. There was nothing said about witness indemnifying the defendant against an action. Some of the money given on the notes was for witness's accommodation. He told Mr. Wedderburn from the beginning that he could not help him with any money.

Maasdorp, J., said that witness helped Wedderburn with his name.

Witness said that Bergl signed as the first endorser. In further evidence, witness said that Wedderburn did not ask him to take up the shares. Witness told Wedderburn to get somebody else to endorse the bill as a protection, and then he would endorse the bill. Wedderburn then got Bergl to endorse the bill. When witness signed, Bergl's name was already on the bill.

Mr. De Villiers then read the evidence taken on commission.

Thomas Fraser, formerly branch manager of the Standard Bank, East London (whose evidence had been taken in Natal) stated that he pressed plaintiff for payment because he was more accessible than Bergl, the latter being in Cape Town.

The evidence of the defendant (taken in London) was to the effect that he was at East London in July, 1903, when he was approached by Wedderburn, who said that he had been unfortunate in the purchase of 1,000 Federal shares. He represented that Gotze was his greatest friend, and had means, but that Gotze had not sufficient ready money. Witness agreed to lend his name to the transaction. Witness afterwards saw Gotze, and said to him that it was only in the event of him (Gotze) being unable to pay that he (Bergl) was to be called upon to pay. Gotze and Wedderburn both assented. In signing the document, he got no consideration from either Wedderburn or Gotze. When the original note became due, he had no application to pay the £150.

Maasdorp, J., said the question was whether both were accommodating parties, and suggested to Mr. McGregor to direct his evidence towards that point.

Karl Gotze (recalled) stated he saw Mr. Bergl after he signed the note for £1,150. Witness asked the defendant if he would get into trouble for signing the note, and the defendant assured him that everything would be all right. In October, the defendant said he could not pay £150. The bill was renewed after witness had paid defendant the £100.

By the Court: Witness told Wedderburn that he would not endorse the bill until he got someone else. Bergl signed the note to help Wedderburn.

John Wedderburn said that in the first instance he approached Gotze and asked him to assist him by loan or bill to take up the shares. Gotze said he had not got the cash. Subsequently witness went to him again, and Gotze said he was prepared to assist by his name on a bill, providing he was freed from all liability. Afterwards witness said Bergl and the latter agreed to sign the bill. Witness and Bergl went to the bank together, and the matter was fixed up. He did not tell Bergl that he would only have to pay if Gotze could not. Finally, after further transactions, the bank insisted that the shares should be sold. This was done, and the proceeds were paid in against the bill.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. McGregor contended that part of the money should be regarded as having been paid at the request and on behalf of Bergl. He suggested that Gotze's name should be struck off the notes, allowing Bergl's name alone to remain, so enabling the plaintiff to sue Bergl for the amounts advanced. He submitted that in any case judgment should be for the plaintiff for half the money, with costs.

Maasdorp, J., said the difficulty was that the defendant was in default, because his attorneys had withdrawn at the last moment. They left the defendant in the case, and he was not here now. The defendant might wish to appear, and the court could not in his absence dispose of the case on a different ground to that stated in the declaration. Both parties had failed in the position they had taken up, and the question was whether the case should now be dismissed, or whether plaintiff should have an opportunity of amending his declaration by putting in a count embracing a claim on the ground of suretyship. The declaration could not be amended in the absence of the defendant.

Mr. McGregor urged that it was not an ordinary case of suretyship, and that the court could deal with it as a matter of equity.

Maasdorp, J., said he would order the matter to stand over sine die, in order that the plaintiff might ascertain what position Bergl took up—whether he had ceased to defend, or whether he wished to defend. If Bergl did nothing more, then the plaintiff could approach the court for judgment, and the court would give such judgment as it thought proper.

CAPE ORCHARD CO. v. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1905.
June 7th.
" 8th.
" 9th.
" 16th.

—Contract—Delivery.

The plaintiff company sued the defendants for damages to certain machinery resulting, it was alleged, from the negligence of the servants of the Railway department. By clause 145 of the Railway regulations, it is provided that "all damages to defect, or deficiency in a consignment must be pointed out in writing at the time of delivery, and that no claim will be admitted unless made within three days after delivery." These conditions were embodied in a consignment note signed by the plaintiffs' agent. The truck containing the goods was left by the department at a siding where none of their servants were in attendance, and plaintiffs were notified that the goods were lying there at their disposal. When they were removed by the plaintiffs, it was observed that the case containing them was broken, and the machinery was afterwards found to have been injured: no claim, however, was made on the department till nearly four months after delivery had been taken. The Court found, as a fact, that the machinery had been damaged while in the custody of the department.

Held, however, that clause 145 was fair and reasonable, and as the plaintiffs had entrusted their goods to be carried, subject to its provisions, they were not entitled to damages.

The plaintiffs also claimed damages in respect of certain cases of grapes entrusted to the defendants for carriage to Cape Town and export to Europe. The grapes were not forwarded by the usual fruit train but by a later train, and arrived too late to be accepted for carriage by the steamship company.

Held, that as the department had not contracted to carry the fruit by any special train, and as they took them to Cape Town in time for despatch by the steamer, which had refused to receive them in consequence of regulations not known to the department, judgment must be given for the defendants on this claim also.

This was an action brought against the Commissioner of Public Works, as representing the Colonial Government, for recovery of the amount of damage caused to certain machinery while being carried by rail, and for the value of certain grapes, the sale of which was prevented owing to the delay in delivery by the Railway Department. The declaration alleged that in June, 1903, the defendant undertook to safely carry and deliver certain machinery to Orchard Siding on behalf of the plaintiffs. The case containing the machinery was conveyed by rail from Cape Town to Orchard Siding, but was delivered broken and damaged. It was useless to the plaintiffs, who had to get new machinery in lieu of it. They claimed £20 in the Magistrate's Court, but agreed, at defendant's request, to incorporate the claim in their action. In regard to the claim concerning the grapes, the plaintiffs alleged that in March, 1906, the defendant undertook to carry 110 cases of grapes from Tweefontein, Slatem, to Cape Town Docks, and to deliver them within a reasonable time for export to London. Defendant received the goods, but did not dispatch them by the customary train for such traffic, and by reason of the delay the Union Castle Company, under a regulation providing that perishable goods must be stored in the cold store of the Harbour Board for 48 hours before the departure of the steamer, refused to ship them by the mail boat that week, with the result that the grapes could not be sold, as was intended, in London. Plaintiffs claimed the value of the grapes (£33).

Defendant, in his plea, stated that in the consignment note for the machinery, signed by the plaintiffs' duly authorised agent, it was agreed that the machinery should be received, conveyed, and dealt with in accordance with the terms and regulations published in the official tariff-book, clause 143 of which provided that traffic for stations such as Orchard Siding, where no one was on duty, should be left there at the sole risk of the owner. The goods were safely carried by the Railway Department, and duly delivered at the Siding on the 4th June, 1903, to, and were there off-loaded from the truck by, the plaintiffs' agent at the sole risk of the plaintiffs. It was provided by clause 145 of the regulations that all damage to, defect, or deficiency in a consignment were to be pointed out in writing at the time of its delivery, and that the Railway Department would not entertain any claim when this had not been done, and, further, that no claim for any damage, defect, or deficiency would be allowed unless made within three days after the delivery of the goods to the consignee. No damage to or defect in the consignment referred to was pointed out at the time of its delivery, and no claim in respect thereof was made before the 3rd October, 1903. Defendant did not admit that the goods were useless to the plaintiffs, and that he had been compelled to purchase goods in lieu thereof, and denied that he requested the plaintiff to incorporate the claim for £20 in his further action. Defendant admits that he undertook to carry for the plaintiff the other goods referred to, and said that it was agreed that they should be received, conveyed, and dealt with in accordance with the terms, conditions and regulations published in the Official Tariff Book of the Cape Government Railways in force in March, 1905. He denied that he undertook to deliver the said goods by any specified train or within any particular time. The goods were received by the defendant at Tweefontein Station at 10 a.m., on the 11th March, 1905, and were despatched therefrom at 3.22 p.m. on the same day, arriving at the Cape Town Goods Station at 11.45 a.m. on the 12th March. The 12th March was a Sunday, and in consequence of there being no reasonable facilities for delivery of the goods to the Table Bay Harbour Board Cold Store between their arrival and 7.50 a.m. on the 13th March, they were duly delivered at the time last mentioned, and the delivery was a delivery within a reasonable time. Defendant admitted that the goods were excluded from the mail boat sailing for England on March 15, but otherwise denied paragraphs 12 and 13; but said the regulation of the Union-Castle Co. referred to was neither within his contemplation nor within his knowledge prior to the accrual of this cause of action. It was provided by clause 154 of the Tariff Book Regulations, that the Railway Department would not be responsible for any damage arising in respect of any articles from loss of any fair, show or market, or from non-delivery within any particular time. Defendant admits the value of the grapes and the request and refusal to pay the sums demanded. Neither the defendant, nor his agents or servants, had been negligent in regard to the conveyance of, or dealing with, any of the goods referred to in the declaration, and he denied his liability to the plaintiff in respect to the sums claimed. Plaintiffs, in their replication, said they had no knowledge of the damage, nor was it ascertainable until the machinery was erected.

Mr. Struben for plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Evans), for defendant.

Mr. Struben submitted that the onus lay upon the defendants to prove that there was no negligence on their part.

Mr. Searle said he wished to apply for an amendment of paragraph 10 of the plea to alter the time of despatch to the 72 up train, which was booked to leave Tweefontein at 9.25 p.m.

Maasdorp, J., consented to allow the amendment.

Mr. Searle contended that the onus of proof was upon the plaintiff, because the department did not admit having received in a good condition.

Maasdorp, J., held that upon the pleadings the plaintiff should commence the case.

Lester MacGuire Dicey, one of the managing directors of the plaintiff company, spoke to the damaged condition of the generator on its arrival at Hex River Station. Mr. Patterson, a clerk at the station, came up at Hex River, and told him that the 7.4 up train would be used for fruit each day. There was a notice in the working time-table that this particular train would be used for fruit. The train passed Hex River about 12.15 each day. He knew the train ran on the day in question, because they shipped other goods by it.

Cross-examined: Witness would endeavour to produce the working time-book from which he obtained his information. It was a book supplied to the firm similar to the one produced marked "private, working time-book." He would be surprised to learn that grapes belonging to other large shippers had been kept in the Cold Storage for 8 or 9 days. He should not like any of the company's grapes to be kept in the Cold Storage, so long before being despatched by the mail steamer. He took no steps to sell the grapes after he found that they had missed the steamer. He had heard that the grapes were sold a month afterwards. He did not make any attempt to sell them at any time, because he thought the grapes would not make more than the price of the cases, 6d. each.

Mr. Searle: That would be 50s., and yet these grapes made, a month later, about £8.

Witness: It might have been on a bare market.

By the Court: The fruit was consigned to the Harbour Board Cold Store. It was an arrangement made between the Harbour Board and the Fruit Exporters' Association that all fruit should remain in the cold store for 48 hours to cool before being shipped.

Alfred W. B. Nicholson, clerk in Messrs. Spilhaus's office, stated that when he received the receipts from the ship for the machinery there was nothing to show that the machinery had been damaged.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: According to the tally and manifesto the machinery left the ship undamaged. If there had been any damage it would have been mentioned.

Frank Robb, secretary to the Harbour Board, said the Railway Department really took over goods at the Docks, but the Harbour Board loaded the goods from the ship, and brought the trucks to the exchange siding at the bottom of Adderley-street. When goods were damaged they were set aside and examined by the representative of the consignee, and the ship representative. If there was no mark on the receipt to that effect, the goods were not damaged. As regarded the grapes it was the practice of the Union-Castle Co. to refuse shipment of fruit unless it had been cooled in the cold storage for 48 hours. Fruit arrived at the store every day, and men were at the cold storage on Sundays.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He could not say whether the goods were "lightered" or landed from the ship. He had been told, however, they were "lightered." The fruit would have been accepted on its arrival. As soon as the fruit was put in the cold storage the Harbour Board acted in the capacity of agent to the shipper. The fruit was sold by the Harbour Board on the market on May 6, and realised £7 15s. 9d. The fruit was kept two months in the cold storage, and it had evidently deteriorated.

Re-examined by Mr. Struben: The fruit could have been sent to any cold store outside the docks. In 1903, the custom was to have a separate damaged list, and not a discrepancy list.

Walter Hudson, manager of the engineering department of George Findlay and Co., who had the contract to erect the general machinery at Hex River, stated he saw the machine in the case on the side. The case had been considerably damaged. It was not usual to take a machine of that description to pieces before starting it. Towards the end of September, he saw the machine, and noticed the pulley side fractured, which he attributed to the case falling on that side.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The machine could have been examined in a day, but he noticed no external damage on the first occasion.

Mr. Ohlsson, in the employ of the Orchard Company, stated that when the case containing the machinery was being lowered from the truck he saw that it was broken. The case was handled carefully.

N. Shaw, who was in charge of the machinery when it was erected, said he superintended the "off-loading." When the tarpaulin was taken off the truck he entered the truck, and found the case smashed over the part where the pulley was. When he went up to Hex River in September the machine had been placed in its bed. He started the machine working, but after an hour or two it was found that oil was leaking and the bearings getting hot. On taking the machine to pieces, it was found that there was a slight crack in the castings.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The machine was carefully lowered from the truck. There was considerable risk in off-loading such a machine.

By Maasdorp, J.: There were no railway officials present when he off-loaded.

J. E. Watkins, wireman employed by Messrs. Findlay, said he helped to "off-load" the machinery, which was done with proper care. The case was smashed at one end.

John Bell, market agent, said he was well acquainted with the sale of fruit in Cape Town. There was not much sale of grapes in Cape Town in March. Grapes were scarcer, and therefore more valuable in May.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: After they had been kept in storage for three weeks, the grapes would deteriorate rapidly.

Edward Kitley, stationmaster at Hex River, said in February he gave instructions that a truck was to be put on specially for fruit. He told Mr. Dickey that a truck for fruit would be sent to Cape Town every day for the early morning market and to the docks by the 74 train.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He never made a special agreement with Mr. Dicey outside the consignment note. He had not acted outside his instructions.

Mr. Struben closed his case.

Patrick Burgin, in the employ of the Railway Department, said that from the facts of the case he believed that the claim was not a bona-fide one. He was of opinion, if, by rough shunting, the case was broken, the head part of the truck would have suffered. He could not discover any rough handling from Worcester onwards—that was his section.

Cross-examined by Mr. Struben: He made his report two and a half months after the letter from the department.

Frederick Riley, guard of the train from Worcester to Touw's River, stated that the truck was taken on to De Doorns and sent back because the Orchard Siding was full. Witness had to report anything he found broken. Although it might not really be his fault, he would be responsible for rough shunting. The only shunt was at De Doorns.

Cross-examined by Mr. Struben: The delay of 214 minutes was caused through witness having to wait for another train. It was unnecessary to make a remark on his journal that the Orchard Siding was full.

O. Hansen, in charge of the Harbour Board Cool Chambers, noted instances where fruit had been sent to England after being stored in the chamber over a week.

Wm. John Ingleby, who was on duty at the Docks, stated that the train arrived about two hours late.

Cross-examined by Mr. Struben: He did not expect any consignment for the cold store as late as that.

By Maasdorp, J.: The truck was the only one that arrived by the train for the Docks.

James Patterson, sectional clerk in the Chief Traffic Manager's Office, who saw Mr. Dicey, said that he merely asked the latter for suggestions with regard to a better co-operation with the fruit-growers for a more perfect service.

Robert Barber, at present acting chief clerk to the present Traffic Manager, said that he would be aware of any arrangement for the carriage of fruit, if it interfered with the service. He knew of no specific arrangement with the Fruit-growers' Association.

Thos. Mundy, in the employ of the Railway Department, produced the time-book, showing that the 72 up arrived at 11.50 a.m. on March 12th. The train was booked to leave Tweefontein at 9.25 p.m. The 74 up was due to leave Tweefontein at 1.1 p.m., and due to arrive at Cape Town at 12.25 a.m.

George Burgess, foreman at Tweefontein Station, stated that the loading of the grapes was completed about 10 o'clock on the morning of the 11th March. By an oversight, the truck was not put on to the 74 up. He attributed the oversight to an insufficiency of staff at the time.

Cross-examined by Mr. Struben: It was rather a serious oversight.

Joseph Baker, clerk in the employ of the Harbour Board, stated that he drew attention to the 110 cases that arrived on Monday, but he could not get the shipping order for Wednesday. When fruit was put in the steward's chamber, it was done through an arrangement between the consignors and the shipping company.

James Patterson, of the Railway Department, said it was quite understood that fruit should come up by the special train. The 48 hours rule with regard to placing fruit in the cold storage he did not know.

Cross-examined by Mr. Struben: Mr. McEwen, General Manager of the Cape Government Railways, tried to assist the fruit-growers, and gave instructions that fruit for export was not to be delayed in delivery.

Thomas Gilham, guard in the employ of the Cape Government Railways, gave evidence as to carefully carrying the truck of machinery from De Doorns to Orchard Siding.

Alexander James Robb, Assistant General Manager of the Cape Government Railways, stated he was a member of the Harbour Board since the 8th June last. The 48 hours rule with regard to cold storage he had no knowledge of until a few minutes ago.

This closed the evidence for the defendants.

Mr. Struben read the evidence, taken on commission, of Mr. Persse, secretary to the Fruit-Growers' Association, which set out that special arrangements were made with the Railway Department and the Harbour Board for the storing and dispatch of the export fruit. The fruit for export was usually plucked a trifle green.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (June 16th).

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiffs, who are a joint stock company, carrying on the business at Hex River of growing, selling, and exporting fruit, seek to recover from the defendants the sum of £20, as damages suffered by them through injury, caused by the defendants' negligence to a machine belonging to the plaintiffs, which the defendants had undertaken to carry by rail from Cape Town to Orchard Siding. The defendants deny that the injury to the machine was the result of their negligence, and plead further that it was provided by clause 145 of the Government Railway regulations that all damage to, defect or deficiency in a consignment was to be pointed out in writing at the time of its delivery, and that the Railway Department would not entertain any claim where this had not been done, and, further, that no claim for any damage, defect, or deficiency would be allowed unless made within three days after the delivery of the goods to the consignee. The defendants say that the plaintiffs failed to comply with this regulation. The plaintiffs in their replication admit that they failed to give notice in terms of the regulations, but state that the damage could not be ascertained until the machinery was erected and worked, and that notice was given within a reasonable time after the injury was discovered, and they further plead that the regulation is unreasonable and bad. It appears that the machine in question was landed at the Cape Town Docks on the 2nd June, 1903, and passed into the hands of the Harbour Board, who acted in the matter as the agent of the plaintiffs, and there is abundant evidence to show that the case was in good order when received by the Harbour Board. The Board in the execution of their duty placed the machine upon a railway truck, and delivered the truck into the custody of the defendants at the Exchange Siding in the Cape Town Railway Station. Up to that point the Harbour Board acted as the agents of the plaintiffs, and if any damage had been done to the machine while in their custody, the defendants would not be responsible for the injury. I am satisfied upon the evidence of Mr. Robb, the responsible officer of the Harbour Board, that the parcel was in good order, when delivered to the defendants. Robb states that if the injury to the box containing the machine had occurred while the articles was in possession of the Harbour Board, the matter would have been inquired into at once, and there is nothing upon the railway consignment note, or in the other evidence adduced to prove that the parcel was at that time otherwise than sound and in good order. On the 3rd of June, the truck was taken on by the Railway Department, and on the 4th it was taken past Orchard Siding, which was full, to De Doorns Station. On the 5th, it was brought back to Orchard Siding, where it was left at the disposal of the plaintiffs. At Orchard Siding no railway officials are stationed whose duty it is to unload the trucks in order to make delivery of goods, and I am of opinion upon the construction of the 143rd regulation that when the truck was left at Orchard Siding, the responsibility of the defendants ceased, and delivery to the plaintiffs was complete. The question to be decided is whether the injury to the machine occurred before or after the truck was left at the siding. Three witnesses, Paulse, Shaw, and Wilkins, were called for the plaintiffs, who stated that they assisted to take the case containing the machine from the truck, and they noticed that the case was broken before it was taken off the truck. None of the defendants' witnesses had any knowledge of the condition of this case, during transit or upon its arrival at Orchard Siding. And although we have the statements of two of the guards that while they were in charge the work of conveyance and shunting was done in so careful a manner that nothing occurred which could account for an injury to all appearance the result of a severe blow, I cannot lose sight of the fact that there is no evidence relating to the time when the truck stood at De Doorns. Upon the whole of the evidence, I do not feel justified in doubting the truthfulness of Paulse, Shaw, and Wilkins, and I come to the conclusion, notwithstanding the difficulty of accounting for the injury, that the parcel was in good order when it came into possession of the defendants, and was damaged when delivered at Orchard Siding. From the description of the damage to the side of the case, I have no doubt that the violence which broke the case also damaged the machine through the severe impact on the pulley. Upon discovery of the injury, the plaintiffs, on the 5th of June, sent for Hudson, who found the box standing in a shed belonging to the plaintiffs, the lid was off, and Hudson, who made a casual inspection, did not then detect the injury to the machine. In his opinion, it would have taken a fortnight to ascertain the injury after the machine was removed from the siding. The machinery was not erected until September, 1903, when Hudson, who is in the employ of George Findlay and Co., made an inspection, and on the 29th September he gave his written report, which has been put in. On the 3rd of October, the plaintiffs sent in their claim to the defendants. Apart from the conditions contained in the regulations, I am of opinion that the defendants would have been liable for the damage suffered, and the question remains whether they are absolved by the conditions contained in the regulations. Regulation 145 reads as follows: "Claims for loss and damage. All damage to, defect, or deficiency, in a consignment must be pointed out in writing at the time of its delivery, and the department will not entertain any claim when this has not been done. All claims giving full particulars of the loss or damage must be sent in to the Traffic Managers. No claim for any damage, defect, or deficiency will be allowed unless made within three days after the delivery of the goods to the consignee." When the goods in question were delivered to the defendants, the plaintiffs through their agents agreed, as appears from the consignment note, "that this consignment is to be received and to be conveyed and dealt with in accordance with the terms, conditions, and regulations published in the official Tariff-book in force at this date, with which we acknowledge ourselves to be acquainted." There is no doubt upon the evidence that in this case the plaintiffs were, in fact, acquainted with the regulations in the Tariff-book. Seeing that the goods were delivered on the 5th of June, and notice given and claim made on the 3rd of October, it is clear that the regulations were not observed. But the plaintiffs contended that the regulation is unreasonable and bad, and not binding on them. It was held in a case decided by the High Court of the Transvaal that the question of reasonableness does not arise where the regulations are expressly embodied in the contract between the parties, as was done in this case. The same opinion was expressed by Bramwell B. in the case of Lewis v. the Great Western Railway Company (20, L. J. Exch., 430); and I am myself inclined to take that view, but it is unnecessary to decide that point of law now, because I am perfectly satisfied that the regulation is reasonable. A similar condition was held to be reasonable in the case of Lewis, already cited, where Chief Baron Pollock said: "It is reasonable that the complaint should be made at once, so that the railway company may be in a position either forthwith to furnish proof that the goods were duly delivered, or if there be any persons in their employ guilty of want of due care or honesty, they may be got rid of, and not kept longer in the employ of the company, causing the loss of goods entrusted to their care. This is only reasonable and just." It seems to me that the present case fully illustrates the reasonableness of the rule, because if the damage to the box had been pointed out to the defendants before it was removed from the truck, as might have been done, all this litigation would have been saved. After a lengthy trial this Court has come to the conclusion that the damage occurred while the box was in the custody of the defendants; but in October, when the claim was made, the defendants, whose duty it was to ascertain if it was well founded, were hardly in a position to collect the evidence which was considered necessary to decide the question in this Court. I come to the conclusion that the regulation is reasonable, and formed part of the plaintiff's contract, and that they were not entitled to bring forward their claim after the lapse of the time stipulated in the regulation. Upon this part of the case judgment must be given for the defendants. Upon the other branch of the case it appears that on Saturday, March 11, 1905, the plaintiffs delivered to the defendants 110 cases of grapes at the Tweefontein Station, for carriage to Cape Town, for the purpose of their being dispatched by Wednesday's mail steamer to England. These cases were loaded in a truck, which the plaintiffs expected would be attached to a goods' train passing Tweefontein at 1 o'clock on Saturday afternoon: it was also the intention of the defendants' servants to attach the truck to that train.

There was no express agreement that this should be done, but it was in the ordinary course of business to send fruit by the 1 o'clock goods train. The grapes were intended for export by the next mail steamer, and that fact was well known to the defendants' servants, who received the goods for carriage, and I think it should be taken as part of the undertaking on the part of defendants' servants that they would use due diligence to deliver the grapes in Cape Town in time to be shipped. Under ordinary circumstances, fruit arriving at the ship's side on Tuesday afternoon would be in time for shipment. By some oversight the truck containing the grapes was not sent on by the 1 o'clock train, which arrived at Cape Town on Sunday morning, but was dispatched on Saturday evening, and arrived here at about midday on Sunday, and on Monday morning the grapes were delivered to the Harbour Board, acting as the plaintiff's agents. There was ample time to have the grapes placed on board the mail steamer if no special obstacle existed. But the plaintiffs say there was a further duty under the contract imposed upon the defendants. It appears that the Union-Castle Company refuse to take on board and place in their cool chamber any fruit which has not been in a cool chamber for at least 48 hours immediately prior to being received on board. That would necessitate the fruit being in a cool chamber by Sunday evening in order to be shipped on Tuesday evening, the latest time for receiving fruit on board. The plaintiffs say the defendants by their contract undertook to deliver the grapes to the Harbour Board on Sunday morning, in time to allow of their being placed in the Harbour Board's cooling chamber before Sunday evening, and through their default the grapes were only delivered on Monday morning, in consequence of which the ship refused to take them. It is quite clear that there was no express agreement to deliver this particular consignment of grapes within the time above mentioned, but it was contended that the defendants were fully aware of the ship's rule, and made their contract subject to it, and undertook as an implied condition to carry the goods so as to meet the rule. I do not say now that if any servant of the Railway Department had made an express contract in those terms that it would have been binding, in view of the authorised regulations on the subject, nor do I find that knowledge of the ship's rule would have introduced the above-mentioned condition as an implied agreement. It is unnecessary, in the view I take of the case, to decide those questions. In my opinion, the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the defendants knew of the ship's rule, and there is positive evidence given by reliable witnesses that they did not. I come to the conclusion that when the defendants were prepared to deliver the goods to the Harbour Board on Sunday afternoon they had performed their contract, and that the delivery on Monday morning was a good delivery within the terms of their contract. I have said that it appeared to me that at most there was an undertaking to deliver before the mail steamer left, but it must not be taken that I decide that such an undertaking on the part of any servant of the Railway Department is binding upon the defendants, in view of the conditions contained in their regulations, especially in their regulation No. 154, in force at the time. Judgment is given in both claims for the defendants, with costs.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

GABIER V. AJAM. { 1905.
June 8th.

Service, affidavit of—Notice of bar.

Judgment cannot be granted under Rule 319, unless an affidavit of service of bar is produced. The mere service is not sufficient.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that there was no affidavit of service of bar upon the defendant.

Ordered to stand over.

Later in the day, Mr. Buchanan presented an affidavit by the plaintiff's attorney, stating that he had sent a notice of bar to the respondent at her address.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the service of bar was not sufficient. The matter must stand over until Thursday next, pending production of an affidavit of better service.

FRASER AND CO. V. UDWIN BROS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £267 12s., goods sold and delivered, with interest, a tempore moræ, and costs. Order granted.

VAN ZYL V. MORITZ

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment under rule 329 (d) for £100, being amount paid at the special instance and request of the defendant. Order granted.

MURRAY, WRIGHT AND MOLTEÑO V. PORTER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment under rule 319, in terms of declaration for account of moneys collected for plaintiff as agent, for debate and payment of amount found to be due upon debate.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the case would come under Rule 329d.

Judgment granted in respect of summons, as prayed, account to be rendered within 14 days.

DUNELL, EBDEN AND CO. V. NIEBURG.

Mr. Swift moved for judgment under rule 329 (d) for £1,971 4s., balance of account for goods sold and delivered, with interest, a tempore moræ, and costs. Order granted.

DAVIES BROS. V. ISRAELSOHN.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under rule 319 for £45, balance of rent due, with interest, a tempore moræ, and costs. Order granted.

Dr. Greer said he took it that the temporary interdict against the goods in the shop would continue until the writ of attachment was issued.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that execution could be taken out at once, and the interdict would still stand.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied for the discharge of Juliana Pauline Vogts and for her reinvestment with the estate, the creditors having accepted an offer of composition.

Order granted.

SAVAGE AND SONS V. ESTATE ULYATE.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved for leave to appeal to the Privy Council on behalf of Savage and Sons, who were defendants in the action.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (for the respondent) said that the petition did not set out that the matters at issue amounted to £500.

Sir H. Juta: The amount is between £3,000 and £4,000.

Leave to appeal granted on the usual terms, subject to applicants filing an affidavit that the amount in suit was over £500.

KAROO BORING CO V. HALL.

Mr. Lewis moved for leave to purge default, and to file a plea. Mr. Upington was for the respondent.

Mr. Lewis: All that the applicant company can be required to show is a reasonable cause for their default, and that they have a bona fide defence. The plaintiff objects that defendants' affidavits do not enter sufficiently into details. They certainly do show that defendants have a bona fide defence.

Mr. Upington was not heard.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The plaintiff (Hall) took out a summons on the 27th February, and after that defendant tendered £112 odd. On the 15th April defendant was informed by plaintiff's attorneys that the tender would be accepted provided he paid costs to date. Defendant did nothing on this, and thereafter on the 4th May, he was served with notice of bar, not having filed his plea, and on the 9th May judgment was taken against him. He says that at that time he was travelling about, and was unable to attend to the matter in East London. He had had ample notice of the case, and he admitted a debt within £9 of the plaintiff's claim, and made a tender. The tender was accepted, and defendant did not carry out his arrangement. I certainly think there are no bona fide grounds shown for the application, and the Court will therefore make no order, applicant to pay costs.

Ex parte POWRIE.

Mr. Sutton moved for the appointment of Mr. F. R. Elliott as trustee under an ante-nuptial contract.
Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ELLIOTT.

Mr. Sutton moved for the appointment of Mr. F. R. Elliott to be trustee under an ante-nuptial contract.
Order granted as prayed.

PEARSON V. WERNBERG AND DECKER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for an order of attachment, by reason of the respondents' contempt of Court in failing to obey an order to pass transfer of certain property at Retreat, or to refund the amount paid by the applicant to the respondents.

Order of attachment granted against Wernberg, and costs against both respondents.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that there would be no order of attachment against Decker, as he had not been served with notice of the application.

VAN DER HOFF AND VISCHER V. BECHUANALAND ESTATE SYNDICATE.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved for leave to sue by edictal citation for transfer of certain property, or in the alternative for £1,000 damages.

Order granted, attaching a certain farm ad fundandam jurisdictionem, citation to be returnable on the 15th August, costs to be costs in the cause.

VADASZ V. VADASZ.

Mr. Burton moved for the petitioner (wife of the respondent) for an order for two minor children to be delivered up to her. Dr. Greer was for the respondent.

Mr. Burton said that a divorce suit was pending between the parties, in which the present applicant was the defendant. She declared that she was absolutely innocent of the charges made against her. The children had in the meantime been removed to Nazareth House, by direction of their father.

Dr. Greer applied for a postponement of the application.

Application postponed until the 15th inst., applicant in the meantime to have access to the children at all reasonable times.

Ex parte WILLIAMS.

Mr. Sutton moved for petitioner for leave to sue in forma pauperis for a decree of divorce against his wife.

Rule nisi granted, to be returnable on the 15th inst.

Postea (June 15th). Rule made absolute.

HERMANN AND CANARD V. DA SILVA AND RODRIQUES.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the rule nisi to be made absolute directing respondents to pay over certain money.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte MORUM BROS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for leave to sue by edictal citation, Oliver Charles Hallam for a debt of £96. Petitioners were at Mount Fletcher, and Hallam was now believed to be in Natal.

Leave to sue granted, personal service, failing which citation to be published once in the "Kokstad Advertiser" and "Natal Witness," and to be returnable on August 1.

VAN RYN WINE AND SPIRIT CO. V. LEDERMAN.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute, restraining the respondent from stocking, buying, or in any way dealing in, Colonial wines and spirits, except those purchased direct from the petitioners, and from advertising the Colonial wines and spirits of Green and Co., or any other persons except the petitioners. It appeared that the respondent was the lessee of a certain bottle store at the corner of Harrington and Commerical streets, Cape Town, and that the applicants alleged that they had a servitude on the premises binding the lessee to purchase Colonial wines and spirits for them. Petitioners proposed to institute an action to enforce the servitude.

Mr. Upington read a replying affidavit by Hyman Lederman (the respondent), and also an affidavit by Mr. Archibald Bultitude, of Messrs. Ohlsson's Ltd. It was stated in the affidavits that Lederman succeeded Isaac Purcell as lessee of the premises, and that the evidence of the latter would be important. He was, however, absent from the Colony, and respondent asked for a postponement. Purcell had a letter from the petitioners, which was of great importance, and varied the original agreement.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the rule would be made absolute, pending an action to be forthwith instituted by the applicants, costs to abide the result. He added that it was a question for the applicants whether Ohlsson's Breweries, Ltd., should not be joined with Lederman as co-defendants.

TRUSTEE TORQUE ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING CO. V. HERRON.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) moved for a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of Walter Bernard Phelp, of Cape Town, and John Edward van Stittert Neale, late of Cape Town, and now of Johannesburg.

Mr. Alexander (for the respondent and plaintiff in the action) opposed the application so far as Mr. Neale was concerned.

Sir H. Juta said that this case was quite unique. The pleadings showed that it was essential that Mr. Neale's evidence should be preserved. It appeared that the Torque Company had certain rights with the Exhibition people to carry out the electric light installation, and this Torque Company was a partnership, in which the defendants alleged that the plaintiff was a partner. Plaintiff denied that. Then that partnership was made over to a company called the Neale-Herron Company. These two gentlemen held all the shares, and they formed a company to carry out this contract with the Exhibition. The Torque Company and the Neale-Herron Company occupied offices in the same building. The Torque Company contracted all the debts, and the Neale-Herron Company received all the receipts.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: A very good arrangement.]

Mr. Alexander submitted that it had not been shown on the affidavits that there was any danger of Neale's evidence being lost.

Application granted, the evidence of Mr. Phelp to be taken in Cape Town before Mr. Advocate Giddy, K.C., and of Mr. Neale to be taken in Johannesburg before Mr. Advocate Percival Smith.

Ex parte ESTATE SCHOOLMAN.

Mr. Alexander moved for the appointment of Mr. A. N. Foote to be provisional trustee in this estate, with power to carry out repairs to the property, and collect the rents.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte BALL.

Mr. Swift reported that he had certified in reference to this matter, which was an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis for divorce.

Rule nisi granted, to be returnable on the 29th inst.

Postea (June 30th).

Mr. Swift moved on the petition of Christina Jinetie Ball for the rule nisi calling upon her husband, Walter Thomas Ball, East London, to show cause why she should not be granted leave to sue in forma pauperis for divorce, to be made absolute.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: You are not asking for any money from defendant?]

Mr. Swift: We simply ask for leave. I may say that a letter has been received from defendant admitting the adultery.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: (reading the letter): What does he mean by this sentence: "It will also be of interest to know that the children were placed on the scaffold with me in Cape Town, and they were hatless, bootless, and in a shocking condition."]

Mr. Swift: I don't understand that. The children, I understand, are living with the wife's parents at Worcester, or somewhere up-country.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: One thing that he says apparently is that the woman had money in the Savings Bank, and she has withdrawn it. She now says that she is, apparently, destitute.]

Mr. Swift: Yes. She, at present, I believe, is a housemaid or servant of some sort in Cape Town.

Rule made absolute, Mr. Swift to act as counsel and Mr. P. M. Cloete as attorney in the forthcoming trial.

BROUGHTON V. BROUGHTON.

Mr. Uppington moved for an extension of the return day of a citation calling upon the respondent to show cause why the petitioner should not be granted a decree of divorce.

Return day of citation extended until the 1st August, publication to be as directed in the original application, and trial to be set down for the 11th August.

MOLLER V. WATERMEYER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence upon a mortgage bond for £310, the bond having become due by reason of notice, and for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. Gardiner appeared on behalf of the respondent, and moved for an amendment of the bond to strike out the clause relating to three months' notice being given. Petitioner (F. C. Watermeyer), in an affidavit, said that Mr. Moller agreed to let him have the bond as long as he paid the interest, and that he entered into the agreement without knowing of the existence as to conditions of notice.

Mr. Jones read a replying affidavit, in which it was stated that the applicant was an experienced man of business, and that the condition was quite usual.

Mr. Gardiner said that Mr. Moller was trying to take advantage of the error of the applicant in signing under the impression that the bond embodied the agreement that he entered into with Mr. Moller.

Mr. Jones said that Watermeyer had deliberately signed a document with his eyes open, and which he must have been presumed to have read. Mr. Moller was no party to the signing of the document, the bond being signed by Mr. Watermeyer and Mr. Moller's power of attorney. He submitted that the applicant had mistaken his remedy, and that such a document could not be amended upon motion. The applicant should proceed by action.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that in the absence of any dispute as to the verbal agreement entered into between the parties, there was nothing on the affidavits to prevent the Court now dealing with the matter. He failed to see any necessity for going into an action. An order would be made for the amendment of the bond by striking out the words "and shall be obliged" and "or receive." The application of Watermeyer for an amendment of the bond would be granted, but no order would be made as to costs in this matter. The application of Moller for provisional sentence would be refused, with costs.

Ex parte ROOS.

Mr. Sutton moved for the appointment of petitioner as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of Dorothea Louisa Pfuhl, widow.

Order granted as prayed, costs to come out of the estate.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

REX V. DE WET AND OTHERS. } 1905.
June 9th.

Mr. Burton moved, on behalf of Theunis de Wet and five others, who are awaiting trial on charges of murder and assault at Villiersdorp, to be admitted to bail.

Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

It appeared that the prisoners had been committed for trial at Swellendam on a charge of assaulting one John Rooi, so as to cause his death, and of assaulting two others. The prisoners were sent to the gaol at Caledon, and an application for bail made to the Resident Magistrate at Caledon had been refused.

Mr. Burton said that there would be prejudice to the prisoners in the preparation of their defence if they were detained in custody pending the trial.

Mr. Nightingale said that the position of the Attorney-General was that the application was premature, because the matter was at the present moment being further investigated.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: You mean the preparatory examination is to be reopened?]

Mr. Nightingale: That is so. Counsel went on to say that he was quite prepared to say that the evidence was such that De Wet might reasonably be admitted to bail. He thought that a bond of £100 would be sufficient in that case. He objected to the granting of bail in regard to the other prisoners.

Mr. Burton said that there was really no evidence against the other prisoners in reference to the alleged assault on the man who died, except against the prisoner Zimmerman.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the application would be postponed until the conclusion of the preliminary examination, when it could be renewed if the Attorney-General determined to proceed with the indictment of the prisoners. De Wet would be admitted to bail, to the satisfaction of the Resident Magistrate of Caledon, in his recognisance of £100, and one surety in a like sum. The application so far as the other prisoners were concerned, would be postponed sine die, until the conclusion of the preparatory examination.

Ex parte THE INSOLVENT ESTATE SEAGULL.

Mr. Gardiner applied, on behalf of the trustee in the insolvent estate Seagull, for an extension of the commission already granted to take the evidence of certain additional witnesses, so as to include the clerks employed at four of the local banks already mentioned, the manager and accountant of the Robinson Bank, and the trustee in the insolvency.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said he thought the application was too sweeping. Power would be given to examine the manager and accountant of the Robinson Bank, and the trustee in insolvency (Mr. J. D. Simons). If others were desired to be included, a further application should be made to the Court.

HIGSON V. HIGSON.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, brought by the wife against her husband, William R. Dixon, of Cape Town, on the ground of his unlawful and malicious desertion. Mr. Russell was for the plaintiff; there was no appearance for the defence.

Mr. Russell read the evidence of the plaintiff, taken on commission in England, which was to the effect that her husband had not contributed to the support of herself and children since 1899. Although he had been in South Africa for some years, he had never asked her to join him.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 31st August, failing which, rule to issue calling upon the defendant to show cause on the 16th October why a decree of divorce should not be granted, personal service to be effected.

FOX V. FOX.

This was an action brought by Walter Fox, of Cape Town, and late of Kimberley, against his wife, Evelyn Frances Fox (born Glynn), for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, by reason of her malicious desertion. Mr. Upington was for the plaintiff; there was no appearance for the defendant.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before the 30th June, failing which a rule to issue calling upon the defendant to show cause on the 13th July why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed.

Postea (July 13th). Decree absolute

NUTTALL AND CO. V. CAPE TOWN GAS LIGHT AND COKE CO.

Contract—Arrangement terminable at the discretion of one party.

This was an action brought by E. Nuttall and Co., contractors, Cape Town, against the Cape Town Gas Light and Coke Co. to recover a sum of £370 13s. 2d., damages for alleged breach of contract by reason of the defendant company's failure to supply tar required in the carrying out of street contracts to the City Council.

The declaration set out that on the 11th February, 1904, plaintiffs entered into an agreement with the defendants whereunder the defendants undertook to supply from their works at Cape Town and Woodstock to the plaintiffs a sufficient quantity of tar for the requirements of their business up to an amount of 16,000 gallons per month at 4d. per gallon. Tar was so supplied from time to time. Plaintiffs, for the purposes of the aforesaid agreement, erected at Woodstock, with the consent of the defendants, and on the defendants' premises, certain tanks, and the defendants agreed to pump the tar supplied by them to the plaintiffs into these tanks, which had cost £59 17s. 4d. On July 12, 1904, the defendants, without reasonable notice, refused to supply the plaintiffs with any tar, and repudiated the agreement. Plaintiffs, in consequence purchased tar elsewhere in Cape Town and from abroad up to the 30th December, 1904, to a total amount of 25,060 gallons, and they claimed as damages the difference in the cost of this tar and the contract price of 4d., and also £59 17s. 4d., the cost of the tanks aforesaid. Plaintiffs prayed for judgment for £370 13s. 2d. as damages.

Defendants, in their plea, said that on the 11th February, 1904, arrangements were entered into between the parties as to the price of tar to be bought by the plaintiffs, and sold by the defendants, viz., 4d. per gallon, defendants to do the loading at Cape Town and plaintiffs to do the loading at Woodstock. Defendants denied that any agreement was entered into to supply the defendants with 16,000 gallons per month or any definite amount. The plaintiffs erected the tanks at their own cost. Thereafter, owing to the plaintiffs having no further tar to sell, they supplied no more tar to the plaintiffs. Defendants prayed for the claim to be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Swift) was for the plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones), was for the defendants.

Edmund Nuttall, a partner in the plaintiff firm, said that his firm carried on business in England. In 1903 there were negotiations for the contract with the City Council for the making up of streets and side-paths. He had a report from one of the firm's representatives Tar would be largely required for the side-walks. In July, 1903, witness came out to see about a tender being put in for the contract, and in that month his firm entered into a contract with the Council for making up the unadopted streets. The footpaths were to be of tar macadam. On the 15th July witness saw Mr. Reilly, the secretary of the company, about the supply of tar. Mr. Reilly said that he would let them have as much tar as they required at 4d. per gallon. Witness told him that it would be six months before they required any tar. The price was fixed verbally at 4d. Witness pointed out to Mr. Reilly that 100,000 to 115,000 square yards of pavement were to be made up. Witness went Home, and returned in November to make preparations on the spot for carrying out the contract. They had correspondence in February, 1904, with the secretary of the defendant company, this being carried on on behalf of the plaintiffs by their manager (Mr. Trimmer). In January, 1904, his firm got another contract with the Corporation for the laying of the continuous footways at a schedule price per square yard. They reckoned altogether that they had 120,000 to 140,000 square yards to do; the average required was slightly over a gallon of tar per square yard. They wanted the tar for about eighteen months, during which period they expected to complete the contract. At an interview in February Mr. Reilly agreed to let them have the tar from time to time as they required it. They also made arrangements for the erection of the tanks at Woodstock. At the time of the interview at which the contract was entered into witness had no knowledge whatever of the Gas Company having entered into a contract with the B.S.A. Asphalt Company. In March the Asphalt Company commenced interdict proceedings against the present defendants (14, C.T.R., 229). Witness met Mr. Reilly in April, and the latter told him that the B.S.A. had no case against them, and there would be no difficulty about supplying witness's firm with tar. He added that rather than supply the B.S.A. at 2d. per gallon, he would turn the tar into the sea. Witness again went to England, and the supply of tar to his firm was discontinued in his absence. His firm had to order their tar from elsewhere, having given notice to the defendant company that they would hold them responsible for any difference of cost. They got some tar from the B.S.A. Company, and the remainder from England. The amount of 16,000 gallons per month was fixed, because of the possibility of a contingency with their plant, which might necessitate in some months working night and day and a double demand. The average amount mentioned to Mr. Reilly was 7,000 or 8,000 gallons. The amount actually taken in the five months was about 31,000 gallons. They had only claimed up to the end of 1904, but at the end of the contract they proposed to send another account to the defendant company.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He expected that the defendants would always keep at their disposal 16,000 gallons of tar per month, whether they actually required it or not. His opinion was that his contract with defendants did not terminate until the conclusion of his contracts with the Town Council. He did not understand what was meant by "without reasonable notice" in the plaintiffs' declaration. They had used the tanks to a certain extent.

Re-examined: He took it that six months was "reasonable notice" in a matter of this sort.

Arthur Kerr Trimmer said he was manager in Cape Town for plaintiffs. He came out to start this contract, and when the machines were ready to start work, he went with Mr. Nuttall to Mr. Reilly's office to arrange about the price and the supply of tar. Figures were put before Mr. Reilly, showing the amount required—16,000 gallons a month being given as the maximum, with the machines working night and day. In July Mr. Reilly informed him about the action by the B.S.A. Asphalt Co., and told him that his counsel had advised him to settle, in which case the supply of tar to plaintiffs would have to stop. Witness told him that if they had to get tar at an increased price, they would claim the difference from defendants, and Mr. Reilly said, in that case, the defendants would have to put their side of the question. Witness subsequently got the tar, partly from England and partly from the B.S.A. Asphalt Co.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: They did not want to bind themselves down to take any specific quantity, but the defendants were bound to supply a certain amount. He maintained that the contract between the parties was in the correspondence. He admitted having received a letter from the defendants in November, in which they said that the contract could not go on till the end of time. He did not reply, because he took it that defendants' letter was a reply to one he had sent. The Gas Company knew from the commencement what time was meant, that the tar was to be supplied during the continuance of the municipal contracts.

By the Court: The letters contained no specific reference whatever to the principal contracts.

Sir H. Juta read a letter sent by the witness to his principals in July, 1904, regarding the stoppage of supply by the defendants, and suggesting means to be taken to import a supply. Counsel asked witness whether that was the letter which would be sent by a man to his principals if the contract had been broken?

Witness said that there was no need for him to say anything to his principals about the contract having been broken.

Sir H. Juta: Yet, in the face of that letter, you have the audacity to say that there was a contract to supply you with tar?

Witness: Yes, for our requirements.

Mr. Close closed his case.

Sir H. Juta called

Edward Patrick Reilly, manager of the defendant company, who said that on the 2nd June, 1903, he saw Mr. Nuttall, and had a conversation with him in regard to a supply of tar for the street-paving works. He said that he would supply them with tar at 4d. per gallon. He again saw Mr. Nuttall and Mr. Trimmer on the 6th February, 1904, and had a conversation in regard to the supply of tar from the Woodstock Works. It was arranged that Nuttall's should build the tanks entirely at their own cost. As to the subsequent interview of the 11th February, he treated plaintiffs as ordinary retail customers at 4d. per gallon, the reason being that plaintiffs could not guarantee to take any specified quantity. Witness did not agree to supply plaintiffs with any specific quantity. The works were capable of making 18,000 to 19,000 gallons per month; he had already a contract with the B.S.A. for 6,500, and he should consequently have been utterly unable to supply plaintiffs with 16,000 gallons. A shorthand clerk, Paris, was present at the interview, and he made a note of what took place. Between February and July, 1904, the plaintiffs many times had to go with a short supply, because there was no tar at the works.

Cross-examined: He thought Mr. Nuttall was mistaken when he said that he did not leave England until the 6th June. He fixed the date by reason of his marriage being two days later.

Richard W. Paris, chief clerk in the defendant company's office in Cape Town, said that he was a shorthand writer, and was employed in February last year by the company. Witness dictated a letter to the plaintiffs from his shorthand notes of an interview between Mr. Reilly, Mr. Nuttall, and Mr. Trimmer. There was no mention of quantities at the interview, neither was there any mention of time. The discussion was all about the price, the plaintiffs wanting to obtain the tar at a lower price than 4d.

Cross-examined: He made the notes almost at the close of the interview, at the instigation of Mr. Reilly.

Mr. Nuttall (recalled) said that he was in Manchester on the 2nd June, 1903, leaving Southampton for the Colony on the 6th June.

Karl Toucher, of Cape Town (called by Mr. Close), spoke to an order received from Nuttalls for the erection of tanks at Woodstock.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. Close having been heard in argument,

Judgment was given for the defendants, with costs, his lordship holding that the arrangement to supply the plaintiffs with tar was such that the defendants could terminate it at their discretion.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. } 1905.
MATTHEUS. } June 13th.

This was a special case stated for the opinion of the Court in regard to whether the defendant, Hendrick Petrus Mattheus, of Uitenhage, who was a candidate in the Legislative Council elections for the South-Eastern Circle, was liable for a share of certain expenses incurred by the returning office.

The special case was stated as follows:

1. The plaintiff is William Aldred Col-lard, in his capacity as Assistant Treasurer of the Colony and Receiver-General of Revenue, and as such representing the Colonial Government. The defendant resides at Uitenhage.

2. On or about June 28, 1904, the defendant and one Hurndall were the sole candidates at an election for the representation of the South-Eastern Electoral Province in the Legislative Council.

3. The Returning Officer of the said province who was an officer appointed by the Colonial Government to act at the Election as Returning Officer according to law in pursuance of his duties as provided for and declared in the 16th and 17th Sections of the Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1902, from time to time gave public notice of the names and addresses of the respective agents and sub-agents of the said candidates forthwith upon the same being declared to him in conformity with the said Act.

4. The public notice aforesaid included the advertisement of the said names and addresses in certain newspapers circulating in the divisions, districts, field-connetories interested in the aforesaid Election. The plaintiff annexes hereto a schedule showing the titles of the said newspapers, the dates of the said advertisements and the costs of the same in so far as the defendant is concerned.

5. The particulars marked with a star (*) in the said annexure are particulars of advertisements in which the names and addresses of the agents or sub-agents of the defendant and those of the agents or sub-agents of the said Hurndall were jointly published, and the amounts shown as the defendant's share of cost in regard to those particulars are the half of the total cost of the said advertisements. Those not marked as aforesaid are particulars of advertisements in which the names and addresses of the agents or sub-agents of the defendant alone were published.

6. The plaintiff has defrayed the costs of advertising as shown in the said annexure, and thus has expended the sum of £22 12s. 3d.

7. The plaintiff contends that the said sum was expended by him on behalf of the defendant, and that he is entitled to a refund thereof by the defendant.

8. The defendant denies that the said sum was expended, or that plaintiff is entitled to a refund thereof from him. Defendant contends that the said sum was expended by the plaintiff in discharge of a liability necessarily and lawfully incurred on behalf of the Colonial Government, to wit, the said Returning Officer in his capacity as such and in the performance of a duty imposed upon him in his said capacity by sections 16 and 17 of Act 26 of 1902 as a matter of public policy and for the public benefit.

Mr. Nightingale (or plaintiff): The first question we have to decide is, what are election expenses. (See sections 21 and 26 of Act 26, of 1902.) Sections 16 and 17 show that the charges in question are chargeable against the one candidate, and not against all. Section 48 of the Constitution Ordinance is the only one which deals with expenses, and it refers to Parliamentary Elections only. Section 7 of Act 26, of 1902, and Part 2 of the schedule show that the Returning Officer may charge for expenses of printing and advertising. The Act from section 16 onwards deals with expenses which may be brought up.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Can the expenses of fixing polling days and calling for nominations be brought up?]

I think not.

[Buchanan, A.J.C.: They would be in Council elections; but it may be that many expenses would be charged in Council elections which would not be in Assembly elections.]

See Part 4 of the first schedule of the Act. As to when a candidate should become responsible for election expenses see Rogers on Elections (Vol. 2, p. 158). When a candidate has sent in his acceptance to the Returning Officer he becomes responsible. Section 25 fixes the limits of what the Returning Officer may charge. The object of the Act is to prevent the candidate from being unduly burdened. If a candidate does not appoint agents he becomes his own agent. He is not bound to advise the Returning Office of that fact. The appointment of agents and sub-agents is purely voluntary, and therefore Government should not be burdened with the cost of these. Sections 24 and 25, of 46 and 47, Vict., C. 51, correspond with sections 16 and 17 of our Act as to advertising. See also Maxwell on Statutes (p. 70 and 71) on the value of preambles and head lines. The general scope of our Act shows that this charge may be legally made against the candidate.

Mr. Bisset (for the defendant): The plaintiff's case rests upon an implied contract. Every such contract rests on the supposition that money is expended for the sole benefit of the candidate. By section 37 of Act 9, of 1883, an agent must be appointed in writing. Act 26, of 1902, orders the Returning Officer to publish the names of agents and sub-agents. This is done in the interests of the public and the duty of doing it is cast upon the Returning Officer. This reasoning has been adopted by the English Courts (see Parker on Election Agents, p. 286, and cases there cited). These cases show that English law does not recognise an implied contract between the High Bailiff and the candidate. See also Watton v. Sanders (2 Camp., 640). English law goes further than our law in casting liability on the candidate, 2 and 4—Cap. 5, section 71—Ballot Act of 1872, and 38, 39, Vict.,

C. 84, section 1. The principles of English law have been adopted by our law save that the Constitution Ordinance makes the Assembly candidate, but not the Council candidate, liable for the expenses of election. See Instructions of Colonial Office, section 19, sub-section 13, p. 140; also sub-section 45 (c), and at p. 147, sub-section 48, and sections 23 and 24. Of course, I do not cite these instructions as having statutory authority. Counsel for the plaintiff relies on Part 2 of the schedule to Act 26, of 1902, sub-section 3, but the expenses there alluded to have no relation to the expenses incurred by the Returning Officer in the execution of his duty. Here again we have a distinction between Council and Assembly candidates. Sections 16, 17, and 26 show that it was never the intention of the Legislature to make Council candidates liable. See also section 24 (c).

Mr. Nightingale, in reply.

(Buchanan, A.C.J.): This is a special case, in which the Government claims from the defendant the cost of certain advertisements inserted in different local papers, advertising the election agents or election sub-agents of the defendant. The amount claimed is not a question submitted for the consideration of the Court, but only the legal question whether or not the defendant is liable for these expenses. The plaintiff claims the amount, on the ground that the money was expended by the Government on behalf of the defendant, and the Government is entitled to the refund thereof; defendant denies his liability, on the ground that this was done by the returning officer in his capacity as such, and in pursuance of a duty imposed upon him by statute law. It is interesting to look at the different positions in which the Constitution Ordinance passed in 1872 placed candidates for the Legislative Council and candidates for the House of Assembly. In the old Constitution Ordinance no provision whatever is made for the refund of any expenses incurred in the election of candidates for the Legislative Council. In the case of election of members of the House of Assembly, where a poll is demanded, and there is a contest, provision is made for the expenses of a poll being divided among the candidates who contest the election. It is true both Houses are elective, but it is clear that a distinction is drawn, not only in the manner of election and the manner of nomination, but also in the charges to be made. In Legislative Council elections nominations are made by means of requisitions, which are sent in to the Colonial Secretary. In House of Assembly elections nominations are made at a public meeting of electors called for that purpose, and in neither case do the Government claim that they are entitled to any expenses for the notices calling for the requisitions or nominations of candidates. The Statute only provides that in the event of a contest, the candidates before the poll shall enter into security or pay costs in the amount of £50 to satisfy any expenses incurred by the Government for which the candidates are liable. There is no departure from this distinction drawn in any of the subsequent Acts that I can find that have been referred to. It is true that when we come to the Illegal Practices Prevention Act of 1902, under a chapter headed "Election Expenses," certain charges are specified. It is provided by the sections under this chapter, 16 and 17, that a candidate shall nominate his agent or sub-agents, or, if he does not nominate his agent or sub-agent, that he himself shall be considered as his own election agent, and these sections require that when nominations are made, the returning officer shall publish in the "Gazette" (and for this the Government claim no return), and in the usual places in which Government notices are posted, publishing to the electorate the names of the agents and sub-agents. Nothing whatever is said in these sections as to the charges for these notices being recoverable from the candidates. But, in the same chapter (section 26), the returning officer is directed to publish the returns made to him by candidates of their election expenses, and for these returns so published, he is expressly by this Statute authorised to charge the candidates. This might be an argument in favour of saying that where the Statute does not specially authorise the charging of the expenses for notices of agents and sub-agents, it does authorise the charging for a summary of election expenses generally—it would be, I say, a strong argument for holding that, at any rate, as far as members of the Legislative Council are concerned, Parliament did not intend that they should be charged with these expenses. Whether or not these expenses are chargeable against candidates for membership of the House of Assembly is not a question that the Court has now any need to decide. A sound argument might be founded on the provisions of the Constitution Ordinance, which make candidates liable for the expenses of a poll, but that is not the question before me. The defendant in this case was a candidate for the Legislative Council. The only ground upon which this action is brought is an implied contract. It is clear from the English cases that have been cited that a returning officer is entitled only to claim expenses which by Statute he is positively declared entitled to recover, or other expenses which the candidate takes upon himself or by his acts, it is implied that he authorises expenses to be incurred on his behalf. There is no Statute that I can find, and no Statute has been relied upon, declaring that these expenses shall be incurred by such candidates, and there is no conduct on the part of the defendant in this case to show that there is an implied contract. I think that the judgment must be in favour of the defendant's contention, that he is not liable for the expenses claimed, and, of course, that judgment must carry costs. It should be clearly understood that I am deciding the liability of candidates for the Legislative Council, and not of candidates for the House of Assembly.

VISSER V. BAKER AND (1905.
OTHERS. { June 13th.

Will, joint—Fidei Commissum—
Insolvency of fiduciary—
Rights of minor fidei-commissories.

The late P. and his wife made a mutual will, by which their landed property was bequeathed to their two sons by a fidei-commissary bequest subject to a life interest in favour of the survivor, "in order that he or she may be better enabled to maintain, support and educate our children, &c." After the death of P., his widow married B., and subsequently the estates of B. and his wife were sequestrated. Their trustee claimed the life usufruct of Mrs. B. in the estate of her former husband. The defendants claimed that the words of the will "in order that, &c., amounted to a prohibition against alienation of the usufruct.

Held, that these words only implied an expression of desire on the part of the testators as to the way in which the usufruct should be employed, and that the trustee was entitled to judgment for the same.

This was a special case brought by the insolvent estate Price as plaintiff, and Susannah Mary Price and others, as defendants, for the determination of the rights of the insolvent estate in relation to a certain will.

The special case was stated in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff, Floris Albertus Visser, of Queen's Town, is the duly elected and confirmed trustee of the insolvent estate of Susannah Mary Baker, now married without community of goods to Leonard George Baker, by whom she is assisted in this suit.

2. Her estate was sequestrated on the 4th day of August, 1904.

3. The defendants are Susannah Mary Baker, formerly Price, born Staples, now married out of community of property to Leonard George Baker, and by him herein assisted as far as need be, and she is sued in her capacity as the mother and natural guardian of the four minor children born of her marriage with the late Charles James Price, and George Edward James, George Norman Price, and the said Susannah Mary Baker (married and assisted as aforesaid), and they are sued in their capacity as executors testamentary of the estate of the late Charles James Price, hereinafter called the testator.

4. The testator died on the 21st day of November, 1895, and was at that date lawfully married with community of goods to the aforesaid Susannah Mary, who was born Staples, and they had theretofore duly made on the 22nd December, 1894, their joint mutual last will and testament, whereof a true copy is annexed, and marked "A."

5. Under the said last will and testament, certain farms, to wit, Lot No. 4 W, Thrift, and Bushey Park, forming assets of the joint estate were specially bequeathed to the two sons of the testator and testatrix for certain sums payable after the death of the survivor and in the said will it was specially directed that the survivor should be authorised and allowed to keep the whole of the farm or immovable property of the joint estate under his or her entire direction and administration, and to remain in the full and undisturbed possession thereof, and in the enjoyment of the usufruct or the rents, issues, and profits thereof for and during the term of his or her natural life in order that he or she may be better enabled to maintain, support, and educate the children of the testator and testatrix until they become of age or marry.

6. There were at the death of the testator, and still are, four children of his said marriage, two sons and two daughters, and they are all minors, and are of the ages of 18, 14, 12, and 9 years, the first and third being sons.

7. The said Susannah Mary (born Staples) as surviving spouse of the testator adiated and accepted the benefits under the said will, and has hitherto enjoyed, inter alia, the usufruct, rents, and profits of the aforesaid farms.

8. In April, 1904, the said Susannah Mary (born Staples), who was married a second time in November, 1903, to Leonard George Baker aforesaid, did with his assistance enter into certain three leases of the farms aforesaid, namely: (a) Lot No. 4 W she let to one Lowell Eldred Price for a period of three years from the 1st April, 1904, at an annual rental of £52 10s. (b) Thrift she let to one J. G. Frost for the same period at an annual rental of £100; the said Susannah Mary (born Staples) purported to cede the said lease on or about April 28, 1904, to one Thomas Bailey as security for a debt; the plaintiff intends to take steps to have the said cession set aside as an undue preference. (c) Bushey Park she let to one George James (one of the executors and defendants) for the same period at an annual rental of £87 10s. A true copy of one of the leases is hereunto annexed, and marked "B." The others are similar, with changes of the name of the lessee and the rental; the lease (a) is in the hands of the defendants.

9. The plaintiff contends, as against the defendants, that he is entitled in his said capacity and during the lifetime of the insolvent, for the benefit of her creditors, to the rentals and other benefits accruing to the lessor (now insolvent) under the said leases and the custody of the said leases, and, further, to an account of all rentals received by the defendants or any of them under any of the said leases, with a debate of such account, and payment of the balance found due.

10. In the alternative, the plaintiff contends in his said capacity that he is entitled to receive out of the rentals derived from time to time under the said leases such sums as this Honourable Court may direct to be paid over to him for the benefit of the creditors of the insolvent, and submits that his rights in his said capacity should be declared and defined by this Honourable Court.

11. The defendants contend that so long as there are minor children of the testator living, who have to be educated, supported, and maintained, the usufruct of the said farms bequeathed to the said Susannah Mary Baker for the education, support, and maintenance of the said minor children cannot be paid over to or enjoyed by the creditors of the said Susannah Mary Baker, and that, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to the said rents.

12. Wherefore the parties pray for judgment upon their respective contentions or for such relief as may seem meet with costs of suit.

Be it hereby made known.

This is the last will and testament of us, Charles James Price and Susannah Mary Price (born Staples) married together in community of property, and at present residing at Tarkastad, in the district of Tarka, being of sound and disposing mind, memory, and understanding, hereby revoking and annulling all wills, codicils and other testamentary acts heretofore passed by us or either of us desiring that the same shall be of no force and effect whatever.

And before proceeding to the institution of heirs, we do hereby declare to give and bequeath to the survivor of us one-half part or share of all the movable assets, inheritances, legacies, credits, and things whatsoever and wheresoever the same may be which shall be left at the death of the first dying of us as his or her own sole and absolute property.

And in regard to the landed property in our estate, we do hereby declare to give, devise, and bequeath the same to our sons in manner following—subject, however, to the usufruct thereof hereinafter mentioned in favour of the survivor of us, namely:

1. To our son Stanley Charles Price our farm called Lot No. 4 W., in extent 802 morgen and 397 square roods, situate in the district of Tarka, upon condition that he shall pay in to our estate within three years, after the death of the survivor of us, the sum of one thousand pounds (£1,000) sterling, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum reckoned from the date of the death of the survivor of us.

2. To our son Cecil Bold Price our farm called "Thrift," in extent 1,515 morgen and 403 square roods and our farm called Busby Park, in extent 960 morgen or thereabouts, both situated in the district of Queen's Town, upon condition that he shall pay in to our estate within three years after the death of the survivor of us the sum of eighteen hundred and ninety-three pounds (£1,893) sterling for our said farm "Thrift" and the sum of fourteen hundred and forty pounds (£1,440) sterling for our said farm Busby Park bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum and reckoned from the date of the death of the survivor of us, and in case either of our said sons shall not have attained the age of majority at the death of the survivor of us, such period of three years within which such sums of money are directed to be by them paid into our joint estate, together with the interest thereon, shall be reckoned from the date of attaining their majority respectively.

In the event of either of our said sons predeceasing us, the bequest of the aforesaid farm property made to such son shall devolve upon his co-legatee upon the same conditions as are set forth in such bequest.

It is our will and desire that the amounts required to redeem the quit-rents at present payable to Government upon our above-mentioned farms called

Thrift and Lot No. 4 W. shall be a charge upon our joint estate, and in the event of there not being sufficient funds in our estate at the death of the survivor of us to do so, the amounts required to redeem the same shall be deducted from the respective sums of money to be paid in to our estate by our said sons as aforesaid.

In the event of our acquiring any further farm property, we direct that the same shall devolve upon any son yet to be begotten during our present marriage, upon condition that he shall pay in to our estate the sum of twenty shillings per morgan for the same, upon the same terms of credit as above set forth for our other sons.

In the event of any of our sons not having attained his or their majority at the death of the survivor of us, we direct that our executors hereinafter named shall let out our farm properties on hire, until such time as our said sons shall respectively attain their majority and the rents thereof, together with all interest receivable from the Master of the Supreme Court, on the portions of inheritance hereinafter mentioned shall be kept by our said executors in one fund and applied by them in such manner as they may think fit towards the maintenance, support, and education of our minor children. We further declare to nominate and appoint the children already begotten, or which shall or may hereafter be begotten during our marriage, to be the sole heirs in equal portions, share and share alike, save and except as is hereinafter mentioned in the case of whichever of our sons shall happen to inherit the farm Bold Point of all the rest residue and remainder of our joint estate, goods, effects, stock, chattels, inheritances, credits, and things whatsoever and wheresoever the same may be, which shall be left at the death of the first dying of us, whether movable or immovable, and of what nature or kind soever, whether the same be in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, nothing excepted, and in the event of any of our said heirs hereby appointed predeceasing us, then and in such case the share of him or her so dying shall devolve upon his or her issue by representation according to the laws of succession "per stirpes."

We further direct that whichever of our sons shall happen to inherit the farm called Bold Point under and by virtue of the mutual will of the testator's parents, Joseph Price and Ellenor Matilda Price (born James), dated the 5th day of March, 1888, such son shall not be entitled to inherit or receive under this our will any portion of the sum or sums of money to be paid in to our estate as aforesaid for our farm properties; and we further direct that the sum of nine hundred pounds (£900) sterling which is payable in respect of the said farm Bold Point in to the estate of the testators' said parents, shall be paid out of our joint estate.

We do hereby further direct that the survivor of us shall be authorised and allowed to keep the whole of our farm or immovable property under his or her entire direction and administration and to remain in the full and undisturbed possession thereof and in the enjoyment of the usufruct or the rents, issues and profits thereof for and during the term of his or her natural life in order that he or she may be better enabled to maintain, support and educate our children until they become of age or marry.

We further direct that our said executors shall as soon as conveniently may be after the death of the first dying of us cause a just and true inventory to be made of the movable assets of our joint estate, and the same to be fairly and equitably valued and appraised by two impartial persons or sold by public auction at the option of the survivor of us in order by so doing to ascertain the portions of inheritance of our heirs out of the estate of the first dying of us, and after the deduction of one moiety of the whole of our said movable property which is bequeathed to the survivor of us as above mentioned, the survivor of us shall be obliged within two years after the death of the first dying of us to pay out such portions of inheritance of the remaining moiety to such of our said heirs as may have attained majority, and in the case of those who may be minors to the Master of the Supreme Court of this Colony together with interest reckoned at the rate of five per cent. per annum from the date of such valuation, but in case the survivor shall prefer to realise the said movables by public auction as aforesaid, then and in that case the portions of our respective heirs shall be paid out forthwith to such as may be majors and in the case of minors to the Master of the Supreme Court of this Colony.

With reference to the appointment of valuers, we direct that one shall be appointed by the survivor of us and the other by our other two executors with power to such valuers to appoint an umpire, who shall decide in case of disagreement between such valuers as to the value of the said movables or any portion thereof.

We declare to nominate and appoint the survivor of us together with George Norman Price and George Edward James to be jointly the executors of this our will, administrators of our estate and effects and guardians of our minor children, giving and granting unto them all such powers and authorities as appertain in law to those capacities, and especially those of assumption and substitution. We reserve to ourselves the right from time to time, and at all times hereafter, to make all such alterations in or additions to this our will as we may think fit either by a separate act or at the foot hereof desiring that all such alterations or additions so made under our own signature may be held as valid and effectual as if originally inserted herein.

Lastly, we declare this document to be and contain our mutual last will and testament, and desire it may have effect as such or as a codicil or otherwise as may best consist with law.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands at Tarkastad on this twenty-second day of December in the year of Our Lord eighteen hundred and ninety four in the presence of the subscribing witnesses:

As witnesses:—E. J. Stanley, Wm. Kidger, Chas. J. Price, S. M. Price.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for plaintiff): The whole question is: what is the true construction of the will with regard to the rights conferred upon Mrs. Price (now Baker)? I submit that the will confers upon her a usufruct, and that this usufruct passed to her trustees on her insolvency. As it has more than once been pointed out by the Court, the power conferred by section 10 of the Insolvent Ordinance is very wide. In this case, a usufruct is conferred, and the matter or object in respect of which that usufruct is to operate is indicated, but no trust can be thus imposed by our law. This matter was fully considered and decided in Zeederberg v. S.A. Association (5 Searle, 266), and this decision was approved in Van der Byl v. Executor of Michau (2 Juta, 430). These cases are entirely in point. In fact, in the present case, the present will presents a stronger case for the trustee (the plaintiff) than did the respective wills in either of these cases. For here an out and out usufruct is given, in order (as it is stated) that the survivor may be the better able to maintain the children. That, however, is not sufficient to constitute the survivor a fiduciary of the usufruct, and that must be the defendant's contention.

There is no case in which the Court has held that such words as these can make the children fidei commissaries. The English law, is that in order to take a bequest under a will out of the operation of the Bankruptcy laws there must be a "gift over," that is some specific person must have the ownership transferred to him to bar the claim of the trustee. It was decided in Hidding's Trustee v. Colonial Orphan Chamber (2 Juta, 273) that the same rule applies to our law. Had it been held otherwise, we should find ourselves landed in extreme difficulties in many cases which might possibly emerge. As an example, suppose the children were all majors and that they were all concerned so that there would be a legal duty incumbent on the parent to support them: would it be held that he could not spend a penny of this usufructuary interest on himself in the event of his insolvency? Take the case of the children being well provided for; and here it is clear that they get a substantial amount of the testator's assets as paternal inheritance. However, cannot the survivor deal with the usufruct? It is true that we have here an alternative prayer for an inquiry, but that is not a logical position for the other side to take up. Either there is a fidei commissum of the usufruct of the farm in the children (and a vested fidei commissum, see Strydom's case) or there is surely an interest which passes to the trustee. Zeederberg's case (5 Searle, 266) has stood for many years, and, I submit should not now be overruled. The only case which can be said to tend the other way is Appel and Lipschitz v. Appel (21, S.C.R., 611), and that that only in virtue of an obiter dictum, and the will was not in the terms of the present will. There are numerous cases in which the Court has interpreted fidei commissa in such wise as to impose the least possible burden on the person in possession, and that is the rule of Roman Dutch Law. See judgment of Connor, J., in Blignaut v. Cilliers (Buch., 1868, p. 206), and Voet (36, 1, 7).

Sir H. Juta (for defendants): We only say that as fidei commissaries nothing vests in us, and as long as these heirs are minors, the creditors cannot claim. The cases cited on the other side do not apply. The only similar case is Appel's Zeederberg's case was not at all similar. This case is much stronger than Appel's. The Court has always made provision for minors. Then see Sec. 2 of the will as to the proviso respecting the quit-rent farms. In the event of the death of the survivor, the trustees must use the rents, and profits for the benefit of the minors. After the death of the survivor the fidei commissary heirs might take the inheritance, but were bound to provide for the minors. This will is stronger than the will in Appel's case. If the trustee wishes to take the property he must take it subject to the burden of providing for the minors.

Mr. Searle (in reply): Appel's case is not decisive, but there the legacy was only for the maintenance of the children, see Voet (42-1-43), cited by Bell, J., in Zeederberg's case. The trustees in the insolvent estate may clearly take the goods unless the alienation of the goods required for the minors is clearly prohibited. Defendant's counsel does not object to the trustee taking the estate if he devotes it to the maintenance of the children. This case is stronger than that of Zeederberg. True, the testator has said that he wished the usufructary to use the property for the support of the minors; but that is not a condition. The usufruct is clearly vested in the survivor, and the trustee does not claim anything but that. Suppose a tutor had misconducted himself, could the minors come into Court and claim the usufruct?

Sir H. Juta referred to Sande on Restraints (3-1-1).

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The late Mr. Price, who was married out of community to his wife, during his lifetime acquired apparently a considerable amount of property. He made a joint will with his wife, in which he divided all the movables between himself and his wife, and the landed property was specially bequeathed to two sons on certain conditions. Then the testators, by their mutual will, subjected the landed property to a certain fidei commissum, or burdened it with a life interest in favour of the survivor. Price dying in November, 1905, his wife took the benefits given her by the will, and she continued to enjoy the life interest given by the will. She later on married one Baker, and both Baker and the defendant (his wife) had had their estates sequestrated as insolvent. The trustee claims the benefit of the bequest of the life interest to Mrs. Baker. There is no doubt that the Insolvent Ordinance is wide enough to entitle the trustee to take any future as well as present rights, and if it were a life interest pure and simple that was bequeathed there would be absolutely no doubt as to the trustee's right to take it. But the question arising in this case depends upon the terms in which the life interest has been bequeathed. The clause in the will in question is shortly as follows: "We do hereby further direct that the survivor of us shall be authorised and allowed to keep the whole of our farm or immovable property under his or her entire direction and administration, and to remain in the full and undisturbed possession thereof, and in the enjoyment of the usufruct or the rents issues and profits thereof for and during the term of his or her natural life." Then come these words: "In order that he or she may be better enabled to maintain, support, and educate our children until they become of age or marry." The question is whether these words which I have just read impose a condition on the bequest of such a nature that the trustee, who can only step into the legatee's shoes, can take the usufruct without being burdened by any condition at all. I think it may be argued that the trustee can only take what property is vested in the insolvent, and if that property is vested in the insolvent distinctly subject to a condition the trustee who takes the property must take it subject to that condition. It may be a hard case that the late Mr. Price's property should go to pay the debts of the second husband, but that is not the question now before me. I have to look at it from a strictly legal point of view, and decide whether these words, "in order that he or she, etc.," amount to such a condition as is binding both on Mrs. Baker and the trustee. Now, after hearing the argument, and referring to the cases decided, I am bound to follow the expression of the opinion of the Court on previous occasions, and I must look at the words used by Chief Justice Hodges as "more an expression of expectation and desire, and not as a positive direction and command." I think, therefore, that, there being no gift, I cannot hold that it is a condition that is obligatory on the trustee. It seems to be more an expression of desire. Under these circumstances, the trustee is entitled to judgment, and I will give judgment so far as clause 9 of the plea is concerned, up to the word "leases." Before saying anything as to the question of costs, I would like to hear what counsel may have to say.

Mr. Searle having addressed the Court,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that judgment would be for the plaintiff, declaring him entitled in terms of clause 9 up to the word "leases," costs to come out of the fund

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

VOGER V. VOGER. { 1905.
June 13th.

Mr. P. Jones appeared for the plaintiff, and asked for an extension of the return day of edictal citation. Plaintiff was suing for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce for malicious desertion, but up to the present it had been impossible to serve the citation personally on the defendant. The order was altered to allow the citation to be served personally on the defendant or at the defendant's father's residence in Holland. The return day was extended to August 17.

JACOBSON V. SCHULTZ. { 1905.
June 13th.
" 14th.

Lessor and lessee—Mental capacity of lessor.

This was an action brought by Solomon Jacobsohn, a general dealer, of Kakamas, in the district of Kenhardt, for an order compelling the defendant Johannes P. Schultz, a farmer, residing at Nous West, to give plaintiff possession of certain premises, and for damages for not having given up possession at an earlier date, or as an alternative, damages fixed at £1,000 for breach of contract.

The plaintiff's declaration set out that he was a general dealer, residing at Kakamas, and the defendant was a farmer, residing at Nous West. On or about the 5th October, 1904, the parties entered into a written agreement of lease, whereby the defendant let to the plaintiff certain premises at Nous West for five years, beginning on the 5th October, 1904, at a rental of £20 per year, for the purpose of starting a shop business. The plaintiff had paid to the defendant the sum of £10 as and for six months' rental of the premises, under the agreement. Relying upon the agreement, the plaintiff disposed of the business which he was then carrying on at Puffadder, and took out a licence for his shop at Nous West, and subsequently forwarded his transport wagons with goods to Nous West, for the purpose of opening his proposed business there. The defendant refused to allow the plaintiff to go near the farm, and refused and still refuses to give the plaintiff possession of the premises let to him, or to carry out the agreement. By reason of the defendant's breach of contract, the plaintiff had suffered considerable damage. The plaintiff claimed: (a) An order compelling the defendant to give him possession in accordance with the terms of the agreement; (b) payment of an amount as damages reckoned at the rate of £2 per day, from the 5th October to the date of possession; (c) as an alternative, payment of the sum of £1,000 as damages for breach of contract.

The defendant in his plea stated he admitted that the lease was signed, but said that it was obtained from him by one Bremner and Ossrey, acting on behalf of the plaintiff, at a time when he (the defendant) was ill in bed, incapable of managing his own affairs, and partly delirious, or suffering from the after-effects of deliriousness, and that the agreement of lease was thereby ab initio null and void. Defendant held that at the time when the agreement was made his mental condition must have been quite apparent. Defendant on November 2, immediately on regaining control of his senses, at once informed Bremner and the plaintiff that he could not recognise the contract, and that he repaid the sum of £10 to the plaintiff, which payment the plaintiff accepted. Defendant denied that plaintiff disposed of his business at Puffadder, in consequence of obtaining the lease at Nous West. Defendant denied that he had committed any breach of contract.

Mr. Burton (with whom was Mr.

Lewis) appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. MacGregor (with whom was Dr. Greer) appeared for the defendant.

Mr. Burton said that, seeing that there was a written agreement, and that it was admitted by the defendant; the onus lay on the defendant of beginning the case, but as the plaintiff had to prove his damages, he would open the case.

Louis Ossrey stated he was an assistant in plaintiff's store at Kakamas. He knew the defendant for some time; he was a farmer. Last year witness was assisting in a business at Puffadder, which was near the border of Namaqualand. In October last plaintiff gave witness certain instructions, and in consequence he, accompanied by Mr. Bremner, went to a farm called Quaybees to erect a shop. They were not satisfied, and went to defendant's farm Nous West. They met the defendant in the front of the house. His wife was with him. Defendant was complaining of a cold, but beyond that there did not seem to be anything wrong. Witness told defendant that Mr. Jacobsohn had sent them to look out for a place to set up a store, defendant suggested that they should have a shop on his farm. He said he had already let a shop to Millar Bros., but there was no agreement that there should not be a second shop on the farm. Defendant said he knew that Millar Bros. would be vexed, but that as he had a large rent (£58) to pay yearly, he had to do something. He said that Millar Bros. were paying him £40 a year, and if witness would pay him £25 he could live comfortably. Witness drew up an agreement, to take the place for five years at an annual rent of £20 a year. The defendant signed it. The next morning Mrs. Schultze said that they would not have much room in the house with the two shops, and suggested that the plaintiff should build a small house for himself 300 yards away, and he would give up the room and kitchen. The defendant said that if the plaintiff wanted the place at once, if they erected a tent for him he would move into it. Witness paid defendant £4 on account, and arranged to give him £6 more on his return from Puffadder. The plaintiff's business at Puffadder was sold to a man named Stroonau. Witness had had instructions to sell the plaintiff's business at Puffadder if he could arrange with defendant. Witness, who had been accompanied by Bremner, returned to Nous West, the defendant's farm, about 12 or 13 days after. The defendant then refused to abide by his agreement, and would not allow plaintiff to take over possession. Owing to losing the house, plaintiff sustained a loss by disposing of his shop at Puffadder, which showed a profit of £700 or £800 a year. The plaintiff got in a large stock of goods, which he had to store at Kakamas. There was a business loss of about £400 on it.

Cross-examined by Mr. MacGregor: There were a few farmers and another dealer on the farm when witness first got there. Witness did not consider that the attempt to get a shop in the same building as Millar's was sharp practice. There were plenty of farms in the district. Both shops could thrive. Other people wanted to get shop rights on that farm. Schultz was not in bed when witness arrived at the farm. Witness did not know that he had been very ill. The agreement was signed in the bedroom. Neither witness nor Bremner were partners in plaintiff's business. Witness heard nothing about defendant returning the £10 to plaintiff. The business at Puffadder was sold for £225. The reason for the low price was that the building was on the Government Reserve.

Re-examined by Mr. Burton: When he returned to the farm and paid the balance of £6, the defendant appeared satisfied with the contract he had made with the plaintiff.

Julius Bremner said he was with the previous witness when the negotiations with respect to the letting of a shop on defendant's farm to plaintiff took place. He corroborated the statement made by Ossrey with regard to the conversation that took place. Defendant was coughing, and had a headache, but otherwise he appeared to be all right, and in possession of his senses.

Cross-examined by Mr. MacGregor: It was eleven o'clock in the morning when they reached the farm on October 5. Schultz appeared to be all right, and the next day when they left Schultz was also well.

Solomon Jacobsohn, the plaintiff, said last year he had two businesses—one at Puffadder and the other at Kakamas. He wished to dispose of his business at the former place, because it was too far from Kakamas, and he sent his two assistants, Ossrey and Bremner, to see if they could buy a business nearer to Kakamas. When his assistants came back they brought the contract they had entered into with Schultz. As the result of a letter which he heard had been received from defendant, he put off for a few days his journey to Nous West.

Cross-examined by Mr. MacGregor: When witness purchased goods from the wholesale dealer, he had six months' credit on drapery, after which he had to pay interest at 7 per cent. On groceries, he had to pay interest after three months. Ossrey was on Nous West Farm about November 6. Witness saw the defendant about the 10th November. Witness remembered Millar and a man named Ringer going into his shop about the middle of November. Ringer did not hand him a letter from Schultz. When witness saw Schultz, he said he had had a bad cold. Puffadder was rather far away from witness's principal business. Strunnen's shop might have done witness harm, but if he could have done so, he would not purchase witness's business. Witness only sold him about £100 worth of stock. Witness did not know of any farmers in that district having gone bankrupt recently, but some might go.

Mr. MacGregor: Then you must be going to collect your accounts?—I get any money I can.

Have you any money out at interest?—No; I wish I had.

Do you lend farmers money?—If I find a farmer hard up, I lend him a few pounds.

Re-examined: Schultz never asked witness if he had received £10.

Louis Ossrey (re-examined): The profits on the Puffadder business were about £350 yearly. It cost about £27 10s. to take the goods from Puffadder to Nous West.

Cross-examined by Mr. MacGregor: Witness did not go to see defendant shortly before the King's Birthday. Defendant did not ask witness if he had received a letter from him.

By Maasdorp, J.: If the plaintiff did not get these premises back, he would have to try and get some elsewhere.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Jacobus P. Schultz (the defendant), examined, stated that in August last year he was ill, suffering from typhoid fever and inflammation of the lungs. He was ill three months, and was not quite well yet. In fact, on the way down to Cape Town for the present case he was taken ill. His head had been affected. On October 5 Mr. Goldstein had asked him for the right to put up a shop, but witness told him he could not sell it, as he had agreed to give it to Millar Bros. Witness was taken ill shortly after, and was removed to his bedroom. When he again came to his senses, about twenty days had elapsed. Witness did not remember seeing either Ossrey or Bremner, nor did he recollect signing the agreement. When he recovered, his wife handed him the agreement and £10. Witness did not see Ossrey on October 18. Witness did not remember writing to plaintiff telling him that he must not bring stock on to the farm. He recollected having a letter written to Jacobsohn, returning the £10, and stating he did not know what he had done when he was supposed to have signed the agreement. Mr. Millar, accompanied by Mr. Ringer, took the letter. Ossrey called at the farm again about November 6. He said he understood that Mr. Millar had got witness to break his contract. Witness replied that he had not. Ossrey then asked witness if he could bring the goods to the farm, but witness told him he could not. The contract with Millar was made in the July previous to the October. Other people had also tried to get the shop. Mr. Goldstein was one of them. Witness told him that he could not give it to him, and that he would have to apply to Millar for it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: There were some days during his illness when he was not in his proper senses. His wife would know when he had full control of his faculties. The letter sent to the plaintiff was not dictated by the Millars.

Elias Goldstein, a trader, said he remembered being on the farm at Nous West on October 5 at about 8 o'clock in the morning. He talked business with Schultz in the breakfast room. Schultz told him that he had not been well, and about ten o'clock Schultz went to his bedroom feeling ill. He seemed very weak, and later in the day Schultz fell off a chair in which he was sitting.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: There was rather a commotion when defendant fell off the chair, and when he was taken into the bedroom witness did not see him again. When Ossrey and Bremner came, they went into the bedroom.

Mrs. Van Niekerk stated she often attended people when they were ill. She remembered in October last attending Schultz, who was very ill. She was in attendance on him when Ossrey arrived. She went home that evening, but Mrs. Schultz sent for her again next morning, as he was very ill. His illness continued during the whole month of October. During his illness at times he did not know what he was doing. He was constantly conceiving different plans. On one occasion he told his wife to bake and slaughter, as he intended "trekking" to the Transvaal. On the afternoon of October 5 he was not in a condition to transact business. In fact, he was not in his right mind. Witness did not see a letter going from Nous West with money in it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness gave her "patients" home remedies. She often mixed the medicine for them. She gave Schultz medicine on several occasions. He was suffering from inflammation of the lungs from the previous August. The fever left him in October. He was suffering from the effects of fever when Ossrey and Bremner visited him. Witness nursed him constantly whilst giving him medicine. Witness's house was five minutes' walk from Nous West. When witness went into the house she saw Schultz lying on the bed. He was sick, she spoke to him; but he did not reply. She pointed out to his wife that he was very ill. She did not speak to either Ossrey or Bremner when she saw them.

Christina Susannah Viviers stated that she also attended sick people. She had visited the defendant occasionally, and helped to nurse him. She saw him in the month of September. He was delirious from fever and inflammation of the lungs.

Albertus van Niekerk, Nous East, stated he was a farmer. In October last he visited the defendant. He signed the contract between Miller and defendant as a witness. Witness remembered Ossrey and Bremner arriving at the farm. Schultz was very ill during that day. Ossrey asked witness how Schultz was, and he replied that he was very bad. Later on they went into the bedroom. They said they wanted to see how he was. When witness went into the bedroom afterwards, he found Schultz lying on the bed. Schultz wrote to Jacobsohn in November returning the £10 and declaring the contract null and void.

In cross-examination, witness said he was much surprised when he heard of the lease between Schultz and Jacobsohn.

William van Niekerk, jun., said that on October 5 Schultz was ill when Ossrey and Bremner arrived. Bremner and Ossrey, however, went into the bedroom, where he saw them sitting on chairs in front of the bed. Schultz's condition was such that he could not do any business.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He did not go into the bedroom, and he did not hear any talking. Schultz was too ill to do business. Schultz had spoken rationally to him that morning.

Abraham E. Millar said he had a contract with Schultz for a shop on Nous West. He arrived at Nous West at the end of October, when Schultz was too ill to talk business that day. A few days later he spoke to Schultz about a contract with Jacobsohn on November 2. Schultz gave him a letter to give to Jacobsohn. Witness gave the letter to a man named Ringer, who took the letter to Jacobsohn's shop.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He heard about the contract between Schultz and Jacobsohn when he was on his way to Nous West to set up business. He had a few goods, and goods on order were coming round from Cape Town to Port Nolloth. Schultz told him what was in the letter he wrote to Jacobsohn. Witness eventually set up business at Nous West, and was still there. He could not say what his profits were for the past six months.

Harry Ringer said he took a letter written by Schultz to Jacobsohn, and he saw Jacobsohn take £10 out of the letter.

Mr. Saacs, Deputy Sheriff for the district of Kenhardt, said the nearest doctor to Nous West was at Kenhardt, a distance of 128 miles, and the doctor's fee to attend a patient at Nous West would be forty guineas, exclusive of conveyance.

Mr. Boonzaier, black and white artist, said he had a few minutes previously seen Schultz write his name, and comparing it with the signature on the contract there was a slight difference. In the signature on the contract there was a stroke short in the "h" and "u," and it might have been written when the writer was ill or nervous.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Counsel were then heard in argument.

Mr. Burton said that with regard to the question of liability he submitted that undoubtedly the burden of proof rested on the defendant. The plaintiff alleged a contract of lease for certain premises, and the contract was put in. It was a written contract executed by the parties, and there was no question as to the signatures, and the contract was admitted. The special defence had been set up that at the time this document was signed by the defendant he was ill in bed, suffering from deliriousness, and that he was incapable of doing his business. That was the defence, and the burden of establishing it to the full rested on the defendant. A defence of that sort was a very exceptional one, and one which had to be proved up to the hilt. The plea was not one that one would expect. One would have expected that the defendant would plead that he did not understand what he was doing, but it stated that he was ill in bed either delirious or suffering from the effects of deliriousness. There was no allegation that he did not understand the contract when it was signed. What one would expect in a plea would be that it was alleged that he was in such a condition that he was unable to understand what he was doing. It appeared from the evidence that he set up a plea of oblivion. Generally speaking, the Roman-Dutch law on the matter was very limited. It was summarily that obligations required a free exercise of the will which could not be present where judgment was impeded in its action, as, for instance, in the case of lunatics. There was some authority with regard to drunkenness. He had been unable to find any Roman-Dutch law which set forth a defence like the present one. In "Kotze's Van Leeuwen" it was stated that all obligations must arise out of the free exercise of the will, which could not take place where there was a hindrance of the will. The English authorities went considerably further, and the obligation which rested on a person who set up a defence of this nature was a very heavy and serious one. It was held there that a person could not raise a point of insanity unless it was known to the other party at the time of the signing of a contract that he was insane, and the burden of proving lay on the person seeking to avoid the contract.

[Maasdorp, J.: I do not think our law goes as far as that.]

I think not. Continuing, he said that if the Court was satisfied on the facts that this allegation by the defendant was true, and that he was absolutely non compos, he was not prepared to maintain that he was bound by his contract, unless he subsequently could be held to have ratified it. He specially referred to that, because even if the circumstances were as alleged by the defendant, his subsequent conduct showed that he was quite satisfied with what had been done. He submitted that the defendant had not discharged the burden of proof that rested on him. Mr. Burton then reviewed the evidence at some length, after which he said he submitted that the defence was not a bona fide one, and that the defendant consequently was bound by his promise, and to fulfil his contract, and if he did not do so, to pay the plaintiff certain damages.

Mr. McGregor said the man's illness must have been an illness of a very serious nature, and Mr. Ossrey had endeavoured to make it appear as slight as possible. It was a good stroke of business on the part of Ossrey to endeavour to oust Miller from the business in this district. The plaintiff wished a man to break a contract with another man. How could he ask a Court of Law to give certain rights when the getting of such rights must make a man break his contract? They did not impute that the signature on the contract was a forgery, but they did say that Jacobsohn was not in law a consenting party.

Mr. Burton was not heard in reply.

Maasdorp, J., said the plaintiff in this case claimed specific performance of a written contract of lease, and damages for delay in complying with the conditions of the contract, or, as an alternative, he claimed £1,000 as damages for breach of contract. The plaintiff's case was based on two agreements—written contracts of lease. The one signed by the defendant as lessor, and the other signed by Ossrey on behalf of the plaintiff as lessee. The defendant admitted in his plea that the contract was signed by him, but he said that it was obtained from him by one Bremner and Ossrey, acting on behalf of the plaintiff, at a time when he (the defendant) was ill in bed, incapable of managing his own affairs, and partly delirious, or suffering from the after effects of deliriousness, and that the agreement of lease was therefore ab initio null and void. The defence consequently set up in this case was that if the contract was executed, he was not in a state of mind to give consent to this contract. It would, therefore be necessary for the Court to try and arrive at what the mental condition of the defendant was after the contract was entered into, and if it was discovered that he was then suffering from a temporary derangement of mind as a result of fever from which he had been suffering, and that this illness had induced such a feeble condition of mind that he was incapable of managing his own affairs, then the Court would arrive at the conclusion that this contract was null and void. Under the circumstances placed before the Court by the witnesses for the plaintiff, which was wholly different from the state of circumstances which had been deposed to by the witnesses for the defence, it appeared that Mr. Bremner and Mr. Ossrey, seeing that it was necessary to change the place of business from Puffadder nearer to Kakamas, set out with the intention of seeing a farmer living near to the drift with a view to establishing a shop there. When they arrived at defendant's shop, they were unaware that there was any likelihood of obtaining a place of business from the defendant, but they said that the defendant on being informed of their mission, told them that they could have a shop on his farm. Under these circumstances they entered into the lease. It was clearly established that during the negotiations two documents were drawn up which must have been the result of some conversation between them, and the writing of these documents must have taken some little time. They must have been writing in some part of the house, where the parties were exposed to view to any person who might go into the rooms. It was also stated that during the negotiations they referred to the contract made by Mr. Millar. They had elicited from the defendant that this document was kept in some case in the front room, and not in the bedroom where the defendant was supposed to have been. Not a single one of the witnesses for the defence saw any of these transactions. The explanation given by the plaintiff's witnesses for this was that they saw nothing of it, because they were not there. It was difficult to understand how they could have been there and not have seen these documents drawn up. It had been said by the witnesses for the defence that before Ossrey and Bremner arrived at the farm, that the defendant had had a fit, and was placed in bed in a dying condition, but notwithstanding the serious condition he was in, Mrs. Schultz, his wife, was engaged trading with a trader, and not paying any attention to her dying husband. He came to the conclusion that if the witnesses put forward by the defence had been present during the day, they must have left before this agreement was signed. There had been evidence led to show that the defendant was in a frail state of health but no evidence had been led to show that he was unable to do business. His wife must have been in and out of the room repeatedly, and was it likely that she would allow her husband, who was mentally deranged, to carry on a business agreement with these two men? Now, Schultz admitted that he had recovered from his trance about the middle of October, but nothing was done until the 2nd November, when Mr. Millar arrived on the scene. It was apparent that Mr. Millar was not expected. With regard to that letter, there had been a great conflict of evidence, and he had come to the conclusion that Mr. Millar and Mr. Ringer had not satisfied him that that letter went into the hands of the plaintiff. Upon the whole of the evidence he had arrived at the conclusion that it was impossible to decide otherwise than that when that contract was entered into the defendant was in full possession of his faculties. The plaintiff claimed specific performance that would be rather difficult to grant, and therefore the Court could not do so. The way to assess damages was to ascertain what loss the plaintiff had sustained. Mr. Millar's statement was that he was only making a bare living out of the place. It was expected that there would be some profits, and he was rather inclined to take the measure of damages at something not much more than the actual losses. The Court thought that if he was awarded £100, it would meet the justice of the case.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

MEYER V. MEYER. } 1905.
June 14th.

This was an action brought by Arend Meyer, of the Paarl district, against his wife, Sophia Petronella Meyer, of the Stellenbosch district, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Mr. M. Bisset was for the plaintiff; there was no appearance for the defendant.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, Colonial Office, gave evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Arend Meyer (the plaintiff) said he was married to the defendant on the 23rd September, 1884. There had been issue nine children, eight of whom were surviving.

Witness and his wife often quarrelled, and about two and a half years ago she left him. He had tried to get her back, but without success. She left him because he accused her of spending too much money, and because he said that his son must come home as soon as his work was finished.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before the 20th July, failing which rule to issue, calling on the defendant to show cause on the 3rd August why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

Postea (August 3rd). Rule made absolute.

TURNBULL V. TURNBULL.

This was an action brought by Magdalena Jacoba Turnbull, of Cape Town, against her husband, Charles Henry Turnbull, whose whereabouts is unknown, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default. The suit was by edictal citation.

Wm. Thos. Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register at the Colonial Office, gave evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Plaintiff said that she was married to the defendant in 1879. They lived happily together in Cape Town until 1883, when the defendant left her of his own accord. She did not know of any reason for his going away. Defendant was a baker.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: What do you want a divorce for now? Your husband must be 65 years of age?]

I want to get a chance to be married again, my lord. I want someone to support me.

A decree of restitution was granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 20th July, failing which a rule to issue calling on the defendant to show cause on the 3rd August why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

Postea (August 3rd). Rule made absolute.

RICHARDS V. MILLS. { 1905. June 14th.

Contract—Verbal—Inchoate.

Though a verbal contract is binding on the parties, yet if it be agreed that the contract should be reduced to writing, in order that the parties may discuss the terms thereof, the preceding verbal contract must be regarded as inchoate.

This was an action brought by Walter W. Richards, farmer, Queen's Town district, against James David Mills, farmer, Fort Beaufort district, for specific performance of a certain sheep lease and damages.

The declaration set out that on the 25th July, 1904, it was agreed between the defendant and one George Richards, the duly-authorised agent of the plaintiff, that defendant should let to the plaintiff, who was carrying on farming operations in the Orange River Colony, 200 merino ewes, of 2, 4, 6 and 8 teeth, in equal numbers, for a period of three years, at a rental of 2s. per sheep per year, payable in advance. Plaintiff was to purchase the said sheep at the end of three years at 20s. per head. Defendant had the option of receiving the whole or part of the purchase price at any time before the expiry of the period of hire. Plaintiff gave two sureties for the fulfilment of his part of the undertaking, and it was agreed that a written agreement in the above terms should be drawn up and executed by the parties. Thereafter the plaintiff had a written agreement drawn up embodying the above terms, and the said agreement was duly executed by himself and two sureties on the 8th August, 1904. On the 12th August the said George Richards, acting as aforesaid, duly tendered to the defendant £20, first year's rental, and requested him to complete the said written agreement and tender the said sheep to the plaintiff. The defendant refused the said tender, and refused to complete the agreement or deliver the said sheep as agreed upon, and though frequently requested to comply with his undertaking, he had neglected to do so. Plaintiff had suffered damages in the sum of £150, and would be damaged to the extent of £400 during the period of three years if plaintiff failed to carry out the contract. Plaintiff claimed immediate delivery of the sheep, an order directing the defendant to execute the said written agreement and damages in the sum of £150, or, as an alternative to this claim, damages in the sum of £400 and costs.

Defendant, in his plea, said that negotiations were entered into between himself and George Richards for the letting to the plaintiff of 200 merino ewes. The period of rental and option of purchase were discussed, but no terms were come to as alleged. No definite or concluded contract was agreed upon either then or at any time between the parties. It was arranged that the plaintiff should submit for approval of the defendant on or before the 12th August a written form of agreement; and it was of the essence of the negotiations that the said written agreement should be submitted on or before that date. Plaintiff failed to present an agreement on or before that date, but on the 19th August, George Richards presented a certain written document to the defendant for approval, which, however, did not set out the true nature of the negotiations between the parties. He prayed that the claim may be dismissed with costs. The replication was general.

Buchanan, A.C.J., remarked that it seemed a pity that the witnesses should have been brought to Cape Town for this case, and that the trial could not have taken place nearer Queen's Town.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton), for defendant.

George Richards, farmer, Hopfield, district of Queen's Town, said that he had been on very good terms with the defendant for many years. Witness's son was the plaintiff in this action, and had a farm in the Orange River Colony. The veld was good on his son's farm, and witness was requested by him to try to arrange for the hire or purchase of sheep. Witness saw the defendant, and had some talk with him about hiring certain of his sheep. Witness went down to the defendant's farm on the 20th July, and on the 24th July witness and defendant entered into a contract for the hire of the sheep. The sheep were to be of 2, 4, 6, and 8 teeth, in equal numbers. On the 25th July, witness arranged that Mr. A. J. Green and Mr. Lovemore, the latter of whom was present, should be securities. Mr. Lovemore prepared a memo. of the conditions of the contract. When witness presented the lease to be signed the defendant said it was a one-sided affair, and that he would not sign it. Defendant before then had told him that he had had some bother with his brother, and that he would be glad if he (Richards) could arrange to get the sheep elsewhere, otherwise he (defendant) would have to let him have the sheep. Witness said that he would try to get sheep elsewhere, but at no time did he release the defendant from his agreement. He made every endeavour to obtain sheep, but he did not succeed. It was impossible to get sheep, although both witness and his son had tried both in the Colony and in the Orange River Colony, even until February of this year. He had been very anxious to avoid unpleasantness with the defendant. In regard to the question of damages, he calculated that his son would have lost at the end of three years about £425 by not having had the sheep.

By the Court: The memorandum produced was a correct copy of the agreement. It said nothing about the lambs, but the lambs were to be retained by plaintiff.

Walter W. Richards (the plaintiff) bore out his father's evidence. When defendant repudiated the agreement, witness tried to get other sheep, but without avail, and he wrote to defendant stating that the matter must go through, as he had arranged to take another farm.

Henry Thomas Lovemore, farmer and boring contractor, said there was an agreement between plaintiff and himself to share the sheep when plaintiff got them from defendant, and the agreement between the parties was entered into in his presence. Witness made notes of what took place, and these notes were read by Mr. Mills, who said it was all right.

Cross-examined: Witness was to share any damages that were awarded in this action, as he was to have got half the sheep, but plaintiff was paying the costs of the action.

Mr. De Villiers closed his case.

Defendant, in his evidence, said that on the first interview on the 25th July, no agreement was concluded, because, in the first place, witness had to be satisfied as to sureties, and in the second place, the safe custody of the sheep. It was arranged that Geo. Richards should present a written form of agreement on the 12th August. Witness dipped his sheep, and they were ready to be handed over on the 12th August. George Richards did not come to his farm until Friday, the 19th August; witness was quite sure as to the dates. Witness told Richards that he had come too late, and that he did not intend to hire out the sheep, as he thought he could do better on his own account. He did not promise to let Richards have his sheep if he were unable to find any elsewhere.

Cross-examined: Witness denied that he had ever told the plaintiff's father that his farm was over-stocked. The memo. made by Mr. Lovemore was read over to witness. He did not agree to the sureties proposed by George Richards. He was not satisfied as to who should be responsible for the sheep during the term of the lease. He told George Richards definitely on the 19th August that he was going on his own "hook." Witness did not hear anything further from George Richards between the 19th August and late in September, and he therefore thought that Richards had in the meantime obtained sheep elsewhere.

Mrs. Elizabeth J. Mills (mother of the defendant) said that her son was expecting Mr. Richards, sen., to call on the 12th August. Mr. Richards, sen., however, did not come until the following Friday, the 19th August.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that he thought it might be laid down as a principle of law, with us especially, that verbal contracts if fairly proved were binding, if the parties had entered into a contract, and the reducing afterwards to writing was merely to be a record of what had been decided upon, the writing was not necessary to make a valid contract, but if it were the intention of the parties to have the document reduced into writing, so that they could discuss the terms, they were not bound until the contract had been discussed and duly executed. In this case the onus was on the plaintiff to prove that what took place on the 25th July was an out-and-out contract. This was denied by the defendant. Looking at all the circumstances, he (the learned judge) had come to the conclusion that the only judgment he could give was one of absolution from the instance with costs. The plaintiff had not discharged the onus that lay upon him of proving that a contract was entered into on the 25th July. Defendant would be allowed his expenses as a necessary witness.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN]

{ June 15th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of Kenneth Wiley as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Close moved for the admission of Mr. E. V. Bergh as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

HEYNES, MATHEW AND CO. V. CHETTY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order enabling the petitioners to enforce their landlord's lien on certain perishables at the Central Fruit Store, Longmarket-street, Cape Town, and to sell the said perishables for the benefit of their claim of £120 due for rent. Respondent occupied a shop forming part of Heynes, Mathew and Co.'s buildings, corner of Adderley and Longmarket streets, and petitioners had reason to believe that certain judgments had been taken against her in the R.M.'s Court.

Order granted as prayed, pending an action to be instituted forthwith.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

EQUITABLE FIRE ASSURANCE CO. V. LA GRANGE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for £48, interest on a mortgage bond, and for £3 12s. 6d. insurance premium and stamps.

Order granted.

FARBELL V. AREND AND SOLKER.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £299.

Order granted.

LOMBARD V. MYBURGH.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £300, with interest.

Order granted.

CAPORN AND CO. V. ROWE ROWE.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on a bill of exchange for £255 14s. 9d., endorsed by the defendant as surety.

The affidavit of the defendant admitted that he signed the bill of exchange, but the bill in its present state was not, he said, in that form when he signed it. Certain material alterations had been made since he signed the bill in regard to the period of payment. He submitted that under the circumstances the plaintiffs had lost all recourse by law against him. The affidavit of George Rowe Rowe, broker of the defendant, stated that his brother Henry was in no way a party to the alterations made in the bill.

The answering affidavit of William Lindley, manager of the plaintiff company, stated that the alterations were made in the presence of Henry Rowe Rowe. Deponent went on to explain the circumstances under which the draft had been drawn, as an outcome of a debt due from George Rowe Rowe for bricks supplied.

The replying affidavit of Henry Rowe Rowe entered in detail into the whole transaction.

Buchanan, A.C.J., suggested that the parties should go into the principal case.

Mr. Close argued that the matter was one that could properly be determined now.

Mr. Gardiner (for defendant) was not called upon.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that there was a direct conflict on the facts as disclosed by the affidavits. The parties would be ordered to go into the principal case, costs to abide the result.

BIGG V. WESSELS.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £105 3s. 4d., with interest.

Order granted.

PROVIDENT LAND TRUST V. O'CONNOR.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a dishonoured cheque for £150.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that a telegram had been received from the defendant, who stated that he was leaving Kimberley for Cape Town, but he did not say that he had a defence to the claim. Provisional sentence would be granted.

OHLSSON'S BREWERIES V. WESTWOOD.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a lease for £225, rent due for three months.

Order granted.

PARKER V. STEVENSON.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence for £81, interest on two mortgage bonds.

Order granted.

GALLOWAY V. TIRAN.

Mr. Baily moved for provisional sentence on an I.O.U. for £10, with interest and costs.

Order granted, subject to the document put in being stamped if required.

ESLATE WORDON V. SAILT.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £750, due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

VISSEER V. GOEDHALS.

Mr. Alexander moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on a judgment of this Court for £80, together £7 10s. costs. Defendant, it was stated, resided at Humansdorp, and plaintiff resided at Hanover.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

ARDEENE V. BIDEN. } 1905.
June 15th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones said that this matter was standing over for production of an affidavit of service of notice of bar. He moved for judgment for £100, and produced affidavit of service as required.

Order granted.

YATES V. FISHER.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for cancellation of a certain contract, repayment of £300 paid as deposit and costs of suit, a claim for damages having been dropped.

Order granted.

RECEIVERS ASSIGNED ESTATE HARRISON V. GIOVANNI AND DI BIASSIO, TRADING AS DI BIASSIO.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea upon a declaration for cancellation of lease of certain premises at Observatory-road by reason of two breaches of the conditions of the lease. Counsel said that he now applied for judgment against Luigi di Biassio for cancellation of the lease and for £40 10s. due by way of rent. The claim for damages would not be pressed.

Order granted.

SHUR AND ABRAHAMSON V. SCHAPER.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £80 15s. 7d., goods sold and delivered and moneys disbursed.

Order granted.

TURF HALL ESTATE V. OAKLEY.

Mr. Bailey moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £175, being first and second call on shares in the Turf Hall Estate, Limited, less £35 paid on account.

Order granted.

JOHNSON AND CO., LTD. V. ROYAL HOTEL COMPANY, LTD.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea for £207, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Ordered to stand over pending proof of service of notice of bar.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

RAUBENHEIMER V. RAUBEN-HEIMER. { 1905.
{ June 15th.

Divorce—Order for restitution of conjugal rights.

Before divorce can be granted for failure to comply with an order for restitution of conjugal rights, service of the rule nisi must be proved by affidavit. It is not sufficient to show that the rule must have come to the defendant's knowledge in some way or other (e.g.) because he or she was present in Court when it was granted.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for a decree of divorce in default of the wife's compliance with an order for restitution of conjugal rights.

His Lordship said that there was no affidavit of service of rule.

Mr. Jones said that the defendant was now in court, as she was when the rule was issued.

His Lordship said that no order could be given until the rule had been served. It would be necessary to serve the rule on the defendant.

Mr. Jones applied for an extension of the return day.

His Lordship said that the return day would be extended until the 22nd June, and the rule nisi would be extended until the 6th July.

Ex parte ESTATE HORN.

Mr. Long moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

VADASZ V. VADASZ.

Mr. Burton moved, on behalf of Mrs. Vadasz, for delivery of certain minor children.

The applicant stated in her affidavit that she was defendant in a divorce case. Some time ago the present respondent went to her house with a detective named Osberg, and demanded the two children. He locked her up, and took the children away. The children were now in the Nazareth Home, and expressed a wish to return home.

Dr. Greer, for the respondent, admitted that he took the children away, but did so because of her neglect and misconduct. He had put them into the Nazareth Home for safety sake. He locked her up because he feared she would take some of the clothes that he had packed in a box for the children.

Buchanan, A.C.J., declined to make any order on the application, but directed the plaintiff to go to trial during the present term.

Ex parte ESTATE OF DEAN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to raise a loan on mortgage.

The application was granted.

Ex parte DEWDNEY AND WERNICH.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave to register an ante-nuptial contract.

Attorney—Professional misconduct—Removal from roll.

This was an application by Robert Greening, of Cape Town, for re-admission to practise as an attorney of the court.

The petitioner's affidavit stated that on the 16th March, 1904, he was suspended from practice as an attorney of this court for twelve months, in consequence of certain irregularities in connection with his insolvency, which was held to be culpable, and for which he was punished. The proved debts of his insolvency amounted to £750 or thereabouts. He also owed £250, unproved. During the period of his suspension, he had been unable to make any arrangements to pay his debts or maintain himself, beyond securing a very poor and precarious livelihood at miscellaneous clerical work. He was willing, if his application were granted, to devote the whole of his income, saving a small allowance for his own maintenance, to the payment of his debts. He had no other means of support than the practice of his profession, and was unacquainted with any other business or calling.

The affidavit of William Scott Bigby, of Pietermaritzburg, secretary of the Natal Law Society, stated that Greening, on the facts in regard to the conviction in Cape Colony coming to their society's notice, was suspended on their application by the Supreme Court. In 1899 or 1900 a complaint was made to the Law Society concerning Greening, but owing to the disorganisation caused by the war, no steps were taken at that time.

The affidavit of Alexander John McCallum, secretary of the Cape Law Society, stated that on the 17th April the society applied for an extension of the return day until the 1st June, to enable them to make proper investigation as to certain charges made against the petitioner, both in this colony and in Natal. It was alleged, for instance, that he received from clients numerous sums of money, for the express purpose of paying the fees of counsel, and that he converted the said sums to his own uses, and that he had been guilty of fraud. Deponent had also received certain information from Mr. A. Cathcart Nicholls, of Durban, regarding malpractices and unprofessional conduct in Natal on the part of the petitioner. On these grounds, deponent asked for an extension of time to the 1st June.

The affidavit of Henry Cathcart Nicholls of Durban, stated that between 1898 and 1900 he had numerous transactions with the petitioner, of which he set out particulars. On the 25th March, 1900, Greening left Natal for England. He returned in February, 1901, but avoided Durban. In February, 1901, deponent instituted an action against Greening for the sum of £400, due to him, but owing to Greening's being in hiding and his continuous change of address, service could not be effected on him until the end of March. Appearance was entered by Greening to the summons, but he abandoned his address, and again went into hiding. Deponent obtained judgment for £310, with interest and costs. That judgment was still unsatisfied. Greening was cited by the Government to appear in reference to the unstamped documents and other irregularities in his protocol, and then absconded. Deponent, on investigating Greening's affairs, found numerous instances of irregularity in the course of his practice.

The affidavit of James Murray, of Durban, a carrier, stated that in January, 1900, he employed Greening to collect a debt for him, and although Greening collected the whole or the greater part of the debt, he (Murray) could not get any account or payment from him.

The affidavit of George Alfred Moss, of Cape Town, stated that in the case of Rex against Moss and Savare, heard at Paarl in 1902, he employed Greening as his attorney, and Mr. Schreiner and Mr. W. P. Buchanan appeared as counsel. During the few months that Greening had charge of the case, he paid him about £550. A considerable portion of this money was handed to Greening, on the representation that it was required to pay counsel's fees. The deponent afterwards learned from Mr. Schreiner and Mr. Buchanan that neither of them had received their fees from Mr. Greening. He paid a cheque for £75 to Greening for the specific purpose of having 50 guineas paid to Mr. Schreiner.

An answering affidavit of the applicant stated that in regard to the complaint alleged by Mr. Digby no notice was given to him at any time. He went on to say that he denied all and singular the insinuations and innuendoes of Mr. McCallum's affidavits, and objected to all such parts thereof as savoured of opinion, argument, hearsay, and the like. In regard to Mr. Cathcart Nicholls's affidavit, he said that Mr. Nicholls was unhappily afflicted with dementia, and was, he verily believed, of unsound mind, although not so found by judicial inquisition. Mr. Nicholls was refused admission as an attorney in Natal upon the finding of the Supreme Court that his bad character and intemperate habits debarred him therefrom. Applicant went on to allege that during his absence from Natal in 1900 he gave Nicholls his general power of attorney and gave into his custody all his property and considerable sums of money for collection. Thereafter, Nicholls endeavoured to extort money from him by means of blackmail and threats. He gave Nicholls a promise of £400, secured by promissory notes or bills of exchange, subject to the fulfilment of his promised service. He (Greening) declined to meet these, and Nicholls in turn declined to render him any account of his dealings. As to the provisional judgment, deponent intended to return and contest the claim put forward by Nicholls, but was prevented from doing so by financial incapacity. Deponent went on to make other allegations against Nicholls.

The affidavit of Helena Olsen, Addison-road, Salt River, stated that she was one of the plaintiffs in the case of Olsen and others against Boyd and others, and that Greening was her legal adviser. At various times in 1902 she paid him considerably over £450 with a view of carrying on the case. On several occasions Greening was paid money on the distinct representation by him that it was required to pay counsels' fees. One of these payments was a sum of £25, for which she received a receipt signed by Mr. W. G. Coulton.

Applicant's answering affidavit stated that although he received over £400 from Mrs. Olsen, his expenditure for her one way and another was about £600, and his costs if made out would amount to over £1,000. He denied having received a sum of £25 for counsel. One sum was paid to Mr. Coulton and the other to him (deponent) for his own fees. He had never failed to effect any specific purpose for which money had been paid to him. Moss's affidavit he declared was worded to deceive. He acted for Moss and his partner Robertson in many matters besides the criminal case. He denied having received £550 from Moss. The 50 guineas for Mr. Schreiner he (Greening) duly paid over. There was another sum of 50 guineas paid to Mr. Schreiner, but Moss had not yet paid that to him (Greening), nor had he paid him Mr. Buchanan's fees. In regard to the instances mentioned by Mr. Nicholls, deponent denied having taken Natal clients' money. He denied that he was cited to appear by the Government on his protocol. The Master or Registrar of the Supreme Court, Natal, wrote to him to call and see him. He did so, and satisfied him. His appointment was cancelled. He had no recollection of James Murray. Moss, he said, in November last, told him that the secretary of the Law Society was canvassing for complaints, and had offered him £10 to make one. Moss had demanded £10 from him under threat of making affidavit against him. The affidavit of Hildyard Home Drummond, stated that in November last Moss went into his office and asked Greening to assist him in a job. He apologised to Greening for having treated him badly, and said that the Law Society had offered him £10 to make a complaint against him, but that he could not conscientiously do so. The affidavit of William Frederick Robertson, stated that Moss had made misrepresentations in regard to the transactions between them arising out of the criminal case between them. Robertson went on to accuse Moss of having betrayed Greening by misrepresenting him to Mr. Schreiner, betraying deponent by denying that there had been a partnership between Moss and himself, and betrayed both Mr. Schreiner and Mr. Buchanan by avoiding their fees and blaming Greening.

The affidavit of William Gordon Coulton, solicitor, Cape Town, stated that the statement of Mrs. Olsen's affidavit in paragraph 5, to the effect that £25 was paid to Greening, was untrue. The said sum was paid to him (deponent). Paragraph 6 was also untrue, inasmuch as the £25 therein referred to was paid to Greening, not for counsel's fees, but on account of his own fees.

The affidavit of Edward Collins, of Criterion Chambers, Cape Town, stated that on the 26th July, 1902, while employed by Greening as a clerk, Greening handed to him £52 10s. in cash, with instructions to pay same to Mr. Schreiner. This deponent did.

The replying affidavit of Geo. Alfred Moss, denied the allegations contained in the applicant's affidavit to the effect that he acted for him in another capacity. The statements with regard to the alleged bribe were unfounded. Greening at the time with one Drummond was running a native labour bureau, and engaged him to act as a native conductor, but as he kept him for a fortnight without doing anything, he claimed his fee of £10, which had been agreed upon. Greening was arrested in December, but was acquitted. He had also read Drummond's allegations, which were false. He annexed to his affidavit cheque counterfoils to prove that he had paid Greening £300. He knew Greening well, and believed him to be thoroughly untrustworthy and unreliable in both public and private life.

A further affidavit made by Mrs. Olsen was also read in support of her previous affidavit. The further affidavit of the secretary of the Incorporated Law Society stated that the petitioner was on the 12th April, 1902, admitted an attorney of the Supreme Court. In his petition for admission he allowed it to be understood that he had come direct from England. That after his admission the Law Society discovered that he had been practising as an attorney and notary in Natal, and that he had absconded from Natal, and that at the date of his admission to the Supreme Court steps were being taken in Natal with a view to having him struck off the rolls, and that he had already been removed from the roll of notaries. That in corroboration of the foregoing he directed the attention of the Court to the affidavits of W. S. Bigby and H. Cathcart Nicholls. On the 14th March, 1903, petitioner surrendered his estate as insolvent, and the trustee experienced the greatest difficulty in obtaining from the insolvent anything approaching a correct statement of his affairs. In October, 1903, Greening was charged with culpable insolvency. He was convicted and sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour, and in consequence was suspended from practising as an attorney for a period of one year. After his release, petitioner went into the office of an attorney named Gerald Scanlon (who has since absconded) where he acted ostensibly as clerk, but in reality acted as a partner of the firm. After leaving Scanlon's office, petitioner, in conjunction with an individual named Home Drummond, and a party named Shortle, initiated and carried on in Cape Town a concern known as the Native Labour Agency Company for the purpose of recruiting natives for the mines. Greening came under the notice of the police, and in common with Drummond and Shortle, appeared in due course in dock at the Water-street Criminal Court on a charge of obtaining money on false pretences, but owing to a scarcity of evidence the case for the prosecution failed, and the accused were discharged. That thereafter, Greening, in common with Drummond, carried on business, the nature of which was unknown to deponent, at Rhodes Buildings, St. George's-street. At present, Greening, in common with Drummond, was carrying on a weekly newspaper called "South African Truth." Greening was still an undischarged insolvent. With regard to the affidavit of June 1, it appeared that all the expenditure of "£600" and costs of "over £1,000," totalling in all to over £1,600, was incurred within the very short period of six months. Receipts had been lodged with deponent for a sum amounting to £425 for money paid by Mrs. Olsen to Greening in connection with the case referred to. On the 17th April, deponent wrote to the Attorney-General requesting him to obtain a note of fees due and outstanding by Greening to counsel, and he received from Mr. Advocate Schreiner, K.C., Mr. Advocate Searle, and Mr. Advocate Alexander statements showing the amounts due to them by Greening, but still unpaid. Acting under instructions, the attorneys to the Law Society communicated with the parties to several of the cases noted in Mr. Schreiner's and Mr. Searle's memoranda. That the letters were returned marked "No Address." That Greening owes a considerable sum amounting to the best of deponent's belief to £70 to Mr. Advocate Buchanan, who is at present in England. The allegation contained in the affidavit with regard to the Law Society attempting to bribe Moss was devoid of any foundation. Moss, when approached on the subject of making an affidavit relative to Greening's admission, evinced no desire to do so, and it was only upon urgent representations that he consented to do so.

The applicant in person; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Alexander) for the Law Society.

The applicant said he was labouring under great disadvantage, because appearing as he did for himself he was too conscious of his imperfections to do himself full justice. He started practice in this Colony in 1902, but this practice was rather short-lived. He was returned a culpable insolvent, and the Chief Justice, in dealing with him, struck him off the rolls for a year, but gave him an opportunity of retrieving himself. When he made his application for reinstatement, the Incorporated Law Society opposed it, as they said they wanted to get affidavits from Natal, which were to be served on him. The matter was put off until April 20, but did not come on until May 4, when it was again adjourned until the present. The society now put in affidavit of one Cathcart Nicholls, whom the Law Society of Natal would not admit as an attorney. He held that they should render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and render to Natal the things that belonged to Natal. He had to appear in Natal during the coming month to apply for reinstatement, and then the Natal charges could be brought before him. In Cape Town the Law Society had depended on the affidavits of Moss and Mrs. Olsen. Now, he (the applicant) was in a humble sphere of life, but Moss was humbler still, as he filled the useful, but lowly, position of a publican, and was he a competent man to judge of his (the applicant's) private life. Moss had stated he paid him £500. He had not had time to reply to the affidavit. He had had to disburse money for him in different kinds of business. In one case he settled the claim a barman brought against him for £50. When Moss got out of his trouble he did not want to pay Mr. Schreiner his fee, but he had to do so. He had, when the proceedings were brought against him, several cases which he had to hand over to other attorneys. He was rather surprised at Mrs. Olsen. Her case was a very complicated one, and he formed the opinion that the Ordinance of 1826 could be set aside, but the Court found differently. He went on with the case for these people, who would not take any advice, and they finished up by paying him a great deal less than he disbursed for her. Up to the time he had seen the affidavit by Mrs. Olsen, she expressed nothing but gratitude to him. He did not know how far the Court would rely on Moss's statements, but they would see how exceedingly reckless he was in some of them. Moss denied that he had taken Robertson for him in any case but a criminal case. He had not been able to answer that affidavit, but, if necessary, he could bring witness to show that he had. Moss denied that he had not taken Robertson into partnership, but the Court held differently, and Moss now had the audacity to impugn the finding of the Court. If Moss believed that he (Greening) was untrustworthy, why did he apply to him for a job. In conclusion, he said he appeared before that Court as a man who had done wrong, for which he was sorry, and as a man who had been severely punished. He asked the Court to give him a chance. It was not an unworthy ambition to try to do right again.

Mr. Burton was not called upon.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The applicant in this case was an English solicitor, and by virtue of his qualifications, was admitted to practice at the Natal bar. He left Natal and came to the Cape Colony, and on his papers he was also admitted to practice as an attorney of this court. While so practising, he was charged with culpable insolvency and convicted, and on his conviction he was suspended in this colony and also in Natal. The learned Chief Justice who suspended him gave him leave to apply again in twelve months to be reinstated. Since the insolvent was struck off, the Incorporated Law Society heard something to his discredit. This Court has often reinstated attorneys who have been struck off the rolls for misdemeanour, and who by their conduct have shown that it was merely a mistake, and who were entitled to be reinstated. Is the present one of those cases? I am clearly of opinion that it is not. The secretary of the Law Society of Natal has communicated with the secretary of the Law Society of Cape Colony intimating that, although the applicant had been suspended in Natal because of his suspension in Cape Colony, affidavits had been filed by people in Natal with regard to his conduct there, and there was also another charge made by the Government of Natal, to the effect that, whilst acting as a notary public, he conducted his business in such a way as to practically defraud the Government. In Natal he had acquired money from clients which he had not fully accounted for, and he also entered into arrangements with clients to settle their claims against him, arrangement which he in a letter proved that he did not intend to carry out. It is true that he has been acquitted on the charge of theft by means of false pretences, but the fact of his being acquitted on such a charge is no reason why he should be reinstated. The Court does not require to take into consideration the charges alleged against him in Natal, because he has been guilty of improper conduct in this country. The improper conduct in Natal was not brought to the notice of the Court when the applicant was first admitted. The Court has to decide whether the applicant is a person who should be allowed to take up the position of an officer of this Court, and to be allowed to treat the public in the way he had treated them in the past. Two extraordinary cases have been revealed during the hearing of the petition. One was a case which has been before the Court, and in which he collected some £450 as costs for a case that did not necessitate one tithe of that amount, and after getting it, he defrauded, not only his clients, but the bar, of the money he received from his clients for them. Then, in the other case, a man was charged with assault, and paid him £550 to conduct the defence and fee counsel, and he had not paid counsel one penny of the amount due to them. Is that a man to be an officer of the Supreme Court and to deal with the public? I distinctly hold he is not.

The applicant applied for leave to appeal.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said he could not give it, and there was no good in the applicant applying hereafter for reinstatement unless his conduct justified it.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDO. P.]

DARTER V. DARTER. { 1905.
June 16th.

This was an action for an order for the restitution of conjugal rights brought by Mrs. G. Darter against her husband, Aiden Albert Darter, failing which a decree of divorce in consequence of his malicious desertion.

The plaintiff's declaration stated she resided in Cape Town, and the defendant was born in Cape Town, but his present address was unknown to her. She was married at Bulawayo in 1898. She was married by ante-nuptial contract. On or about the 2nd October, 1902, whilst on a visit to England, the defendant deserted her, and had not since returned.

Mr. Close for plaintiff; defendant in default.

Georgina Darter, the applicant, stated she was married to defendant in Bulawayo in 1898. They lived together there about 14 months, and he then joined a regiment and went to the front. Witness came to Cape Town. Defendant went to England in 1901, but returned again. He then started as a broker. Defendant was of a roving disposition, but made Cape Town his headquarters. In 1902 he went to the Orange River Colony, in charge of the Native Refugee Camp. Plaintiff then went to Germany, and in May, 1903, she joined the defendant in Hamburg. He sent her across to England, as he would not allow her to stay with him.

Witness: He told me he was in difficulties, and that I would have to go away if I did not give him money. Witness then went to Newcastle, in England, and he followed her. The defendant went to London, as he said his father was ill. She found that such was not the case, but that the father was going on a holiday. She went back to live with him in London in a boarding-house. There was a lady living in the house, and she was put out by the landlord. The defendant left the following morning, and she did not see him again until the next day. She made inquiries as to his absence, and he said he had got drunk and slept at an hotel. The defendant agreed to meet her at his cousin's that evening and she went there, but he did not turn up. She received a letter from him, stating that he had gone to Rochester for a holiday. Subsequently, she received another letter, in which he stated that he had decided to strike out for himself, and had gone to America under an assumed name. She did not know his present whereabouts.

[Maasdorp, J.: How do you propose to effect service of the order?]

Mr. Close: In the same way as the notice was served.

Witness: Yes. It is Good Hope House, 13, St. John's Wood-road, London.

Decree of restitution granted, the defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 15th August, failing which rule to issue calling upon him to show cause on the last day of the term why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed. Personal service to be effected if possible, and a registered letter to be addressed to the defendant at his father's residence.

Postea (Aug. 31st). Rule made absolute.

VAN DER MERWE V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1905.
June 16th.
„ 20th.

Negligence — Railway Department—Damages.

This was an action brought by Carl Petrus van der Merwe, residing at Wellington, against the Colonial Government to recover the sum of £173, being the value of certain tobacco, consigned from the Transvaal to Wellington last October, and alleged to have arrived in a damaged condition at Wellington and for £10 damages.

The claim was an alternative one. The plaintiff claimed £173 and £10 damages, and the defendants could retain the tobacco, or on the other hand, a sum of £100, the plaintiff to retain the tobacco.

The plaintiff's declaration stated that he purchased 2,008 lb. of tobacco at Vereeniging, and consigned it to Wellington by train. It became the duty of the defendants to deliver the tobacco in the same condition as it was handed to them. This they failed to do. Plaintiff consequently refused to accept delivery of the tobacco, and claimed the value from the Railway Department. Plaintiff offered to sell the tobacco by auction if the department would agree to pay the difference between the amount realised and the amount the tobacco cost, but this the defendants declined to do.

Mr. Searle: I suppose that was put in for expenses, but I won't press that claim.

The defendants' plea admitted the consignment of the tobacco. They admitted that it was their duty to deliver the consignment in good condition, but they denied that it was received into their custody in proper condition. The damage was caused by the sweating of the tobacco. They denied liability, and prayed that the claim might be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), appeared for the plaintiff; and Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Nightingale), appeared for the defendants.

Mr. Searle said a good deal of the evidence in this case had been taken on commission, and would be read at a later date.

Carl Petrus van der Merwe (the plaintiff), stated he was a speculator. He imported tobacco from the Transvaal and sold it to dealers. On the 19th October he had some tobacco at Vereeniging, Transvaal. He consigned the tobacco to Wellington Station. There were 31 bags, a bale, and a package. He paid £159 16s. for the tobacco there, and in addition had to pay wagon charges. He was claiming £173, which was not a very high price, as it worked out at 1s. 6d. per lb. There were 30 bags of cut tobacco, which was thoroughly dry. In the bale there were 40 bags of tobacco weighing between 4 and 5 lb. each. The package contained roll tobacco. He saw the tobacco being loaded. It was in good order and condition. Witness inquired from the checker how long the tobacco would take to arrive at Cape Town. He said six days. Witness then left Vereeniging and proceeded to Wellington. The tobacco had not arrived in the six days, so witness, who had sold the tobacco to a Mr. Liebbrandt, placed the matter in the hands of his attorney. Mr. Liebbrandt cancelled the sale, in consequence of the tobacco not arriving. The tobacco arrived the following morning, so witness went to inspect it. He was accompanied by a Mr. Malan. The tobacco was wet. It was not the cause of sweating. By the 16th the tobacco had been removed from the wet sacks and placed in dry ones. The roll tobacco was in a fish sack. If the tobacco had been opened out and dried the day it arrived, the damage might not have been so great, but the stationmaster covered it up with a tarpaulin. The tobacco in that state was only worth 3d. or 4d. per lb. He was prepared to keep the tobacco if the defendants paid him half the value.

In cross-examination, witness said he had sold the tobacco to Liebbrandt for 2s. per lb. He paid Van Zyl from 9d. to 1s. per lb. for the tobacco he purchased from him. He paid in cash, but never bothered about a receipt for cash. He bought more from another Mr. Van Zyl, and paid from 1s. to 1s. 6d. per lb. and paid Van Aswegen from 1s. to 1s. 3d. per lb. Witness tried the tobacco, but it would not smoke. Hoffman, the checker, told witness that if there was not sufficient traffic to warrant a through truck, the delivery of the tobacco could not be guaranteed. If Hoffman said that the tobacco was damp when delivered at Vereeniging Station, it was incorrect. Witness did not intend to reject the tobacco if it was in good order. He was sorry to find that the tobacco was damaged, because he could easily have sold the tobacco. All the bags showed signs of wet, the whole bag in some cases being wet right through. Three bags and the wool bale were soaking wet. The bale was packed in the middle of the bags. At the first inspection he only looked at 10 or 12 bags. He would not say that the bags had not been used previously, but at any rate they were clean. It was not correct that the great bulk of the tobacco was in good condition. There were more than three bags opened, but not more than six. Wet tobacco would not sweat enough to stain the bags in which it was carried. He remembered one roll of tobacco being opened, and found to be damp inside, although it was dry on the outside.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: If the tobacco was wet on the 1st of November, it would be possible a fortnight later for the tobacco to be dry on the outside, but still wet inside. He had never told the Government that he would be willing to take back the tobacco and pay the expenses.

Jacobus Malan, living at Wellington, said he remembered the plaintiff asking him to look at some tobacco in the goods shed at Wellington. The tobacco was in a bad condition, being wet. Eight or ten of the bags were partly wet. The condition of the tobacco could not have been caused by sweating. The water dripping from the bags was rain water.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Four of the bags were especially wet. There were some bags which were wet at the edges, but not in the middle, or wet on one side only. The whole of the bale was wet.

A witness named Rhondie stated that if tobacco sweated it would not stain the sack. In his opinion, what he saw would not be occasioned by tobacco sweating. Tobacco would not sweat unless it was damped.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: If tobacco was damped for sweating purposes, and not properly dried, it would not stain the sacks. Two years ago witness received 12 bags of tobacco which had been wetted on the journey. He could not dispose of it. Witness did not examine the tobacco.

Pieter de Villiers stated he examined the tobacco about 16 days after it arrived. It was all in bags. Mr. Van Eyk cut a bag open, and witness examined the contents. There were stains on the bags. In witness's opinion, they were caused by the tobacco getting wet.

It was not caused by sweating, as if it sweated to that extent the whole bag would be stained. The contents of the bag opened were mildewed. Witness dealt in tobacco.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness was a hawker by trade. He only examined one bag.

Jacobus Roubaix, a carrier, stated he had been employed by the railway company, but had left them. He saw the sacks in question about six weeks ago. They were stained. The stains were caused by water. Cut tobacco now fetched 2s. 6d. per lb., and roll tobacco 2s. Witness saw Smith, the checker, who told him that Van der Merwe would not take the tobacco because it was wet.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness knew nothing about the growing or drying of tobacco.

Bertram de Kock, a carrier, of Wellington, stated he saw the tobacco in the goods shed. The stationmaster had the damaged tobacco on a "sail" on the floor. There were three kinds of tobacco. The men in the shed were engaged in sorting the tobacco.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Richard Smith, a railway guard, stated he was guard of the "97 down" from Norval's Point to Naauwpoort on the 27th October. The truck in which the tobacco was conveyed was well sheeted and properly fastened. No rain fell during the journey, because if there had he would have made an entry of it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness knew nothing of the contents of the truck. Witness was first spoken to about this truck during the present month. It was his duty to see the truck sheeted, and if that was not done it would be noted.

Frederick Coxon, a railway guard, stated he was in charge of the train which conveyed the truck from Naauwpoort to De Aar. His journal showed that the trucks were all right, and the weather was fine.

Mr. Burton said evidence had been given on commission by the stationmasters at Norval's Point, Naauwpoort, and De Aar as to the custody of the truck at the respective stations, and it would be put in in due course.

Mr. Clinch was guard of the train which conveyed the truck from De Aar to Beaufort West. According to his journal, nothing unusual occurred.

Arthur John Coleman, foreman at Beaufort, stated the truck was at Beaufort for twelve hours. It was not interfered with while there. There was no rain during that time.

Sedgwick Waterworth said he was guard of the train to which this truck was attached from Beaufort West to Touws River. The truck was properly sheeted and in good condition.

Cross-examined: He first heard that there was a complaint about eight weeks ago.

John Henry Lynch, foreman at Touws River Station, said that the truck was detained there. During the detention of the truck at Touws River no rain fell, according to his book. The cause of the delay there was want of engine power.

John Markhams Bloom, another foreman at Touws River, said there was no rain between the time of the arrival and departure of the truck.

Frank Farrington, guard of the train containing the truck between Touws River and Worcester, said no rain fell up to the arrival at Worcester.

J. Behr, a number-taker at Worcester Station, remembered the truck arriving at Worcester and leaving the same day for Wellington. There was no rain during the time the truck was at Worcester.

John McKay, stationmaster at Touws River, but stationmaster at Wellington last November, said that when the plaintiff complained to him about the non-arrival of the tobacco, witness replied that the Railway Department did not guarantee to convey goods to arrive at the station on a certain day. He saw the bags of tobacco when they had been unloaded in the goods shed, some of the bags and the bale having patches of moisture upon them. The bags were not dripping wet, and all but five appeared to be all right.

He examined the bags on the morning of their arrival. Five bags and a bale were partly damaged by patches of moisture. On the 2nd November the plaintiff said he would call next day for an examination in the goods shed or De Villiers' store, but he failed to do so. Witness reported to the Traffic Manager that six of the bags were damaged by wet. On the 2nd November the contents of the six bags that showed moisture were sifted out, and, in all, about 80 lb. were damaged. At the official examination on the 16th November, the plaintiff, and Van Eyk only examined a couple of bags, and assumed all the others were damaged. When he saw the bags on the first occasion, he could not say what caused the damp.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The foreman had the bags arranged for examination when witness first saw them. He could not say whether "wet" implied damaged by water. Witness advised Van der Merwe to claim for the actual loss. With the exception of the five bags he had referred to, the bags were dry. He had handled the whole of the bags, but did not take any tobacco out, except from the five bags. He simply looked at the tops of the others.

Albert Smith, a checker at Wellington Station, said he remembered the truck containing the tobacco arriving at Wellington Station. The truck was perfectly sheeted. The bags occupied about one quarter of the truck, and the flooring of the truck where the bags did not lie was dry. He, with others, started unloading, and after they had removed the top layer, they noticed a bale that was wet, and also three bags, whilst two other bags were also "clammy." He considered that the bags containing the tobacco had been used previously to this consignment. He handled the whole of the bags.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He examined the sheet carefully, because of the damage to the tobacco.

Percy Miller said that he was a checker at Wellington in November last. He was present when the truck containing the tobacco was unloaded, and the sheet covering the tobacco was in good condition. The bags only occupied about a quarter of the flooring of the truck. When off-loading, they found that the bottom of five bags showed signs of dampness.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He could not say the remainder of the bags were discoloured.

Peter Engledough, a checker on the railway at Wellington, said the truck containing the tobacco was properly sheeted. In unloading, he noticed that five bags showed signs of dampness, also a bale.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He noticed a little damp on the bags at off-loading.

Arthur Colton, general merchant, of Wellington, who inspected the tobacco on the 16th November at the request of the stationmaster, said he pointed out to Van Dyk that the rolled tobacco was musty, as a result of being put up before it was properly dry. The cut tobacco had evidently sweated. He could put the same class of tobacco down at Wellington at 9½d. a lb. The bulk of the tobacco was merchantable. In all, about six bags were unmerchantable as smoking tobacco. Mr. Van Eyk, who seemed annoyed with the stationmaster, picked up a bad roll and walked away.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: For seven or eight years he had not imported tobacco from the Transvaal. It all depended on how the tobacco was packed in the first instance whether it sweated or not. It was his opinion that the damp stains came from the inside. He had a sample submitted to him within the last ten days, offering him any quantity at 9½d. a lb.

Fred. K. Becker, general dealer, of Wellington, who also examined the tobacco at the request of the stationmaster, stated that he found mouldy tobacco in four or five bags. Out of the lot he considered sound, he picked out ten or twelve bags, and found the contents negotiable.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The first time he saw the consignment was the 22nd. The appearance and smell of the tobacco would tell him whether it was good or not. He only smoked from one bag. He had the tobacco in view if it was thrown on the market.

Edward Frost, clerk in charge of the Wellington Goods Station, who was on duty when the plaintiff came to ask about the cost of delivery, stated that the plaintiff offered to take delivery, as he was sick of the whole business.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: If the plaintiff had offered to pay the delivery charges, witness would not have taken it.

Thomas Alfred Mundy, chief claims clerk of the Western system, said that the expression, "damaged partially by water," came from the twisting of a telegram from stationmasters.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Mr. Close read the evidence taken on commission of Stephenus van Zyl, who sold the tobacco to the plaintiff, which set out that the tobacco was packed in good condition, and did not get wet on its way to the station. Other witnesses from the C.S.A.R. testified to the despatch of the tobacco to Wellington in dry weather.

Mr. Nightingale read the evidence, taken on commission, of Ben Collins, a checker, of Kroonstad, which set out that the tobacco, which was transhipped there, was despatched in good order. No rain had fallen that night. The checker at Wellington testified to the proper sheeting of the packages. It looked like rain at Bloemfontein, but the tobacco was properly covered. The guard who conducted the train to Norval's Pont produced his journal, which showed rain. He would not swear that the rain could not get through the sheets. Other evidence set out that the truck was not interfered with in its passage down the line.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdoorp, J., said that the plaintiff's case was that he delivered a quantity of tobacco in a number of bags to the defendants at Vereeniging to be conveyed from Vereeniging to Wellington, and he said that the tobacco when so delivered was in good order and condition. He complained that when the tobacco arrived at Wellington it was found to be wet, and that its condition was such that it was unmerchantable, and that he sustained loss. He now sought to recover the damage so suffered by him from the defendant. The defendant admitted that if the goods were received in good order and condition it would have been his duty to deliver them in the same condition. The defendant also admitted that when the tobacco arrived at Wellington it was wet, but he said that the condition in which it was was caused by a process called sweating. The Court had now to decide whether the condition in which the tobacco was produced by sweating or whether it was the result of wetting the tobacco got from rain. His Lordship reviewed the evidence, and said there was evidence of the external application of moisture, and the only conclusion the Court could come to was that that external moisture must have come from the rain. Upon the whole of the evidence he came to the conclusion that the bags got wet after they got into the possession of the defendant, that the wetting was the result of rain, and that the rain could not have got on to the bags without the default of the defendant. The defendant would therefore be liable in damages for any loss the plaintiff might have suffered from the injury to the tobacco. On the point of the damages, there was a good deal of evidence, and he might say at once that he found the witnesses for the defence had given their evidence truthfully and candidly, and upon their evidence he ascertained the amount of the damage that was done. If it had been left merely to the plaintiff's evidence, he was very doubtful whether he could upon that evidence have come to the conclusion that so much damage was done, because the plaintiff took no care to make a fair examination of the goods. The only fair examination was made by the defendant's witnesses, and they had satisfied the Court that eight bags were damaged. The value of the tobacco in these amounted to £39, but there was not total loss, and he thought it would be a fair allowance if damages were awarded to the extent of two-thirds of the value of the tobacco. Judgment would therefore be for the plaintiff for the sum of £26, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Ex parte PHILIPS. { 1905.
June 16th.

Mr. Gardiner moved, as a matter of urgency, for leave to sue by edictal citation and for the attachment of certain property at Paarl, ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Petitioner was a wagon-builder at the Paarl, and one Van Sittert, who was now in Damaraland, was indebted to him in the sum of £140. Van Sittert was the owner of certain landed property at the Paarl, which petitioner asked leave to attach.

timber, and they agreed—it is a perfectly clear agreement—to supply him with wood to the value of £48 sterling, upon certain condition which are set out in writing, and which are admitted to have been an agreement between the defendants and Bouklas. The agreement was that the timber should be supplied on condition that Bouklas built a boat with it, and that he should finish the boat within eight weeks from the date, and there is a further important condition that he should not have the right to sell, or in any way dispose of, the said boat, which shall be and remain the property of the said W. and G. Scott, until the said Bouklas shall have paid them in full for all materials supplied by them to him. Now this agreement, if it mean anything at all, means this, that they agreed to supply him with timber, and only on condition that the article built with that timber becomes their property. It does not seem to me to be a matter in which they suspend, by any condition, the passing of the property to a purchaser, but it does seem to me that they make a contract by which that timber remains their own, and the article which it builds becomes their own until the purchase price of the timber is paid. I do not think that matter is affected by the subsequent clause in the agreement, in which they agree that the boat may be sold through W. and G. Scott, instead of by them, and that the purchase price must be paid at their Cape Town office, they, on their part, agreeing to pay to the said Bouklas as profit on the said boat any balance after deducting the cost of the timber. That article means that Bouklas shall not have the power of disposing of the boat, but still he may find a purchaser and sell it through them, but the important reservation is made that the purchase price has to be paid to them at their office. The boat was finished about the end of October, or beginning of November, and it lay upon the beach at Rogge Bay for sale, and ostensibly must have looked to the world as if it were Bouklas's boat. Afterwards, Bouklas did a dishonest thing. He did find a purchaser, he found the unfortunate plaintiff in this case, who thought he was dealing with an honest man, and who seems to have parted with his good money to the extent of £85 to Bouklas, who was then, apparently, on the point of absconding, which he subsequently did as soon as he got the money. Skarabino thereupon took possession of the boat, but the defendants at once stepped in, and asserted their rights. In face of such a clear agreement as this between the defendants and Bouklas, it seems to me a pity that plaintiff did not come to some sort of compromise with W. and G. Scott, who, I dare say, under the circumstances, would not have been hard upon him if they thought that he had bought bona fide from Bouklas. They might have been content as long as their claim for the price of materials had been satisfied. The plaintiff produced a legal document, showing the sale from Bouklas to him and the consideration that was paid. Unfortunately, bona fide purchasers sometimes have to suffer by reason of the dishonesty of the person from whom they purchase. Numerous instances of that sort might be cited, for example, of stolen horses being sold to unsuspecting purchasers. Although Skarabino has acted bona fide, he has had the misfortune to buy what I must hold to be another person's property from a dishonest vendor, who held himself out to be the owner. I regret very much that Skarabino must suffer this loss. I regret still more that he has added to that loss by what must be very expensive legal proceedings. Had the matter to be decided been whether there was or was not a suspensive condition by Scotts as to this timber, I think I should have taken time to consider, because it does seem to me that Dr. Greer's argument is one that deserves careful attention, and I should have liked to look out authorities as to whether a person, selling raw material to be worked into some other article, like a boat or a suit of clothes, can hold a suspensive condition over the finished article by reason of having been owner of the raw material. The principle would be an important one, and I do not for a moment wish to be taken by this decision to decide that particular question. I look upon this question, not as one of a sale by Scott's under a suspensive condition, but a sale on a condition which is perfectly clear that the article when made should be their actual property. Under these circumstances, much as I sympathise with the plaintiff in this case, I feel that there must be judgment for the defendants, and I suppose that costs must follow the result.

Dr. Greer having addressed the Court on the question of costs, Hopley, J., said that the case, he thought, should not have come into court, and he saw no reason for departing from the ordinary rule, that costs must follow the result. Judgment would be entered for the defendants, with costs, including costs of applications on motion.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAAS ORP, and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

VILANDER CONCESSIONS SYN-DICATE V. COLONIAL GOV-ERNMENT. 1905.
June 19th.

[For Head Note to this case and report of the Special Case, see 15. C.T.R. 207.]

This was an appeal to a full Court from a judgment given on March 7th, 1905, by De Villiers, C.J., sitting as a Divisional Court.

The judgment then given was practically absolute from the instance. The concessions in dispute were two in number, and were given by the Chief Vilander to one A. H. Carstensen. These were set out in the special case stated 15 C.T.R. 207.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor), for appellants. Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Nightingale), for the respondent Government.

Hopley, J., asked when Vilander died. Sir H. Juta said that Vilander was shot during the late war.

Mr. Searle: We want to know what our rights are. The plaintiffs contend (1) that these concessions are still of full force and effect and binding on the Colonial Government; (2) that the plaintiffs are entitled to have their rights decided by the Court; (3) to obtain an order declaring the Government bound to recognise these concessions. (4) To obtain an order directing the Government as to the granting of any further concessions, and the conditions under which such concessions (if any) are to be granted. The Government deny all our contentions, and say that they can make grants, including that of minerals, without regard to the concessions. A further contention of the Government is that the rights of the concessionaires have lapsed by non-payment of fees after May 5th, 1891. But the Concession Court, with all the facts before it, confirmed the concessions, and its judgment is binding in law. We paid Vilander, and then his executors.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: But the Concession Court could control payments only previous to the date of their decision.]

We paid Vilander up to the date of his death, and then we paid his executors. The date of his death is quite immaterial, as payment to his executors was as good as payment to himself. We hold that both payments were good. Even if they were not, Government might have a right to demand payment of dues and even of arrears, but they have no right to claim forfeiture.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: They do not claim forfeiture; they only say that you are not entitled to your declaration of rights till you pay.]

Either the concessions have lapsed by reason of non-payment or not. They contend that our concessions are valueless as Government is entitled to all precious stones and minerals. Their real contention is, that by reason of the judgment of the Concession Court the concessions are practically of no value whatever.

[Maasdorp, J.: If you were to tender now, would they not recognise your right?]

No, doubt. Possibly we may have paid to the wrong parties, but on tender we have a right to our lease. Estate Thomas v. Kerr and Another (13. C.T.R. 526).

[Hopley, J.: There the whole case turned upon the mining laws of Bechuanaland.]

We say that the judgment of the Concession Court only gives us rights subject to any mining laws (as to the way of working mines, etc.) which do not conflict with our rights.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: And those laws include the payment of rates.]

I cannot admit that; we paid these when we paid our £500. We are not bound to pay for a monthly licence; for if we are in the same position as other prospectors, our concessions are valueless.

[Maasdorp, J.: Do you claim exclusive rights?]

That is not our point, but we say that we are not bound in the same way as ordinary prospectors.

[Maasdorp, J.: After you have chosen your area can you go beyond it?]

No, but we had a right, first to 400 square miles, and subsequently to the whole territory.

[Maasdorp, J.: That supposes that you find there.]

The concession says "All minerals, etc. wheresoever found."

[Maasdorp, J.: Suppose that the same concession was given to a number of other people; would they not be in the same position as yourselves?]

Yes, but still our concessions would be of considerable value. See Proclamation (British Bechuanaland) 169, sec. 3-19 and 21. Section 2 is not against me. The Concession Court could not admit rights beyond reasonable limits, but they could give exclusive rights within reasonable limits. The whole object of the establishment of this Court was to protect concessions which were not admitted by the ordinary law.

[Maasdorp, J.: Could the Court have confirmed a concession which was beyond reasonable limits?]

It could limit such concessions. See Section 23 of the Proclamation.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: And they limited your concession by making it subject to all laws of British Bechuanaland.]

Then what is the use of the concession?

[Maasdorp, J.: Are you satisfied with the judgment of the Concession Court?]

Yes, but we want a declaration that the judgment is binding on the Government. The Government deny that we are entitled to this.

[Maasdorp, J.: They admit it is binding, but subject to the laws of British Bechuanaland.]

The question is whether this means all laws, or only those which do not conflict with our concessions. That is the whole point. See Section 22 of the proclamation. If Section 21 stood alone it might have seemed that the Concession Court could not give us exclusive rights, but Section 22 shows that this is not so.

We have a right to prospect and win minerals, etc., etc., to import machinery, and we can prospect without a monthly licence. The general rights of ordinary prospectors are ruled by Act 31 of 1898; but in order to rightly interpret the judgment of the Concession Court we must look to the law then in force in British Bechuanaland, viz., Proclamation (B.B.) 63 of 1889.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: It may be that the concessions are valueless.]

[Maasdorp, J.: It may have been the object of the Concession Court to make them valueless. That is often done where concessions granted by native chiefs are unreasonable.]

Then the Court could have refused to ratify them at all.

Sir H. Juta was not called upon.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: This action was brought in the Divisional Court in the form of a special case, which set out the facts agreed upon by the parties and their several contentions. The Divisional Judge held that the facts set forth did not entitle the plaintiffs to the declaration of rights claimed in the premises and gave judgment of absolution from the instance, leaving it open to the parties to take fresh proceedings and to supply fuller information upon essential matters not disclosed in the special case. This judgment has been appealed against. The action was founded on certain two concessions granted by the native chief Vilander as far back as 1889 and 1890. At that time Vilander's country was not under British control. Under the concessions a payment of £500 a year was stipulated for to be paid by the concessionaires to the chief. In 1891 Vilander's country was annexed to British Bechuanaland, and in 1895 British Bechuanaland was annexed to this Colony. The Government of this Colony is now sued, I take it, as the successors of the chief. When the annexation of Vilander's territory to British Bechuanaland took place, and British Bechuanaland was in the position of a Crown Colony, a proclamation was issued by the then executive Government establishing a Concessions Court, by which all concessions given by the native chief before the annexation were to be considered and adjudicated upon. Large powers were entrusted to this Court, and the concessions in question were brought before that tribunal.

This Concession Court gave judgment allowing plaintiffs' claim as having been proved, "subject to all laws and regulations of British Bechuanaland relating to mines and minerals and otherwise, in force in the said territory." In the special case the plaintiff asked the Court to declare that this judgment was binding on the Government, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to have their rights in, arising out of, and under the concessions declared. The only specific declaration of rights asked for, however, was an order declaring that as to all grants of land already issued by the Government in the said territory, the Government was bound to recognise that the reservation in the said grants of mining rights and of precious stones was made for and on behalf of the plaintiffs; and further, to direct that the Government should insert in any future grants of land, a condition subjecting such grants to the rights of the plaintiffs. His Lordship, the Chief Justice, who presided in the Divisional Court, has in his reasons conclusively shown that it is impossible, with the information supplied in the special case, to make the declaration asked for in the premises. The learned Judge clearly stated his opinion that the judgment of the Concession Court, never having been appealed against, became binding under the proclamation, upon the concessionaires as well as upon the Government. For myself I fully concur in this view. But when we look at the case stated we find that it is alleged that the £500 per annum reserved under the concessions was, notwithstanding the annexation of his territory, paid to the chief up to the time of his death, and after his death it was paid to his executors. It had never been paid to, or tendered to the Government. In the Divisional Court a preliminary objection was taken that this non-payment had worked a forfeiture, but His Lordship pointed out that this question had not been clearly raised in the case stated. But it is a matter which will have to be considered before any declaration of rights can be made. Then again it would appear that the judgment of the Concession Court, in effect, took the place of the concessions, and limited the rights of the parties in the future.

This judgment, while granting the claim under the concessions, made it subject to all the laws and regulations of British Bechuanaland relating to mines and minerals and otherwise in force in the said territory. No objection was taken to this declaration of the Concession Court. But the plaintiffs wish to go further. They say, assuming the judgment still stands, His Lordship ought to have declared that the meaning of the judgment was that only such laws as were not inconsistent with the concessions, such as those relating to the good government of the territory and the like, were binding on the plaintiffs. The particulars in which these laws are asked to be declared as not binding on the plaintiffs, however, are limited to a reference to the mineral rights in grants of land made, or to be made by the Government. His Lordship, without referring in detail to the several proclamations which embody the laws and regulations of the territory, says that they are wholly inconsistent with the declaration the Court was asked to make. His Lordship remarks further that there can be no possibility of a doubt that the Concession Court intended by its judgment to subject the rights of the guarantees under the concession to all laws and regulations relating to mines and minerals then in existence and which had been enacted by the competent legislature of the territory. As absolution from the instance was given, these remarks may have the force only of obiter dicta, but it seems to me that the reasons of His Lordship have not been shaken in argument. I think for the reasons stated by His Lordship that this appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Maasdorp and Hopley, J.J., concurred.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

SAVAGE AND SONS V. KEUN. { 1905.
June 20th.

This was an action brought by Wm. Savage and Sons, merchants, Port Elizabeth, against Izak Johannes Keun, storekeeper, Colesberg, to recover a sum of £270 10s. 8d., for goods sold and delivered, and disbursements made on behalf of the defendant.

Plaintiff's declaration set out that £270 10s. 8d. was due from defendant for goods sold and delivered, and disbursements made on his behalf during November and December. Detailed accounts had been sent to defendant, but he had failed and neglected to pay the amount due. Plaintiffs prayed for judgment for £270 10s. 8d., with costs of suit.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted having received certain goods from plaintiffs, but he did not admit the amount alleged. He said it was arranged that he was to pay the net amount either at the expiration of six months from date of purchase or to pay the amount at the expiration of four months, less 5 per cent. commission. He said that the payments were not due, and that plaintiffs were not now entitled to sue him for any part of the purchase price.

Mr. P. Jones was for plaintiffs; defendant did not appear, his attorneys having withdrawn from the case.

John H. Barrett, a traveller in plaintiff's employ, said that, in response to a letter from the defendant, he called at his store in October last, defendant having just opened a store. Witness called on the 24th October, and received a large order, covering nearly the whole of the account now sued upon. Witness denied that there was any arrangement to give defendant six months' credit, or four months' credit, less 5 per cent. Defendant gave a cheque for £20, when the order was taken, and he afterwards made a small payment on arrival of the goods, and he was to pass promissory notes for the balance. It was also arranged that for any future business defendant should pass a second mortgage on his property. Defendant had refused to carry out his promises. He paid £10 in November, and he was also credited with £19 7s. 5d. for produce, which he sent down for sale on his behalf. Plaintiffs agreed to allow defendant £2 8s. for damaged boot polish, leaving a balance owing of £268 2s. 8d.

Judgment was given for plaintiffs for £268 2s. 8d., with costs.

MALCOMESS AND CO. AND
INSOLVENT ESTATE H. B. { 1905.
CARY V. THOMAS B. CARY. { June 20th.
INSOLVENT ESTATE H. B. { " 21st.
CARY V. THOMAS B. CARY. {

These actions were consolidated for the purpose of the hearing. The plaintiffs in the first case were Malcomess and Co., merchants, East London, and Peter August Reimers, in his capacity as sole trustee in the insolvent estate of H. B. Cary, of Tarkastad, while in the second case the trustee sued alone. Defendant was Thomas Bovey Cary, merchant, Tarkastad, brother of one of the partners in the insolvent firm of H. B. Cary.

The declaration in the first case set out that the first plaintiff carried on business at East London and elsewhere under the style of Malcomess and Company, and the second plaintiff joined in the action in order to complete the record and assist the plaintiff, as far as need be, but he did not advance any claim on behalf of creditors in such insolvent estate, other than that of the said Malcomess and Co. in the proceeds of two promissory notes, in respect of which the defendant was sued in this matter. The two promissory notes in question were made by the defendant in February, 1903, for amounts of £265 and £149 2s. respectively, in favour of the firm of H. B. Cary, or their order, at the Standard Bank, Tarkastad. The said notes were due and payable on the 9th May, 1903, but before their maturity, they were endorsed by the firm of Cary to the Standard Bank, who took the said notes with others to hold for and on account of Malcomess and Co., the said firm of Cary having ceded, assigned, and pledged the said notes to Malcomess and Co. by way of security in respect of the liability of the latter under a guarantee to the extent of £8,000, given by Malcomess and Co. to the said bank for the amount of any overdraft of the firm of Cary. The amount of the overdraft of the firm of Cary at the said bank was £2,447, and Malcomess and Co. had been called upon to meet the said notes, which had been dishonoured. Plaintiffs were now the legal holders of the notes; defendant had not paid the said notes, or any part thereof. Plaintiffs prayed for judgment for £414 2s., with interest from May, 1903, and costs.

Defendant, in his plea, said that in May, 1903, before the maturity of the said notes, the firm of H. B. Cary was indebted to him in a sum exceeding the amount of the said notes. The said debts were mutual debts, and on the defendant pressing the said firm for payment, an account was stated in which the firm of H. B. Cary was found to be indebted in the sum of £136, exclusive of the sum of £433 10s., claimed by defendant, which was left over for future adjustment. Malcomess had full knowledge of, and consented to this. The debts were capable of compensation within the meaning of the Insolvent Ordinance. He paid and discharged the notes before maturity, and said that neither of the plaintiffs was entitled to sue him upon the said notes.

Plaintiffs, in their replication, said that, as to the alleged settlement, they were not a party to and did not assent to the proposals. The said proposals were definitely rejected by the defendant. No statement or settlement of account was ever agreed to between the aforesaid parties or firms.

The declaration in the second case set out a long series of transactions between the firm of H. B. Cary and the defendant, both in the way of goods and merchandise supplied and promissory notes given by the defendant to the firm. Plaintiff allowed certain deductions amounting to £213 12s. 9d., and prayed for judgment for £1,169 5s.

Defendant, in his plea, said that the debts were mutual debts, and capable of compensation, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim any amount from him. He said that a settlement was arrived at by which it was acknowledged that the said firm of H. B. Cary was indebted to him in the sum of £136. At the date of the insolvency H. B. Cary was also indebted to him in the following sums: £200, due upon a good-for; £183, due upon an I.O.U.; and £50, amount of overcharge for certain lambs or sheep.

Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Burton) for plaintiffs. Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for defendant.

Mr. McGregor submitted that the onus was upon defendant to prove that these sums were not due, seeing that defendant practically admitted the debts alleged to have been contracted by him with H. B. Cary.

Hopley, J., said that he had been considering whether this was not a case which should go before an accountant.

Sir H. Juta said he thought that, in the first instance, they should come to some arrangement as to what they were going to do. The defence was, first of all, that a settlement was come to, and it would be well if the Court decided whether such a settlement was made. Then came the defence that these were mutual debts which were capable of compensation. The settlement which he proposed to prove was that in May, 1904, a clerk in the employ of Malcomess came to Tarkastad, and the correspondence would throw most lurid light upon some of the affidavits made by Malcomess and Co. and their officials as to their knowledge of the settlement. This clerk, Conraed, was sent up to look into the firm of Cary's business, and the troublesome account was that of T. B. Cary. Conraed and the bookkeepers went into the matter, and eventually Conraed came to what he considered to be a proper settlement, which formed the basis of what was known as the Conraed agreement. According to that agreement, the firm of Cary owed £136 to T. B. Cary, exclusive of £433, left over for future adjustment. Upon the definite instructions of Malcomess and Co., to the effect that there was nothing else left for them but to pay, they tendered, through the firm of Le Roux and Garlick, this amount of £136 on the ground that there had been a definite agreement, and that he (Tom Cary) was bound by it. It would take days to go into these accounts. It seemed to him (counsel) that it would be best, in the first instance to try the question as to whether a settlement had been come to, and, if there had been no settlement, then to send the accounts to a referee.

Mr. McGregor said that his clients did not think that would do. There were certain matters on which they would prefer to have the judgment of his lordship concerning a counter-claim by defendant for large items of skins and meat, and also the sum of £433. Were these amounts due from H. B. Cary to T. B. Cary? The items of the skins and meat were not entered in any book of the defendant or of H. B. Cary.

Hopley, J., after hearing counsel further, said that the matter would be sent to a referee. There had been a most complicated series of transactions, and it seemed to him that the best person to elucidate and come to a common-sense conclusion about the matter would be some good qualified accountant.

Sir H. Juta suggested that the Court should try the question of whether a settlement of accounts between H. B. Cary and T. B. Cary had been come to before committing the matter.

Mr. McGregor assented, and Evidence was called by Sir H. Juta.

Halbert Glendinning Hannaford, a partner in the insolvent firm since 1900, said that in 1904 their largest creditors were Malcomess and Co., who were their supporting firm. In 1903 Malcomess sent up to Tarkastad one Mr. Williams as manager, saying that he should be treated virtually as a partner. On the 12th May, 1904, a letter was received from Malcomess and Co. saying that they were sending up Mr. Conraed to make a thorough inquiry into the position of the business of H. B. Cary. In April a balance-sheet had been drawn up, showing a revenue loss account of £10,000, in which was included a sum of £800 due to T. B. Cary. Mr. Conraed was a competent accountant, and he went into the accounts very thoroughly. A general account was drawn up of credits and debits showing a balance due by T. B. Cary of £572 7s. 11d. Then there was a statement showing the amounts due by H. B. Cary to T. B. Cary, viz., £200 good for, £183 good for, and £50 for hamels. The final statement drawn up by Mr. Conraed showed a balance due to T. B. Cary of £136.

Sir H. Juta put in letters from Malcomess and Co. authorising a settlement of the T. B. Cary claim on the basis of Mr. Conraed's suggestion.

Witness was cross-examined at considerable length by Mr. McGregor. He denied that he was trying to help Tom Cary against the interests of the insolvent estate. Witness's private estate was insolvent. His wife had three house properties in Tarkastad, but they all belonged to her before her marriage. He had been threatened with all sorts of lawsuits by Malcomess, and in consequence his wife and Mr. Cary of Bulawayo had given them a bond for his protection.

Joshua James le Roux, attorney, Tarkastad, of the firm of Le Roux and Garlick, said that he acted for the firm of H. B. Cary last year. He remembered Mr. Conraed coming up in May from East London as a representative of Malcomess and Co. to go into the accounts between T. B. and H. B. Cary. He recollected a meeting in the book-keeper's office in H. B. Cary's store, when Conraed, T. B. Cary, and others were present. They were discussing a final statement of accounts; attempts were being made to induce T. B. Cary to agree to the same. Witness advised Tom Cary to accept the settlement, and then the latter said that he would accept provided Malcomess and Co. would sign. He also said that he thought the firm of H. B. Cary owed him more money than was shown in the statement. On the 14th June witness's firm, on the instructions of Mr. Williams, acting on behalf of H. B. Cary, sent a letter to the defendant, tendering the money shown to be due to him. There was not the slightest doubt that the arrangement was finally come to. He had never heard either Williams or Hannaford repudiate the agreement.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He was acting as attorney of H. B. Cary at that time; he had been acting as attorney of T. B. Cary, since Malcomess and Co. had taken the papers from him and handed them to Mr. Burton.

Mr. Burton: You don't think it unsatisfactory that you should act on the opposite side after having been in the Conference of the other side?

Witness: Not after I have been absolutely released, as I have been, by Reimers.

Further cross-examined: H. B. Cary confided to witness nothing about his insolvency. T. B. Cary was in his (witness's) debt to the extent of about £800. At the interview in May, T. B. Cary took up the position that he was not satisfied with receiving only £136, from the firm of H. B. Cary. He (defendant) seemed to be of opinion that the promissory notes which had been left over for further debate would be paid, seeing that Malcomess and Co. appeared to be anxious to make a settlement of H. B. Cary's affairs.

Thomas Bovey Cary (defendant) said that he remembered the accounts between himself and H. B. Cary being gone into before Mr. Conraed towards the end of May, 1904. He remembered the meeting at Williams's office, at which Mr. Le Roux and others were present: they were discussing the Conraed agreement. Conraed wanted witness to sign it; witness demurred, because he considered that H. B. Cary owed him more than £136. After Mr. Le Roux had arrived, there was further discussion, and witness eventually said that he would accept the agreement if Malcomess sanctioned it. Subsequently, he was informed that Malcomess had signed the agreement, and he received a letter from Messrs. Le Roux and Garlick tendering him the money. Mr. Stanley replied on his behalf, repudiating the agreement; his reason for doing that was because he knew that Malcomess and Co. were anxious to settle the whole matter, and he wanted them to pay the good-fors which H. B. Cary had given him. He knew at the same time that he was bound by his agreement. Upon H. B. Cary becoming insolvent, he drew up a proof of debt for £169, but he did not prove against the estate, because he did not think there would be anything in the £ for concurrent creditors. He thought that the bond would sweep all the assets.

Mr. Burton: Do you know how much the bond is going to get?

Witness: No.

Mr. Burton: The bond is going to lose £25,000?

Witness: I have no idea.

In further cross-examination, witness said that he could not remember a cheque (produced), dated August, 1902, for £179 8s. 3d., payable to him from H. B. Cary. The cheque might have referred to skins for which he charged in his counter-claim; he had forgotten the payment altogether. There was another cheque in a similar position. The amount represented by the cheques was £287.

Mr. Burton: So that that would wipe out your claim, and leave you indebted to the estate of H. B. Cary?

Witness: I can't say. In further cross-examination, witness denied that he had put in any but bona fide claims against H. B. Cary. He admitted having been convicted in 1902 at the Circuit Court, Queen's Town, of receiving stolen property in connection with the Army stores. He was fined £75, and paid the fine himself. There were writs now out against him for about £180.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: Since the case was commenced, he had found certain cheques, which he had given, and for which he had not been credited by H. B. Cary.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Peter August Reimers, trustee in the insolvent estate, said that until January of this year he was a member of the firm of Malcomess and Co. Malcomess and Co. were never asked to sign a formal agreement concerning what had been described as the Conraed agreement. The agreement purported to be between H. B. Cary and T. B. Cary and Malcomess and Co. were not a party to it. All that they had directly to do with the matter was in regard to a certain erf of which they had the deeds as the holders of the bond given to them by H. B. Cary. Malcomess and Co. were the supporting firm of H. B. Cary; they had not control of the business, otherwise they would not have lost £20,000 or £25,000 by it. Malcomess and Co. were to receive cash for the erf. He had done all he could to bring about a settlement in this matter.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Conraed was a clerk in the employ of Malcomess and Co. Conraed placed that settlement before him, and he agreed to it so far as he had anything to do with it. They were indirectly interested in the settlement, because Conraed was in their employ, and because they were large creditors. He objected to the settlement at first. It was quite possible that he thought at the time that Malcomess and Co. were affected by it. He admitted having sent a telegram on June 14 to Williams at Tarkastad, asking him to close with the Conraed agreement, but if safe to wait for his (Receiver's) letter. By "if safe" he meant that if there was any danger of losing a settlement to close up at once. He had been anxious not to offend Williams, fearing that he might throw up the whole business.

Robert Hartshorn Williams, manager of Malcomess and Co.'s branch at Tarkastad, and formerly in H. B. Cary's employ as manager under Hannaford, said that one of the first things he went into after entering H. B. Cary's service was the account with T. B. Cary. He found amounts due to H. B. Cary, and spoke to T. B. Cary, who said that he had a contra account, and subsequently sent in a statement. Witness went on to speak of the investigation made by Mr. Conraed.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He was of opinion that, strictly speaking, the only direct interest Malcomess had in the settlement between the Carys was in regard to the transfer of the erf. He referred the matter to Malcomess and Co., because he wanted to avoid unpleasantness between H. B. Cary and Malcomess. He admitted that at that time Malcomess could have forced H. B. Cary into insolvency in a week. There had been no completed agreement on the basis of the Conraed document. He admitted having written a letter on June 21 to Malcomess saying that T. B. Cary had entered into an agreement on the basis of the Conraed document.

Benjamin William Jandrell, of Tarkastad, formerly a bookkeeper in defendant's employ, said that he made up a contra account against H. B. Cary. When he came to the items of £179 and £108, defendant said that both those items had been paid, but he should include them in the account all the same. There was also an item of £183 10s., relating to a good-for; defendant told him that this had been settled.

Hopley, J., asked witness whether he did not think it was fraudulent to include in an account items which had already been settled for?

Witness said that he regarded the statement as simply preliminary. Proceeding, witness said that when he was going through the books, defendant told him to get all he could from H. B. Cary, and give nothing away. He told defendant that the items would be found out. Defendant, when in drink, insulted witness, and he left his service. He had not been paid his wages. Defendant, after the meeting, told witness that he would not agree to the settlement.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He had not said that the skins account was fraudulent.

Hopley, J., warned the witness that he was not compelled to answer questions relating to fraudulent accounts if he were afraid of being sent to the Breakwater.

Witness said that he did not think there was any need to have such a fear.

Sir H. Juta: I would not be too sure, Mr. Jandrell.

Hopley, J., remarked that witness had acknowledged that he had been concerned in the perpetration of frauds.

Sir H. Juta (to witness): Do you want us to believe that in this statement there had been fraudulent entries made by yourself of £775, and that defendant was quite willing to risk £775 for the sake of £383?

Witness: I did not have any interest in the matter. I merely wrote what I was told to write.

Hopley, J., pointed out that the fraudulent items admitted by witness amounted to £702 0s. 6d., and that he said these notes were treated as accommodation notes.

In further reply to Sir H. Juta, witness said that he did not know why, in his affidavit, he made no reference to the items of £179 and £109, which had already been paid, to defendant's knowledge.

[Hopley, J.; Could you lose sight of a thing which was so flagrant and so gross.]

Witness: I don't know.

John Henry Hughes, manager of the Tarkastad branch of the Standard Bank, said that the notes of £265 and £149 were deposited in the bank against H. B. Cary's overdraft, and were not released at any time.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J., said he found that T. B. Cary did agree at first to the Conrad settlement, and that a final and binding contract was entered into between the parties. Cary subsequently repudiated it, and the money was tendered to him. Then, on the 8th October, the contract was rescinded by a letter from plaintiffs, agreeing to a cancellation. He, therefore, found that there was no legal contract in existence, and the parties must go into the whole matter before a referee, unbound by any such contract.

The matter would be referred to Mr. Maynard Nash.

MALCOMESS V. FRANK.

Mr. Alexander moved, as a matter of urgency, for a commission to take the evidence of the plaintiff, Hermann Wilhelm Malcomess, of East London, in view of his projected departure from Cape Town by to-morrow's mail steamer to Europe. Plaintiff was suing Arnold Frank, veterinary surgeon, Cape Town, who was stated to be residing at the Royal Hotel, for £30 10s., expenses in and about sending back to Cape Town from East London a certain mare sold to him by Frank under certain representations which had wholly failed.

Order granted as prayed, Mr. Advocate Giddy, K.C., to be commissioner, failing him, Mr. Advocate M. Bisset, question of costs to stand over.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TROLLIP V. STEVENSON. { 1905.
June 21st.

This was an action to recover an amount of taxed costs with interest in a case brought by the defendant against Stableford and Co.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was an attorney of Cape Town. Between September, 1903, and March, 1904, the plaintiff rendered professional services to the defendant, and disbursed monies on behalf of the defendant in the action instituted against Stableford and Co. Judgment was given for the (then) plaintiff for £500, and costs, and plaintiff now claimed £58 13s. 1d., £6 6s. for professional services, and £7 15s. 9d. interest.

The defendant in reconvention claimed £624 2s. 9d., by reason of the plaintiff's negligence in not prosecuting a writ.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the plaintiff, and Dr. Greer for the defendant.

Herbert Payne, attorney, in the service of the plaintiff, stated when Stevenson brought the action he was acting for the defendant, representing Mr. Trollip. Witness took steps in February to have the judgment satisfied by Stableford and Co., and wrote a letter at the defendant's instructions. There were no definite instructions given to him to issue a writ of execution. Witness advised the defendant that to issue a writ would be a waste of money.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: The plaintiff suggested to witness to issue a writ of execution, but he did not give any definite instructions. There was an offer of compromise by the liquidators before the trial. He wrote to the defendant that it was "impracticable" to issue a writ of execution, and witness meant that there was nothing to gain by it. The defendant, witness believed, understood the position very clearly that "impracticable" meant there "inadvisable." In February, 1904, it was stated by the liquidators that the company could pay 15s. in the £. It took the liquidators a considerable time to get at the true state of the company. At present there was no prospect of anything being paid to concurrent creditors. Witness did not consider that the estate had been "frittered" away.

Mr. G. E. Orpen was called, and deposed that he was a partner in the firm of Syfret and Co. Mr. Syfret, who acted as liquidator in Stableford and Co., said that the company had never been in a position to pay concurrent creditors anything. There was no prospect at present of the concurrent creditors getting anything unless they obtained the same price for the building as Stableford had paid for it.

Oliver Lamb gave evidence as to the proceedings of the meeting of the creditors of Stableford and Co., on March 31, 1804, at which defendant was present.

Wm. J. Legg deposed that he was chairman at the meeting referred to, and gave corroborative evidence.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Leonard Stevenson, the defendant, stated that when he obtained judgment against Stableford and Co. he gave instructions to plaintiff to levy a writ of attachment. Subsequently, the plaintiff wrote to him a letter, from which he gathered that it would be impossible to issue the writ. He did not think that every effort had been made to get the judgment satisfied, and he considered that he would have got the bulk of the £500 if proper steps had been taken at once.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He attended the meeting in March. He did so in order to receive the report of the liquidators. He did not recollect sending the resolution at that meeting; he had no distinct recollection of the proceedings there. Mr. Payne advised him that it was impracticable to issue a writ. Witness considered that he had lost money because of that advice. He took Mr. Payne to mean, when he said it was impracticable to proceed, that it was impossible to proceed. If he had understood that it was possible to have proceeded with the execution, he would have insisted on doing so.

Re-examined: Witness understood that the voluntary liquidators made an offer of 10s. in the pound. He would have accepted that if he had not thought he could press them further.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J., said the plaintiffs sought to recover from the defendant a certain sum of money for services rendered, which were specified in two bills of costs. These services were rendered in a case in which the present defendant was the plaintiff and Stableford and Co., were defendants. His Lordship reviewed the circumstances of the case, and said that he found that the liquidators were guilty of no act which damaged the estate, and there was no evidence which would justify the Court in finding that there was any negligence on the part of the plaintiffs. Judgment would be entered for the plaintiff in convention for £58 13s. 1d., with costs, and for the defendant in reconvention (plaintiff in convention), with costs.

RATNER AND TIMAN V. REGARDE.

This was an action in which plaintiff claimed £60, in respect of services rendered to the defendant by the sale of certain property.

The declaration stated that the first plaintiff resided at Wynberg, and the second at Kalk Bay, whilst defendant was a landed proprietor, residing at Cape Town. The plaintiffs were in partnership, and were employed by the defendant to find a purchaser for certain property, for which service it was agreed that plaintiffs should receive £60. Plaintiffs introduced one Moscovitz to the defendant, and eventually the property was sold to Moscovitz for £4,000, the sale being brought about through the agency of plaintiffs. The conditions by which the plaintiffs were to receive the £60 had been fulfilled.

The plea denied that there was a partnership between the plaintiffs, and denied that plaintiffs had been employed to find a purchaser for the property, although defendant admitted that the property had been sold. The sale was not effected through plaintiff's agency.

Mr. Lewis appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Sutton for the defendant.

Jacob Timan, one of the plaintiffs, having detailed the arrangements that led up to the defendant incurring the debt to them, which arose out of the sale of a property, for which plaintiffs were alleged to have obtained a purchaser, and for which services he promised to pay them £60. The witness was subjected to a lengthy cross-examination, in which he admitted that he was not a broker, and that this was the first venture of this kind he had gone in for.

Max Ratner stated that the last witness asked him to look out for a purchaser for the property, and promised him £60 for doing so. He obtained a purchaser, but had not received the amount promised to him.

William Moscowitz stated he had a farm at Diep River. Ratner suggested to witness that he should exchange the farm for a property in Cape Town. The deal did not go through. He purchased the property for £4,350.

In cross-examination, the witness admitted that he had been engaged in an action in which the Chief Justice (Sir Henry de Villiers) stated he was guilty of a scandalous fraud.

[Maasdorp, J.: What has that to do with the case?]

Mr. Sutton: It is brought forward to prove incredibility.

The defendant, examined, stated he was a land dealer and speculator. He denied having promised either of the plaintiffs any commission. In fact, he did not recollect having seen them prior to the time this action was commenced.

In cross-examination, witness denied that he intended leaving the country. He had his wife and nine children in Cape Town, and why should he leave it. Moscowitz was introduced to witness by a man named Pelonus.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J., reviewed the evidence, and in conclusion said he saw no reason as between two business men why one should work for the other for nothing. It was undoubtedly proved that the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiffs the sum of £60 if they succeeded in disposing of his property for him. They had done so, and there would be judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN]

In re MALAY MOSQUE, { 1905.
TRUSTEES OF. { June 22nd.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that among the reports made by the Master that morning was one concerning a sale of the Malay Mosque in Buitenkant-street. The sale was a judicial one, at the instance of the mortgagees, and had been conducted, and there was a surplus of several hundreds of pounds. He mentioned this publicly, so that anybody who was interested in the surplus might appear before the Master before it was paid over by him to the trustees.

ADMISSIONS. { 1905. June 22nd.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of G. P. Kotze as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of Johannes B. Bekker as an attorney.

Application granted, oaths to be administered before the Resident Magistrate of Aliwal North.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the admission of Archibald Henderson as an attorney.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Griqua Town.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

GARLICK V. STEVENS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for confirmation of a writ of arrest, upon a debt of £78 16s. 8d.

Judgment granted as prayed.

KAHN AND LEVIN V. SMUTS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,250, due, without notice being given, in accordance with the terms of the bond; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

DEMPERS AND VAN RYNEVELD V. BULL.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £10 17s. 2d. and £6 19s. 1d. costs. Counsel read an affidavit by the defendant, who said that he had entered into a practice at Uitenhage, and that he hoped, if allowed time, to discharge the debt. He had lost heavily by a law suit, and had paid a sum of £30 already.

Decree of civil imprisonment granted, with costs, to be suspended on payment of £3 per month.

BERRANGE V. SHAW.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence for £85 10s. 8d., interest reckoned from June 5, 1903, to December 31, 1904, at 6 per cent., upon a capital sum of £1,050, amount of certain mortgage bond.

Mr. Burton (for the defendant) read an affidavit by Mr. Shaw, denying liability. The matter, he said, arose out of the purchase by the defendant of certain ground at Sea Point for £1,450. Certain difficulties occurred in regard to the payment of rates on the land, in the course of which defendant threw over the sale, and claimed refund of £400 which he had paid. Transfer had not been passed. Deponent went on to say that the plaintiff had passed the bond against his wishes, and in spite of the power he had given having been revoked. He submitted that the plaintiff should not be granted provisional sentence, but should be ordered to go into the principal case.

Mr. Gardiner said that it was on record that the defendant had commenced an action in January last against Mr. Berrange for cancellation of the sale and refund of the sum of £400, but Mr. Shaw was barred through having failed to file his declaration, and the action was withdrawn on the 8th inst. If that record were admitted he should apply for a postponement until two o'clock to enable plaintiff to reply to the defendants affidavit.

Mr. Burton submitted that the plaintiff was not entitled to provisional sentence.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed, with leave to the defendant to go into the principal case.

MILLS AND SONS V. BLOCK.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Final order granted.

FEDERAL SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE CO. V. KARRO.

Dr. Rainsford moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £115, goods sold and delivered, for £89 14s. 4d., balance of further account, and also for £8 10s., goods sold and delivered, and costs; counsel also applied for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, with interest, due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Judgment granted on illiquid claim and provisional sentence on the bond as prayed.

MCNAUGHTON V. ROWE AND WELSH.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate, as insolvent.

Order granted.

SIPELL AND SALBER V. KOTZEN.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

FERGUSON V. ROWE. { 1905.
June 2nd.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £33 6s. 3d., work and labour done.

Order granted.

COOK V. SCARB.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £72 17s. 5d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Order granted.

JOHNSON AND CO. V. ROYAL HOTEL CO., LTD.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for judgment, under Rule 319, for £207 5s. 4d., with interest and costs of suit, affidavit of service of bar being produced.

Order granted.

SIMKINS AND ADAMS V. BARNETT.

Mr. Gutsche moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £56 18s., services rendered and costs of suit.

Buchanan (A.C.J.) said that judgment would be granted, but he would point out that the summons was not sufficiently explicit to show the cause of action.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. MORITZ.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £163, goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

WIENER AND CO. V. FUCHS.

Dr. Rainsford moved for judgment. Mr. Rainsford moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £100 10s. 7d., goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

RICHARDS AND OTHERS V. { 1905.
SIMONS AND OTHERS. { June 22nd.

Dr. Rainsford moved for the rule nisi, restraining the respondents from paying over certain money, to be made absolute. Rule made absolute, action to be instituted forthwith.

ATLAS INSURANCE CO. V. RODRIQUES.

Fire insurance — Conditions of policy — Arbitration.

R. had taken out a policy in a certain Fire Insurance Company. His stock and books having been subsequently burned during the currency of this policy, he made his claim and agreed with the company to have his loss assessed by arbitration. The company now sought to have him interdicted from proceeding with the arbitration, on the ground that he had violated one of the conditions of his policy by not having given accounts of his losses as full as could be given.

Held, that as the sufficiency of the accounts was a question for the arbitrator to decide, the interdict must be refused, with costs.

This was an application upon notice of motion calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be interdicted from continuing certain arbitration proceedings, commenced by him on the 19th May last, in respect of loss by fire on the 7th June, 1904.

From the affidavits, it appeared that on the 2nd June, 1904, respondent insured with the company for £700 his stock-in-trade, consisting of wicker chairs and other Madeira work, at his store, 129. Bree-street, Cape Town. On the 7th June a fire broke out on his premises, and on the 17th June he sent in a claim to the applicant company for £700. Arbitration proceedings had been commenced. The ground of the present application was the respondent's non-compliance with condition 12 of the policy, inasmuch as no proper books and vouchers and other evidence of value had been produced.

Mr. McGregor was for the applicant; Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent.

Having heard Mr. McGregor in argument,

Buchanan (A.C.J.): On the 2nd June last year the respondent insured his property with the applicant company, and shortly afterwards a fire took place. At this fire, it is alleged, the whole of the stock, the books, and the papers were destroyed. There is no allegation setting out that there was any fraud in this matter, which would vitiate the contract, and consequently prevent the respondent from suing upon it, but it is admitted that if certain conditions are complied with the respondent would be entitled to go to arbitration under the conditions of the policy, and have the amount of his loss assessed by the arbitrators. The applicant company now wish to prevent the respondent from going to arbitration, because, they say, they have not been supplied with sufficient accounts to the satisfaction of the directors under the 12th clause of the conditions of the policy. This 12th clause requires certain things, which, it might well be argued, on the case of Hollander, are conditions precedent. One is that accounts of the loss, as fully as can be given, shall be lodged within 14 days of the fire. This was done. Then this 12th clause goes on to say that these accounts must be sufficient and satisfactory before the claim for amount of loss or damage is payable. Now, whether these accounts which have been furnished are sufficient and satisfactory is a question which the Court which has to try the claim will have to determine. As was pointed out in the case of Hollander v. the Royal Insurance Company, cited by Mr. McGregor, it is a question which comes up in the trial of the case, and, as his lordship, the Chief Justice pointed out, it is a question of fact and not of law. It is not a condition precedent in the sense that it must be complied with before the trial takes place; if accounts are furnished, whether they are sufficient or not, is one of the points that should be heard at the trial. The parties have chosen the tribunal which shall try this matter to be a Court of Arbitration, and consequently the person who was insured having furnished his claim within the time specified, and having furnished accounts, the present application will be refused. The application is not justified, and, having failed, the applicant company must pay the costs.

BENEKE AND OTHERS V. VAN DER VYVER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved, as a matter of urgency, for a commission to take the evidence of certain two witnesses at Riversdale, an application being made on the petition of the plaintiffs' attorney, Mr. J. S. de Villiers.

Order granted as prayed, the R.M. of Riversdale to be commissioner.

In re LANSDOWNE HOUSE ESTATE CO., LTD.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones presented the first report of the liquidators, and applied for the usual order.

Usual order granted, publication once in the "Government Gazette" and once in the "Cape Times."

ROHLAND V. ROHLAND'S CURATOR.

There was an application calling upon the respondent, the curator of the property of the lunatic, Heinrich Rohland, to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay over to the applicant, Christian Rohland, fish dealer, Paarl Biding (father of the lunatic), a sum of £200 ordered by this Court to be raised on the 14th March, 1905, by mortgage on a farm belonging to the said Heinrich Rohland.

The affidavit of the applicant stated that the money had been raised on mortgage, but that Mr. Steytler declined to pay it over on account of certain charges for disbursements and a claim by the Government for the keep of the lunatic. Petitioner was in reduced circumstances, and the money was raised as against certain improvements made by him on his son's property.

The answering affidavit of Mr. Steytler, stated that he raised no objection to the application for the bond so long as his disbursements in the administration of the property were satisfied and a pro rata contribution was made to the Government. Deponent contended that, this farm being the only asset in the estate, he was entitled to a preferent claim on the amount raised. He had received a claim from the Colonial Government for £353 15s. for keep of the lunatic.

The replying affidavit of the applicant denied that he entered into any conditions with the respondent, and said that if such conditions were entered into between his legal representatives and Mr. Steytler, it was entirely without his knowledge and consent. Had he known of such conditions he would not have proceeded with his application. Deponent went on to say that the farm when originally granted to his son was bare veld, and that he (deponent) had expended at least £100 on the improvement of the property. He said, further, that his son had been treated by the Government as a free patient. Counsel also read an affidavit by the applicant's wife, who denied that any conditions were agreed to in the interview with Mr. Steytler before the application was granted by the Court.

Mr. Gardiner for applicant; Mr. Burton for respondent.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that it was too late for the curator to come and claim any portion of this money.

Mr. Burton said he admitted that his client should have appeared at the time of the application, and brought these facts before the Court. He submitted, however, that Mr. Steytler was clearly entitled to have his disbursements satisfied, because those disbursements had been made in order to preserve the farm to the applicant's estate, such as title deeds, and so forth. Mr. Steytler was making no charge whatever for his own work of administration. As to the charges of the Government, section 69 of the Lunacy Act clearly showed that although the patient may be received as a free patient at first, in the case of any property accruing to the lunatic, the Government could recover.

Buchanan (A.C.J.): The curator has raised on mortgage a sum of £200, the amount authorised by the Court being £250. The curator claims that he has been subjected to an outlay of £67 17s. 8d. on behalf of the estate. I think it would have been far better if the curator had brought this fact to the notice of the Court at the time the original order was made, because it is clear that the original order was intended to be a payment of £250 to the applicant in satisfaction of the outlay which he had incurred in improving the estate. The reason why the curator has only raised £200 is not stated, but there certainly is, under the previous order of the Court, £50 more still to be raised, which will have to be paid to the applicant when raised. The curator now says that there is a claim sent in for the maintenance of this lunatic in the asylum. The applicant says that for a considerable time he himself paid for the maintenance of the lunatic, but as he could no longer continue it was agreed then by the parties that the lunatic should be received as a non-paying patient. Under these circumstances there is absolutely no reason why the amount which the applicant has expended in improving the property should not be paid to him. The curator will be ordered to pay the sum of £200 to the applicant, less his outlay of £67 17s. 8d., which he is entitled to deduct from this amount, only pending the realisation of the other assets of the estate, when the amount is to be paid to the applicant; costs to be paid by the respondent, N.O.

EDRAHIM V. DEHNING.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to restore to applicant possession of two shops at Diep River, and to deliver up certain goods. Mr. Alexander was for the applicant, an Indian general dealer, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the respondent, Carl Dehning.

Mr. Alexander said that the application was now narrowed down simply to one of costs, the respondent having restored possession of the shops and goods to the applicant. Counsel read affidavits to the effect that the applicant was deprived of the possession of the shops by the respondent without any reason, and that his assistant was ejected by the back door.

Mr. De Villiers read an affidavit by the respondent, who said that he would not think of letting his shops to such persons as applicant unless the rent were paid in advance. Applicant got into arrears with his rent for April and May, and upon pressing he gave deponent a cheque, which was crossed. The bank refused payment of the cheque. Deponent denied that he forcibly dispossessed the applicant, and said that he had kept the keys at the disposal of the applicant. The keys had been voluntarily given to him by the applicant's assistant.

Mr. Alexander read a replying affidavit by the applicant, who denied that he had ever agreed to pay the rent in advance, or that the keys had been lying at his disposal. The keys were handed to him by the respondent when he tendered his affidavit.

Counsel having been heard in argument, on the facts,

Buchanan (A.C.J.) said there was no reason why the rent, not having been paid, the respondent should not be allowed to exercise his landlord's lien.

The application was dismissed, with costs.

COOK V. COOK.

This was application upon notice of motion, calling upon the respondent, Frank Cook, to show cause why he should not pay applicant a sum of money to enable her to institute proceedings against him to have a certain deed of separation entered into between the parties on May 13, made an order of Court, and to have the allowance of £6 a month made by him declared insufficient, and respondent ordered to pay to applicant such sum as may seem to the Court to be fair and reasonable. Mr. Upington was for the applicant, Florence Emily Cook; respondent appeared in person.

Mr. Upington read an affidavit by the applicant, who stated that she desired to sue the respondent for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty. She said the present allowance was wholly inadequate for the support of herself and daughter.

Respondent read an affidavit, in which he said that he was unable to contribute to the applicant more than £6 a month, and pointed out that he had to provide for the education of his son.

Mr. Upington said that an action was instituted by the applicant over a year ago, but it was compromised.

Buchanan (A.C.J.) said that there was absolutely no ground shown on which this application could be granted. It would therefore be refused.

INSOLVENT ESTATE VINK V. NEW ZEALAND INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a commission to take the evidence of Frank William Wilson, of Cape Town, who was about to leave for Australia.

Mr. Alexander, for the respondent, consented.

Commission granted by consent, Advocate Giddy, K.C., to be commissioner.

VAN AARDE V. HIND.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for an order for the attachment of certain property at Aliwal North ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and for leave to sue by edictal citation upon a claim for £37 10s. rent. It was stated that respondent left Aliwal North for East London, and had since gone to Johannesburg.

Order granted, petitioner to attach a sum of £60, pending an action to be instituted forthwith, and leave granted to sue by edictal citation, to be returnable on August 1, personal service to be effected.

PLATE WALL SYNDICATE, LTD. V. CAPE TIMES, LTD.

Summons — Service on a non-existent company.

Certain goods said to be the property of a company (B.) had been attached for debt. Another company (A.) now asked for their release, on the ground that the goods were their property, and no summons had ever been served on them. It appeared that the company A. had, since the summons was served, changed its name to B., and that at that very time the change was in contemplation.

Held, that as the two companies were virtually the same and did not appear to have any defence on the merits, leave must be granted to amend the summons by the insertion of A. instead of B.

This was an application upon notice of motion calling upon the respondents to show cause why the goods attached by the Deputy Sheriff at the suit of the "Cape Times," Limited, against the Plate Wall Builders' and Supply Company should not be released, as being the property of the applicants, the Plate Wall Syndicate, Limited. Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant; Mr. M. Bisset was for the respondents.

Mr. Gardiner said that the Plate Wall Syndicate, Limited, tried to form a company called the Plate Wall Builders' and Supply Company, and ordered prospectuses to be printed by the respondents. The respondents charged £72 7s. 6d. The respondents sued the company, which was about to be formed, for this amount, but which was not, as a matter of fact, formed, and obtained judgment against a non-existent company, viz., the Plate Wall Builders' and Supply Company. Then the respondents attached the goods of the present applicants, the Plate Wall Syndicate, who were the people who were going to form the company. The Plate Wall Syndicate were perfectly willing to pay the account; no summons had been served upon them. They had tendered the amount and wanted their goods released.

Mr. M. Bisset said that the respondents had not filed any affidavits, but he produced a copy of the service, which set out that the summons was served upon Mr. Von Witt personally, and not, as had been stated in the affidavits of the other side, upon a clerk in the office.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the proceedings taken by the respondents had been quite irregular, and that it was such a breach of practice as should not be allowed by the Court.

Without calling upon Mr. Bisset, Buchanan (A.C.J.): There is no doubt in this case that the defendants owe the money, and their goods have been attached. They have changed the name of the company once or twice. It would have been more correct if the summons had been taken out against the Plate Wall Syndicate, Limited, and, as the parties are before the Court, the Court will order that the summons and proceedings there, in be amended by inserting the words, "Plate Wall Syndicate," instead of "Plate Wall Builders' and Supply Company." The application will be refused with costs.

HALVOESEN V. ANDERSON.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the attachment of defendant's goods in the hands of W. J. Smith, ad fundandam juris- dictionem. Petitioner said that she entered into a contract with the defendant, who was at Johannesburg, in which she undertook to push and develop the sale of certain preparations called Viavi, but had suffered loss through the failure of the defendant, who was of Johannesburg, to supply her with goods. She said that she had suffered damages in a sum of more than £75. Counsel also applied for leave to sue by edictal citation.

Order granted attaching the goods of defendant in the possession of W. Smith, and giving leave to applicant to sue by edictal citation, citation to be returnable on the 14th July, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte STEYN.

Mr. De Waal moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property at Hopetown belonging to the petitioner, a minor.

Order granted, purchase price to be paid into the Master's Fund.

GREENBERG V. MILLIN.

Mr. Sutton was for the applicant, and Mr. McGregor was for the respondent.

Mr. McGregor applied for a postponement to enable the respondent to file answering affidavits.

Mr. Sutton opposed the application, and moved for the release of a certain sum of £505 4s. 8d. attached by the Sheriff by way of security for costs. Applicant said that he had a good defence to the action, and that he was being prejudiced by the attachment of this money and the failure of the plaintiff to go to trial.

Matter postponed on condition that the respondent show cause on Thursday next why the respondent should not be ordered to go to trial this term.

Ex parte CARTWRIGHT AND CO.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order to enable the petitioners to protect their landlords' lien on certain pictures, the property of John L. Irvin, a tenant of certain rooms at the Mansion House Chambers, pending an action to be forthwith instituted for rent. It was stated that Irvin now owed the petitioners £67 10s. for rent.

Rule nisi granted, restraining the removal from the premises of the goods in question, until the landlord's lien be satisfied, pending an action to be instituted forthwith.

MALCOMESS AND CO. V. CARY. { 1905.
June 22nd.
„ 26th.

Interdict—Creditors—Disposal of property.

C.'s estate had been placed under inspection, certain disputed accounts between M. and himself had been referred to arbitration. It was alleged that C. was disposing of, or pledging his property, in such wise, that M. feared he would be unable to meet his liabilities, in respect of any award the arbitrator might give against him. M. now applied for an interdict, restraining him for parting with, mortgaging or pledging his property.

Held, that as the respondent was neither a peregrinus, nor one alleged to be in contemplation of flight, no such interdict could be granted.

This was an application, upon notice of motion, for an interdict restraining respondent from parting with his assets, pending the report of the referee to whom the matters in dispute in the actions have been referred. Mr. Burton appeared for the applicants (plaintiffs in the actions); Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the respondent.

Mr. Burton moved for an interdict restraining the respondent, Thomas Bovey Carey, selling, transferring, mortgaging, pledging, or otherwise alienating any portion of his property, and the Registrar of Deeds from registering any deed or hypothecations thereof. The principal grounds of the application were set out in affidavits by one Mr. Reimers, who, from a communication that he had received from Mr. Bruton, of Tarkastad, said he had reason to believe that respondent was disposing or pledging his assets, and that there was a danger that he would not, unless restrained, be able to pay any sum which the referee in the matter of the action may possibly find to be due to plaintiffs.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) appeared to oppose.

Sir H. Juta said there had been no time to get a replying affidavit from the defendant, stating that he had no intention of disposing of his property.

Hopley (J.) said that he would like to have authorities on the point of whether the Court could grant the order asked for in the circumstances. It was unprecedented in his experience.

Mr. Burton asked that the matter should stand over until the following day.

The Court ordered the matter to stand over accordingly.

Postea (June 26).

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

For respondent, affidavits were put in denying that he had had any transactions, except such as were in the legitimate course of his business. He admitted that his goods had been attached upon a writ, but said that on his return to Tarkastad, it was his intention to satisfy the amount of the writ.

Mr. Burton said that the application was a somewhat unusual one, and the learned judge before whom it came in the first instance gave leave for it to stand over, to look into the authorities. He submitted that there was authority for the course which was now taken by the applicant. Counsel quoted from Van Zyl's Judicial Practice (2nd Edition, p. 168), from Voet (2, 4, 18, 19), and from Kotze's translation of Van Leeuwen's Roman-Dutch Law (Vol. 2, Book 5, cap. 7, secs. 2 and 6).

Without calling upon Sir H. Juta,

Buchanan (A.C.J.) said that in special circumstances as, for instance, where it was shown that defendant contemplated flight, the Court interfered, but no such special circumstances appeared in the present case. He could see no legal ground upon which this interdict should be granted. The application would, therefore, be refused, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

DUNCAN V. DUNCAN. { 1905.
June 23rd.

This was an action brought by Archibald Duncan, railway shunter, Cape Town, against his wife, Christina Duncan (born Daniels), of Salt River, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with division of the joint property and forfeiture of the defendant's half share. Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, Colonial Office, produced the register of the marriage.

The plaintiff said he was married to the defendant at the Dutch Reformed Church, Woodstock, on the 26th January, 1902. They lived unhappily together in consequence of a boarder whom his wife received, one James Guttery. Witness had to speak to his wife regarding her relations with Guttery, and this led to frequent quarrelling. On April 1st, 1905, he was living at 44, Kingsley-road, Salt River; his wife came back at night from the country and ordered him out of the house as she had got "another gentleman." Witness slept in the passage. Next morning she told him to clear out. Witness went to his work and returned in the evening, and there was further quarrelling. He went out about 9 o'clock and returned home at eleven, when he found the door locked and the place in darkness. His wife's brother threatened to kill him if he went into the house. His wife went from the house and took all the furniture; she was now living with her father and James Guttery.

By the Court: He had not asked his wife to return to him. She was living with her father at 27, Kingsley-road. Witness was now in lodgings in Loop-street, Cape Town.

Dr. Greer, in answer to the Court, said that he was prepared to abandon the prayer (c) in the declaration for forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage in community.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return or receive the plaintiff on or before the 14th July, failing which rule to issue calling upon the defendant to show cause on the 1st August why an order should not be granted in terms of the declaration, with the exception of prayer (c).

Postea (August 1).

Rule made absolute.

GABIER V. AJAM.

This was an action brought by Omar Abdol Gabier, builder and contractor, Cape Town, against Gadoja Ajam, widow, Cape Town, for an order requiring her to take transfer of certain property, or to pay £300 damages for breach of contract.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, said that defendant bought from him a certain piece of land with buildings thereon, situate at No. 328, Hanover-street, Cape Town, for £1400, transfer to be taken immediately, and cash to be paid against transfer. The said contract was embodied in a broker's note. Although plaintiff had carried out all the conditions of the said agreement to be performed by him, and had tendered, and again hereby tendered, transfer of the said property against the fulfilment of the conditions of the agreement by defendant, defendant had failed to take transfer or pay the purchase price. Plaintiff claimed an order calling upon the defendant (a) to take transfer forthwith of the said property and pay the purchase price, plaintiff tendering transfer, or, in the alternative (b) the cancellation of the said contract and payment of £300 as damages for breach thereof (c) alternative relief and (d) costs of suit.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for the plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Johannes Jacobus Swanepoel, formerly employed by Steyn and Serrurier, spoke as to the broker's note which he had drawn up, and to the signature of the defendant thereon. The broker's note was dated December last. He first heard about the beginning of April that defendant was not going to complete the sale. Witness considered the value of the property at the present day to be £1000 to £1100.

By the Court: The defendant asked him not to proceed with the sale of the property to her. She proposed to make an application to the Court for leave to mortgage certain other property of herself and children, but decided not to proceed with the application.

Omar Abdol Gabier (the plaintiff), gave evidence as to the sale of the property to the defendant on the 21st December. The property, he said, was bonded to the amount of £1000. The defendant made certain alterations in the buildings, and then wanted to be let off the sale. Witness estimated the present value of the house and stables at £1000.

G. H. Moller, sworn appraiser, said that he estimated the present value of the house at £750, and of the stables at £250. He did not think that the property would fetch above £1000 in the market to-day.

Maasdorp, J.: The property was sold by plaintiff to the defendant for £1,400, and to all appearances it was a very good bargain. Plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of his bargain, and there is sufficient evidence to prove that he suffered £300 damages. An order will be granted in terms of prayer (a) of the declaration, transfer to be taken by the 6th July, or that the contract be declared cancelled, and defendant be ordered to pay £300 damages, with costs.

GROENEWALD V. ESTATE BOTHMA.

Mr. Close (for the defendant in the action) moved, upon notice for a postponement of the hearing sine die in consequence of the illness of Mr. Willmot, executor in the estate of J. A. C. Bothma. Mr. Gardiner (for the plaintiff), opposed the application. The matter arose out of an action brought by Groenewald for transfer of certain property which he said he bought in 1902 from the late Mr. Bothma.

Mr. Close read affidavits and correspondence in support of the application, from which it appeared that the defendant, who was undergoing treatment at a farm in the district of Prince Albert was unfit to travel. For the applicant it was urged that sufficient notice of the illness of the defendant and the impossibility of his attending the hearing today, was given to the plaintiff. Applicant asked for an order for costs of the day against the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the applicant should be bound down to a day for the hearing, and that the case should be set down for the 12th July. Plaintiff resided in the district of Sutherland, about 66 miles from Laingsburg station, and he came to Cape Town for the trial. Two other witnesses had also come down.

Maasdorp, J., asked what the present difficulty between the parties was?

Mr. Gardiner said that the defendant admitted plaintiff's right to obtain transfer, but said that the delay in giving transfer had been occasioned by circumstances for which he (defendant) was not responsible. One of the points was whether Greef and Walter were the agents employed by defendant or plaintiff. The present difficulty, he understood, that this property was registered in the name of the late Mr. Bothma's parents, and that transfer could not pass from the parents of the estate held by Mr. Willmot, without the payment of certain transfer duty, which Mr. Willmot had not yet paid.

Maasdorp, J.: It seems that this case was set down on the 9th for the 23rd inst., and that the first formal communication that passed between the parties, indicating that there was a desire to obtain a postponement of the case was only given on the 21st. If that notice could have stopped the witnesses from leaving to attend at this trial, I think it would have been the duty of the respondent in this case to have seen that no expense was caused in that respect. But it appears that the notice was given too late, and that when the notice was telegraphed to the country agents of the plaintiff the witnesses had already left. I think that the expenses that have been incurred through the witnesses being brought down are due to the delay on the part of the defendant in giving notice that he desired this postponement. It is suggested that some conversation had previously taken place between the parties, but the Court should not encourage communications between parties passing by verbal means, and this is an instance showing the awkwardness of such proceedings, because we have got a dispute as to what did take place between the parties. The costs having been incurred through the fault of the defendant, I think that the order must necessarily be granted that the case be postponed, but the costs of the day must be paid by the applicant in this matter. It may be possible to stop all the costs which will be incurred by going to trial; the matter seems to be one merely of delay, and if a postponement be granted, a settlement may be arrived at.

After hearing counsel further, Maasdorp, J., ordered the case to stand over until the 2nd August.

Principal — Agent — Company —
Managing director—Fraud—Agent making a profit at the expense of his principal.

The managing director of a company having obtained for the company an option to purchase a house at a certain price, subsequently purchased it for himself at that price, and resold and transferred it to the company at a higher price.

Held, that the company was entitled to recover the excess from the director.

The managing director of a company being aware that the company required for their business a building adjoining their premises, bought the building for himself, and resold and transferred it to the company at a higher price.

Held, that the company was entitled to recover the excess from the director.

This was an action brought by John Frederick Cowling, of Cape Town, against Wm. Stableford and Co. (in liquidation), for judgment upon a mortgage bond for £750, with interest from the 1st July, 1903.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he claimed final judgment for £750, with interest at 8 per cent., from the 1st July, 1903, upon a certain mortgage bond passed by the defendant company in favour of one W. L. Kidney, and by him duly ceded to the plaintiff for value, by cession dated the 29th October, 1903, endorsed upon the bond. On the 16th September 1903, the defendant company was voluntarily wound up, and thereafter, on the 23rd June, 1904, was wound up by order of this Honourable Court, Messrs. J. E. P. Close, E. R. Syfret, and W. J. Laite being duly appointed official liquidators. The defendant company was indebted to the plaintiff in the said sum of £750, due and payable by reason of the non-payment of interest. On the 9th June, 1904, this Court granted provisional sentence for the said amount, with interest, and the landed property was declared executable, with taxed costs £13 17s. The landed property was thereafter attached, but the defendant company was then wound up by order of this Court, and the landed property became released from attachment.

Defendants had filed two pleas. The first plea was as follows:

For a plea to the plaintiff's declaration defendants say:

1. They admit paragraphs 1, 2, 5, and 6, thereof, save that they say that the property attached as in paragraph 6 set forth was movable and not landed property; and they admit that appearance was entered as in paragraph 7 thereof set forth; but save as above and save as in hereinafter admitted they deny the allegations in paragraphs 3, 4 and 7.

2. As to paragraph 3 thereof, they admit that a bond of £750 is now held by the plaintiff, who obtained the same by an alleged cession from the said Kidney; but they put the plaintiff to proof of the circumstances under which the said cession was made and of the value alleged to have been given for the said bond by plaintiff. The defendants say that the said bond was on October 29, 1903, deposited as security with plaintiff by the said Kidney for a personal loan of £300, and was not ceded to plaintiff till after March 31, 1904, after disputes as to the said bond had arisen between the defendants and the said Kidney. The writing of cession on the bond was at the time of such writing antedated to October 29, 1903. The cession of the bond was not registered in the Deeds Office, nor was any notice of such cession given to the company or the defendants till April 7, 1904.

3. The bond was passed, as is hereinafter set forth, as part of a certain transaction fraudulently and collusively entered into between the said Kidney, then secretary of the said company, and one Stableford, its managing director, in fraud of and to the prejudice of the said company, the circumstances of the said transaction being such that the said Kidney is not and never has been in law entitled to sue the said company or the defendants on the said bond.

4. The plaintiff as cessionary of the said bond has acquired no greater rights as against the company or the defendants than the said Kidney, and is subject to all the equities of the said bond in the hands of the said Kidney.

5. The said bond was passed on January 31, 1903, and certain landed property then registered in the name of the company and styled lot D and La. E. in Strand-street (and hereinafter called the front property) was specially hypothecated thereunder.

6. The said bond was passed under the following circumstances: (a) On August 22, 1902, the said Stableford, who was then and thereafter at all times material to this suit the managing director of the said company, purported to purchase from Messrs. Hand and Honikman the said front property for £4,500. (b) At the said date the said company had already acquired, and then held, the option of purchasing the said property for £4,500, as was well known to Stableford and Kidney. (c) On October 10, 1902, the said Stableford, with the assistance and collusion of the said Kidney, sold the said front property, without alteration or improvement, to the company for £6,500, the said Stableford and Kidney falsely and fraudulently concealing from the company the facts as to the company's option and otherwise in this paragraph afore set forth. (d) Thereafter the said Stableford arranged for transfer from the vendors to himself: whereupon the vendors pointed out that the option to purchase the said property was, and had been held in the name of the company. For the purpose of obtaining transfer of the property in his own name the said Stableford purporting to act as managing director and doing so with the connivance, collusion, and assistance of the said Kidney as secretary, wrongfully, unlawfully, falsely, and fraudulently caused the said Kidney to write on the 20th November, 1902, to the vendors aforesaid or their agents, a letter pretending on behalf of the company that the company had waived its option and had allowed the said Stableford to purchase the property personally, and had bought the property from Stableford with a full knowledge of all the circumstances; and the said Stableford thereby succeeded in obtaining the consent of the vendors to the transfer to himself of the property aforesaid. (e) On January 31, 1903, the said Stableford took transfer in his own name of the said front property and on the same day transferred the property to the company, payment of the purchase price being provided for mainly by means of a loan of £4,000 made by the Master to the company on mortgage; the balance of the purchase price and the expenses of transfer and bonds purport to have been met by raising a loan of £750 from the said Kidney to the company on mortgage of the said property which mortgage bond for £750 is the bond now sued upon.

7. The said Kidney acted throughout in concert and collusion with the said Stableford, and in fraud of the said company, whereof they were throughout respectively secretary and managing director; and the said bond was by reason of the premises fraudulently obtained by the said Kidney, and is not and never was of any validity as against the company, either in the hands of the said Kidney, or of any cessionary thereof from the said Kidney.

Wherefore the defendants pray the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

SECOND PLEA.

And should this honourable Court not hold in favour of the defendants on the above plea (but not otherwise) the defendants for a further plea say:

8. They crave leave to refer to the foregoing.

9. The transactions referred to in the foregoing formed part of a series of transactions fraudulently and collusively entered into between the said Kidney and Stableford in their capacity aforesaid, in fraud of and to the prejudice of the said company.

10. On the date on which the said Stableford purported to purchase the front property as aforesaid, to wit, 22nd August, 1902, the said Stableford, nominally in his own name, purchased for £2,500 from the said Hands with a view to re-selling the same to the company at a profit certain other property (hereinafter called the back property) adjoining the front property aforesaid.

11. The said Stableford thereupon on 12th January, 1903, passed a bond on the back property for £1,500 in favour of Kidney, but the said Kidney has at no time actually advanced or undertaken liability for more than the sum of £549 in respect of the said bond. The said bond was passed by collusive arrangement between the said Stableford and Kidney, with a view to the said Kidney getting payment of the whole sum of £1,500 on the resale of the property to the company, in addition to a share of the profit to be made out of the whole transaction.

12. The said Kidney paid certain moneys in connection with the front property transaction, amounting to £676 3s. 6d. and no more, for which he received as security the bond for £750 now in suit.

13. On the 17th March, 1903, Stableford, with the assistance and connivance of Kidney, sold the back property to the company for £6,500, and, thereafter, passed transfer of this property to the company. The Master advanced as a loan to the company, upon mortgage of the said property, and of the said front property the sum of £4,500, which sum the said Kidney received as secretary of the company; and out of this loan the said Kidney paid himself the full sum of £1,500, with all interest thereon purporting to do so in discharge of the bond of £1,500, though he was only entitled to payment in the sum of £549 aforesaid.

14. The said Kidney and Stableford acted throughout in the matters set forth in paragraphs 10, 11, 12, and 13 hereof in concert and in collusion, and in fraud of the said company, whereof they were respectively secretary and managing director, and as a result of the transactions above set out, they made a large profit, which they agreed to share, and did share, to the great prejudice of the company.

15. The defendant liquidators contend that the purchases of the front and back properties on the 22nd August, 1902, and the subsequent dealing with the properties by Kidney and Stableford, as regards the company and themselves, form one fraudulent plan and transaction in prejudice of the company; that the said original purchases must in effect and in law be taken and deemed to be by reason of the premises purchased on behalf of the company; that the said Kidney is bound in law to account to the defendants for any profits made and unnecessary extra expenses incurred in the said transaction; that the payment to Kidney of the £1,500, with interest, as aforesaid, must be taken and deemed to be a payment by the company to the said Kidney, subject to his accounting to the company for the balance left over and above the sum of £549 aforesaid, which balance, to wit, £961, they are entitled to take in account, as against the sum of £676 3s. 6d. aforesaid; and that the said Kidney has received from the company such payment more than he had or has in all advanced to or on behalf of the company in respect of the bonds aforesaid.

16. The defendants crave leave to refer this Honourable Court to the annexure hereto marked A (which they pray may be considered as inserted herein), as setting forth the true state of accounts as between the company and Kidney upon the completion of the transfer of the back property to the company—the said Kidney being at that date and now indebted to the company in the sum of £700 4s. 3d.

17. The defendants further crave leave to refer this Honourable Court to annexure B hereto (praying it may be considered as inserted herein), which shows that, even if moneys paid by Kidney for the improper transfers to Stableford be allowed for, the said Kidney was at the date of the completion of transfer of the back property to the company indebted to the company in the sum of £395 17s. 8d.

18. By reason of the premises there was not on the 29th October, 1904, nor is there now any indebtedness of the company or the defendants on the said bond to the said Kidney, or to the plaintiff or any other person.

Wherefore defendants pray that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

Plaintiff, in his replication, said that, in regard to the first plea, the plaintiff knew nothing of the allegations as to the transactions between Kidney and Stableford, and put the defendants to proof thereof, and otherwise joined issue. As a replication to the further plea, he said that he knew nothing of the allegations as to the transactions between Kidney and Stableford, and did not admit them, and put defendants to proof thereof.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) for the plaintiff. Mr. Close (with him Mr. Bisset) for respondent.

In answer to the Court, counsel stated that Stableford had left the Colony, but that Kidney was in court.

Mr. Upington submitted that prima facie there was a liability on the bond, and that the onus was upon the defendants to prove their allegations of fraud and so on.

Mr. Close submitted that the ordinary course should be followed, and that the plaintiff should prove his case. The whole facts of the cession to the plaintiff were in dispute.

Mr. Upington having replied,

Maasdorp, J., decided that plaintiff must lead his evidence as to the cession.

Mr. Upington said that he could formally prove the cession, but he was bound to admit that the cession was ante-dated, as alleged by the defendants.

Gilbert Percival Kotze, attorney, employed by Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissonne, said that the cession was written on the bond on the 7th April, 1904. Kidney's signature was on the bond at the time.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Kidney came and saw witness and asked him whether he knew the wording of a cession of a bond. Witness filled in the usual form of cession. Witness was about to put on the current date, but Kidney said that he must not put on the current date, because the cession took place on the 29th October, 1903, and he (Kidney) put his signature on the bond on that date. Kidney produced a letter which he had sent to Cowling acknowledging a loan of £300. The cession was not stamped when Kidney took it away. It had not been registered. Kidney gave the firm of Van Zyl and Buissonne the warrant to sue the liquidators on the bond, the warrant was signed by Cowling, but the verbal instructions were given by Kidney.

Mr. Upington closed his case, subject to the right to call rebutting evidence on the question of fraud.

Mr. Close then applied for absolution from the instance, on the ground that the plaintiff claimed payment as out-and-out cessionary, whereas he had only made out a case of pledgee.

Mr. Upington contended that the plaintiff had proved that this mortgage bond was ceded as security, and that thereafter the debtor handed over his security to the creditor to realise. The rights under the bond had been only handed over to Cowling, and surely Cowling was entitled to sue the mortgagors, reserving to them any defence they might have on the merits.

His Lordship held that there was some evidence that Kidney had parted with his right in this bond to Cowling.

John Edwin Paul Close, incorporated accountant, Cape Town (one of the official liquidators) was then called for the defence. He said that in 1901 he was asked to become a director by certain English shareholders; the first meeting of directors that he attended was in December, 1901. At the second meeting witness discovered that Stableford, the managing director had been buying large quantities of machinery. Witness insisted on Stableford's powers being cut down under threat of withdrawing from the Board. Stableford's powers were curtailed to indents up to £350 a month; all expenditure above that amount to be submitted to the directors for approval. At that time witness thought the company was involved. Witness was not aware during 1902 of the existence of a broker's note (produced) for lease of the front portion of the premises with the option of a sale. The note was between Stableford and Co. and Honikman and Hand. The business seemed at that time to be large and increasing. Witness found, soon after he had joined the Board, that Stableford had overbought machinery in excess of capital. In July, 1902, there were overdrafts to be met, and Mr. Hennessy (who was secretary at that time) and witness gave their guarantees to the bank for £5,000. On the 18th July, 1902, Mr. Hennessy was summarily dismissed from the position of secretary by Stableford, whom witness considered to have very arbitrary powers. Subsequently witness found that Kidney had been appointed secretary. Up to about April, 1903, witness did not suspect the bona fides of either Stableford or Kidney. In 1903 he was called upon by Stableford and Kidney to report to Mr. Veep, one of the largest creditors and the English buyer, with the object of his putting the finances of the company on a sound basis and relieving witness and Mr. Hennessy of their liability to the bank. Witness made his report, with the result that Mr. Veep was thrown off the business entirely, and that witness suffered to the extent of £2,500, plus 8 per cent. interest, being his share of the liability to the bank as guarantor. Witness found on enquiry at the Deeds Office that two transfers relating to the front property occupied by the company had gone through, one from Honikman and Hand to Stableford for £4,500, and the other from Stableford to the Company for £6,500, showing a difference of £2,000 in favour of Stableford. In April, 1903, witness heard about a lease, but was unable to obtain it from the managing director or secretary. In October, 1902, an extraordinary general meeting had been held, at which it was resolved to purchase the front property occupied by the company for £6,500. Stableford was in the chair, but he did not disclose to the meeting that he was going to purchase the property and resell it to the company. Witness proposed the resolutions; had he known of Stableford's interest in the transaction he should certainly not have proposed such a resolution, involving him, as it did, in loss. He was not aware at the time they decided to buy, that the broker's note was in existence. He was not aware until later of a letter dated 20th November, 1902, from Kidney, as secretary to the company, to Messrs. Reid and Nephew. There was no notice given of the letter to the Board of Directors. Up to April, 1903, witness had seen no documents of the company. In July, 1903, the company was placed under inspection of witness, Mr. Syfret, and, later on, of Mr. Laite. Kidney commenced as secretary of the company in October, 1902. Witness and Mr. Laite saw Kidney and asked him how he came to waive the option of the company and allow Stableford to buy the property and sell it to the company at a profit of £2,000. Kidney afterwards produced a press copy of a letter which he and Stableford had sent to Messrs. Reid and Nephew containing the waiver. Witness was unable to produce the press copy but could speak as to the general purport of the letter.

Mr. Upington objected to verbal evidence being led if the press copy could be produced.

Mr. Lambert Kidney was called and produced his press letter book. He said that he could not find a copy of the letter in his books.

His Lordship ruled that verbal evidence could be given as to the contents of the letter from Kidney to Reid and Nephew.

Mr. Upington entered a formal objection to the ruling.

Mr. J. E. P. Close (continuing his evidence) said that he saw a letter from Kidney formally abandoning the option. All efforts to find the original letter had been unsuccessful. The letter was signed by Kidney and, he believed, by Stableford, the managing director. On the passing of the transfers in question, a second bond to Kidney for £250, now in dispute, was passed on the same date. The documents were dated 31st January, 1903. Coming to what was known as the back property, witness said that he was not aware in August, 1902, that Stableford had bought the back property from Hand for £2,500. On the 20th April, 1903, transfer of the back property was passed by Stableford to Stableford and Co. for £6,500. This purported to be in pursuance of a resolution of a director's meeting of the 17th March, 1903. Witness was not present at the meeting. There were present, he found from the minutes, Messrs. Stableford (in the chair), Pritchard, Druit (by proxy), and Kidney (secretary). In the course of their investigations in August, 1903, witness went and asked Kidney how property could have been bought by the managing director for £2,500 and sold by him to the company for £6,500. He asked Kidney what he had done with the money from the bond of £4,500 which had been passed in favour of the master. The differences of prices thus shown in favour of Stableford were: On the front property, £2,000; and on the back property, £4,000. On this property, bonds of £4,000 had been passed, including one of £1,500 in favour of W. L. Kidney. When they made their inquiries they found that the three bonds had been extinguished and their place was taken by the master's bond of £4,500. His position was that the company were entitled to buy the property at the same price as Stableford, the managing director, had bought it for. Kidney, in reply to witness, said that the difference of £2,000 had gone in repairs, improvements and expenses. Witness went in detail into the relations of Kidney with the company. A third bond of £1,500 was passed on the company's back property. There was an item of £700, of which Kidney could give no explanation whatever. Witness received no accounts from Kidney until about September, 1903. In Kidney's account they noticed that a bond of £750 had been credited. Kidney commenced to claim interest on the bond. Then, on the 29th February, he claimed payment of the capital, because the interest had not been paid. The first intimation that the liquidators had of any alleged cession to Cowling was contained in a letter of the 7th April, calling up the bond on account of Cowling.

Mr. R. W. Close: I suppose that Stableford abandoned the profits from these transactions?

Witness: The shares that he had, we knew, were valueless, so it was not worth fighting over. He had got a large number of shares at the celebrated meeting in May, 1903. I read a report in the "Cape Times" the following day, and I wrote and asked whether the report was substantially correct. I was told by Stableford that it was.

Mr. R. W. Close: At that meeting 13,000 shares had been voted to Stableford as "gratitude shares" for his services to the company during the past four years?

Witness: Yes, although the company had only been registered two years. Witness went on to say that it was further resolved at the meeting that the pay to Stableford should be increased from £600 to £1,000, and that it should be retrospective for six months. Furthermore, a dividend of 100 per cent. was declared. The meeting was a most extraordinary one. The shareholders who were present did not represent one per cent. of the shares. Witness at that time represented English shareholders, and he received no notice of the meeting. A few months before witness had come into conflict with Stableford and the others. The whole of the resolutions were passed with the object of getting fresh capital; it was all part and parcel of a big scheme to get a lot of money into the company. Witness had found among the papers a letter by Kidney, showing that the company was in a very bad condition. Within six weeks of the meeting, the company was placed under inspection. At that time it was not able to meet its bills. Stableford and Kidney resorted to various devices to raise money about that time.

Mr. R. W. Close: Kidney and Stableford were working together to the detriment of the company. I propose to put in letters that passed between Kidney and Stableford at that time.

Mr. Upington took exception to the introduction of matters that did not concern his client. Mr. Cowling was absolutely unconnected in every way with these property transactions.

Maasdorp, J., said that, of course, where a question of fraud was raised, the matter was one that must be left largely to the discretion of counsel.

Mr. R. W. Close: My object was to show that these two worked hand in hand.

Witness gave evidence as to finding a certain letter dated the 11th June, 1903, addressed by Kidney to Stableford.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: There was a considerable amount of trouble towards the end of Mr. Hennessy's secretaryship of the company. Witness had no knowledge of how the books had been kept. Stableford had complained of the way in which the books were kept.

Mr. Upington: You took Mr. Hennessy's part very warmly?

Witness: Because I thought he had been very unjustly dealt with by Mr. Stableford.

Further cross-examined: There was a meeting of the Board on the 18th of July, 1902, at which recriminations were indulged in. Hennessy was dismissed from the secretaryship by Stableford, under his extraordinary powers as managing director. Witness criticised Stableford severely in regard to an interview that the latter had had with Mr. Carmichael, Mr. Hennessy's clerk, in regard to the accounts. Stableford, it was found, had had a shorthand writer, taking notes. The shorthand writer was concealed, and Carmichael was not made aware that notes were being taken of the interview. Witness told Stableford that he thought it was — cowardly. He also said that such a thing would not be done with a convict. The purchase of the premises was entered into while Kidney was in England. The lease of the premises had been entered into before Kidney became secretary of the company. Kidney was appointed secretary by a letter of July, 1902, the appointment to date from November, 1902. At the time of the purchase of the premises, witness did not inquire who was the vendor, because he had no suspicions at that time.

Mr. Upington: How do you say that Kidney was a party to any fraud in connection with the purchase of the property by the company from Stableford?

Witness: He was an accessory after the fact, and as such he is as guilty as the other. He signed a solemn waiver of the option of purchase in favour of the company for £4,500.

In further cross-examination, the witness said he took up the position that the three bonds should have been the company's, and that whatever Kidney put into repairs should have been a charge against the company. Kidney received £4,500 from the Master, and with that he paid off the three bonds. He got a bond for £1,500 on this property, and did not spend more than £500. His account of the disbursements included the item of £700, which witness regarded as fraudulent. Witness took exception to a sum of £60, included in an account for £460, in respect of repairs, this £60 having been paid by cheque by the company the same day. Witness contended that the bond for £750 was obtained by fraud. He accused Kidney in September, 1903, in the presence of Mr. Syfret of misappropriating this amount. Kidney wrote on the 7th January stating that he had pledged the bond, but witness took no steps to find out who it was pledged to. In reply to a demand for interest, by the cessionary, the company's attorneys wrote stating that the interest had been set off in account with Mr. Kidney before notice of cession was given. Witness did not think it necessary to take proceedings to have the bond set aside before Stableford left the country. It did not occur to him that the bond might be transferred to an innocent third party.

Mr. Upington asked witness whether it was not usual for brokers, who might be secretaries for one or more companies, to charge a commission on any loans that they might raise for those companies?

Witness: I do not know whether it is usual or not usual but I consider that it is an improper thing to do.

Mr. Upington: Do you know from your business relations that it is a common practice?

Witness: Not unless it is specially authorised.

Further cross-examined: He had in his account disallowed Mr. Kidney's charged for commission. Mr. Kidney had charged 2½ per cent.

Mr. Upington: In those halcyon days of 1902 this company was supposed to be a very good thing?

Witness: Yes; we had every hope, as I said in my examination-in-chief, that it would be a very good thing, but they had overbought stock and plant. I thought there was a very promising business.

I see that you actually were a director of the company at the time when they recommended a dividend of 50 per cent. on the ordinary shares?—Yes.

So you must have thought then that it was a very good thing?—What date was that?

This is the balance-sheet (produced) as at March 31, 1902, which was passed and approved, and so forth, at a meeting in July?—What was the capital of the company then?

I don't know what the capital was.—You see the capital was increased on that date by £14,000.

Meanwhile the business was increasing?—It was increasing.

Answering further questions, witness said he was present at the meeting where the increase of the capital was authorised. He had every justification then for supporting that. They had had Mr. Syfret's balance-sheet, and the company was well satisfied with the position.

In the course of further cross-examination,

Mr. Upington asked witness if he knew where Stableford was.

Witness: I may tell you that we have made every inquiry to find him.

Did you make every effort to get his evidence taken on commission?—We did not know he was leaving.

Do you mean to infer that we did know?

No, no?—Then why do you repeat that question—

You didn't know he was leaving, you say?—I did not know he was leaving; I have said that twice.

He has left?—I do not know whether he has left. I am told he has left. I am not his keeper.

Now, have you, in the course of your investigations, come across any evidence of collusion between these two men, prior to the date of signing that letter of November 20?—There was a certain broker's note, but it is after that date.

What was there to arouse Kidney's suspicions at the time he was asked to sign that letter?—That I cannot answer.

Why?—It is clear to anybody else that it is useless for me to attempt to tell you.

But I want to see as well?—If you don't see, it is no use my telling you.

Cross-examination continued: Kidney did not explain to him how he came to write to Reid and Nephew, waiving the option on the back property. He expressed his regrets. Kidney seemed to be very penitent, and he saw that the game was up. Witness admitted that he was not very charitable when he made such discoveries as this, but he denied that he was vindictive.

Mr. Upington: Very likely you are misinterpreting what the man's real feelings were?

Witness: No; his regret was unmistakeable.

His regret at what?—At what we had shown him up as having done.

Witness was also cross-examined in regard to other features of the accounts.

Re-examined: The liquidators had given credit for any amounts beneficially expended for the company. Kidney had actually charged 2½ per cent for commission on the advance of £750 that he said he had given to the company.

Postea (July 12th).

Mr. Close intimated that the search for certain letters at the offices of Messrs. Reid and Nephew had been successful. The letter containing the waiver of the option in favour of the company in November, 1902, had been found.

Further evidence was called for the defendants.

Richard Hugh Pritchard, manufacturers' agent, Cape Town, said that he joined the Board of Stableford and Co., Limited, in October, 1902. He remembered attending a special meeting of shareholders in October, 1902, at which a resolution was passed authorising the purchase of the front property. Mr. Stableford, who was in the chair, made some statement, but witness could not remember exactly what it was. He did not remember Stableford having said that he was taking over an option in favour of the company, and that he was proposing to sell to the limited company. Subsequently a meeting was held at Mr. J. E. P. Close's office, at which the resolution was formally confirmed. Witness presided on that occasion. He signed certain documents brought to him by Kidney, including a declaration of purchase and a power of attorney to pass the bond for £750 in favour of Kidney, now in suit. Witness raised some objection at the time, because he was not familiar with the position and affairs of the company. Kidney pressed him to sign, and told him that it was his duty as a director to sign. Eventually witness, rather than cause any friction, consented to sign. He desired to save any further trouble to Mr. Kidney. Kidney told him that the money that he (Kidney) had advanced to the company was his own risk. Witness wished to explain to the Court that he was pressed to become a director by William Stableford. He knew nothing as to the duties of a director, but Stableford asked him to represent Keep Bros., of Birmingham, who were the buying agents of the company, and who were personally known to witness. He was afraid that he did not go into the financial part of the company as he ought to have done. Witness had every faith in Mr. Kidney at that time. He objected to Stableford appointing Kidney as secretary, and said that he thought the appointment should be made by the Board, but Stableford pooh-poohed the objection. Witness went on to speak of the resolutions adopted at the meeting on the 17th March, 1903, in regard to the purchase of the back property. When the meeting resolved to purchase the property witness was not aware that Stableford had already secured it for £2,500. Stableford said that he had bought a paper called "The Veld," and that he was developing the business. He made a statement at the meeting that it was absolutely necessary to purchase the property, otherwise some other party who was after the adjoining premises might get that property also.

Mr. Upington (interposing) objected to evidence being led to vary the minutes of a meeting. Those minutes said that the purchase by Stableford and re-sale to the company was disclosed. The resolution read that a certain property recently acquired and re-built by William Stableford should be purchased for £6,500.

Maasdorp, J., said that counsel might submit that the minutes were better evidence, but he did not see how he could object to parole-evidence being given as to the proceedings at the meeting. He would, however, make a note of the objection.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that the information in the minutes as to the purchase by Stableford for £2,500 was now to him. He remembered no disclosure having been made by Stableford as to his having himself purchased the property in the first instance. Witness saw two cases of valuable machinery lying outside in the lane, and made a complaint to Stableford that the machinery was suffering damage. He threatened to employ coolies on his own account unless the machinery were put under cover. Later in the day he found that steps were being taken to protect the machinery. Witness signed the declaration of the purchaser for the back property. It was not until May, 1903, that witness heard the true history of the property transactions. Mr. Close met him in the street, and told him a few things which opened his eyes considerably. He saw Stableford frequently, but he had lost all faith in the man, because he had found him out to be a deliberate liar. He once saw Kidney, who told him that Stableford was not treating him fairly, and that his wife (Kidney's) had said that he would rue the day when he knew Stableford.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Stableford said that he could have made something by the sale of the property if he had been selling to another party, but that he would make nothing, as he was selling to the company. When witness signed the declaration of purchaser, he did not notice that the seller was Wm. Stableford. He had seen that since, to his sorrow. He was not familiar with such documents. He took it that Stableford had been acting as intermediary in the purchase on behalf of the company. He had not seen a declaration of purchaser before he signed the one in question. It might be called stupidity, but it was a fact.

Mr. Upington: I don't call it stupid, but you are a business man, you know?

Witness: I call myself stupid now in the light of later facts. I may say that I had not the slightest suspicion of the character of the man.

I will put it to you that the minute of the meeting of the 17th March, as it appears in the book, is accurate?—I don't think so.

Will you swear that?—I am not going to swear it. The matter is so old, and it has escaped my memory to some extent. Since that time, I have been to England, and have been all over South Africa twice.

Further cross-examined: He considered that £6,500 was a fair price for the property. Small properties were at that time fetching bigger prices.

Joseph Honikman, broker and estate agent, Cape Town, said that he passed the broker's note for the original lease of the front property. Wm. Stableford came to see him in answer to an advertisement, and the contract was made in favour of Stableford, acting on behalf of the company. On the 22nd August, 1902, communications took place between witness and Stableford, acting on behalf of the company, in regard to the exercise of the option on the front property. He passed a broker's note on the same date for the purchase by W. Stableford personally of the back property. Some delay took place, and he was subsequently informed that the transfer should go through in the name of Wm. Stableford. Witness spoke to certain negotiations which followed for the purpose of transferring the front property to Stableford personally, an indemnity being given by the company. Transfer of the back property was given to Stableford on the 12th January, possession having been given to him some time in December to enable him to carry out certain alterations.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Kidney said he was informed that the difficulty was that the document was in the company's name, instead of in Stableford's name. Stableford did not point out at that time that this was a mistake. Shortly after he exercised the option, Stableford said it was a mistake for the company's name to appear, instead of his own.

Re-examined: Witness did not hear of any personal right to the lease on the part of Stableford until after August 22, 1902. As to the giving of the lease, the transaction was distinctly between witness and the company.

By the Court: The sale of the back property was to Stableford himself.

Cecil Hand, broker, Cape Town, gave evidence substantially corroborating that of his partner, Honikman. Witness said that he held out for the price of £2,500, as he knew the company would have to buy the property. He did not regard Stableford as being in flourishing financial circumstances. The company had to waive its option of purchase before it was possible for transfer to be made to Stableford. Kidney was quite conversant with the state of affairs. Stableford offered witness £50 for the broker's note which the liquidators were looking for, or offered him that sum if he would put the note in a box in the bank, each of them to have a key. Witness showed him out of the office. Stableford once tried to snatch the broker's note out of witness's hand. Kidney tried to persuade witness to give up the note to Stableford.

Morris J. Hopper, attorney, deposed that Honikman put the matter of the transfer of the property in his hands. There were negotiations between witness and Kidney and Stableford. Witness gave Kidney to understand that he would not pass transfer unless he had an indemnity in respect of Messrs. Hand and Honikman from Stableford personally. Witness got a letter of indemnity.

Alfred J. Erzleben, builder, said that in December, 1902, he was in negotiation with Stableford in regard to the rebuilding of the back property, and an agreement (produced) was drawn up. The agreement was signed by Stableford as managing director, the contract being with the company. The witness specified the alterations, and said he received money on account of the work from Stableford and Kidney. Stableford paid in cash; Kidney gave him cheques. Altogether he received £660. Witness paid £15 commission for getting the job.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He did not know whether he had been paid the whole amount due under the contract. He did not think so; there were, he believed, some short payments. Witness did not know who drew up the contract. Stableford did not tell him the work was for the company; witness assumed it was. The only person whom he dealt with in connection with the contracts was Stableford. He began work in December, 1902.

Wm. James Laite, one of the liquidators of the company, said that he went with Mr. Close, and interviewed Mr. Kidney relative to the property transactions. Mr. Close questioned Kidney in reference to the cancellation of the broker's note, and eventually Kidney produced a letter, which was read by Mr. Close, and which stated that the company were prepared to waive their option. Undoubtedly there was in the letter information which would lead one to believe that the company had authorised the waiving of their right. Kidney understood that the thing was not altogether straight, and he was sorry for the position he was placed in. Witness was present at a subsequent interview between Mr. Close and Mr. Kidney at Mr. Syfret's office. There was some straight talk, and Mr. Close made use of some strong language in the matter. Kidney said that he had no idea that an interpretation of that kind would be put upon his conduct. Mr. Close rejoined that, in law, such conduct was called by a very harsh name. Kidney did not defend himself in any shape or form; he simply sat still and hung his head.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: After the statements that he had heard, his first impression was that Stableford was the sole delinquent. He would not say that Mr. Close was, figuratively speaking, seeking Stableford's blood. He certainly seemed surprised and indignant at the conduct of Stableford. At the first interview with Kidney, Mr. Close said to him: "Have you any idea where this thing leads you to?" Kidney said: "I did not, but I do now," or words to that effect. Kidney, at the interviews, took up the position that a wrong construction was being put on what he had done. Kidney seemed to be very much upset, and he took no measures to defend himself. Witness thought that if he had been attacked as Kidney was, he would have protected himself.

Further cross-examined: Kidney took up the position, in the presence of witness, that, with regard to the whole of the company's affairs, he had been misled by Stableford. At first witness thought that view was not improbable.

Re-examined: Before the first interview he considered that Kidney was a tool, but afterwards he did not think so. Witness meant by "strong language" on the part of Mr. Close, strong accusations of dishonest conduct.

Gerald Orpen, acting as co-liquidator on behalf of Mr. Syfret, said that he had had conversations with Kidney, who asked in regard to the interest on his bond. He said he wanted the interest so as to enable him to pay the interest on a loan from a friend of his. This would be about January, 1904. Kidney repeated that the bond was genuine. Later on, Kidney told him that he had pledged the bond.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness told Kidney that the reason why the liquidators would not pay the interest was on account of the property transactions.

Oliver Lumb, in the employ of Mr. J. E. P. Close, produced the company's cash-book, showing two payments of £35 and £60 to Erxleben, for making alterations to the back property. Erxleben was debited and not Wm. Stableford. They found a lot of invoices which had not been entered up from Erxleben for work done. These were entered up by the liquidators.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Erxleben had a running account with the company at the time.

M. E. Frederick Oettle, clerk in the Master's Office, gave evidence as to applications having been made for loans by the company on the 10th January, 1903, for £4,000, and on the 17th March, 1903, for £4,500. The applications were signed by Kidney, as secretary of Wm. Stableford and Co., Ltd. The form of declaration in regard to the March application was filled up. It stated that the property had been re-built at a cost of £1,700.

John Edwin Paul Close (recalled) said that the letter (produced) of the 20th November, 1902, cancelling the option in favour of the company, coincided with his recollection of the letter that he saw at the office of Messrs. Reid and Nephew. He would not say that the letter produced was the one that he saw.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. W. R. Close said that he proposed to call evidence showing that Kidney assented to the liquidation of the company, and that he was, therefore, estopped from ceding his rights as against the company.

Mr. Upington said that he must object to evidence being led upon a point which had not been raised in the pleadings. The point now taken apparently was that Kidney was estopped from ceding the bond upon the ground that prior to that he had consented to the voluntary liquidation of the company. That raised a very interesting question, which he was not prepared to go into at all, a question that had not been raised in pleadings.

Maasdorp, J., said that the evidence might be led, and he would make a note of the objection taken by counsel for the plaintiff.

Mr. J. E. P. Close (recalled) said that the company went into liquidation on the 16th September, 1903. Kidney was then secretary of the company, and he was a creditor and shareholder. The resolution to go into liquidation was signed by Kidney as secretary of the company.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel were heard in argument.

Mr. Upington, after reviewing the evidence in the case, submitted that no testimony had been adduced to show what Kidney had done to enable the company to call upon him to account to them for the profit made by Stableford in connection with the property transaction. After all, that was the bedrock and the gist of the case. He did not think the decision of these points would be assisted by any vague or general allegations of fraud, but they would have to be decided upon the facts, so far as they had been brought out before the Court, and bearing in mind that after all practically a criminal charge was brought against both Kidney and Stableford in connection with this matter. All the evidence went to show that when Kidney was in England, Stableford purchased two properties, and the attempt to prove that Kidney was aware of that transaction had absolutely failed. There was no evidence to connect Kidney, either by communication or otherwise with the properties until they came to somewhere in November. Counsel was simply concerned to show that the sale of the front property was concluded from Hand to Stableford, and Stableford to the company before Kidney took over his duties as secretary. It was recorded in the minutes of the 10th October that that purchase had been confirmed by a meeting of shareholders. Anyone approaching the case with an unbiassed mind would see that it did not lie upon the secretary, who saw that a sale had been confirmed in due form of this property to the company, to be diligent and studious to go round ferretting out whether there was not something wrong about it. There was not a single word of evidence to show that Kidney ever saw the broker's note, that the contents of the note were ever explained to him, or that he was aware what the purchase price was—all three things absolutely necessary to be proved in order to establish in a charge of fraud against him. To go into vague generalities and conjectures was very unsafe in what was practically a criminal charge. There would have been force in the contention of the liquidators if they had shown, before the letter deciding to purchase the property was written, that Kidney had seen the broker's note, and was aware of the option. Dealing with the back property, Mr. Upington contended that it was clear from the minutes of the meeting of March 17 that Stableford was disclosed as the seller of that property, and urged that there was nothing to prevent him from making a profit out of that transaction. The resolution spoke of the "premises recently acquired and rebuilt by William Stableford." He submitted that the minutes were the best evidence of what took place at the meeting, the recollections of Mr. Pritchard (one of the directors) notwithstanding. His learned friend, it was true, had pointed out in the course of the case that the minutes of the meeting had not, according to the record, been confirmed. That might be so, but if they looked through the minute-book they would find that in very few cases indeed was it recorded that the minutes had been confirmed. The fact that Kidney had furnished the details to the liquidators was sure evidence of his bona-fides in the matter. The company had retained both the properties, and their right was at most limited to the right of calling upon their officers as agents to account to them for profits improperly obtained. It was clear that there was no liability on the part of Kidney to the company, but, on the other hand, a liability of the company to him. Now, what profit did Kidney obtain from these property transactions? On the front property he received no profit whatever. On the back property there was a profit represented by 700 preferent shares. He (counsel) did not suppose those shares had much value to-day; the evidence, such as it was, showed that the shares were valueless. Mr. Upington went on to say that the account prepared by the liquidators, which showed an indebtedness by Kidney to the company to the amount of about £300, debited Kidney with the whole of the profit on both the property transactions. Kidney's account showed £1,900 indebtedness by the company to him. It was quite evident that they must have a debate of these accounts. There were also substantial sums for salary, debited against Kidney; counsel contended that that was an unfair course to adopt. He submitted that the onus rested upon the liquidators of showing fraud, and that the evidence, although it might raise a certain amount of suspicion with regard to one of the actors, did not associate Kidney with any fraud.

Mr. Close argued that the so-called cession was a ratification of the pledge, and was, in effect, therefore a pledge.

Maasdorp, J., said that if it were the case that the cession in April was good, the point was, unless something took place in the meantime to alter the position of the parties, what was the plaintiff entitled to under the cession?

Mr. Close said that the plaintiff's claim was based upon the allegations of fraud and on the accounts. Proceeding, counsel urged that it was in the mind of Stableford to deal with the two properties together for his own benefit. If it were shown that there was fraud on the part of Stableford, that Stableford was dealing with these properties as one in a fraudulent manner, and that he was assisted in that by Kidney, it was, he contended, immaterial whether Kidney was in that transaction from the beginning or not. He submitted that in the accounts Kidney had not really been debited with the profits made by Stableford on the property transactions. He contended that Kidney had abused his position of trust, and had lent himself to a fraudulent scheme, and that whatever consideration he might have given for the bond, that bond was fraudulently obtained, and the company was not liable on it. Whatever remedy the plaintiff had against Kidney himself was purely a matter between those two.

Mr. Upington was heard in reply.

Maasdorp, J.: In order to ascertain the facts upon which the defendants' plea is contended to be based, it is necessary to go into a number of transactions which preceded the execution of this bond. It would appear that the company entered into a lease of the property upon which this bond was subsequently passed on the 8th November, 1901, and that one of the clauses of the lease gives the company the option of purchasing this property within six months of the execution of the lease for £4,200; if that option is not exercised within six months, then for the following six months an option is given to the company to purchase the property at £4,500. It appears that at the time this lease was entered into the business of the company was mainly transacted through its manager, Mr. Stableford, and the company seems to have had so much confidence in him that the directors left the conduct of the business almost entirely in his hands. On the 22nd August, 1902, just before the twelve months had expired, it is stated by Mr. Honikman that Stableford exercised the option which the company was entitled to under the lease in favour of the company. He has positively said so, and his statement is uncontradicted, and I take it, notwithstanding some lapses of memory in minor respects, on the part of Mr. Honikman, as a matter of fact, on August 22, the option was exercised in favour of the company for the purchase of this property for £4,500 by Stableford. A meeting was held on 10th October, 1902, at which the purchase of this property from the owner was authorised. A question arose both before and after the meeting as to the declarations of purchaser and seller that were to be executed. When that question arose Stableford informed the owners, Messrs. Honikman and Hand, that he really exercised the option in his own favour, and that he personally was entitled to the option and not the company, as appeared on the broker's note. Thereupon, having received certain communications from Stableford, the owners consented to make the necessary declarations for passing the transfer to Stableford. The transfer to Stableford took place on January 31, 1903, and upon the same day a transfer was also passed from Stableford to the company. Now, as far as Stableford himself is concerned, it is most clearly proved that the company was entitled to purchase this property for £4,500, and he, as a director, if he had done his duty, would have purchased the property for that sum for the company, but, in disregard of his duty, he alleged that such an option did not belong to the company, and he proceeded to dispose of the rights of the company under the broker's note by inducing the owners of the property to pass transfer to him. Now, there is not the slightest doubt that the whole of this, so far as Stableford is concerned, was a fraudulent transaction, a fraud by which he gained the sum of £2,500. It was not a case of a director purchasing a property in his own name and subsequently selling at a profit to his company, but it is a case in which the company were defrauded of a right which they themselves had of purchasing the property in the first instance. It is necessary now also to refer to the transaction in respect to what is called the back property before considering what connection Kidney had with these matters. It was quite clear in August, 1902, when the front property was purchased, that the company would also require the back property. It was then known to Stableford, and mentioned by him to Hand, who was the owner, that the company would certainly require that property, and they would be obliged to buy it. With that knowledge, and undoubtedly with the object of afterwards selling it to the company, Stableford on August 22, 1902, purchased this property which was transferred to him on January 12. On March 17 there was a meeting of the directors of the company, and it was then decided to purchase this property. The transfer to the company took place on April 20, 1903. Stableford purchased the property for £2,500, and he sold it to the company for £6,500. Here again he made a profit of £4,000. Now, this is a case which in the first instance the company itself were not entitled to buy this property. It is a case which falls under many of the authorities which have been cited of an agent whose duties it was to secure for his principal upon the best terms certain properties required by his principal, and he himself, knowingly and without divulging the facts to his principal, makes a profit out of his principal. Mr. Pritchard said he rather looked upon Stableford as an intermediary. However, the main point on which this part of the case turns is this: Was the company aware that Stableford was making a profit? Mr. Pritchard tells us that Stableford told him positively that he was making nothing out of the transaction. On the only point on which he might have set himself right by declaring that he was the owner, and that he did make a profit, in which case the company would have considered their position on that important point, he concealed the truth from the company. This transaction also was a transaction in fraud of the company, but, as far as Stableford is concerned, the whole of these transactions could have been set aside by the company, or the company could have demanded from Stableford a return of all such profits as he made at the expense of the company. The question arises: What connection had Kidney with these transactions? It seems that when Stableford made the statement that the option with respect to the first property belonged to him, and that he had exercised it in his own favour, and that he himself was entitled to receive transfer of the property as purchaser, that statement was questioned by the sellers, and the sellers intimated that as far as they were concerned they had been dealing with the company and not with Stableford, and they refused, in view of the option which they had given to the company, to pass transfer to Stableford, unless the company intimated to them that they no longer availed themselves of their right under the broker's note. It was necessary, therefore, to satisfy the sellers that the company had renounced their benefits under the broker's note, and to do so it was necessary to obtain a document which, under ordinary circumstances, would have to be signed by a director and by the secretary. Without it, it would not be in proper form. It became necessary, therefore, to obtain the assistance of Kidney to give the necessary assurance to the sellers. Now, Kidney was perfectly well aware what the question was which was raised, that there was a dispute between the sellers and Stableford, that the sellers insisted that there was a certain document under which the company had certain rights, and they intimated to Kidney that they had a document in their possession, and that it was available for his inspection. Under these circumstances, Kidney and Stableford wrote this letter to Reid and Nephew, who are the solicitors for the sellers.

Cape Town, November 20, 1902. Gentlemen,—Transfer, Honikman to Stable-

ford. With reference to the letter addressed to you on 13th inst., and signed by Mr. William Stableford, regarding the purchase of property known as 57, Strand-street, Cape Town, we beg to state that this letter represents the correct facts. This property was bought in the first place by Mr. Stableford for his own account and benefit, and the company has now decided to purchase the property from Mr. Stableford, notwithstanding the wording of the broker's note, which was signed some twelve months ago. We hereby indemnify Messrs. Honikman and Hand from all possible consequences of transferring that property to Mr. Wm. Stableford, and admit that we have a full knowledge of the whole of the facts and circumstances surrounding the case. Please, therefore, arrange the necessary papers required for the transfer as instructed by Mr. Stableford in his letter above referred to. Yours faithfully, W. L. Kidney, secretary, Wm. Stableford and Co., Ltd." (with seal of the company). Here are most positive statements made by Kidney in conflict with the truth. Now, it has been contended on behalf of the plaintiff in this case that that letter was innocently written by Kidney, and does not implicate him in fraud. We have clear evidence that where statements are made recklessly and wrongly when the means of arriving at the truth are available, such statements are proof of gross neglect, and may even be proof of fraud. Now, the statements here made are that Kidney is in full possession of all the facts of the case. If that is a false statement it is a fraudulent statement, and if he was in full possession of all the facts of the case, then he must have known without any doubt that the company had the right to purchase this property for £4,500, and that, in writing this letter, he was sacrificing the property of the company, and the transaction then entered into was, under all the circumstances of the case, a fraudulent representation to the sellers by means of which he was enabled to bring about a sale to the company, a result of which was the defrauding of the company of the sum of £2,000. We have the clearest evidence that Kidney had frequent interviews with the parties to the negotiations that took place during November, and during the negotiations it was made quite clear to him what position the sellers took up, and, in spite of that, he took upon himself to state that there was a mistake, and without his instrumentality this transaction could not have gone through. Before I refer to the bond, I would refer to Kidney's connection with the other property. It seems that at the time when Stableford purchased the other property he was not in a position to pay the purchase price, and it was necessary to enter into more than one bond, but one of these bonds was made in favour of Kidney, in which it appears that Kidney did pay certain expenses, and did make certain advances in respect of which he got this bond of £1,500. But there is an item which is to the following effect: "Interest agreed to be given me in this property against the sale of the property, and repayment of this bond, provided that in the event of such repayment at least £700 be put into preference shares." This item is put at £700; consequently, Kidney is credited in this bond with £700, not the company, and it went into his pocket, and he is to receive that £700 at the time of the re-sale of the property, and that re-sale was certainly contemplated by Stableford to be to the company. Upon reference to the evidence of Mr. Pritchard, we find that he said that Kidney told him that it was his duty to sign as a director. I refer to this evidence to show the interest that Kidney took in both these transactions in order to get them through, and how he was interested in putting the company in funds for the purpose of getting these transactions through. One effect of these transactions going through would be that Kidney would be the gainer by £700 either in cash or in shares. Then on the 31st January steps were taken to pass transfer of what was called the front property to the company. It then appeared that the company required some assistance to get the transactions through, and they obtained assistance from others, but also from Kidney. Kidney came forward to facilitate matters for the company. The result of his assistance was this, that a certain property would be transferred to the company, and the company would pay for it a certain amount of money. Now, as I have said before, the sum that the company was going to pay was the result of a fraudulent transaction on the part of Stableford. Stableford was to obtain from his fraud the sum of £6,500. Kidney comes forward, and, as appears on the face of the bond, enables the company to put in the possession of Stableford the sum of £750. He himself would be fully secured for the repayment of the money, and, on the other hand, this money would go into the pocket of Stableford. Now, when one traces the connection of Kidney with Stableford in all these transactions and the representations he made to the sellers, Honikman and Hand, and to Pritchard (the director), it appears to me that he had full knowledge of all the transactions that had been entered into by Stableford, and with the objects with which those transactions had been entered into. Consequently the bond amounts in effect to this, that by means of it the company was enabled to have funds put into its possession by Kidney which might be appropriated by Stableford, and the company would in that respect be defrauded of that amount. Now, I cannot come to any other conclusion than that this bond is simply a part of all these unlawful transactions between Stableford and Kidney on the one part and the company on the other, by which certain advantages would accrue to Stableford and some indirect advantages would go to Kidney, among others the substantial advantage of £700. Then the question is whether any further light is thrown upon Kidney's actual knowledge of what was being done by Stableford by a letter which has been put in, which was written at the time when Mr. Close, having become suspicious of the position of the parties, and having discovered that the company had had a right at one time which seemed to have disappeared with respect to the purchase of this property, had begun to question Kidney. After the interview, Kidney writes to Stableford: "I had to see Mr. Close, and on the afternoon he said, 'Where is that lease; have you found it?' I smoothed him over as much as I could, and I left him." The question that was raised was as to the existence of this broker's note, upon which an option was given to the company. Kidney does not make any effort to put Mr. Close in possession of the facts; he "smooths him over" and leaves him. He signifies by this, I take it, that he left him in the dark as to the real state of the case. He must have known that the matter in respect of which he left him in the dark was a matter involving fraud. Upon the finding that this bond is merely a part of a number of transactions which were entered into for the purpose of defrauding the company of their money, it must necessarily follow that this bond must be declared invalid, and, if it is declared invalid upon that ground, it will be unnecessary to go further and inquire whether, as a matter of fact, there is any sum of money still due upon a question of account between the parties. Whether Kidney advanced the £700 or not does not matter, because the money was advanced for a fraudulent purpose, not to benefit the company, from which the bond was obtained, but to benefit Stableford, who was committing the fraud upon the company. Upon the second plea, the question was raised as to whether upon the accounts there was anything due by the company to Kidney. Voluminous accounts were gone into, but the results were not clear, and I think we may say that even in the mind of the accountant there is no certainty as to the general state of accounts between the company and Kidney. Supposing there is an indebtedness on the part of the company to Kidney in matters which are not involved in this fraud, that question will remain open as between the company and Kidney. If the indebtedness is such that it is also affected by the fraud, then, of course, Kidney cannot take advantage of it, but if it is found on the state of accounts that there are sums due which have no reference to this particular transaction, then the question arises as to whether Kidney is entitled to recover the money from the company. Whether the company will then raise the general question as to their losses of £4,000 which was the consequence of Stableford's conduct, aided by Kidney, is another question which is not now to be decided. I have only now to deal with the indebtedness on the bond itself, and the validity of the bond, and upon all the circumstances of the case I come to the conclusion that the bond is invalid, and that consequently no benefit can be taken by Cowling under the said bond. Judgment must be given for the defendants, with costs.

After hearing counsel on the question of the costs in the provisional case, Maasdorp, J., said the order as to costs must include the costs incurred in the provisional case.

REVIEW.

REX V. CLOETE. { 1905.
June 23rd.

Hopley, J., said that a case had come before him for review, in which a man named Cloete was convicted by the A.R.M. of Calvinia of stock theft, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. He considered that under all the circumstances of the case there was room for a bona-fide mistake on the part of the accused as to the ownership of the donkey he was alleged to have stolen. Since the conviction the man had been in gaol, but the Court would now order that the conviction be quashed, and would direct that a telegram be sent to Calvinia ordering the immediate liberation of the accused.

SUPREME COURT

FREEMANTLE V. PAMA. { 1905.
{ June 26th.

Letting and hiring — Duties of hirer.

P. F. had hired certain wagons and oxen from P. and others, with the object of sub-letting them to the Military. He took them up to the front and handed them over to the Military on certain terms. He was afterwards succeeded by his brother F. F. as conductor. P. F. was duly paid for their use, and in turn settled with P. and others. After some months the wagons, &c., were discharged by the Military. F. F. and P. F. failed to return them to their owners, as they held that their responsibility for them ceased on their discharge. P. subsequently sued F. F. and P. F. in the Magistrate's Court for their return, or their value, and for damages for illegal detention. P. F. claimed in reconvention for certain moneys which he had disbursed on behalf of P. The Magistrate gave judgment for the defendants in convention and for P. F. in reconvention. On appeal, the E. D. Court reversed this judgment as to F. F. and gave judgment for P., but upheld the claim of P. F. Against that judgment F. F. now appealed.

Held, affirming the judgment of the E. D. Court, that F. F. was bound to return the wagons and oxen to P., or pay value.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Eastern Districts Court brought by the plaintiff, in the original action, in the Magistrate's Court, Matatiele.

The matter arose out of a transaction in connection with a wagon, 16 oxen, and gear. The defendants were Percy Wm. Freemantle and Frederick Charles Free-mantle. In February the second named defendant engaged transport wagons for service with the Forces in Natal, and he got one wagon, 16 oxen, and gear from the plaintiff, a native, named Maclean Pama. The wagon and so forth had been used by the military, and had not been returned to the plaintiff. He sued the two defendants in the Magistrate's Court, his claim being made up as follows: (1) For the return of a certain wagon and oxen, etc., or payment of the value thereof, £373 16s.; (2) for £200. being damages sustained by plaintiff through illegal detention of the said wagon, etc.; and (3) for a full and true account of all moneys received by defendants on account of plaintiff for the hire of the said wagon and oxen, and of all moneys disbursed by them on behalf of plaintiff, supported by proper vouchers, debate of such account, and payment of such sum of money as shall be found to be due by them to the plaintiff in respect of this account. Defendants, in their plea, denied that they were in any way responsible for the wagon after it had left the Government service. They also said that accounts were rendered to the said plaintiff of all moneys received and disbursed by them in respect of the said wagon monthly as up to the end of August, 1900, that from that date to the date of discharge on November 23, 1900, on account of disbursements, and stoppages, which will appear on reference to the account already referred to, and which defendants hereby tender, no money was due to the plaintiff, but on the other hand there remained a balance of £90 11s. 6d., due by the said plaintiff to the said defendants. Defendants pleaded not indebted, and prayed that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs, and in reconvention prayed that the plaintiff may be adjudged to pay them the sum of £90 11s. 6d., as and being the balance due to them as per account referred to, and costs of suit.

The Magistrate's judgment was as follows: In convention that the Court considers that the account rendered by defendant is satisfactory except as far as the item of £9 is concerned, which is claimed in reconvention, otherwise judgment is for the defendants. In reconvention judgment is entered for plaintiffs in reconvention (defendants in case) in the sum of £81 11s. 6d. Absolution from the instance being granted as regards the £9 above referred to. Each party to pay their own costs.

The plaintiff thereupon took the case on appeal to the Eastern Districts Court, where the appeal was allowed, with costs, against Fred Freemantle, the judgment of the Court below was reversed, judgment was given for plaintiff for the value of 16 oxen at £16 16s. each, with costs, as against Fred Freemantle, the judgment for £81 11s. 6d. in favour of Percy Freemantle to stand.

Against this judgment, the defendant, Fred Freemantle, now appealed.

Mr. Searle, K.C., with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones, was for the appellant; Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) was for the respondent.

Mr. Searle said it would appear from the evidence that the Freemantles acted together in the matter, and arranged for a number of wagons belonging to certain natives to go to the front. Counsel then proceeded to read the terms of the contract under which the wagon went off, and said it would appear that wagons started in February, 1900. Percy Freemantle went off first, and then Fred Freemantle followed. In September and October certain oxen were supplied by the Government because some of these particular oxen died. Where the military were responsible for an animal that died, it was the practice to give a certificate to the driver. When the wagon arrived in Dundee with 16 or 12 oxen, eight were taken out at Dundee and put into a wagon of McCanda's. That left either four or eight, and of the eight five came back to McCanda's kraal. The military paid compensation for three oxen, but whether the three were out of McCanda's team was not quite clear. The plaintiff saw the oxen, but took no action, and McCanda sold them to McKenzie. Freemantle got compensation for three of the oxen, and handed it to the plaintiff.

[Maasdorp, J.: The nine oxen died. They were replaced at the expense of Pama, and no compensation was given?]

Mr. Searle: No, unless it be said that the three oxen were in respect of the nine. Continuing, counsel said it was clear from the contract if any oxen died or became inefficient the contractor replaced them at his own expense, and no compensation would be allowed, unless the oxen were disabled or died through the exigencies of the war. The E.D. Court did not hold the defendant responsible for bringing the oxen back to Pama, and it was clear there was nothing in the contract to that effect. It was a strong point in favour of the defendant that the driver, who was the person who knew everything that took place, and who was the important person in the case, was not called. The only ground upon which the E.D. Court found that Freemantle was liable was because these things happened before the discharge of the wagon, and the Court took up the position that the giving of the cattle to the military at Dundee took place before the discharge of the wagon, though it was very obscure, upon the evidence, when that actually happened. By the exercise of ordinary care, by remaining with the wagon, the driver and leader could have prevented the loss.

Mr. McGregor was not called upon.

Buchanan, A. J. C.: A native named Maclean Pama sued the defendant in the Magistrate's Court at Matatiele in an action to recover a wagon, 16 oxen, and gear, damages and an account. During the war, about February, 1900, the plaintiff and a number of other natives were approached by the defendant, Percy Freemantle, with the object of getting wagons for the use of the military in Natal. Altogether Percy Freemantle acquired 11 wagons from different natives, these were taken to Natal by the other defendant, Frederick Freemantle, and were by him contracted or hired to the Imperial Government. The contract entered into was between Freemantle and the Imperial Government, the natives not appearing at all. In the Magistrate's Court, some difference arose, as the contract was verbal, as to the exact terms of the contract between the natives and Freemantles, and the Magistrate held that the version or account given by Freemantle was the more correct. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, says that the defendant's contention, which he upheld, was that his responsibility should cease when the wagons were discharged, and that he was to get £3 a month for each wagon while so engaged, and that the wagon was to be entered on behalf of the plaintiff under the military form of contract. The Magistrate says that plaintiff's evidence was not so reliable in many details, whereas that of defendant's was straightforward and supported by documents. Part of his version, it appears, was that the brother of defendant, Percy Freemantle, went out as the conductor of these wagons, and afterwards Fred Freemantle himself, and that these wagons were hired to the Imperial Government, and were used for some months. During this time the money paid for the hire of these wagons was sent to Percy Freemantle, who settled with the natives. In the action Percy Freemantle made out an account against the plaintiff, on which the Magistrate gives judgment for £81 against the plaintiff in the action on a claim in reconvention. But on the plaintiff's claim for the wagon and oxen, the Magistrate gave judgment for the defendant, holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The main issue on which the Magistrate found for the defendant was that Freemantle's responsibility ceased for these wagons and oxen as soon as the wagons and oxen were discharged, and he held that Freemantle could not be held responsible for any loss that plaintiff should sustain, and that defendant would not be responsible for losses which were not subject to compensation. The first part of this inference drawn by the Magistrate seems to be altogether untenable. Freemantle was the conductor of the wagons he took from the natives. He hired them with the Imperial Government, and he certainly was responsible to account to the owners of the wagons as long as they were hired by him to the Government. The Magistrate said that when the wagons were discharged, Freemantle was no longer liable. At this stage I am not prepared to differ from the Magistrate, but at the time of the discharge of the wagons, it was Freemantle's duty to account to the natives for their wagons and oxen, and he did not do so. As a fact, he did not seem to know where the wagons were. He received notice from Messrs. Raw and Co., on behalf of the Government, that the wagons were discharged. After he (Freemantle) returned to the Transkei, the native naturally inquired about his wagon, but he could get no information from Freemantle, and some considerable time—nearly two years—elapsed before anything was done, and the native was forced into bringing his action against defendant. The case having been decided against him in the Magistrate's Court, plaintiff appealed to the Eastern Districts Court, and the Eastern Districts Court did not interfere with the Magistrate's finding on the question of the account nor as regards the wagon itself. The wagon was left, it appears, at Maritzburg, and it seems now that notification was given by Raw and Co. that the wagon was there. Some two years after the wagon was left there, Raw and Co. offered £30 for it, but afterwards it became very much the worse for exposure, and Raw and Co. sold it, and they hold the proceeds, amounting to £16, at the disposal of the person who may be found to be entitled to the same. The Magistrate held that when the wagon was discharged, Freemantle was no longer answerable for it. The E.D. Court, I think, very properly held that it was Freemantle's duty as conductor to account for the whole of the property entrusted to him. He has not accounted for the wagon, and he gave no account of the 16 oxen. I do not say that Freemantle was absolutely responsible for these oxen, and had he been able to show, to the satisfaction of the Court, that through no fault of his, through no negligence on his part, and through no carelessness at all, these oxen had become absolutely lost to the plaintiff, it is quite possible that the plaintiff might have had no cause of action, but, instead of that, Freemantle gives no explanation of any kind, he knows nothing at all about them. The E.D. Court, upon this evidence, accepted the finding of the Magistrate, and took the view of the witnesses, which the Magistrate took, but, on Freemantle's own evidence, the Court found that Freemantle had not attempted to account for these oxen, and consequently, as agent of the plaintiff, he was liable for their value. There is no cross-appeal, and thus the only question we have now to decide is whether the E.D. Court was correct in giving judgment for the plaintiff for these 16 oxen. Mr. Searle has argued the case very fully, and, during the course of his argument, has removed any doubt. I had in my mind as to the number of oxen to be accounted for. In my opinion, the judgment of the E.D. Court must be sustained, and the appeal will, therefore, be dismissed, with costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

ESTATE VORSTER V. VAN (1905.
DEN HEEVER. (June 26th.

Mr. M. Bisset moved on behalf of applicant (defendant in an action brought by the respondent in respect of £222, amount of a legacy) for leave to sign judgment by reason of the plaintiff's default in filing her declaration. Mr. Searle, K.C. (for the respondent), opposed the application.

Affidavits having been read on both sides,

Mr. Searle urged that the delay was due to one John Hamilton Diepraem, an attorney of this Court, having left the Colony. There was no dispute as to the inheritance, but the defendant pleaded that there was a set-off.

Mr. Bisset contended that the plaintiff had been extremely negligent throughout, and she ought not now to be allowed to remove bar.

The Court granted an order for the removal of bar, and directed plaintiff to file her declaration on or before the 10th July, and to go to trial on 15th August, unless a further order of Court be made, respondent to pay costs of bar and removal of bar, and of this application.

BLACKER V. CARTER.

Nuisance—Interdict.

The close proximity of a blacksmith's shop to a family private residence is not per se a nuisance.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved on behalf of W. R. Blacker, of Umtata, for an interdict restraining the respondent, Frank Carter, from carrying on his business of a farrier and blacksmith in the immediate neighbourhood of the applicant's house by reason of the same being a nuisance. Mr. Gardiner appeared for the respondent.

The affidavit of the petitioner said that some years ago he acquired a property in a quiet residential neighbourhood, which he estimated now to be worth £1,700 to £2,000. Respondent formerly carried on his business in another part of the town, but on the change of ownership of that property he removed his business to within a few yards of petitioner's residence, on an erf belonging to Mr. C. C. Silberbauer. Petitioner said that the business of respondent was removed to its present position maliciously, in consequence of the petitioner having arranged to carry on a similar business where respondent had formerly traded, the latter having declined to pay an increased rent which had been demanded by the new owner. The petitioner further said that respondent, by his operations, rendered his house almost uninhabitable on account of the noise and smell from the shoeing. His wife's health was, as a consequence, suffering. Other supporting affidavits were also read.

The answering affidavit of the respondent denied that he was actuated by malice. He said that the premises he now occupied were not nearer dwelling-houses than those that he had previously occupied. He had done all he could to render the carrying on of his business harmless to his neighbours. Since the completion of his premises no nuisance had been caused; if any nuisance had been caused it was only while the building was incomplete, and was only temporary. He admitted that on one occasion he had worked beyond hours, but said that this was necessitated by imperative reasons. He denied that the notice in the "Territorial News" was malicious, or was intended to injure the applicant, and said he was obliged to insert the notice owing to an advertisement by the applicant that he (respondent) had left the place. F. T. Quinn, land agent, deposed that Blacker approached him to purchase the erven in question, and when told that Carter had obtained a lease asked whether the lease could not be cancelled, so as "to dust Carter down." Afterwards he said he would spend £300 to ruin Carter, and drive him out of the town. Dr. Robert Welsh, district surgeon, stated that he had visited Carter's place while the work was in operation, and had failed to notice any nuisance caused to the applicant. He did not consider that the smoke or the hammering could be hurtful, even to a person of delicate health. Other affidavits were read to the effect that there was no nuisance.

After hearing Mr. Searle in argument,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that as to the law applicable to the case there was no doubt—the question had been fully thrashed out in Holland v. Scott, quoted by Mr. Searle, and were the facts established there would be no difficulty in giving an order in this case. But there was not one material allegation with the exception of the locality of the smithy's shop, which was not in dispute, and the fact of the locality of the shop was not a sufficient ground upon which to grant an order. The applicant had alleged certain facts, but those facts must be established. Had the allegations on affidavit been made by witnesses, so that the Court could see which set of witnesses were speaking the truth, there would be no difficulty in granting an order. Under the circumstances no order could be made, and the parties must go into the principal action. Costs of the application would abide the result.

Hopley, J., concurred.

Consideration — Conditional settlement.

P. had signed a promissory note for £700 as surety and co-principal debtor in favour of O. and K. Various payments reduced this debt owing to plaintiffs to £385. Subsequently O. paid off £150. One D., who owed £75 to O. and K., paid it by special agreement to W. on their behalf. A further note was given for the balance of £85. Plaintiffs now sued defendant for an outstanding balance alleged to be still due on one of the notes given to meet a portion of the original note.

P. pleaded want of consideration.

Held, that inasmuch as the plaintiffs had advanced the money to the principal debtors on the faith of P.'s suretyship, he had received full consideration.

Held further, that his obligation in respect of the original note had been fully discharged by the note for £85, inasmuch as by that note a provisional settlement was effected, notwithstanding that the respective rights of K. and W. as between themselves were left undetermined.

This was an action brought by Greeff and Walter, formerly agents and auctioneers, carrying on business at Laingsburg, against Johannes Petrus Francois du Plessis, farmer, Sutherland district, and formerly of Laingsburg, for judgment for £125, balance owing on a promissory note for £300, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. and costs of suit.

From the pleadings, it appeared that the defendant had signed certain promissory notes as surety and co-principal debtor. There were three notes signed by the defendant on different dates. The first was for £700; this was subsequently renewed for an amount of £385 10s., and then a note for £300 was given on the 31st December, 1903.

Plaintiffs, in their declaration, said that the note for £300 was not repaid at due date, and that they were the legal holders thereof for value. There had been paid by or on behalf of the defendant sums amounting to £174, but the balance of £126 was still due and owing by defendant to the plaintiffs. Notwithstanding demands made upon him, the defendant failed and neglected to pay the sum of £126, wherefore plaintiffs prayed for judgment with costs.

Defendant, in his plea, said that he signed a note for £700 for Odendal and Krige, but he intended to sign only as surety, and he was ignorant of the meaning and effect of the writing on the document, and had since ascertained that he had signed as surety and co-principal debtor. Thereafter, by renewals, the note was reduced to £300, and he said that he signed that note on the distinct agreement with the plaintiff Walter that he should receive the money from the debtors, Odendal and Krige. He received no consideration for signing the note. Thereafter the debt was reduced to £85 10s. by the debtors. Defendant signed a note for the balance of £85 10s., which had become null and void on the 7th January, 1904. He admitted having refused to pay the amount of the note, and prayed that the claim should be dismissed, with costs.

Plaintiffs, in their replication, denied that there had been any reduction of the indebtedness of £300 beyond the amount stated in their declaration, and said that the note of £85 10s. was signed by the defendant as the difference between the note of £300 and the amount of the debt at that time, viz., £385 10s.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) was for the defendant; Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Bayly) was for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Close applied for leave to amend the plea, by altering the figure of £385 10s. to £345 10s.

Mr. Gardiner consented, and the amendment of the plea was allowed by the Court.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that it lay upon the defendant to open the case.

Mr. Close said that the defence was that no consideration was given to defendant for signing the notes, and that there was now no amount due thereon.

Maasdorp, J., said that the defendant should open his case.

Johannes Petrus Francois du Plessis (the defendant) said that in July, 1903, he signed a promissory note for £700. Krige and Odendal came to him and asked him to sign the note as surety, saying that they came from Greeff and Walter, that they (Krige and Odendal) wanted to buy sheep through Greeff and Walter, and that they wanted him to be surety and co-debtor. Witness had to sign as surety to get the money. He was told that the three together would be sureties, and that he need not be afraid. Witness afterwards called at the plaintiffs' office, and saw Mr. Walter and Mr. Krige. He signed the note at the point indicated by Mr. Walter. Witness did not stay long in the office, but just signed and returned to his butcher's shop. The document was not read out to him. Witness could not read English. It was not explained to him that he was signing as surety and co-principal debtor. In August he paid Greeff and Walter £122 10s. He bought from Odendal and Krige some sheep at some distance from Laingsburg, and the former asked him to pay Mr. Walter on his account. Levonson gave him a cheque for £200 for sheep he had bought from Odendal and Krige. On the 28th November witness signed a further note for £385 10s., which fell due on the 31st December. No explanation of the note was given to him. On the 31st December Odendal and Krige had left Laingsburg. When the note became due, the local bank manager saw witness, and said that the Odendal and Krige's bill was due. Witness said that Odendal and Krige were not at home. He saw Mr. Walter, and told him that he could not do anything for the bill. Mr. Walter said that he must make a new bill until Odendal and Krige returned, when they could either pay it off or make some other arrangement. Witness signed a further note as debtor for £300. Krige returned on the afternoon of next day, and witness spoke to him about the note. He afterwards saw Odendal. They all went on the 7th January, 1904, to see Mr. Walter, to make the thing right, either to pay or to adopt some other plan. Prior to that time, he had been to see Mr. Walter in reference to a cheque to Krige for £250 from Mr. Van Reenen. Krige asked witness to endorse the cheque, as the manager of the bank wanted another signature. Witness and Mr. Walter went to the bank; Mr. Walter told Krige, who was at the bank, that he would wire to Van Reenen. Mr. Walter wanted Krige to pay off the £385 10s. On the 7th January Krige, Odendal, Walter, and witness met at Mr. Walter's office. Walter spoke about the balance due on the bill that witness had signed. He said that Dicker had paid £75. Odendal said that if Krige would pay £75, he (Odendal) would pay £175. Krige was to make his payment out of the proceeds of the Van Reenen cheque. Krige consented. Witness signed a further note for the balance of £85 10s. Odendal had arranged to obtain £150 from Groenewald. The Van Reenen cheque for £250 was taken over by Walter, who gave back to Krige a cheque for £175. As far as witness knew, there was nothing owing on the other bill. Witness signed the final bill as surety only; Krige also signed as surety. Witness told Mr. Walter that he did not know that he had been cheated into signing as co-principal debtor, and that he would only sign as surety on the final bill.

Mr. Close (answering the Court) said that Odendal's estate had been sequestrated. No demand had been made on defendant for the £85 10s.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that after the interview on the 7th January they all went to Groenewald's shop. The note for £385 10s. was taken across by Mr. Walter, who said that the payment of £150 would finish the old bill, because a new bill had been made for £85 10s. Groenewald was Odendal's brother-in-law, and was anxious to release him. Odendal received the money from Groenewald, and paid it over to Walter, and, the note being handed to him, he (Odendal) tore it up. Witness did not receive the note for £300; he left that part of the country in August, 1904, and went to district Sutherland, and the note for £300 escaped his notice. He saw Walter frequently up to August, but received no demand from him for the £100 note. He received letters in December, 1904, and January, 1905, from Mr. Van Niekerk. The first referred to an account for £61, but no specific mention was made of the promissory note until he received a letter on the 18th January, 1905. In February he received a summons from the plaintiffs for £300, no allowance being made bringing down the claim to £126. Witness came down to Cape Town, and went with his attorney to the attorney on the other side, who said that a mistake had been made, and they had made an allowance of £124. Witness also disputed items on the general account. This claim on the general account had been settled for £97.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: When he signed the note for £300 on the 31st December, 1903, he did not remember signing a note for £85 10s.

Hendrik J. Odendal said that in July, 1903, Krige and he were in partnership in regard to certain sheep speculations. They were in want of money, and saw Mr. Walter. The latter said the bank wanted another good name as surety, and told witness to go and see Mr. Plessis, and to ask him to act as surety. He did so, and Plessis said he would see about it. Mr. Walter drew up the note produced for £700 in his office shortly afterwards, and Krige subsequently came to the office with Plessis. The latter asked how he must sign the note, and Walter directed him, saying he was to sign as surety. Afterwards that note was reduced by Levoson's £200 and by Plessis paying £122 10s. Plessis bought sheep from witness, but had no share in their speculations. Witness paid a further £50. On the 28th November the balance stood at £327, and on that date a new note was made out for £385, which comprised the £327 10s. and interest charges and commission to the amount of £57 10s. This note was made payable on the 31st December. In January, 1904, Plessis spoke to witness about the note, being anxious that it should be settled up. Witness went on the 7th January with Plessis and Krige to see Walter. Krige said his cheque had been stopped, and that Walter wanted him to pay £150 off the note. He (Krige) said he could not do it, as the money was not his. Walter said the cheque was in Krige's favour, and that he could pay. In the result, witness offered to pay his half if Krige paid his, and Krige thereupon agreed to pay £75. Walter agreed to take this off the cheque, and witness said he would pay £150. The promissory note for £85 10s. was drawn up on that occasion. This sum was arrived at after deducting from the previous note £75 paid by Krige, £150 to be paid by witness and £75 paid by a man named Dicker, in payment of the purchase price of certain sheep. This left £85 10s., for which a note was then drawn up. Witness said he would take the balance (the £85) on his own shoulders, and he signed the note for that amount, Krige and Plessis signing as sureties. Witness went to Groenewald's office with Walter and Plessis. Groenewald asked "if Odendal pays this £150, is he finished with this Bill (the bill for £385)?" and Walter replied, "Yes." Groenewald thereupon paid the money, and Walter gave the note to witness. He (witness) tore it up. On the 18th January witness got a demand for the £85. By that time he had become insolvent.

William George Dicker, formerly a general dealer at Laingsburg, said that in 1903 he bought 100 sheep from Odendal at £1 4s. 6d. each, and he made payments amounting to £75 to Walter on the sheep account of Odendal and Krige. Walter said that it was on account of the bill of £700. Witness tried before his insolvency to get a statement of his account from Walter, but he had not succeeded.

Johannes Stephanus Krige, partner in the sheep transaction; Jacobus Groenewald, of Laingsburg; and Hendrick Groenewald (brother of the previous witness), also gave evidence for the defence.

Mr. Close closed his case.

John Orlando Walter, formerly a member of the firm of Greeff and Walter, now dissolved, was then called by Mr. Gardiner. He said that Du Plessis was fully aware when he signed the bill for £700 that he was signing as surety and co-principal debtor. Witness translated the note to Du Plessis into Dutch. He received cheques from Odendal and others and then there was a balance owing of £385 10s. Defendant brought Krige and Odendal to his office on the 28th November, and he (defendant) signed a bill for £385 10s. That bill fell due on the 31st December. Witness received from Dicker a payment of £40 on the 14th December on account of sheep, but this had nothing at all to do with the bill in question. He was authorised to place the cheque to the credit of Odendal. The £40 payment should not go off against the bill. Mr. Pope, manager of the bank, took up the position that he would not renew the note unless a substantial portion were paid up. Witness paid a cheque of £385 10s. into the bank, and the bank gave him a credit for £300, £85 10s. thus being paid off the bill. Du Plessis had in the meantime given a bill for £300. As to Dicker's payment of £24, that amount was credited as part of the £174 allowed by plaintiffs as a credit against the bill of £300. On the 7th January Groenewald paid £150 on behalf of Odendal. This was credited in the declaration. As to the Van Reenen cheque for £250, the cheque was deposited in the plaintiffs' account, with a stipulation that it should not be operated on pending inquiries to be made from Van Reenen as to whether this was his money. Krige, to whom the cheque was made payable, agreed to this. Van Reenen wrote saying that the money was his. Witness drew a cheque in favour of Krige for £175, it being understood that the balance of £75 should be held until Van Reenen came up. Krige declined to let them have £75 towards the discharge of the bill. Van Reenen subsequently came and demanded his money, and eventually it was arranged that he should lend witness the amount of £75. Witness gave Van Reenen a promissory note for £75, and he then went and told Du Plessis that he had had to give Van Reenen a promissory note. Witness had since paid the sum of £75 to Van Reenen.

Mr. Close cross-examined the witness at some length.

Re-examined: He said that on the note for £385 10s. there did not appear a sum of £75, as having been paid. There was only the £300 duly written off.

Herbert J. R. Pope, manager of the Standard Bank, Laingsburg, put in a statement as to the bills of Greeff and Walter, discounted by the Bank. He stated that he explained to Du Plessis, when he signed the £700 note, what his liability would be. The sum of £75 remaining in the bank from the Van Reenen cheque to Krige for £250 was treated as being in trust until Mr. Van Reenen came up and gave directions. Witness gave Mr. Van Reenen a guarantee that the money would be safe, and, although standing in the account of Greeff and Walter, would not be operated upon.

John Adrian van Reenen, of Laingsburg, said that at the beginning of 1904 he lived at Beaufort. Witness endorsed a cheque drawn by Moore in favour of Krige. The cheque was sent to Krige in order to buy stock, but Krige had no authority to use the money to pay off any promissory note. Witness advanced to Greeff and Walter the sum of £75, which had been left in the bank to their credit, as portion of the cheque. The money had been repaid to him. In regard to the sum of £175, which Krige drew, witness had since received stock from Krige to the value of £175.

Rufus G. R. MacLeod, Cape Town, plaintiffs' attorney, was also called.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case, and having been heard in argument, without calling on Mr. Close,

Maasdorp, J., said there seemed to be a good deal of conflict of evidence in this case, but I have come to the conclusion that there is not so much a conflict of evidence upon the facts as a difference of opinion on the legal rights of the parties. The agreement to become surety and co-principal debtor endorsed upon this note of £700, was signed by the defendant, and he consequently is liable both as surety and co-principal debtor. His contention that he was liable as surety and nothing more is based upon a mistaken view of his responsibility. Then there is a further defence set up, that he received no consideration. That, again, is a bona fide view taken by the defendant in the case, but it is not a correct legal view. There is abundant consideration given, and the fact that, upon his becoming surety, the money was advanced by the plaintiffs to the principal debtors was sufficient consideration to the defendant in this case. These two defences are, therefore, disposed of. The defendant further pleads that, whatever his indebtedness to the plaintiff, it has been fully settled. Here, again, I think, on the part of the defendant, he has taken a mistaken view of certain of the transactions which took place between the parties. The defence set up is that on the 7th January the parties to the transaction met and a full settlement of the indebtedness took place. Now, it would appear that upon the 31st December a sum of £385 was due by Du Plessis, Krige, and Odendal as co-principal debtors, each in solidum upon the documents that passed between them. That indebtedness continued to exist on the 7th January. For the moment I will leave out of consideration the question upon what particular document that is due. On the 7th January the parties met to settle the indebtedness, and it is admitted that Odendal paid in cash £150 off that amount, and the defendant says that at that time they had already, through Dicker, paid £75 to the plaintiff, and that that was treated as a further set-off. As to that amount, a conflict of opinion again arose. There is no doubt that the money that was paid by Dicker to the plaintiffs was the money of Krige and Odendal; it was not Odendal's money alone. It was agreed that the £75, instead of being paid over to Krige and Odendal, should be paid to Walter. It, therefore, constituted a payment of the moneys of Krige and Odendal into the hands of Walter. I am quite satisfied, whether Walter knew it or not, that Dicker's instructions were that it was to go to pay Krige and Odendal's debts. That will dispose of that item, without charging either of the parties with having been guilty of fraud. The money was obtained by Walter, and it should have gone to the account of Krige and Odendal; the only joint account they had was upon this promissory note. A sum of £75 still remains due. Upon that particular point of the case there may be some difficulty in ascertaining what exactly the position of Krige and Walter may be, but there is no difficulty in ascertaining what the result of their agreement was upon the promissory note. It appears that Krige held a cheque for a certain amount for a special purpose. Walter, who at one time, seemed to be under the impression that it was really Krige's own money, thought he should have it, but Krige was unwilling that it should go into Walter's hands. However, at that meeting, whatever the doubts in the parties' minds may be, Walter did insist that he ought to have a portion of that money, and he seemed to press Krige to get him to come over to his view, that he might let him have it, I won't say to defraud somebody, but really to find the position of the parties. Ultimately, this arrangement was come to: "This money is standing in my account now in the bank; let me have it, and if a question afterwards arises with Van Reenen the question will be set right." The conclusion I have come to is that it was to that extent a conditional settlement of the note for that amount, only leaving open the question between Krige and Walter and closing the liability of all the parties so far as the note is concerned. There was, therefore, a settlement made of £300, leaving £85 due, and a promissory note was given for that amount. There was consequently a full settlement of £385. It does not matter whether it is upon the £300 note or the £385 note, to make the legal position quite clear that the £300 note was simply given to tide over the period of absence, and that the bank properly insisted upon getting further securities because the note was overdue. The bank got the £300, and as far as Walter was concerned it was merely to tide over the period till Odendal and Krige returned, when the £385 would be fully settled irrespective of this additional security, and that is how the £300 note came into existence. Whatever view we take of this case, if it be once held that £150 and two amounts of £75 were appropriated to the payment of this debt to Walter on the 7th January, the question is disposed of. My finding, therefore, upon the plea of settlement is that a settlement was effected of this amount in the way contended for by the defendant in this case, and judgment will be entered for the defendant with costs.

On the application of Mr. Close,

His Lordship allowed the defendant's expenses as a necessary witness.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

COOMER V. COOMER. { 1905.
June 28th.

This was an action brought by Charles James Coomer, of Cape Town, against his wife, Gertrude Coomer, of Woodstock, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a divorce and forfeiture of the benefits under the ante-nuptial contract, on the ground of defendant's malicious desertion. Mr. Sutton was for the plaintiff; defendant had been barred from pleading.

William Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, Colonial Office, gave formal evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Charles James Coomer (the plaintiff) said he was married to the defendant on the 8th February, 1905, at St. Mary's Church, Woodstock. The marriage was by ante-nuptial contract, under which he agreed to settle a life policy upon defendant for £300. He had not ceded the policy. They lived happily together for a month. Then a row took place over some stout which his wife's mother had sent down to the house. Another row took place a fortnight afterwards. His wife then left, and had not since returned to him. She was now living with her parents, and had declared to witness that she would not return to him although he had asked her to do so. He had received a letter from his wife's attorneys, Messrs. W. E. Moore and Son, in which she alleged that he had treated her cruelly, and that she did not intend to return to him. Witness denied the charge of cruelty. Witness had returned to his wife her wedding presents.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before the 15th July, failing which to show cause on the 1st August in terms of the declaration.

Postea (August 1).

Rule made absolute.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. SILVER.

Lunatic—Husband's liability for maintenance of wife in an asylum—Act 1 of 1897, sec. 69.

S. had engaged to pay at the rate of 4s. 6d. a day for the maintenance of his wife in a lunatic asylum, but subsequently finding himself unable to pay that sum he wished to vary his contract by paying less.

Held, that as his contract was not for any definite time, he could not be sued thereon.

Held further, that by Sec. 69 of Act 1 of 1897, he was liable for the actual cost of his wife's maintenance.

This was an action brought by the Colonial Government for the recovery of the sum of £92 7s. 6d., being the maintenance chargeable by the Valkenberg Asylum for the keep of Lizzie Silver, the wife of the defendant.

The declaration set out that on May 31, 1901, the defendant undertook, in consideration of the admission of his wife to the asylum, to pay the sum of 4s. 6d. per diem. Defendant had made certain payments, and a balance was left of £92 7s. 6d., for which the Government now asked judgment. This sum covered the payments due from January 14, 1902, to February 28, 1903.

The defendant, in his plea, stated that he paid the sum of 4s. 6d. per diem until January 13, 1902, on which date he notified the Government that the contract was terminated, and offered to leave his wife in the asylum, if the Government would agree to accept her at the rate of 1s. per diem, which was all he could afford to pay. The Government declined to accept the offer, and kept his wife in the asylum thereafter without his consent, and at their own risk and expense.

Mr. Nightingale appeared for the Government; defendant appeared in person.

A clerk at the Valkenberg Asylum deposed as to an agreement (produced), dated May 30, the terms of which were that defendant undertook to pay 4s. 6d. per diem for the maintenance of his wife. The woman was admitted on May 21, 1901, and was there still, an order of Court having been made certifying her to be a lunatic. Payments were duly made in terms of the agreement up to November, 1901, and a sum of £10 was subsequently paid in January, 1902. The contract had never been varied, though defendant had requested that the sum should be reduced to 1s. per day. He was, however, informed that the rate must remain as originally fixed. Witness produced letters to this effect.

Mr. Nightingale submitted that it was for the defendant to prove that the agreement had been varied.

In cross-examination by the defendant, the witness said he had written a demand to the defendant, addressed to his P.O. box, on three occasions last year.

By Mr. Nightingale: The letters addressed to the P.O. box were not returned.

By the Court: Defendant wrote asking that the payment should be reduced to 1s. per diem. Witness was not aware that defendant asked that his wife should be discharged if that order was not accepted.

[Maasdorp, J.: Was her condition such that she could go out at the time defendant offered to pay the 1s.? Was she sane at that time?]

Witness: No; she was not sane.

Maasdorp, J., said the question was whether the defendant had put an end to his contract or not. If not the Government were entitled to recover the charges incurred in her maintenance.

The witness (recalled) said that the sum of 4s. 6d. per day would only just cover the cost of maintenance.

Cross-examined by defendant: There were patients in the asylum who were paying 1s. per day. Defendant agreed to find the woman's clothing as well as to pay 4s. 6d. a day.

Maasdorp, J., said the Government could not sue upon the contract. The declaration would have to be amended so as to make the claim one for expenses incurred.

On the application of Mr. Nightingale, leave was given to amend the declaration accordingly.

Maasdorp, J., told defendant that he was liable for his wife's maintenance.

Defendant stated, on oath, that at the time he agreed to pay 4s. 6d. he was in prosperous circumstances, having two restaurants. He had no means at present. He offered, of his own free will, to pay the 4s. 6d. per day at the time his wife was taken to the asylum, and he had kept up the payments for as long as he was able. He had to maintain a child who was being educated in England. He was not in a position to pay more than 1s. per day.

Cross-examined by Mr. Nightingale: He had owned large properties in Cape Town, but at present had no means. He had been convicted in respect of the keeping of a brothel, from which he had received rents. He was not at present interested in any property in Cape Town. He was a partner in the Caledon-street baths, from which he received about £10 a month. He did not own property in Bloemfontein or Johannesburg.

Maasdorp, J., said that the plaintiff sued upon a contract entered into on the 31st May, 1901, whereby the defendant undertook to contribute towards the maintenance of his wife the sum of 4s. 6d. per day. In his opinion, it was quite within the power of the defendant to put an end to this contract, when he was no longer desirous of abiding by it, because the period during which the agreement should continue was not fixed.

But notwithstanding that the obligation under the contract ceased upon the defendant giving notice to terminate it, it appeared that under section 69 of Act 1 of 1897, it was provided that: "When any person shall be detained under the provisions of this Act in any Asylum, the maintenance of such person shall be defrayed out of the Colonial revenues, provided, always, that the sum so paid may be recovered from any person liable by law to contribute to the maintenance of such detained person." Now, in law there was an obligation upon the defendant to contribute towards the maintenance of his wife. The expenses of her maintenance at the asylum had been defrayed out of the Colonial revenues, and the clerk had stated in his evidence that the sum so defrayed by the Government amounted to not less than 4s. 6d. per day. The Government was, therefore, entitled now to recover this money from the husband of the lunatic. The husband said that he was not in a position to pay that amount, but that question did not arise for decision now. The money having been expended, and the defendant being liable, the Government had the right to sue him for the sums disbursed by them. The question of the defendant's ability to satisfy the judgment might arise at a later stage, if proceedings were further pressed against him, but at present he could only say that the Government was entitled to recover from the defendant the sum claimed in the declaration, which was at the rate of 4s. 6d. per day from the 14th January, 1902, to the 28th February, 1903. It seemed that subsequently to the last mentioned date, the Government seeing a difficulty in recovering this amount from the defendant, ceased for the time being to make the charges against him, and the question to be decided now had no reference to the expenses incurred after February, 1903. In his opinion, the Government was entitled to recover the amounts during the period stated in the declaration. Judgment must, therefore, be given for the plaintiff, with costs, upon the understanding that an amendment was made in the declaration to meet the 69th section of the Act.

Addressing the defendant, His Lordship remarked: You must make some effort to pay this.

HERRON V. TORQUE ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING COMPANY AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order directing the manager of the Standard Bank at Cape Town to produce copies of books, accounts, vouchers, etc., relative to accounts kept by the Torque Company, Herron and Neale, Herron, Limited. Counsel mentioned that the matter, in a somewhat different form, had been before his lordship in Chambers, when no order was made.

Maasdorp, J., said that the difficulty he had when the matter originally came before him was that inasmuch as it was sought to go into the accounts of certain people at the bank, those people should have notice given them of the application, so that they should have an opportunity of stating to the Court any reasons they might have for opposing this examination of their accounts.

Mr. Gardiner said that the application in Chambers was made on behalf of the plaintiff in the action. He (Mr. Gardiner) now applied on behalf of one of the defendants, the trustee in the insolvent estate of the Torque Electrical Engineering Company.

Maasdorp, J., directed that notice of the application be served on Herron's attorneys, the application to be renewed to-morrow (Thursday).

Postea (June 29).

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), moved upon notice to Herron, for an order calling on the Standard Bank to produce books, accounts, vouchers, slips, and other documents in the possession of the bank relating to the accounts of the plaintiff, Neil Herron, Ltd., and the Torque Company.

Mr. Alexander (for the plaintiff in the action) said that he appeared to submit to such an order as the Court might be pleased to make.

His Lordship asked counsel for the applicant whether copies of the documents would be sufficient for the purposes of the trial.

Sir H. Juta acquiesced.

Order granted, calling upon the bank to produce copies of the accounts of Neil Herron, Limited, Herron (the plaintiff), and the Torque Company, with all necessary vouchers, the accounts to extend from the 1st September to the 10th January, 1905.

PALMER V. CAPE COLD STORAGE AND SUPPLY COMPANY.

This was an action brought by Charles Palmer, cartage contractor, of Observatory-road, against the Cape Cold Storage and Supply Company, for value of a horse, damages, and costs. Mr. Alexander was for the plaintiff; Mr. McGregor was for the defendant company. The matter narrowed itself down to a question of costs.

Mr. Alexander said that the plaintiff had already obtained judgment by default, but since then the defendant company had obtained leave to re-open the case.

Mr. McGregor submitted that the matter should now be gone into de novo, and that the plaintiff should prove his case.

Maasdorp, J., said that the Court at present had nothing before it, and the plaintiff must open his case.

Mr. Alexander said that the plaintiff brought an action for a sum of £50—£40, value of a horse illegally detained by the defendants, and £10 as damages, together with costs. Subsequent to the filing of the declaration the horse in question was delivered up by the company to the plaintiff on the 3rd February, and the only question that really arose now was a question of costs. The company did not tender, with the delivery of the horse, the costs. The company took up the position that the plaintiff did not give them a clear proof of ownership. Plaintiff had now got the horse, and he did not press the claim for damages, because certain amounts that had already been paid on this agreement (£9 10s.) by Robert Jenkins to whom plaintiff sold the horse on a hire purchase agreement, were sufficient to satisfy his claim. The horse, a dark bay mare, was sold to Jenkins under a hire purchase agreement, a condition of which was that the sale was not to take effect, and property in the said horse was not to pass until the last instalment had been paid. Jenkins paid a deposit of £5, and three other instalments of £1 10s. each, making £9 10s. in all. Jenkins fell into arrear with his payments, and witness allowed an extension of time subject to the horse being produced for his inspection each week. Subsequently it was discovered that the horse had been sold to the company by Jenkins for £23.

Charles Palmer (the plaintiff) gave evidence as to selling the mare to Robert Jenkins under a hire purchase agreement. On the 10th January he saw Mr. Crothers, a traveller in the company's employ, in the street driving the horse. Witness told him that the horse was his, and that he had let Jenkins have it under a hire purchase agreement. Crothers seemed to treat the matter as a joke. Witness afterwards produced the agreement in the presence of Mr. Mason, sub-manager of the defendant company, who said that it was not worth the paper it was written on, as it was not stamped. Witness replied that he did not know anything as to that, as he was not a lawyer. Witness produced the agreement again on the following day, but Mr. Mason said that the company could not recognise it. Witness subsequently went to Wynberg, a question having arisen about the defendants prosecuting Jenkins. Witness afterwards went to Jenkins's house on the Walmer Estate, and made inquiries. He then went to the Cold Storage Company and warned them that Jenkins was either going to Buenos Ayres on the Friday or Australia on Saturday. Witness had now been offered £35 for the horse.

Edward Isaac Sydney, plaintiff's attorney, and Wm. M. Needham, until recently clerk in the employ of W. B. Shaw, agent, also gave evidence in support of the plaintiff's case.

Harry Mason, assistant manager of defendant company, said that Jenkins brought the horse to him, and produced a note from Mr. Reece, the branch manager at Wynberg, for £23. He made inquiries from Jenkins as to how long he had had the horse, and why he was selling it. Witness had to get a cheque from the secretary and one of the directors. Jenkins called again, and witness paid over to him the £23 by cheque. Witness spoke as to an interview that he had with Palmer, who subsequently produced the agreement. The agreement at that time bore the signatures of Palmer and Jenkins, but no signatures of witnesses.

Plaintiff (in answer to the Court) said that the agreement bore the witnesses' signatures when he produced it for Mr. Mason's inspection.

Witness (Mr. Mason) went on to say that he asked Palmer when he called on the Friday to see the general manager (Mr. Elliott) or the secretary of the company. He did not see the plaintiff again until yesterday (Tuesday). They communicated with the C.I.D., who told them to retain the horse.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He considered that £23 was a fair price for the horse for the purpose for which they wanted it. At the time of the purchase he would not have given £20 for the animal. The value to-day would be about £25 to £27. He thought that Palmer "had" Jenkins when he sold the horse to him for £40.

James Reece, manager of the company's branch at Wynberg, said that Jenkins, in the first instance, offered to sell the horse to him at Wynberg. A day or two afterwards he bought the animal for £23. Jenkins did not appear to be very anxious to sell.

Cross-examined: Witness made inquiries from one Welsted before he bought the mare, but the latter did not tell him anything as to an agreement between Palmer and Jenkins. He did not ask Jenkins where he had got the horse from. Jenkins told him that the horse was his property.

James W. Crothers, a traveller in the company's employ, and James David Low, of the firm of Thomas Masterton and Co., secretary of the company, also gave evidence.

Mr. McGregor read an affidavit by Harry Sanders, attorney, Graham's Town, formerly a clerk in the employ of Syfret, Godlonton and Low, the company's attorneys in Cape Town.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. McGregor submitted that the plaintiff had not taken reasonable measures to avoid litigation, but had practically forced defendants into court.

Maasdorp, J., said he was of opinion that, if it had been clearly shown that the costs in this case could have been avoided by the plaintiff by his putting the defendants in possession of the contents of the document in question, and if it had been shown that he had unreasonably withheld the required information, the defendants would have been entitled to costs. It was clear that plaintiff showed the agreement in the first instance to Mr. Mason, the assistant manager. As to the attorneys of the defendants, it was clear that if this document had been the only thing that they (the attorneys) wanted, it would have been obtained through an order of discovery immediately after summons was served, but it was not asked for. He was satisfied, because the parties were perfectly well aware that it would not settle the case, and also because they knew pretty well what the contents were. Under all the circumstances, he had come to the conclusion that the grounds upon which the defendants claimed that costs should not be awarded in favour of the plaintiff had not been established. Judgment would be given for the plaintiff for all costs, except the costs of the day when the case was originally heard.

Defendant's: Syfret, Godlonton and Low.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ADMISSION. { 1905.
{ June 29th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the admission of Jan Frederick du Plessis as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

STUSSER AND CO. V. UDWIN BROS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent. The defendants, it appeared, had carried on business at Komgha. There had been considerable negotiations between petitioners and defendants in regard to taking over the estate of the insolvents, and proceedings had also been taken in the R.M.'s Court at Oudtshoorn. It was stated in the creditors' petition that there was a deficiency of £254 12s. 3d., and that it would be in the interests of the creditors if the partnership and private estates of Udwin Bros. were sequestrated.

Mr. Alexander opposed the application, and read an affidavit by Solomon Udwin.

Mr. Jones read a replying affidavit.

Mr. Alexander said that the applicants did not seek to make the defendants insolvent under the Insolvent Ordinance, but under the Act 38 of 1884. The Court had held that any applications under the Act of 1884 must be supported by the clearest proof, firstly, that the defendants were insolvent, and, secondly, that it would be for the benefit of the creditors that the estate should be finally adjudicated. It was not sufficient that there had been negotiations for a deed of assignment.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the applicants move to have a provisional order of sequestration made absolute on the ground that the applicants have entered into a deed of assignment with the alleged insolvents. It appears that the respondent himself, through his breach of contract, has caused the attachment of the very property he has assigned, consequently he is not in a position to hand over the property that he agreed to hand over. If the stock is taken at the valuation of £500, the estate is insolvent, and there is abundant evidence that the stock is not worth more than £500. Consequently there is proof that the estate is insolvent, and the rule will be made absolute.

BUCHANAN V. MILLER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan, moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, and for £4 12s. insurance premium, with interest at 6 per cent. from 1st July, 1904; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ARDERNE V. DE HETON.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

COPPENHAGEN V. ARENDSSE.

Mr. Alexander moved for provisional sentence on four mortgage bonds for £100, £25, £50, and £125 respectively, with interest and costs, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted, subject to an amendment of the summons.

HIDDINGH V. STEVENSON.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on certain mortgage bonds, amounting to £15,000, less £120 paid on account, for judgment for insurance premiums £114 3s., and for the property to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ALLAN AND SHAW V. BENNETT.

Mr. Close, for the plaintiff, moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant, on an unsatisfied judgment for £254 4s. 7d.

The defendant appeared, and offered monthly instalments of £5.

Decree granted, with costs, to be suspended upon payment by the defendant of £5 a month, first payment to be made on the 15th July.

ISRAELSOHN BROS. V. MEYER, ISIDORE AND BARNEY ISRAELSOHN.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's private estate.

Order granted.

FEDERAL SUPPLY CO. V. WITTON AND SIPPEL.

Dr. Greer moved for the final order of adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

CANGO TOBACCO CO. V. THOMPSON.

Mr. Sutton, for the plaintiff, moved to have the provisional order of sequestration against the defendant's estate discharged.

Order granted.

GOLPAS V. WEDMARCH.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £16 10s., with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

WARD AND FELIX V. LEVIN. } 1905.
June 29th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £22 14s. 5d., goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ROCHESTER BRICK CO. V. METJE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £160, goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ESTATE FRIEDLANDER V. ROSE.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £30, balance due on an account, with costs.

Order granted.

BENDHEIM V. GOLDBERG.

Mr. Payne moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £235 19s. 3d., for goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

SCOTT V. KOLONGE.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £58 15s., goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

BROWN V. TOWOEND.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £63 10s., balance of rent.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Ex parte SYRKIN.

Mr. Alexander moved for the rehabilitation of Max Syrkine. The application was made originally in June of last year, and the Court then granted leave to have it renewed in twelve months.

Application granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BOISON V. BOISON. } 1905.
June 29th.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of divorce, the respondent (the wife) having failed to comply with an order to return to the plaintiff.

Decree granted.

Ex parte LIPSCHITZ AND TOOCH.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for an order for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent a minor in an action to be brought against her for leave to partition certain property held in undivided shares by the applicants and the minor. It was asked that Mr. Gavin be appointed curator.

Mr. McGregor, for respondent, said his client took the position that another man—a Mr. P. J. Keller—should be appointed, and that his action was premature and unnecessary.

Maasdorp, J., said the opposition had been forced upon by the father of the minor, and the respondent would, therefore, have to pay the costs of opposition. It was necessary to have a curator appointed, and the necessary costs would, in any case, have to be paid by the minor. Mr. P. J. Keller would be appointed curator ad litem, and the Court would order the respondent minor to pay the necessary costs of the unopposed motion, and respecting the costs incurred on the respondent's side, the costs between attorney and client would be disallowed in taxation against the minor.

DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE CO. UNION-CASTLE LINE.

This was an application calling upon the respondents to show cause why certain proceedings of the Taxing Officer of this Court in disallowing certain items in the bill of costs of plaintiffs' attorneys should not be set aside.

This matter arose out of an action instituted by the plaintiffs for damages in the sum of £75, by reason of the damaged condition in which a certain case containing motor-car framework, handed to the defendants in New York for transmission to Cape Town, was received by the Harbour Board and delivered to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs filed their declaration, and the defendants, in their plea, set up the defence that the case was received by them in a damaged condition in New York. Thereupon, plaintiffs proposed to have certain evidence in New York taken on commission, and, upon notice being served on the defendants, it was arranged that the commission should be joint. The plaintiffs' attorneys then cabled certain directions with a view to having the evidence taken before the British Consul in New York, but, subsequently, on the 30th May, plaintiffs' attorneys received an intimation from defendants' attorneys that the plaintiffs' claim would be settled, with costs. These facts were set out in an affidavit by Mr. A. C. Fuller, of the firm of Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl, and Fuller, plaintiffs' attorneys. The disallowances referred to the charges in connection with giving instructions to New York.

The Taxing Officer, in his report, stated that the items were disallowed on the ground that, being incurred previous to notice of trial having been given, they must be considered as premature. That had been the constant practice, which he did not feel justified in disturbing, though, no doubt, at times it entailed hardships.

Mr. Burton was for the applicants; there was no appearance for the respondents.

Maasdorp, J.: Under the special circumstances of this case, I think it was necessary that the proceedings should be taken in the form in which they were taken, and the costs were regularly and properly incurred, and consequently the items disallowed by the Master in this matter will be allowed, without the order of the Court being in any way considered to affect the general rule which seems to be laid down in the office of the Taxing Master. The items will be allowed.

Mr. Burton applied for costs.

Maasdorp, J.: Against whom?

Mr. Burton: Against the respondents. Notice was given of this part of the application.

Maasdorp, J., said that the items would be allowed, with costs against respondents.

Ex parte TRUSTEE UNITY LODGE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order on behalf of the surviving trustee of the Unity Lodge, authorising the Registrar to pass transfer of certain property. The Registrar of Deeds, to whom the matter had been referred, reported in favour of the application.

Order granted, in terms of the Registrar's report.

In re BUFFALO SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Burton moved for confirmation of the official liquidators' report in the matter of the Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company and for directions to the liquidators on certain points. In his report, Mr. H. M. Fleming (one of the liquidators) said that he was being pressed for payment of the balance of certain legal expenses incurred in connection with the arbitration proceedings between the Federal Company and the Buffalo Company. As the greater part of these expenses was incurred in realising the assets of the company, Mr. Fleming asked for directions as to paying the accounts. The total amount of the costs so incurred would not exceed £1,000. The principal item was a balance of £520 due on an account to Messrs. Stone and Giddy, attorneys, East London. Their full bill of costs amounted to £1,438 1s. 9d., but they had received from time to time certain payments to account, leaving a balance of £520. Part of the bill was made up of costs incurred before the voluntary liquidation amounting to £157 16s. 4d., against which a payment to Stone and Giddy of £7 3s. 9d. should be set off. There were also two other bills incurred previous to the voluntary liquidation, viz., Messrs. Shepstone, Wyllie and Binns, of Natal, who claimed £200 and £300, and Messrs. Norton and Co., of Sydney (Australia), who claimed about £7. Mr. Fleming also swore an affidavit, in which he said that for the purposes of the action instituted by the liquidators against Mr. Bergl, in London, which was presently proceeding, it was necessary that he should visit inter alia East London, Graham's Town, Durban, Bloemfontein, and Johannesburg, in order to obtain information. He asked for leave to draw from the funds a sum not exceeding £80. The liquidators also said that they had expended sums, Mr. Fleming, of £75, and, Mr. Powell, of £56 3s. 5d., for which they craved leave to reimburse themselves.

Mr. Burton: Your lordship will see from the report that practically everything depends upon the result of certain actions which the liquidators are instituting. If they succeed in those actions then there will be pretty well sufficient to pay everybody. If they don't—then, I am afraid they won't. At any rate, there won't be very much.

[Maasdorp, J.: The liquidation will take some time still?]

Mr. Burton: Yes.

Maasdorp, J., said that if the attorneys, whose accounts had been mentioned, had known of the present application, they might have appeared to oppose any proposal to treat their claims as concurrent. They might claim a preference on their accounts, though he knew that it was not likely.

Mr. Burton said that that question would still be open, and that all that was asked for now was a direction for the liquidators' guidance.

Maasdorp, J., said the Court would grant the usual order, and would direct the liquidators to regard the debt due to Stone and Giddy, amounting to £150 12s. 7d., merely as the debt of a concurrent creditor, and in respect of the balance of their account, which was incurred for services rendered to the liquidators, they were entitled to be paid now out of the available funds of the company; that the bills of costs of Norton and Co. and Shepstone, Wyllie and Binns were to be regarded merely as the debts of concurrent creditors and treated accordingly; that the liquidators were authorised to reimburse themselves in the sums of £75 and £56

3s. 5d. expended by them, and that they were also authorised to expend a sum of £80 in respect of expenses as set out in Mr. Fleming's affidavit.

Ex parte WOLFAARD AND OTHERS.

Mr. McGregor moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register certain transfers. The matter was one involving a question of the payment of transfer duty. One of the petitioners purchased from one Frederick J. Wolfaard his rights under the will of his parents. F. J. Wolfaard had become insolvent. The transfer had not been made from the parents' estate to F. J. Wolfaard, and the petitioners now sought to have transfer made direct from the estate to the second petitioner. The Registrar, however, held that two transfers must be effected, and duty paid thereon. Another point arose as to whether certain payments could be arranged for by bond, but the Registrar contended there should be direct payment. The Registrar, in his report, stated that the property actually vested in the insolvent at the date of the sale to petitioner, and the estate was liable for duty.

The petition set forth that the first-named petitioner was one of the testators, and had sold his life interest in the property to the second petitioner, John Abraham Becker. The will stipulated that upon the death of one of the testators and renunciation of the usufruct by the survivor, and upon the legatee paying in a sum of £700 to the estate, the property should become the legatee's. Petitioners asked that there should be leave to make payment of the £700 by a bond. Becker had bought the life interest of the survivor and the interest of the legatee.

In the course of counsel's argument,

Maasdorp, J., pointed out that there were no translations of certain documents written in Dutch, and said that the documents must be translated for the Court. When copies were put in he would deal with the matter. The matter could be mentioned again.

Ex parte LEEUW.

Succession ab intestato—Wife and husband.

By the law of this Colony, wife and husband can under no circumstances succeed either to other ab intestato. Failing blood relations of the deceased, the property rests in the Government 40 years after his or her decease.

Dr. Greer moved for an order authorising the executor dative in the estate of Jantje Leeuw to pay to the petitioner the remaining half-share of the joint estate, of herself and her deceased husband.

Mr. Nightingale appeared for the Government.

Dr. Greer said that the matter was before the Court on the 8th July, when the Acting Chief Justice ordered that it should stand over in order that notice should be given to the Government.

It was stated that the petitioner was aged, and required the money for her maintenance.

Mr. Nightingale said that the Crown took up the position that the petitioner, being the surviving spouse, could not take the property as heir. She was married in community, and was entitled only to half the estate, which she had taken already. If the woman could not succeed her deceased spouse as heir, the money must be paid to the Master, the man having died without next-of-kin.

Dr. Greer said the application was a novel one, and there was no direct authority on the point. There would, however, be certain grounds for considering that the wife might be entitled to take as her husband's heir. Counsel proceeded to quote from Burge, Van der Linden (book 1, chap. 10, section 2, sub-section 3), and other authorities, to show that in certain circumstances the wife could succeed as heir. Van der Linden said that a wife could not succeed as heir excepting, as under the law of North Holland where the next-of-kin of the intestate man could not be found.

Mr. Nightingale submitted that, although there was no direct case on the point, the common law was clear, that the wife could not take as heir. He contended that the law of South Holland and not of North Holland, was the law of inheritance ab intestato in this colony.

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that the husband of the applicant died some 25 years ago, and it was then found that the joint estate was worth £159 10s. It was duly liquidated, and half that amount was paid over to the applicant, the marriage having been in community of property. Since that date the remaining half of this estate seems to have been in the custody of an executor dative. The applicant now moves the Court for an order upon the executor dative to pay over the money to her upon the ground that this case may be taken as one in which there is a total failure of blood relations to succeed her husband. In the absence of such blood relations, she takes up the position that this inheritance should be regarded as a vacant inheritance, and that she should be entitled to succeed; but there is clear authority and abundant authority that in cases of this kind the wife is not entitled to succeed. Several authorities have been quoted on the law of South Holland, which, with certain modifications, is the law of succession in this country, where it is very plainly held that the wife in these cases is not entitled to succeed. Upon a total failure of blood relations, the Crown is entitled to claim a vacant inheritance. But, as it is difficult to ascertain whether there may not still be blood relations, a provision is made that this right of the Crown shall not be exercised for a period of 40 years. Even if the Crown were now disposed to waive any right it might have in favour of the widow, it would not have the power to do so, because there is as yet no right vested in the Crown. Under all the circumstances of the case, I am of opinion that the Court has no power to make any order in favour of the applicant in this case, and the application must be refused.

Ex parte ARMESTER.

Mr. Roux moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of John James Armester, for leave to sue Johannes Beling, of Kroonstad, Orange River Colony, and formerly of East London, by edictal citation, in respect of a certain debt, and for the attachment of certain property at East London, belonging to the respondent, ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Petitioner stated that he resided at St. Paul's-road, East London, and that Beling was indebted to him in a sum of £26 1s.

Order granted as prayed, citation to be served personally, and to be returnable on the 1st August.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte TRUSTEE SEA- (1905.
GUL'S ESTATE. (June 30th.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order to examine certain witnesses on commission, under the Insolvent Ordinance, before the Resident Magistrate of Port Elizabeth.

Granted.

Ex parte HEYNES MATHEWS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved as an urgent motion for an order restraining the removal of any goods from the office of Mr. Abraham Berlyn, dentist, who owed the petitioners £170 for rent to the end of June. The respondent had asked the petitioners to take over the fixtures in settlement of the debt, but there had been an attachment order of the Resident Magistrate's Court already granted.

Order as prayed.

STEVENS V. STEVENS.

Dr. Greer said this was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. At 4 o'clock yesterday the defendant wrote that he was prepared to receive his wife at Woodstock, and Counsel was now instructed that the wife had actually returned to the husband and he had received her. Counsel now asked leave to withdraw the case.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: It is not often judicial proceedings in matrimonial cases end so happily. The case can be withdrawn.

ESTATE SNYMAN, JUN. V. ESTATE SNYMAN, SEN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for judgment against the defendant in terms of a consent paper. The action was originally brought against the defendant in his capacity as executor testamentary, and also in his capacity as tutor of the minor children. The claim against him in his capacity as tutor of the minor children had been withdrawn.

Judgment in terms of the consent paper.

Mr. Searle pointed out that only yesterday the power of attorney was withdrawn and put in the hands of another attorney, and that was probably due to further proceedings by the heirs interested.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: They are not bound by this judgment.]

SAMSON V. CAMP'S BAY EXTENSION ESTATES, LTD.

This was an action for a declaration of rights as to a certain supply of water on building lots purchased by the plaintiff from the defendants, and for an order compelling the defendant company to transfer the building lots to him.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiff was an architect, practising in Cape Town, and defendants a joint stock company registered in the Cape Colony. On the 24th March, 1904, the defendant company sold to the plaintiff certain building lots at Llandudno for £76. It was further a condition of sale that the defendant company should give transfer of the building lots on payment of the whole of the purchase price in cash or, on payment of the first instalment, security being given for the balance. The auctioneers represented, promised and guaranteed that the defendant company would within six months of the sale cause water to be laid on to all the lots sold at a rate not exceeding £2 a year. The plaintiff was induced thereby to purchase the lots. Thereafter the defendant company confirmed in writing and ratified the said terms, and plaintiff thereupon paid the first instalment. The company did not cause water to be supplied through a 4-inch main pipe within six months of the date of sale, nor at all. On the 27th January plaintiff paid the second instalment under protest. The plaintiff on or about the said date called on the company to pass transfer, and duly tendered payment of the balance, and further called on the defendant company to carry out its obligation by laying on the water. The defendant company failed to pass transfer notwithstanding that the plaintiff was willing to pay the balance of the purchase price. The defendants contended that they were only bound to supply water in a 1-inch pipe. The lots had greatly deteriorated in value, and plaintiff had been prevented from using the same as building lots, and had sustained damages in £400, and claims an order declaring him a purchaser of the lots, entitled to a supply of water to each of the lots in a 4-inch pipe, and compelling the company to pass transfer to the plaintiff on his tendering the balance of the purchase price, otherwise £400 damages.

The plea admitted the formal allegations, but with regard to the conditions of the said sale it referred to the written conditions of sale signed by the plaintiff. It was denied that the auctioneers represented that 4-inch pipes would be laid within six months to all the lots. If the said auctioneers did so they had no authority and the defendants were not bound by any such representation or guarantee and denied that any such representation, promise or guarantee formed the conditions of sale. It was also denied that the plaintiff was induced to purchase by any such guarantee. The defendants' auctioneers were authorised to promise that a main pipe would be laid within six months from the date of the sale to a point on the road adjoining the said lots, and that water would be supplied at £2 per annum. If the auctioneers did purport to make any other promise, the defendant was not bound thereby. Defendants referred to clause 8 of the conditions of sale: "In case the auctioneers make any mistake in the sale such mistake shall be of no value, and not binding on the seller or purchaser." The defendants denied that they ratified any such promise. It was admitted on the 7th April, 1904, the auctioneers did, in writing, purport to make such a promise, but that was without the authority of the defendants, and thereafter the defendants repudiated such promise. The defendants caused a main pipe to be constructed to the road adjoining the lots, and the plaintiff on his connecting could have water at £2 per annum. The defendant denied any obligation to lay water on to the lots sold, and had tendered transfer to the plaintiff on condition the balance of the purchase price was paid, which was refused.

Mr. Upington for plaintiff. Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) for the defendants.

George Gordon Samson, plaintiff, an architect, of Cape Town, said he had had many transactions in land speculation, and had been successful in several deals. In March, 1904, he attended the sale in question. The water supply was undoubtedly an important matter in that district. When the conditions of sale were read out, witness and others made inquiries from Mr. Zoutendyk as to the water supply. On the 31st March witness wrote to the attorney of the company asking for a confirmation of the verbal promise made at the sale, and he was referred to the auctioneers, who put it in writing that the syndicate would lay water on in a 4-inch pipe within six months, at a charge not exceeding £2 per annum. Witness did not claim a 4-inch main to each lot. Witness would not have bid for the lots without the undertaking as to the water; otherwise, they would be useless for building purposes. The contracts were all signed in blank, the auctioneers being left to put in the conditions afterwards. Witness, on receipt of the undertaking for water supply, forwarded a cheque for one-fourth of the purchase price. Lengthy correspondence between the parties was then read, from which it appeared that plaintiff on August 24 wrote declining to pay the second instalment until the water was laid on in terms of the agreement. On October 31, the secretary of the company wrote saying that the directors of the company had decided to lay at an early date a service pipe to a point close to the ground sold the previous March. On December 19 the secretary of the company wrote again, and said that the service pipe had been laid, and the plaintiff could have it connected with his lots on payment of expenses.

Plaintiff (continuing) said the pipe referred to was a 1-inch pipe, 400 or 500 feet away, and that would be totally inadequate to supply water if the other lots were built upon. He paid the second instalment under protest. He had built a house upon the ground he had bought, but he was put to great inconvenience owing to the distance he had to go to fetch water. He was entitled to have the water laid on in a 4-inch main. As he had been prevented from using the property through lack of water, the house he had built was useless. Through the same reason, he considered he had sustained £400 damages. He wanted, chiefly, however, a declaration of rights.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Before bidding for the property he did not go to see the intake. He wanted a continuous domestic supply of 200 gallons per house per day. The 1-inch pipe would not give him sufficient water. If they had a 4-inch pipe it would more than double the supply of the present time.

James Loubser Petersen, a speculator in land, who attended the sale at Llandudno, stated he only arrived after the conditions of sale had been read. In the middle of the sale he interviewed Mr. Wakelin, who assured him that the water would be laid from the mountain in a 4-inch pipe. Witness bought the last lot put up for auction. Witness sold all the lots to Mr. Samson, who promised him £15 profit on the transaction.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Witness did not remember Mr. Wakelin saying that he would begin with a 4-inch pipe.

Thomas W. Cairncross, M.I.C.E., said that a 1-inch pipe would be quite insufficient to supply all these lots. A 4-inch pipe would be satisfactory. Witness had been obliged to abandon the use of 3-inch pipes in Cape Town, owing to the amount of corrosion which took place in the pipes.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: The inch pipe would not carry more than about 9,000 gallons. Witness did not know that the Plumstead and Diep River supply was carried through a 2-inch pipe. If that were so, they would very soon find out their mistake. A 2-inch pipe would carry about 82,000 gallons a day. Starting with a 4-inch, and continuing with a 3-inch pipe, would not improve the "head."

By the Court: A plot of ground was worthless without water.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Mr. Gardiner called

James Wakelin, a director of the defendant company, who deposed that he was present at the sale. At that time an intake had been constructed, but the pipes had not been laid. Witness heard a question asked by Samson about the water, and he (witness) said they had already commenced with a 4-inch main, and that the water leading to the ground would be completed within six months, at a charge of £2. No promise was made to bring the water to the ground in a 4-inch pipe. To the best of his recollection, the auctioneer repeated what witness had said. Witness did not remember having spoken to Mr. Petersen. On Wiener's Day witness met Samson, and they had a conversation. Samson said he was laying an inch galvanised pipe, and that he did not care what sort of a pipe he had, so long as he got water. Witness explained that there had been delay on account of the illness of the contractor. The inch pipe was satisfactory. Mr. Samson's house was a movable building.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The method of bringing the water down had not been determined at the time of the sale.

William Thomas Oliver, M.I.C.E., said he considered the pipe was sufficient to convey the water.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: A 4-inch pipe was not necessary. He would not say that in two years' time the present pipe would deliver 14,000 gallons a day.

William Davis Lynne, mechanical engineer, said he helped in the laying of the 1-inch pipe. He was at the sale, but he did not remember hearing the auctioneer say anything about the size of the pipe. The pipe laid would take all the water required.

W. Troutman said he was at the sale, and bought some ground. The auctioneer said that water would be brought on to the ground, but he said nothing about the size of the pipe.

Evidence was also given by one Singh, contractor.

Henry Wrench, attorney, said he was present on the date of the sale, and bought five lots. A question was put to the auctioneer about the water, and the auctioneer replied that water would be laid on to the property. There was nothing said about the size of the pipe.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case, and counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said it was clear that, beyond the undertakings in the conditions of sale, a further undertaking was given at the sale by the defendant company to supply water to the ground. The plaintiff asked for a declaration that the defendant company were bound to lay a 4-inch pipe to each of the plots he bought. Well, he was certainly not entitled to that; all he was entitled to was a declaration in terms of the undertaking given by the defendants through the auctioneer at the sale. This undertaking was set forth in a letter written by the auctioneer, which was to the effect that the syndicate undertook to lay a 4-inch main to the ground sold within six months from the date of sale, and that water would then be available, at a charge of not exceeding £2 per annum. All that the defendants undertook, therefore, was to lay a 4-inch main pipe to the ground, and not to each of the lots sold. On the claim for damages, he did not think any damages had been proved to have been sustained by reason of the water being taken to this ground by a 1-inch, instead of a 4-inch pipe. The water had been taken there, and he did not see how the plaintiff had suffered any damage. Judgment would be given for the plaintiff, ordering that, as purchaser of these plots, he was entitled to a declaration of rights, in terms of the undertaking given, with the authority of the defendants, by the auctioneer. As to the second prayer, it would be ordered that the defendants forthwith pass transfer, upon payment by the plaintiff of the purchase price. As to the costs, the tender being insufficient, the defendants would be ordered to pay the costs. [Plaintiff's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton. Defendant's: J. F. Wege.]

SECOND DIVISION

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

GREENBERG V. MILLIN. { 1905.
June 30th

This was an application upon notice of motion, calling on the respondent to show cause why a certain sum of £505 4s. 8d., attached by the Sheriff ad fundandam jurisdictionem, in respect of an award in favour of Greenberg should not be released.

It appeared that a dispute had arisen between the parties in regard to the sale of certain mules. An arbitration took place, and a sum of £37 10s. was awarded to one Honikman. Greenberg drew a cheque accordingly, but this was stopped on account of an alleged informality in the arbitration proceedings.

Mr. Sutton was for the applicant; Mr. McGregor was for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J., remarked that the proceeding seemed to him to be a silly one altogether. The parties went to arbitration, and then, when an award was made in favour of the applicant, he took exception to it.

Mr. McGregor said that his client was now willing to withdraw the summons, and to abide the arbitration.

Hopley, J., said that he was not there for the purpose of deciding whether the arbitration proceedings could be upheld.

In reply to his lordship, Mr. Sutton said he was willing to abide by the arbitration proceedings.

Hopley, J., said the arbitration award, having been accepted, Millin could have no further right to the attachment of that money, and that money must, therefore, be released. As to the costs of the application, it seemed to him that Millin was responsible, and must consequently pay the costs. The application was, therefore, granted, with costs.

Ex parte ESTATE O'GRADY.

This was a petition by Mary Elizabeth O'Grady, surviving spouse and executrix of the late James Edward O'Grady, Port Elizabeth. Certain land was bequeathed to the children subject to a life interest in favour of petitioner. There was already existing a bond for £1,000 for the interest, on which a summons had been issued by the Court. There were other debts, amounting in all to £450, and petitioner asked for an order authorising her to pass a further bond for that amount.

On the motion of Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers,

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE WALTERS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the appointment of a commission to examine certain witnesses with reference to the settlement of the insolvent estate of Albert Walters, of the Paarl.

The application was granted, the Resident Magistrate of Paarl being appointed commissioner, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte COLDRBY.

Mr. Gutsche applied for leave to sue for divorce by edictal citation. Petitioner's wife left for England on a six months' visit on January 14, 1903, and petitioner received a letter from her intimating that she would not return. She left her aunt in London, representing that she was returning to South Africa, but the last petitioner heard of her was that she was in the Lake District.

Leave to sue granted, the return day being fixed for August 31, personal service to be made if possible, failing which publication in "Cape Times" Weekly and "Daily Telegraph."

Ex parte KOCK

Dr. Greer moved for leave to sue by edictal citation in an action for the restitution of conjugal rights, failing which divorce. The parties were married in 1892, and resided in Prince Albert, and the respondent, Catherine Margerita Kock, was supposed to be in the Transvaal. The desertion took place three years ago.

Leave to sue granted, citation to be returnable on August 31. Personal service was ordered to be made if possible, and, failing that, publication twice in "Ons Land" and "De Transvaaler."

Ex parte JORDAAN.

Mr. Swift moved, on behalf of petitioner, as executrix dative in the estate of her late parents, for an order confirming the sale by auction to her of portion of certain farm in the district of Jansenville.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte WIGGETT.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on behalf of the petitioner, who resides at Oudtshoorn, for leave to sue his wife by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which divorce. It was stated that Mrs. Wiggett was residing at Epsom, England.

Leave to sue by edicted citation was granted, citation to be returnable September 30, and personal service to be effected.

Ex parte JOUBERT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to petitioner to enter into a certain partition of property. Counsel said that the matter had been standing over pending a report from the Master, and consent of the major heir, which had now been obtained.

The Master's report was favourable. Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte FICK.

Mr. Roux moved, on behalf of petitioner, for cancellation of the sale of certain land for £800, in the village of Piquetberg, to Carlton Miller Tanner, late of Cape Town, and now of the United States. The purchaser, he said, had paid £100 as deposit, but had not made any further payment, and he was found to have no property in this colony. Notice had been served upon the Rev. A. H. Attaway, of Cape Town, who held Mr. Tanner's power of attorney.

Rule nisi granted calling upon the Rev. A. H. Attaway to show cause why an order should not be made as prayed, rule to be returnable on the last day of term.

Postea (July 14th).

Mr. Roux moved for the rule nisi to be made absolute calling upon the Rev. A. H. Attaway, the defendant's agent in this country, to show cause why a certain sale of property should not be cancelled.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that affidavits had been received to the effect that third parties had built upon the ground. The matter must stand over until the first day of next term to give the third parties an opportunity of showing cause.

Postea (August 3rd).

Mr. Roux moved for the cancellation of the sale of a certain piece of land about 26 morgen in extent in the village of Piquetberg, the price being £800, of which the balance of £700 had not been paid.

Mr. Gardiner, for respondent, who was in America, and was returning in September, opposed the application, and submitted that the respondent had made out a good case for being allowed time to pay the balance, and that the rule should be set aside. The balance was tendered in January, 1904, but transfer could not be granted by Fick.

Mr. Roux argued that it would be a great injustice to applicant of the rule was not made absolute.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said he thought it was most probable that if Fick had set out statements which were now in the possession of the Court, he would not have got his rule, and on the sole ground that information was suppressed, the rule must be set aside.

Ex parte SACKS AND ANOTHER.

Marriage Ordinance—Description of status of spouses.

S. and his wife had been married according to Hebrew rites at Norvals Pont by the Rabbi of Bloemfontein. S. was domiciled in this Colony. Having some doubt as to the civil validity of their marriage, they wished to be re-married by a Colonial Magistrate, but having some scruples as to describing themselves as "bachelor" and "spinster," in view of their previous marriage, they now asked for an order authorizing a Magistrate to marry them without their so describing themselves. The Court refused to make any order.

This was an application of the petitioners Hermann Sacks and Lena Hetzberg, of Bellville, for an order authorising the petitioners to be married before the Resident Magistrate, without making the special declaration that they are bachelor and spinster, and authorising a certain ante-nuptial contract entered into by them to be registered in the Deeds Office. From the petition, it appeared that the parties had already gone through a form of marriage, according to the rites of the Jewish Church, before the Rabbi of Bloemfontein, the ceremony being performed at Norval's Pont. There was some difficulty about arranging for the ceremony, owing to there being no other Jewish minister available, and then the parties, in their dilemma, wired for the Rabbi from Bloemfontein. Since coming back to the Cape, they had been informed that the marriage was not valid, inasmuch as the Rabbi was not a marriage officer of the colony. On this point, however, they were by no means certain; but in order to put the matter beyond doubt, they were prepared to go through a form of marriage by special licence before the Magistrate, provided the usual description of bachelor and spinster were omitted from the special declaration.

[Hopley, J.: Why did they not send for the Rabbi and let him marry them across the river?]

Dr. Greer: I think that the difficulty has been that the marriage, although irregular, might possibly be held to be valid. Religiously, they say they are married, and they cannot describe themselves as bachelor and spinster.

[Hopley, J.: When were they married?]

Dr. Greer: On the 6th June. On their return to Cape Town, they were advised that there was some doubt as to whether the marriage was valid.

[Hopley, J.: If they had walked across the bridge, there would have been no further trouble.]

Dr. Greer submitted that it was quite clear that the Rabbi had no authority to marry in this colony.

[Hopley, J.: If they are already validly married, I see no need for them to remarry, and the Court ought not to give an order for their remarriage. Why can't they describe themselves as bachelor and spinster? There is nothing against the character of these people in what they have done.]

Dr. Greer: They have been cohabiting, and they don't regard themselves as bachelor and spinster.

[Hopley, J., said he thought that the marriage had already got validity, even if it were solemnised by a person who was acting beyond the scope of his jurisdiction. He did not feel altogether satisfied about making the order asked for.

Dr. Greer (answering his lordship) said that before the marriage the bride seemed to have been living with some relatives at Norval's Pont.

Hopley, J., after consulting the Marriage Ordinance, said that he did not see his way to make an order on the present application. If the parties found on applying to the Magistrate, that he would not act, in spite of their describing themselves as being civilly, so far as the law was concerned, a bachelor and spinster, then they could come to the Court again, and perhaps the Court would give them relief. He would advise them not to be squeamish, and if, so far as the civil law was concerned, they were bachelor and spinster, not to stand in their own light by not putting that fact on paper. No order would be made at present.

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT, CAPE COLONY.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

OLIVIER V. SCHOOMBE AND { 1905.
OTHERS. } July 3rd.

Will, joint—Sale intra familiam— Vesting.

S. and his wife made a joint will, whereby they bequeathed their entire estate to the survivor and the children of their marriage as their sole heirs. By a codicil to this will the testators directed that a certain farm in their estate should not fall under the provisions of the will, but should be bequeathed to their five sons for £500; which amount was to be paid after the death of the survivor to the three daughters of the testators. In a special case stated the plaintiffs contended that no portion of the inheritance vested in either of the two minor sons who predeceased the survivor, and that subject to payment, pro rata, of their share of the £500, the plaintiff, through his wife, as a beneficiary under the will, was now entitled to a share in the inheritance of the minor sons deceased. The defendants denied that on the death of the survivor the deceased minors acquired any vested interest in the said farm.

Held, in favour of plaintiff's contention.

This was a special case stated in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff is Cornelius Hermanus Olivier, of Wodehouse, married in community of property to Dina Margaretha Olivier (born Beukes) hereinafter called the testatrix, surviving spouse of the late Andries Godlieb Schoombe, hereinafter called the testator.

2. The defendants are:

(a) Jan Albertus Schoombe, also of Wodehouse, in his individual capacity and also as the executor dative in the estates of the late Andries Albertus Schoombe, Pieter Hendrik Schoombe and Elsie Jusena Schoombee.

(b) Jacobus Nicholas Schoombee, at present of Cape Town.

(c) Hans Jacob Schoombee, of Wodehouse.

(d) Gideon Andries Godlieb Schoombee, married in community of property to Gerbreg Levina Schoombee, of Wodehouse.

(e) Christian Petrus Naude, of Steynsburg, in his individual capacity, and also as the executor testamentary in the estate of his late wife Johanna Magdalena Naude (born Schoombee), and as the father and natural guardian of his minor children Andries Godlieb Naude, Christian Petrus Naude, Ellie Petronella, Naude and Johanna Magdalena Naude.

3. Prior to his marriage to the testatrix, the testator was married to one Dorothea Maria Elizabeth Henning, and had as issue of the said marriage two children, Gerbreg Levina and Johanna Magdalena by name, who are the persons referred to in paragraph 2 (d) and (e) hereof.

4. By his marriage with the testatrix the testator had six children, namely, the first three defendants and the said late Andries Albertus, Pieter Hendrik and Elsie Jusena, referred to in paragraph 2 (a) hereafter.

5. On or about the 9th of May, 1864, the testator and testatrix executed together a will, copy whereof, together with a true translation, is hereunto annexed marked "A," whereby the testator instituted the testatrix (now the wife of the plaintiff) together with the two children, issue as aforesaid of his previous marriage with the testatrix as his heirs; whilst the testatrix appointed the testator and the children born or to be born of their marriage as her heirs.

6. The said will also provided that the survivor should remain in the absolute and undisturbed possession of the estate in order to be better able to educate and maintain the minor children until the latter attained the age of majority, married, or attained some other approved age, when each had to be paid out his or her share of the inheritance.

7. On or about the 6th of June, 1881, the said testators executed a codicil to the said will, copy whereof together with a true translation is hereunto annexed marked "B," whereby they declared to have sold their farm Lafkrantz, in the district of Wodehouse, to their said five sons for the sum of £500, to be paid to the said Gerbreg Levina, Johanna Magdalena and Elsie Jusena Schoombee after the death of the survivor.

8. The testator died on the 12th of June, 1881, leaving the said will and codicil of full force and effect and leaving him surviving his said spouse, the testatrix (now the wife of the plaintiff), and all his said children.

9. The testatrix adiated under the said will and codicil, and has remained in full possession and enjoyment, up to the present, of the said farm Lafkrantz.

10. The said sons of the testators, Andries Albertus and Pieter Hendrik and their said daughter Elsie Jusena, died intestate being minors and unmarried, on the 26th August, 1888, the 3rd of July, 1888, and the 15th of July, 1888, respectively.

11. Thereafter first defendant was duly appointed executor dative in the estates of his said deceased brothers and his said deceased sister, and letters of administration were taken out by him in each of the said estates on the 15th of October, 1904. No account has been filed yet by the said executor in any of the said estates, but they are being administered by him.

12. On the 21st of June, 1900, the said Johanna Magdalena Schoombee, who was during her lifetime married in community of property to Christian Petrus Naude (the 5th defendant), died, leaving five children, issue of her marriage, whose names are set forth in paragraph 2 (e) hereof, and leaving also a will, under which she appointed her said husband and their said children her heirs, her said husband was also appointed executor testamentary in her estate and he took out letters of administration as such on the 13th of February, 1905.

The plaintiff contends:

(a) That each of the said two deceased sons, Andries Albertus and Pieter Hendrik had at the dates of their respective deaths a vested right to a one-fifth share in the said farm Lafkrantz and that their intestate estates, of which the plaintiff is through his wife (the testatrix) an heir, are now entitled to such shares in the said farm, subject to their paying in their respective portions of the bequest price of £500 to the three said daughters or their estates.

(b) That the intestate estate of the said deceased daughter, Elsie Jusena Schoombee, of which the plaintiff is also an heir, is entitled to a one-third share in the said bequest price of £500.

The defendants contend:

(a) That on the death of the testator, his son Andries Albertus and Pieter Hendrik did not acquire a vested interest in any share of the said farm, and that the two-fifths thereof does not form part of the estates of such sons or either of them; and that the said estates are not now entitled to such shares in the said farm as alleged in (a) of plaintiff's contention.

(b) That the whole of the said farm vests in the three surviving sons, or such of them as may survive the testatrix, on her death, but not before.

(c) That on the death of the testatrix, the sons surviving her will have to pay for the said farm the sum of £500 into the estate of testator and testatrix for the benefit of such daughters as survive testatrix.

(d) That the estate of the deceased daughter, Elsie Jusena Schoombie, is not entitled to one-third share in the bequest price of £500, inasmuch as the said daughter acquired no vested right in the said bequest price or any portion thereof.

To all and every one who shall see this public Act or hear it read, be it known:

That on the ninth day of the month of May in the year of our Lord One thousand eight and sixty four, there appeared before us, the undersigned two witnesses expressly called for the purpose, Mr. Andries Godliep Schoonbe and Mrs. Dina Margaretha Beukes residing on the farm Tigerhoek, District of Aliwal North, spouses, known to us, the witnesses sound in body, in full possession and use of mind, memory and understanding, as appeared at the passing of these presents.—

Who declare to be disposed and to have resolved to make disposition of the property to be relinquished by them on demise, so doing (as they, the testators) declare of their own free will, without the advice or persuasion of any one whomsoever, to that end annulling all testaments, codicils and all other testamentary acts which they, either jointly or severally, may have executed and passed previous to the date of these presents, therefore not wishing or desiring that all or any of the same, after the passing of these presents, shall be of the least power or value, but that on the contrary they shall be regarded as if they had never been passed.

And as his universal heirs to nominate and appoint (1) his wife, the testatrix herein; (2) his children begotten of his first marriage with his deceased wife the late Dorothea Maria Elizabeth Henning, named together with such child or children as are already born or still to be born of this his present marriage, and such to all the property to be relinquished by him on demise, movable as well as immovable acts and credits, inheritances and expectancies, nothing whatever excepted to be assumed and possessed for always as free personal property by his aforementioned heirs, and in case of predecease of one or more of them, the lawful descendants of the same by representation, without the contradiction of any one whomsoever.

1. Gerberg Levina and

2. Johanna Magdalena,

The testatrix, likewise making disposition of the property to be relinquished by her on demise, hereby declared to bequeath to and to nominate and appoint as her universal heirs (1) her husband, the testator herein, together with such child or children as are already born or still to be born of this her present marriage, and such to all the property to be relinquished by her on demise, movable as well as immovable, acts and credits, inheritances and expectancies, nothing whatever excepted, to be assumed and possessed for always as free personal property by her aforementioned heirs, and in case of predecease of one or more of them, the lawful descendants of the same by representation, without the contradiction of any one whomsoever.

And in order to be able to ascertain the portions of their heirs, they do hereby desire and testate that six weeks after the death of one of them, their estate shall be inventoried, and shall be appraised by two good and well reputed men and in that way adjusted, the survivor of them, however, to remain in full and undisturbed possession of the estate, in order the better to be able to bring up and maintain the minors on the usufruct of their portions until their majority, marriages or other approved states, at which time there shall be paid out to each of them their portions.

Further, the testators declare to hereby nominate and appoint as their executors testamentary administrators of their estate and guardians of their minor heirs the survivor of them with power of assumption, substitution and surrogation, and with the express will and desire that the said executors shall not be held and bound to file with the Master of the Supreme Court or any Magistrate a statement and inventory of their Estate.

Finally the testators declared expressly to reserve to themselves the power and right at all times to alter this their final disposition—(except the appointment of heirs) consequently to add thereto or take therefrom as they may be advised, either by separate act or at the foot of this will,—desiring that all such alterations so found and under their own signatures shall be regarded as if the same had been literally inserted herein.

All the aforewritten having been read to the testators word for word, they declared to have well understood and comprehended the same, and this to be their testament and final will, with the desire that in all parts it may be valid and take effect as such, either as a solemn testament, codicil, donatio mortis causa or as may best consist with law,—notwithstanding any solemnities may have been omitted which the testators hereby regard as having been inserted, imploring the utmost benefit under the law.

Thus testated and passed at Tigerhoek, District of Aliwal North day month and year aforesaid.

Further we the testators declare that we sell the farm Lafkrantz, in the District of Wodehouse, to our five sons Jan Albertus, Andries Albertus, Jacobus Nicolas, Hans Jacob and Pieter Hendrik Schoombie, for the sum of five hundred (£500) pounds sterling.

The abovementioned five hundred pounds sterling shall be paid to Gerbrig Levena and Johanna Magdalena Schoobie and Elsie Susena Schoombie after the death of the survivor.

Thus agreed and signed before the two witnesses, on this sixth day of June in the year One thousand eight hundred and eighty one.

Mr. Burton for plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C., for defendant.

Mr. Burton said the question to decide was whether, in view of the terms of the codicil, these two sons and the daughter who died after the testator—whether at the death of the testator there was vested in them the share of the farm that was sold. The question was, whether the vesting of the rights of these children took place at the death of the testator, or whether the vesting was postponed until the death of the survivor. It was clear, if the mother had a usufruct, that the bequest vested upon the death of the testator.

Mr. Searle said the case was a very peculiar one, because here they had the survivor of an estate who wished to have it declared that she was entitled to a certain portion of a farm that would not be divided until her decease, and to money which would be paid by those who survived her. He did not think a case could be found that would prove that the survivor was entitled to money that did not come due until her demise.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: What becomes of the money then?]

Mr. Searle: It goes into the estate. Continuing, he contended that no authority could be quoted to show that she was entitled to the money that was eventually to be paid. They held that at the death of the testatrix the sons surviving would have to pay into the estate on behalf of the surviving daughters.

[Hopley, J.: But suppose there are no daughters?]

Then the money will be paid into the estate. He contended, firstly, that the heirs' shares did not vest until the death of the surviving spouse, and that, consequently, the plaintiffs could not have any right at all until the death of the widow; and, secondly, that even if this were not granted in reference to the landed property, and if it was held to vest on the death of the first dying, at any rate, the share of the £500 belonging to the estate of the daughter who died, could not be claimed by the plaintiffs, but must be divided among the surviving sisters.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The late Mr. Schoombee and his wife now married to plaintiff, called in the special case the testator and testatrix, made a joint will, and in this will the testator bequeathed his estate to his wife and the children as his sole and universal heirs. There was no dispute concerning this will, but by a codicil the testator and testatrix took out of their estate the farm in question, and this they bequeathed to their five sons for the sum of £500, the amount to be paid after the death of the survivor to the three daughters. The first question the Court has to decide is whether or not this codicil gave the sons a vested interest in the property. On the death of the testator the surviving widow adiated, so that she is bound by the bequest. Though the codicil speaks of a sale, it was really a bequest of the farm upon condition of payment of a certain sum. It is true that this payment was postponed until after the death of the survivor, but according to the current of decisions in this Court the bequest took effect immediately. That was in accordance with the claim made in the previous action between the same parties. The Court then held that the will and the codicil were such as to give the survivor the right to the enjoyment of this property during her life. That certainly cleared away any difficulty that might have arisen in deciding the question of vesting. Taking it therefore that the property vested on the death of the testator, it is stated as a fact that the five sons were alive at that time. Two sons have died since then, but as the property vested in them it now went to their estate, subject to the payment of the purchase price, which was not payable until after the death of the survivor. Then comes the question of the postponement of the daughters. They, too, were all alive at the death of the testator, but since then one had died while a minor and intestate, and another, who was married to one of the defendants, had also died. The question was, were these two daughters' estates entitled to their share of the £500. It was not an uncommon thing for farmers to bequeath land to their sons at a price to be paid to the daughter at the testator's death. They thus preserved the property to the sons, but so as not to be unjust to the daughters daughters they bequeathed the purchase money to them, which was usually an equivalent to what would be the share of the daughters in the property; thus putting the children on an equal footing. If the sons took a vested interest in the land bequeathed, the daughters ought in justice to take a vested right to the money which was to compensate them for the loss of their shares in the property. I am of opinion, therefore, that the whole of the plaintiff's contention should be sustained and judgment given accordingly. The costs must come out of the estate.

WEST AND ELCOATE V. LONDON ASSURANCE CO.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved, on behalf of the trustee in the estate of West and Elcoate, for leave to take evidence on commission. The respondents consented. Granted, costs to be costs in the case.

REX V. MEIZENHEIMER.

This was an appeal against a conviction and sentences by the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town. Mr. Pymont for the Government; Dr. Greer for the appellant.

Mr. Gardiner for the Town Council, who were called upon to show cause why they should not be ordered to pay costs.

Dr. Greer said the appellant was charged on the 9th June last with contravening section 212 of the Cape Town Municipal Regulations, framed under Act 26 of 1903, and on a second count he was charged with wrongfully and unlawfully hindering a certain police sergeant in the discharge of his duty. Prisoner was convicted on both counts, and sentenced, on the first, to pay a fine of £2, or in default to undergo 14 days' imprisonment, and, on the second, to three months' imprisonment, with hard labour, the sentences to be cumulative. Against that conviction and sentence he now appealed on the grounds that the conviction was against the weight of evidence, "that the accused was the wrong person in the dock, which place ought really to be occupied by the police constable."

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: What does that mean?]

Dr. Greer: It means that he alleges that it was he who was really assaulted, and that the police constable ought to have been in the dock.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: It should not be put in that way.]

Dr. Greer said that a further ground of appeal was that "in other respects the verdict and sentence were vindictive and excessive, and not in accordance with substantial justice."

Counsel read the evidence. The allegations for the prosecution were that the defendant, a registered wagon driver, approached a sergeant of police, and asked him to remove another man from a position which he alleged the man had "jumped." The sergeant held that the other man was in the right, and thereupon told the defendant to "pull out" from where he was. Defendant refused, and the sergeant proceeded to arrest him. Defendant resisted, and struck the sergeant with his whip and kicked him. The evidence for the defence was that the defendant only used such force as was necessary to prevent his arrest, he being unwilling to go to the police station with the sergeant unless he also took the other man. The sergeant took hold of defendant's foot and endeavoured to pull him off the wagon.

Dr. Greer contended there was no power given under the regulation to the police sergeant to arrest the defendant under the circumstances. Defendant was in the act of moving off when the sergeant arrested him. There was a certain amount of delay on the part of the defendant in obeying the order of the sergeant to move on. Defendant was naturally irritated, and argued the point, but all the testimony showed that he was only once asked to move, and that he was in fact leaving the stand when the sergeant tried to arrest him.

Hopley, J., said that the sergeant had stated in evidence that the defendant three times refused to go, and that upon his (the sergeant) going up to the wagon defendant kicked him in the mouth.

Dr. Greer urged that the man was obeying the order when he was arrested, and that the sergeant exceeded his duty. The name and address of the man were printed on both sides of the wagon, and there was no justification for arresting him so long as he did not continue the offence.

Without calling upon counsel for the Crown and the Town Council, Buchanan, A.C.J., said that on the first charge there was ample evidence that the accused would not obey the orders of the police, who had the duty of controlling the traffic, to remove his wagon from the position in which it stood. He refused several times, whereupon the police-sergeant said he would take him to the police station. Then the accused attempted to drive off, and when the police-sergeant tried to arrest him he was most violently assaulted by the accused. The sergeant was kicked, and his clothes were torn, and the evidence showed that the accused acted in a most unjustifiable way. The police had the right to arrest this man, and the sergeant was only performing his duty. It was said that the penalty was a severe one, but did not think so. The Magistrate had not inflicted anything like the maximum punishment. There was of course a conflict of evidence, but there was plenty of corroboration of the police-sergeant's statement. The Town Council had received notice of this appeal, and had been brought into court on notice calling upon them to show cause why the costs should not be given against them. This, however, was not a municipal prosecution; it was a police prosecution, and there was absolutely no reason for bringing the Town Council into court. The appeal would be dismissed, and the Town Council would be declared entitled to their costs for appearance.

Hopley, J., concurred.

REX V. NICHOLLS.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Acting Resident Magistrate of Cape Town convicting the appellant of the crime of theft on the 3rd June on the charge that he had stolen certain sums of money amounting to £18. The accused was found guilty, and sentenced to two months' imprisonment with hard labour. The appeal was based on the grounds that the crime was not proved by the evidence.

From the evidence taken before the Magistrate, it appeared that two men, whilst drinking in a bar, made a bet of £9 each, and gave the money to appellant to take to Mr. Hodson, of the City Hall Hotel, to take charge of until the bet was decided. This appellant did, and received a receipt from Hodson for the amount. It was alleged that he told Hodson the money was his own property. He returned to the bar where the men who had made the bet were. He showed them the receipt. During the evening he returned to the City Hall Hotel and got the £18 from Hodson.

Appellant, in his defence, admitted that he had received the money, and that he had given it to Hodson. He afterwards got the money back from Hodson, and said that he had never been asked to return it to those who had made the bet.

Dr. Greer appeared for appellant, and Mr. Pyemont for the respondent.

Dr. Greer submitted that there was no proof of theft. These men had been drinking together during the day, and in a bar a dispute arose as to the position "Friar" held. When the money was put up it was suggested that accused should be the stake-holder, but it was eventually agreed that Hodson should hold it. Appellant's mind was not very clear on who was to be the stake-holder.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: But he should not spend the money entrusted to his care.]

Dr. Greer contended that if the appellant had money to meet his liability he was entitled to spend a portion of the money as long as he could replace it. The question of false representation did not enter into the case. Accused was arrested before the bet was decided, and no demand was made on accused for the money.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The appellant took the money that did not belong to him, and therefore I do not see that the Court can interfere with the decision of the Magistrate.

Hopley, J., concurred, and said it appeared to him that the appellant had made a false representation to Hobson by making out that the money was his.

REX V. AH FOO AND OTHERS.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Acting Resident Magistrate, Cape Town. Ah Foo, Leo Sam, and others had been charged with the crime of contravening sub-section 1 of section 5 of Part II. of Act 36 of 1902 in that, upon or about the 26th June last, they each, one or more of them, did own and keep a gaming house, and were fined £100 each, or the alternative of four months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

Dr. Greer appeared for appellants, and Mr. Pyemont for the Crown.

Dr. Greer said that, in connection with this matter, there were 36 persons arrested. Three were charged with being owners, and 33 with being frequenters. The three charged with being owners were fined £100 each, and the others were fined £5 each. Under the Act under which they were charged, an owner or keeper of a gaming house was liable for a first offence to a fine of £200, and for a second offence to a fine of £500. According to the interpretation clause, an owner or occupier was deemed to mean or include any owner who was cognisant of the purposes for which or uses to which his property was used or put, and also a tenant, occupier, lodger, manager, banker, dealer, croupier, secretary, clerk, messenger, or any person employed in any house or place in any capacity other than a menial or domestic capacity. There were only two appellants, as the third man (Lee Sam) admitted being the owner, but the other two contended that they were only frequenters.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The two appellants base their appeal upon the ground that they were not the owners or keepers of the house, but were merely frequenters. The question turns upon the construction to be placed upon section 3 of what was commonly called the Morality Act. This section makes the owner or keeper of a gambling house or brothel include the owner of a house, who is cognisant of the uses to which the property is put, and the tenant or landlord or lodger, or any person employed in any capacity other than that of a menial or domestic servant. Now the two appellants were neither owners, lodgers, nor tenants of this house. They were there playing a certain game, and on the evidence before the Court, I think it would be difficult to hold that they were anything more than players frequenting the house. I think that the section must be taken to mean that persons so convicted must be either owners or persons who assist in running the house for the benefit of the owner. There is no proof that these two were more than frequenters, and cannot be included under the title of owner or keeper. It is quite consistent with the evidence to say that they were only frequenters, and I think the Magistrate has erred in convicting them as owners or keepers, especially where it was so conclusively proved who was the owner and keeper of the house—the tenant, who had been punished. The appeal must therefore be allowed, and the conviction against the two appellants quashed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

REX V. ZUCKER.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town fining the accused £2, or the alternative of a month's imprisonment, for contravening Act 27 of 1882, section 5, paragraph 29, as amended by Act 44 of 1898, section 2.

Dr. Greer appeared for appellant, and Mr. Pyemont represented the respondent.

The section of the Act under which the appellant was convicted held that any person guilty of being a common prostitute or being a night-walker was liable to a fine not exceeding £2.

The appeal was based on the grounds that the fine was excessive, and that the conviction was contrary to law, inasmuch as the appellant was not in the street to the annoyance of the public, although that was necessary for a conviction. This woman was in very delicate health, and if she was imprisoned, it would make her much worse.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: That will be brought to the notice of the gaol medical officer, who will not give her hard labour.]

Hopley, J., said that any man who was accosted by a prostitute would be annoyed, although he might not give evidence to that effect.

Dr. Greer said he thought that in face of the doctor's certificate, the Court might see their way to order the liberation of this woman from gaol, or the modifying of the sentence.

[Hopley, J.: That's for the Governor.]

Buchanan, A.C.J., said it had been proved that the appellant was loitering in the public street to the annoyance of the public, and therefore the conviction was properly made, and would be upheld.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

HAMAN V. HAMAN. { 1905.
July 4th.

This was an action brought by Hendrik Josias Haman, fisherman and barman, of Hermanus, division of Caledon, against his wife, Susanna B. Haman, also of Hermanus, for a decree of judicial separation, and custody of the five children of the marriage. Defendant claimed in reconvention a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, and also custody of the children. Dr. Greer was for plaintiff; Mr. Van Zyl was for defendant.

Dr. Greer stated that the parties were married in October 1890. The only question that now remained was as to the maintenance to be paid by plaintiff to defendant. He was instructed to consent, on behalf of plaintiff, to the children being left with defendant, subject to reasonable access being given to him. He proposed to call evidence as to plaintiff's means.

Plaintiff then gave evidence. He said that he received £8 a month as barman and drew £10 a year from his boat. He had some property. He consented to a division of the joint estate, and asked that the costs of the suit should be borne by the estate.

Cross-examined: The cause of trouble between witness and his wife was that she had been repeatedly accusing him of unfaithfulness. There was no ground for her jealousy while they were living together. He admitted that he had given her cause to complain since he had left her. He was at present living with a woman named Johanna Dempers, in regard to whom his wife had previously complained. He admitted having beaten his wife and having been fined £2 for assaulting her.

Decree of judicial separation granted, the joint estate to be divided by Mr. Attorney Krige, defendant to have custody of the children, with reasonable access to plaintiff, plaintiff to contribute £5 a month towards the maintenance of the children, with leave to either party to again move the Court on the question of maintenance, costs to be paid by plaintiff.

LUBBE V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1905.
July 4th.
„ 11th.

Martial Law—Scab inspector—Refusal of facilities by military—Suspension—Salary—Estoppel.

L., a scab inspector, was during the late Martial Law regime, prevented by the military authorities from performing his duties, and was notified by the Agricultural Department that the payment of his salary would be suspended until he should again be allowed to perform such duties. The Court found, as a fact, that the plaintiff had acquiesced in this arrangement. Thereafter the Agricultural Department discovered that he had been deported by the military as an "undesirable." No specific offence was alleged against him; but the Department nevertheless dismissed him. He was paid salary up to the time that he was deported. He now claimed salary for the entire period covered by his suspension.

Held, that the plaintiff was by his action estopped from claiming salary for the time during which he was prevented by the military from performing his duties.

This was an action brought by Franz Jacobus Lubbe, of Clanwilliam, formerly a sheep inspector employed by the Colonial Government, against the Acting Secretary of Agriculture for salary.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that on February 10, 1901, defendant's predecessor in office engaged his services as an inspector of sheep for wards 1, 2, and 6 of the Clanwilliam division, at a salary of £200 a year. It was agreed that the said agreement of service or engagement should be terminable upon one month's notice. Plaintiff had duly performed his part of the agreement. On August 25, 1902, he received notice from the defendant that his services under the agreement were terminated. He was paid his salary until September 16, 1901. He claimed £207 15s. 7d., as salary from September 17, 1901, to September 30, 1902.

Defendant, in his plea, denied paragraph 3 of the declaration as to the performance of his duties by plaintiff. He said that on January 31, 1902, plaintiff was reported and removed from Clanwilliam to Matjesfontein, in the district of Worcester, by the Imperial military authorities, and was detained until July 4 of the said year. Subsequent to the said date he remained in the district of Worcester and elsewhere, and did not return to Clanwilliam district prior to August 25, 1902. By reason of the said removal and absence of plaintiff from Clanwilliam, he was totally unable to perform any of the duties of his said office. Defendant admitted having given notice to plaintiff, and said that the notice referred to was given to plaintiff in consequence of his breach of contract to perform his said duties. On February 3, 1905, defendant tendered to plaintiff his salary from September 17, 1901, to January 31, 1902, inclusive; but plaintiff refused to accept that tender in settlement of his claim. Defendant repeated the tender (£275), with taxed costs to date of tender, but said that by reason of plaintiff's breach of contract he was disentitled to claim any compensation.

Plaintiff, in his replication, admitted his deportation and detention from January 31, 1902, to July 4, 1902, but said that he was in no way to blame for such deportation, which was made under Martial Law. He held himself in readiness at all times to perform the duties of his office. He said that the contract remained in force during the period of his detention. He denied that the notice was given to him in consequence of his inability to perform any of the said duties, and said that the notice was given to him by reason of a sever accident occurring to him after his release from the said deportation.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) for plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Evans) for the Government.

Franz Jacobus Lubbe (plaintiff) was called. He said that in 1901 Martial Law was proclaimed in Clanwilliam. At that time two sheep inspectors were employed in the division, viz., witness and one Van Weilligh. After the proclamation witness was not allowed to go into his district for the first three months—January to March. In September he got a pass to go to his farm for his horses. On October 3 he received a letter from the Under-Secretary of Agriculture, stating that where inspectors were unable to carry out their duties owing to the unsettled state of the country, payment of their emoluments would be temporarily suspended, and informing witness that his salary would be temporarily stopped. He was only paid for part of September, and witness, in a letter to the chief inspector, claimed full pay for the month. Witness remained in Clanwilliam until January, 1902, in readiness to take up his duties. On January 31, he was informed by the Deputy Administrator that he, along with others, were to be taken to Malmesbury as undesirables, but he did not know the reason. Witness had had no charge against him, and he had served in the Clanwilliam Guard for six months. At Malmesbury, no one could tell him the reason, and he had not found out yet. He was taken to Matjesfontein, where he was released in July, 1902. On the day he got his pass, he met with an accident in getting out of a train, and lost his left leg. In July, 1902, he received a letter from the Chief Inspector, stating that the Scab Act was to be put in operation again, and a telegram from the Civil Commissioner asking him if he could take up his duties at once. Witness replied, asking to be excused until October, when the doctor thought he would be fit for duty. The Chief Inspector, in a memorandum, recommended that a temporary assistant inspector should be appointed until witness was ready for duty. On August 25 he received a letter from the Civil Commissioner regretting that, owing to his incapacity through accident, his services must terminate, and witness made his claim. The other inspector in the Clanwilliam division was paid for the whole period.

Cross-examined: He understood that he was to be paid during the war, and although he did not claim until a year ago, he intended all along to do so. Van der Merwe's case against the Government only made it more clear to him. In October, November, and December, he did no scab inspecting, in consequence of the communication from the Government. Witness was in the hospital from the 4th July, 1902, to the 1st November, 1902, and was unable to do any work during that time, except by substitute. The last work he did for the Government was about the middle of September, 1901.

Nicolaas van Weilligh said that he could not obtain a pass from the military to go into the district between July, 1901, and August, 1902. Witness remained in Clanwilliam, and held himself in readiness to do his work. He did not then make an application to the Government for salary during that period, but he had since made a claim and had been paid by the Government for the whole period.

Cross-examined: Witness did not claim from the Government until September, 1904.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Charles Alfred Currey, Under Secretary for Agriculture, said that no information was received by the department as to plaintiff's deportation until the 11th August, 1904. Witness gave evidence as to certain of the correspondence.

Cross-examined: He admitted that the only difference between Lubbe's case and Van Weilligh's case was that the former had been deported. It was regarded by the Government as a misdemeanour to merit deportation. The Civil Commissioner was the officer administering martial law at Clanwilliam. The notice of dismissal given to plaintiff spoke of his having broken his leg in a severe accident. Witness had since ascertained that plaintiff had sustained an accident on the railway. The department took it for granted that plaintiff was an undesirable, seeing that he had been deported. They did not inquire as to the reasons for his deportation. The instructions that the plaintiff was to resume duty were sent before witness heard of the deportation. If witness had written the letter, he would not have put the dismissal on the ground of the accident; he would have based it on the ground that the plaintiff had been deported. The Chief Inspector reported that, leaving alone the undesirable character of the man, it was essential that he should have able-bodied active men.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: When they found other cases similar to the one in question, general instructions were issued on the 25th August. He had no knowledge at that time of what the Magistrate wrote on the 21st August. It would principally lie with the Chief Inspector to decide as to the man's fitness for work.

Hopley, J.: He held that the dismissal was on good cause, but unfortunately the wrong reasons were given.

[Hopley, J.: Would you think it fair if, through disturbances in Cape Town, you could not get to your office for six months, the Government said: "Charles Currie, you shall have no pay for that period?"]

I should have protested.

I suppose that is because you know a little bit more than these people up-country?—I should not have accepted the decision without a protest.

You would not think it perfectly fair?—I should certainly protest.

Allen Gardiner Davison, Chief Inspector of Sheep in the Colony, said he did not consider that a man suffering from such an accident as the plaintiff could properly carry out his duties in such a mountainous district.

Counsel having been heard in argument.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (July 11th).

Hopley, J.: The plaintiff, a farmer, resident in the district of Clanwilliam, has since the year 1895 been one of the Government scab inspectors for certain wards in that district, and his most recent appointment to that position was dated February 10, 1900, when he was appointed inspector for Wards 1, 2, and 6 in the said district, at a salary of £200 per annum, the engagement being terminable at a month's notice. This was during the continuance of the war, but at a time when it was not expected that the district of Clanwilliam would be directly involved in the struggle. An invasion of this colony by the enemy and a rebellion of some of its subjects took place shortly after, and the district in question, as well as many others, came into the area of hostilities, so that a Military Commandant was appointed there, and eventually, in January, 1901, martial law was proclaimed. The plaintiff, at that time in the town of Clanwilliam, was allowed to go into the district only when it suited the military situation, and then only upon his procuring a pass to go forth. In this respect he was in no wise differently treated from any other of her late Majesty's civilian subjects, and no blame is imputed to him therefor; but the inevitable result was that he could only intermittently and at best inadequately discharge the duties of his office, which, of course, had to be performed among the flocks throughout the wards of the district for which he was responsible. Seeing that they were getting in many quarters of the country no services for the salaries they were paying to the scab inspectors, the Government officials in charge of this branch of administrative Government, with the consent of the responsible Minister, issued a circular to all inspectors who were thus impeded by the military situation, informing them that their emoluments would be temporarily stopped. The plaintiff was one of those who received this circular, which was in the following terms: "Department of Agriculture, Cape of Good Hope, Cape Town, 3rd October, 1901.—Suspension of Duties.—Sir,—I am directed to inform you that the Government have decided that, where sheep inspectors are unable to carry out their duties owing to the disturbed state of the country, payment of their emoluments shall be temporarily stopped. In accordance with this decision, the Secretary for Agriculture has given instructions to temporarily cease payment of your salary and allowance. When you are again authorised by this department or by the Chief Inspector of Sheep to assume duty, your emoluments will be paid as heretofore.—I have the honour to be, your obedient servant, (Signed) Charles Currey, Under Secretary for Agriculture." It will be seen that this is not a dismissal from office, or a notice to terminate the engagement, but merely an intimation that pay will be suspended until the department should deem it expedient to allow the inspector to resume his duties. In the case of the plaintiff, this was followed by a letter from the Chief Inspector of Sheep, addressed to him, informing him once more of the determination of the Government, and telling him that his pay had been stopped from September 1, 1901. This letter was dated October 9, 1901, and it concludes: "When again authorised by this office to resume duty, your emoluments will be paid as heretofore." Now, when the plaintiff received the circular and this letter, it seems to me that he was bound to elect a course. It is clear that he need not have acquiesced, in which case he should have protested, and then the Government would have been able to dismiss him with his pay to date and a month's pay in lieu of notice. In that case, however, it would be unlikely that he would be reinstated when the time of unrest should be over. His other course was to acquiesce, and thus retain his post and the goodwill of the department under which he had to work. The correspondence which ensued clearly shows that the plaintiff chose the latter alternative. All he says in his letters is, in effect, that he worked for sixteen days in September before he received any notice to discontinue, and that he should be paid for that month, and eventually when Government did pay him for the 16 days in September, his only grievance was that he should have been paid for the whole of that month. In his letter of January 11, 1902, in which he sets forth this grievance (without claiming anything for October, November, and December), he signs himself, "F. J. Lubbe, late sheep inspector, Wards 1, 2, and 6, Clanwilliam." By adopting this attitude he created a feeling of security in the Department with which he was concerned, and led them to think that the proposal they had made had been fully accepted by him, and he is estopped from now saying that he never had such intention, but that he was at all times holding himself in readiness to do his duties. There is a further phase in this case which, however, I do not consider as being of much importance after the acceptance of the Government proposal by the plaintiff. I refer to the fact that during January, 1902, the plaintiff was by the military authorities, in the exercise of their arbitrary powers under martial law, deported from his district to another district as "an undesirable." The reason for this has never been explained, and the plaintiff, though he applied to those in authority—to the Resident Magistrate of Clanwilliam, who was deputy administrator of martial law and to the military commandant of his district—has never been able to elicit any reason for the step taken against him. The result, however, was that he was not even in his own district, and was consequently wholly disabled from the performance of any portion of his duties. This, as I have said, does not, in the circumstances, seem to me to make any important difference. Had he been allowed to remain in Clanwilliam, it is clear that even if the military authorities had been willing to allow him to go about the district, i.e. would not have done so after his acceptance of the circular and letter, which enjoined on him inactivity until he received definite instructions from the head office to resume duty. I do not agree with Mr. Currey in thinking that the mere fact of the deportation was sufficient to render the plaintiff liable to dismissal for misconduct. In the unfortunate circumstances in which this country was then placed, it was possible for innocent and harmless men to incur suspicion, and to be deported from their districts, and as to that ground alone I think that before a public servant could be legally dismissed an inquiry should establish that he had merited such treatment. That has never been proved in the plaintiff's case. The further history of his case is that On July 4, 1902, he was freed from military surveillance and detention, and granted a free railway pass to go home, which he immediately proceeded to do; but, most unfortunately, he met with an accident on the journey, which caused him to lose a leg, and to be laid up for some time in hospital at Touws River. At the end of July the Agricultural Department, who were apparently quite ignorant of his deportation and subsequent misfortune, telegraphed to Clanwilliam to the Civil Commissioner to get the plaintiff to resume his duties as scab inspector. This was forwarded to him in hospital, whence he telegraphed that he would not be able to resume duty until October, but would be glad to be excused until January. It was then that, on inquiry, the department discovered the deportation, and the circumstances and nature of the accident, and thereupon, on August 25, 1902, the plaintiff was dismissed by a letter, which alleged his incapacity, owing to his accident, to perform his duties as the reason for the termination of his appointment. The plaintiff made no move in the matter after this letter, until September, 1904 when, as he states, the decision in the case of Van der Merwe v. Colonial Government (21, S.C., 520), gave him grounds for the opinion that he, too, might succeed in a similar action. The difference between the two cases, however, is that Van der Merwe never received the letter suspending him from duty, and temporarily stopping his pay. He consequently could not be held to have acquiesced in the arrangement made by the Government: but as I have already shown the plaintiff in the present case received the notifications, and elected to fall in with the proposed arrangement. His present claim, however, is for payment from September 17, 1901, to September 30, 1902 based on the ground that he was the scab inspector during all that time, and consequently entitled to pay for the full period. He certainly had never been dismissed from his post, but he was holding his position after October, 1901, on the understanding that he was to receive no pay until he resumed duty: and as he never did resume duty it seems to me that his action must fail. In the pleadings the defendants tender £75, with costs, to the date when they first made such tender, viz., February 3, 1905. This tender is really for pay from September 17, 1901, until January 31, 1902, when the plaintiff was deported. In my opinion the defendants need not have made this tender, but as they have done so they must be held bound by it, and judgment will accordingly be for the plaintiff for the amount tendered, with costs to the date of tender, the plaintiff to pay costs after that date.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

WOODHEAD, PLANT AND CO. (1905.
V. BASSON. (July 5th.

This was an action brought by Woodhead, Plant and Co., of Cape Town, against Johannes Matthys Michiel Basson, of Malmesbury, to recover a sum of £150, value of certain furniture, glassware, etc., alleged to have been purchased by defendant from plaintiffs on or about the 7th April, 1904.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that the sale took place at Malmesbury of the goods in dispute at the Central Hotel. The goods were delivered to defendant on the 7th April, and defendant took possession of the same, and agreed to pay the purchase price, viz., £150. Defendant had not paid the purchase price.

Defendant, in his plea, said that about the beginning of 1904 one Samuel Helm held the furniture, having obtained the same from plaintiffs on a hire purchase agreement. Thereafter, in March or April, 1904, Helm surrendered his estate as insolvent. Defendant subsequently bought at public auction the premises in question, together with certain furniture, but he denied having bought the goods belonging to plaintiffs. He said that he afterwards let the hotel to Helm, and that the goods remained in the possession of Helm during the whole time.

Plaintiffs, in their replication, admitted that defendant purchased the hotel, and that Helm was now occupying the premises. Plaintiffs repeated the allegation that defendant bought the goods in question.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gutsche), was for plaintiffs; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Struben), was for defendant.

Gysbert William Kotze, secretary of the Malmesbury Board of Executors, and an attorney of this court, said that Samuel Helm, senior, surrendered his estate as insolvent in February, 1904. Witness and Mr. Marais were trustees. Witness was the managing trustee, and he put Mr. Staples in charge of the hotel from the 23rd February until the sale. The hotel was furnished, but there was no billiard table at that time. Helm remained at the hotel, and told witness that the furniture now claimed belonged to plaintiffs. Helm told him that none of the instalments had been paid. Witness abandoned the furniture in question, which was set out in a list supplied by plaintiffs. Witness received instructions from Mr. Johnson, who represented plaintiffs at Malmesbury, to sell the furniture. He advertised the landed property and Helm's own property for sale. After the landed property and a few of the movables had been disposed of, witness pointed out the furniture of the hotel to Mr. Basson and said that the price would be £150. Defendant agreed to take the furniture, and said, "What about payment." Witness told him that he could pay in December, and that he would have to pay interest until the purchase price was paid. Witness saw defendant, who never repudiated the sale.

Cross-examined: Defendant had the reputation of being "long-winded" as regarded payments.

Frederick Salter Johnson, a commercial traveller in plaintiffs' employ, said that he instructed Mr. Kotze as regarded the sale of the goods. Witness saw Mr. Basson in the early part of April, some time before the public sale. Witness suggested to Basson that he should buy the goods, inasmuch as he understood that he would probably purchase the hotel. Basson said that he would buy the furniture. Subsequently Basson said that he had bought the goods at invoice price. Witness told him that he had got a bargain, because he (Mr. Johnson) had put the furniture in at a low price to Mr. Helm, and he would also save the cost of carriage from Cape Town.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Johannes Matthys Michiel Basson (defendant) said that he let the hotel and certain of the furniture to Helm for about £20 for the first month, and £21 per month afterwards, having fixed a billiard table there. Helm had been in possession of the hotel practically ever since witness bought it. Witness denied that he bought the furniture in question from Mr. Kotze. He remembered having had a conversation with Mr. Kotze in regard to the second bond that he (witness) held on the premises, but he had not entered into negotiations with Mr. Kotze for the purchase of the furniture belonging to plaintiffs. He did not ascertain until after he had bought the hotel that the furniture in question was the property of Woodhead, Plant and Co.

Cross-examined: He did not speak to

Mr. Johnson about the furniture before the sale. He did not know before the sale that Helm only owned a little furniture. He had not had an intention of carrying on the hotel. After Mr. Helm had asked him to let the house to him, he said that certain of the furniture belonged to Woodhead, Plant and Co., and that he would try to arrange with Mr. Johnson to secure the goods from Woodhead, Plant and Co. Helm did not afterwards tell him whether he had arranged with Johnson.

Mr. Searle: In other words, you expected to let an hotel fully furnished without buying the furniture?

Witness: No. If I had known it was necessary to buy, I could have done it.

Samuel Helm, the lessee of the Central Hotel, Malmesbury, said that the furniture in question was not included in the agreement of lease on which he took over the hotel from defendant. He had never regarded the furniture as included in the agreement. Witness had made no attempt to obtain another hire purchase agreement from Woodhead, Plant and Co. About two months afterwards Johnson told him that Basson was going to take over the furniture.

Cross-examined: The furniture in dispute practically comprised the whole furniture of the hotel. Witness had furniture in his own private rooms. Plaintiffs' furniture was still at the hotel.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Mr. Burton having been heard in argument, without calling on Mr. Searle:

Buchanan, A.C.J., after reviewing the circumstances leading up to the alleged sale and the chief points of the evidence, said that had there been any conversation admitted by Basson in regard to this furniture there might have been some ground for saying that Kotze had misunderstood the effect of the conversation, but the defendant said that he did not remember having had any conversation either with Kotze or Johnson about this furniture. It seemed extraordinary, if the furniture were not sold with the insolvent estate that there had been a sale of the hotel without any sale of the furniture, and that nothing whatever should have been done. Sitting as a juror in this matter, the weight of evidence, it seemed to him, was conclusively on the side of the plaintiffs, and he thought that the plaintiffs had established the fact that their furniture, which was in the hotel, had been bought by defendant from Kotze on the 7th April last, and defendant must now pay for it. Judgment would be given for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed, with interest a tempore moræ at the rate of 6 per cent., from date of summons, and costs of suit.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

HERRON V. TORQUE CO. AND OTHERS. { 1905.
July 5th.
" 7th.
Aug. 2nd.
" 14th.

Joint Stock Company with limited liability—One man company—Dummy and nominee shareholders.

N., having obtained certain rights under a contract with a company, called the Trades, Markets and Exhibitions Company, for the lighting of stalls at the Exhibition, was unable, through want of funds, to carry out the contract. H. was prepared to join in the venture and supply the necessary funds if he could limit his liability in the matter through the instrumentality of a company, with limited liability. Consequently N. and H., together with five other shareholders, formed a company, in which these five shareholders held only one share each, the bulk of the shares being held by N. and H. N. and H., as directors, managed the entire business of the company without reference to the other shareholders. This business consisted entirely in carrying out the contract above mentioned under agreement between the company and N.

Held, that there was nothing illegal in the constitution of the company; and that H. was entitled under the law to limit his liability in respect of the business transacted under the contract in the manner adopted.

This was an action brought by George Frederick Herron, an engineer, at present of Cape Town, against Edmund William McLachlan Thomas, in his capacity as trustee in the insolvent estate, the British General Electrical Company, the Telegraph Manufacturing Company (Colonial), Ltd., Stewards and Lloyds (S.A.), Ltd., and Siemens, Ltd., all of Cape Town, to have an order of sequestration superseded and discharged against the plaintiff, for a preferent claim for £1,000 in respect of two dynamos pledged to the plaintiff, and £2,500 damages.

The declaration set out that on a petition the Torque Electrical Company was provisionally sequestered, and among five partners the name of the plaintiff was included. On the return of the summons in connection with the making of the order final, the plaintiff appeared, and filed a short affidavit denying he was a partner in the Torque Company. The Court pronounced final sequestration against all the partners, but gave leave to the plaintiff to bring an action to prove he was not a partner. The last four defendants maliciously instituted proceedings in insolvency against the plaintiff as a member of the Torque Company, and caused the plaintiff's name to be included in the order of sequestration. The plaintiff had never been a partner of the Torque Company, and never held himself out as such, but on the contrary he frequently represented to the last four defendants that he was not such a partner, and by reason of his name appearing he had suffered damages in £2,500. On the 10th November, 1904, the plaintiff agreed with the Torque Company to endorse a bill for the sum of £1,000, the said company undertaking to deliver three dynamos to the plaintiff as security. The plaintiff had ultimately to repay the amount to the bank. After the sequestration the first-named defendant took possession of the dynamos, and the plaintiff claimed to rank as a preferent creditor to the amount of £1,000, for an order declaring the plaintiff not a partner, and superseding the final order of sequestration against him as against the first defendant, and as against the last four defendants' judgment for the sum of £2,500, with costs.

The defendants, in their plea, admitted the order of sequestration, but submitted that the claim for damages was bad in law and disclosed no ground of action. The proceedings were not maliciously taken, but were bona fide, and taken on reasonable cause. The Torque Company commenced business in Cape Town in September, 1904. The business was conducted by the plaintiff and Neale, both of whom gave orders to the Torque Company for goods to be supplied, and in general the plaintiff carried on the business, and led the defendants to believe that he was a partner in the Torque Company, which had a contract to supply light to the Cape Town Exhibition. The defendants did not admit that the plaintiff paid the company the said money, or that the company delivered the dynamos to the plaintiff. The defendants further alleged that the pledge was made when the company's liabilities exceeded its assets, and at a time when insolvency was contemplated, and was, therefore, undue preference, under the Insolvency Ordinance. In recconvention they claimed that the pledge should be set aside. The replication denied that the plaintiff carried on or conducted the business, or that he led the defendants to believe he was a partner in the company. The Nealeron Company was formed to assist the Torque Company with the contract.

Mr. Alexander (with him Mr. Lewis) for the plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for defendant.

Sir H. Juta raised the objection that no claim could be put in for maliciously causing the proceedings to be instituted until the order had been set aside.

Maasdorp, J., said now that the witnesses were here, it would be better to let that case go on, and the question could be left over for the present.

George Frederick Herron, plaintiff, stated that in the early part of last year he came into contact with Neale, who told witness that he wanted £2,000 to carry out a contract in Cape Town, and asked witness to join him. Witness said he could join Neale without being a partner, as he wished to limit his liability, and after some argument this was agreed to. After several interviews it was finally decided to form a subsidiary company to take over the contract of the Torque Company and finance the Torque Company. The limited company took the name "Nealeron" as a combination of witness's and Neale's names. Witness had 2,000 £1 shares, which he paid for. Under the contract 4,000 5s. shares were to be given as consideration to Mr. Neale. The nominal capital of the company was £3,005, made up as follows: 2,005 £1 shares and 4,000 5s. shares. In consideration of the agreement between the Torque Company and Nealeron, Ltd., the contractor was to have the 4,000 5s. shares. Witness formed the company in order to limit his liability to £2,000. Witness came out to South Africa with Neale, partly to look after the contract. Witness was generally down at the Exhibition looking after the technical work, and any accounts that came to him he signed "p.p. Torque Electrical Engineering Company.—G. F. Herron." The names of the Torque Electrical Engineering Company and that of Neale were exhibited outside as well as inside the stand. Nealeron, Ltd., practically paid all the money in disbursements on behalf of the Torque Company. The contract was not a profitable one, and finally the Exhibition Company took it over. Witness had a written agreement with Neale with regard to the pledging of the dynamos for security on witness endorsing a bill for £1,000. Witness put a plate on the dynamos bearing his name. He told all the representatives of the defendants that he was not a partner. They all at different times asked him if he was a partner. The only person witness had transactions with was Neale, and the only transaction with Neale was in respect of these 2,000 shares. When the contract was taken over by the Exhibition people witness remained in Cape Town. He first heard that he was included in the proceedings on the morning of the 27th January, the day after summons was issued. Witness went and saw the summons on the door of the Torque office, and there he saw his name. He received no intimation at his address at Sea Point that these proceedings were being taken. No application was ever made to him individually for payments of the debts of the company. He left Cape Town for Durban on January 27. Before leaving he swore a short affidavit. He was not here while the sequestration proceedings were on. On his return he was informed of the order, and he remained here in order to bring this action. He had been obliged to stay here for six months, and his wife also had remained. He claimed £10 a month for expenses; £200 for loss of directors' fees in two companies in England; £100 for loss of directorship, owing to being disqualified by reason of absence; £40 for telegrams and incidentals; and £750 as damages for loss of credit and injury to business. He had made up a rough statement, showing that he had sustained damage to the amount of £1,400. The dynamos were of the value of £1,000, and there was about £900 in book debts. Mr. J. E. P. Close had drawn up a balance-sheet, and made a report.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The Nealeron Company was not registered in this Colony; nor had the company an office here. The liabilities were incurred by the Torque Company, and all the money was received by the Nealeron Company. That was according to contract. Neale formerly carried on business in London as the Torque Engineering Company. Witness knew Neale carried on business here as the Torque Company. There was only one book—the petty cash-book—kept by the Nealeron Company in Cape Town. It was difficult to tell where the Nealeron Company ended and the Torque Company commenced. Neale got the contract with the Exhibition Company for himself, and witness thought it was a good thing. He was willing to put £2,000 into the concern, so long as he had his share of the profits, but should not have any more liability than £2,000. The floating of the Nealeron Company was a means towards limiting his liability. As regarded the position of the Nealeron Company, it had nothing except three calls of £1 each. He had drawn upon the Nealeron Company for expenses. He did not agree with Neale if the latter said he drew in anticipation of future dividends. A box of cigars might be said to be expenses. Whisky, lunches, picnics, etc., might also be put down as expenses, although he knew nothing about the picnic. He had the ordinary authority of a director for drawing money out of the funds of the Nealeron Company. It was agreed before they left England that they should draw £10 a month expenses. There were meetings of the Nealeron Company in the office of Neale's solicitor—Mr. Reynolds—before they came out, but he could not say whether the directors were authorised at that meeting to come to the Cape. He believed there was authority given to the directors at a meeting to draw money. He did not remember whether it was an arrangement between Neale and himself that they should draw £10 a month; at any rate, there were three shareholders present when the matter was discussed. He could not say whether it was done at a meeting of the company. He could not say that there was a statutory meeting of the company to authorise the payment of his wife's fare out to South Africa, and also that of Mrs. Neale. The dynamos were not only necessary for supplying the electric light, but they were sent out as exhibits. They were not used, however. Neale told witness that they were his. Witness put his plates on at night after the lights had been turned off, as he did not want anybody to know at that time that he was taking the dynamos over.

Re-examined by Mr. Alexander: All the money received by the Nealeron Company was used to pay off the debts of the Torque Company.

William Hanks Ransford, clerk in charge of the bill department of the Standard, produced entries from the overdue bill account.

Cross-examined: The Nealeron Company bought a draft and paid £5 10s. 1d. for it.

Re-examined: It was really the Bank that bought the draft, and took Mr. Herron's signature as security.

Edwin Barron Lumm, from the office of Mr. J. E. P. Close, said he had inspected the various accounts at the instance of Mr. Herron, and had drawn up a report. He had also drawn up a balance-sheet for the Nealeron Company, which showed that the receipts from the exhibitors, rent, and cash received from the Torque Company amounted to £1,015 13s. The receipt-book showed receipts at £11,095 8s., and there was an amount received from the Exhibition for which no receipts were given amounting to £162 17s. 4d., making a total of £1,258 5s. 4d., and giving a difference of £242 12s. 4d. He found, however, that a sum of £295 17s. 6d. was paid into the Torque Company's account, which never reached the Nealeron Company, which made the difference £53 5s. 2d. This he could not account for. Nothing has been paid by the Nealeron Company towards the purchase price of the dynamos. As regards the draft for £1,000, he had found that the money had passed through the account. There was no doubt that Mr. Herron put in £2,000. The total receipts of the company amounted to £4,034. Including the £2,000 in shares, and making allowance for the thousand pounds, the expenditure of the Nealeron Company exceeded the income by £3,019 0s. 10d.

By the Court: The Nealeron Company had the benefit of the thousand pounds draft, and certain payments were made to the Torque Company.

Examination continued: The money was undoubtedly used to pay the Torque Company's creditors.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: In witness's balance-sheet the liabilities of the Nealeron Company were shown, and Herron was included as a creditor for £1,000, cash advanced. Among the items was a sum of £50 paid for raising capital. Witness understood that this was commission on account of the £2,000 found by Herron.

The Sheriff's Officer, who served the summons on the 31st December, said that Herron's name was not on the summons. Witness was unable to find the other defendants, and affixed the summons to the door of the office. Subsequently he had another summons with Herron's name as a partner.

Edward G. C. Jones, electrical and mechanical engineer, practising at Cape Town, said he had examined one of the two dynamos connected with the case. There were two generators, which he valued at £1,111. He, however, allowed 10 per cent. to the maker for disposing of it, so that the net value of the generators would be £1,000.

Cross-examined by Sir Henry Juta: He had given the English value of the generators. The South African value would be more.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Edward W. McL. Thomas, the trustee in the insolvent estate of the Torque Company, said when he took over the affairs of the company the only book he found was a petty cash-book. At the Exhibition, in the space set aside for the Torque Company, he found two dynamos, one of which he sold after the Exhibition was over. He sold the dynamo, which was the smaller of the two, for £160. He knew of no proof of debt put in by Herron. Thomas. Parker and Co., the manufacturers, had put in a claim for the generators. The total amount of the claims put in at the several meetings amounted to £2,640 5s. 10d., whilst the assets so far had only realised about £500. On the 10th November the position of the company, so far as could be seen from the books, was that there was a deficiency of £647 15s. 9d., but that did not include in the assets the dynamos about which there was a dispute.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: He did not remember receiving the letter from the plaintiff warning him not to sell the dynamos. Witness did not expect the plaintiff to file a claim. There was a claim pending between the Torque Estate against the Exhibition Company. He held that the true value of the assets in the estate was about one-tenth of the cost price. In making up the account, he took "Nealeron" and the "Torque" to be one and the same thing. On the 10th November, the position was that there was £689 5s. 8d. to the credit of "Nealeron" in the Standard Bank. The Torque would have been solvent if the goods were taken at cost price; in fact, there would be a surplus on that basis.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: If the credit of the "Nealeron" on the 10th November was not taken in the deficiency would be much greater in the case of the "Torque." The English books showed an account with the "Nealeron," goods supplied to the "Nealeron" and moneys received from the exhibitors due to the Torque.

Frank Cook, one of the proprietors of F. Cook and Co., Cape Town, stated that the plaintiff was introduced by Lee to witness as one of the partners in the Torque Company. Witness heard that the Torque Company had trouble with another firm, and interviewed the plaintiff, who assured him that he would be paid, and the work of building in the boilers was undertaken by witness. The plaintiff again told the witness that he was a partner in the firm. When the work was finished, plaintiff repeatedly promised to pay, but failed to do so. He knew nothing of the "Nealeron" Company.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: Witness looked upon Lee as a clerk in the firm; he never saw Neale. The plaintiff assured witness that the Torque was a well-to-do company in London. Lee wrote on behalf of the Torque Company accepting the witness's estimate. Witness addressed all his correspondence to the company; it was not necessary to mention the plaintiff's name.

Archibald J. G. Simpson, manager of Siemens, Ltd., said he had been introduced to plaintiff as "Mr. Herron, of the Torque Company." At that time, witness had heard nothing about the "Nealeron" Company. He considered that Herron, from the manner in which he conducted himself, was a partner in the Torque Company.

By Mr. Alexander: Plaintiff had never told him that he was partner of the Torque Company.

Walter Lee said he entered the Torque Company and came out to South Africa with Herron and Neale. An office was taken in Cape Town, and Herron was mostly in the office and at the office of the Exhibition. Witness kept the petty cash book. He did not know for certain until a week before Christmas that there was a registered company called "Nealeron." He considered Herron was a person greatly interested in the carrying out of the contract at the Exhibition. The dynamos were put down for the Torque Company. He remembered Herron putting the brass plate on about ten days before Christmas.

Thomas William McEwen, Cape Colony manager of the Telegraph Manufacturing Company, said when plaintiff came to his office he introduced himself as "Mr. Herron, of the Torque Company." Plaintiff wanted to see some samples, with a view to placing business with witness's firm. Plaintiff did not explain his position in the company, and when witness was dealing with the plaintiff, he looked upon him as a partner in the Torque.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: Although he was not a partner in the company, he would describe himself "of the Telegraph Company." Before supplying the goods, he made inquiries about the Torque Company's standing. One of the bank managers informed him that they were still awaiting a report about the Torque Company from London. The greater part of the goods had been supplied before he heard of "Nealeron." From the general conversation with the plaintiff, he concluded that he was a partner.

Edward Kitch, Cape Town manager to Clark and Co., Ltd., who entered into a contract with the Torque Company for light, stated that one cheque was paid to "Nealeron" and two to "Torque."

The evidence on commission of Walter Philip, director of the British General Electric Company and manager in Cape Town, set out that plaintiff gave him some orders for the Torque Company. He was not aware of the "Nealeron" while he was getting the orders. Witness subsequently told the plaintiff that he believed the "Torque" and the "Nealeron" were the same company. He knew of no other way of the Torque Company getting money if the stallholders did not pay for the light. The company, in his opinion, was formed to swallow up the proceeds, and he believed the "Nealeron" and the "Torque" were one and the same thing.

Cornelius Johannes Muller, of the Insolvency Branch, produced the records on which the sequestration was granted.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Sir H. Juta said there was evidence taken on commission of Neale which, however, he did not propose to put in.

Mr. Alexander said that the witness Neale was in court, and he submitted that either the evidence must go in or Neale called by the defence as a witness.

Sir H. Juta said supposing it was found after the evidence was taken on commission that the witness was hostile, the defence could not be expected to call him, and now that he was in court the evidence on commission could not be put in.

Maasdorp, J., said that under the circumstances he thought Neale's evidence should be put in.

Sir H. Juta said it might be as well now that Neale was in the court to see how he looked in the box.

John Edward D. Neale was then called, and in reply to questions by Mr. Alexander, stated that he gave the rights of the Exhibition contract to the Nealeron Company. When he first met plaintiff, and spoke about the company, witness suggested that Herron should go into partnership, but Herron refused to do that. Herron said he would "go in" if his liability was limited. Witness, when they came to Cape Town, took an office in St. George's-street, and Herron was often in there looking after his interests as a shareholder. Herron had nothing to do with the Torque Company. Herron had charge of the technical work at the Exhibition.

Questioned by Sir Henry Juta, the witness said he knew a director could not appropriate the funds of a company to pay his own private debts. The £50 paid to the broker for obtaining someone to advance £2,000, he did not consider a private debt. Herron had to take instructions from witness with regard to the work at the Exhibition. A sum of £52 10s. in respect of the tuition fees of a learner—Rex—was paid into Mrs. Neale's account. This sum was witness's own personal property. Witness had given a bill in payment for the dynamos. The bill had not fallen due yet.

By Mr. Alexander: The fifty-two guineas paid by Rex was included in a sum subsequently paid into the account.

Postea (July 7th).

Sir H. Juta applied that the order of sequestration granted by the Court against the members of the Torque Company be discharged as against Forbes, Griffiths and Billiotti. He applied on behalf of the petitioning creditors, and the three persons he had mentioned were not, as the evidence in the case disclosed, partners in the firm, in so far as concerned transactions in South Africa.

Maasdorp, J., said the order would be varied by striking out the names of Forbes, Griffiths and Billiotti.

Postea (August 14th).

Maasdorp, J.: Upon the position of the four last-named defendants in this case, the estate of the Torque Electrical Engineering Company, of Cape Town, consisting of five partners, being Neale, Forbes, Griffiths, Billiotti, and the plaintiff, was finally adjudicated as insolvent on the 9th day of February, 1905. When the motion for final adjudication was heard, the plaintiff appeared to oppose on the ground that he was not a partner in the business, and he prayed that the provisional order should be discharged so far as he was concerned. The Court confirmed the provisional order generally, leaving it to the plaintiff to have his position in the matter decided by action to be by him instituted. This action has accordingly been brought, and the plaintiff alleges in his declaration that he is not a partner in the company, and prays that his name may be struck out of the final order of adjudication. As against the creditors who obtained the order he claims damages on the ground that the legal proceedings were as against him instituted by them maliciously. He further claims to rank as a preferent creditor upon the insolvent estate in respect of a debt due to him received by the pledge of certain machinery. The defendants plead that the Torque Company commenced business in Cape Town in or about September, 1904, and opened an office in St. George's-street, a business which was conducted by plaintiff and the said Neale, and, further, that the plaintiff carried on the business and conducted himself in such a way as to lead the defendants to believe bona-fide that he was a partner in the said company. They further deny that the insolvent estate is indebted to the plaintiff, and that the machinery was legally pledged to him, and they say that if the machinery was pledged, such pledge is null and void under the terms of sections 83 and 84 of Act No. 6 of 1843. The first point the Court has to decide is whether the plaintiff was a partner in the business of the Torque Company, or whether anything was done by him to render him liable to be treated as a partner for the purposes of proceedings in insolvency. The question is simplified somewhat by the admission made at the trial on the part of the defendants that they are now satisfied that Forbes, Griffiths, and Billiotti were not partners in the Torque Company's business, and only Neale and the plaintiff have to be considered in this case. It appears that on the 12th day of February, 1904, an agreement was entered into between a company called the Trades Markets and Exhibitions, Limited, and John Edward Neale, carrying on business as the Torque Electrical Engineering Company, in London, the main purpose of which was to give to the second contracting party upon the terms stated the right of lighting exhibition stalls by electricity in the exhibition buildings at Cape Town upon terms to be made with exhibitors. Neale was not possessed of the means to carry out the contract, and in going round to find the necessary funds he made the acquaintance of the plaintiff, whom he told that he required £2,000 for the business, asking him at the same time to join him. Neale suggested that they should go into partnership, but the plaintiff refused. The plaintiff was willing to join in carrying out the contract if he could do so without becoming a partner, and if by any means he could limit his liability in the concern. It was then suggested that that purpose could be effected through the instrumentality of a limited liability company, duly incorporated and registered. A company was accordingly formed, consisting then, and still consisting, of seven shareholders, whose names appear in the memorandum of association. One of the objects of the company, appearing in the memorandum, is to enter into partnership, or into any arrangement for sharing profits with any person or company engaged in any business the company is authorised to engage in. Under the further Articles of Association No. 5 it is provided that the company shall enter into and carry into effect either with or without modification an agreement which has already been prepared, and is expressed to be made between the company and John Edward Neale. The company was duly registered in England, and on the 28th day of May, 1904, the directors of the company, entitled Nealeron, Limited and Neale, formally executed the contract referred to in the Articles of Association, and the contract was duly filed in the office of the Registrar of joint stock companies. Under the contract Neale obtained 4,000 B shares, and in substance the agreement amounts to an undertaking on the part of Nealeron, Limited, to pay the working expenses of the Torque Company in consideration of Neale, carrying on business as the Torque Company, duly and regularly accounting to Nealeron, Limited, for all sums receivable by him under the agreement with the Trades, Markets, and Exhibitions, Limited. I may mention here that the shareholders in the Nealeron Company were Herron, the holders of two thousand "A" shares; Neale, the holder of four thousand "B" shares; Reynolds, a solicitor; Du Bois, a solicitor; Tofts and Smith, both solicitors' clerks, and Passmore, a solicitor's articulated clerk. The last five were the holders of one share each. Neale and Herron were elected directors of the company, and they seem to have transacted the business of the company without going through the formality of holding regular meetings, and recording the minutes of their proceedings. It was contended that for the purposes of the contract entered into between the Nealeron Company and Neale, carrying on business as the Torque Company, the former company might be regarded a negligible quantity, being a mere sham, or a scheme and contrivance to cover the personality of Herron, and to shelter him from responsibilities legally resulting from the business relationship entered into by him with Neale. It was argued that the constitution of the company and the circumstances under which it was formed were such as to reveal the company in its true light as a mere ingenious device, which the law would not recognise. It is enough to say that the arguments advanced in this case are similar to those employed in the case of Solomon v. Solomon and Company, Limited (reported in the Appeal Cases of 1897, page 22). In that case the Court of appeal held that the formation of the company was a mere scheme to enable Solomon to carry on business in the name of the company with limited liability contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act. If a transaction of this sort could be denominated a scheme or device, then the device in the case of Solomon was of a far more glaring character than that in the present case. It was frankly admitted in this case that Herron was desirous of taking part in the Torque business, by contributing to its finances, and sharing the profits, if he could do so, with limited liability, and for that purpose he took advantage of what he considered were legal means afforded by the Companies Act, by entering into the business as one of the shareholders of a limited liability company. The House of Lords held that there was in law nothing objectionable in the formation of Solomons and Co., Ltd., or in the circumstances under which it was formed, and similar considerations lead me to conclude that Nealeron was a properly and legally constituted company, with limited liability. If Herron acted in Cape Town in the capacity of one of the directors of Nealeron, he might be answerable as such director, or he might have to bear his share of responsibility as a shareholder in Nealeron, but he incurred no personal liability. It was suggested that the position of foreign companies is not well defined in law, but however questionable it may be in other respects, it was definitely decided in the case of Bateman v. Service (5 Appeal Cases, 386) that in the case of a properly incorporated foreign company, the liabilities of shareholders in England in respect of business transacted there would be the same as in the foreign country. In the event, therefore, of its being decided that in his connection with the Torque Company Herron was acting for the Nealeron, he would incur no personal liability. I see no reason to doubt the veracity of either Herron or Neale in the evidence they gave. They seemed to put matters very frankly, even upon points which might tell against them. Now the question arises, did Herron act only in the business as director of Nealeron, or in a personal and individual capacity; was his connection with the business only through Nealeron, or was he a partner in the business? There is no necessity to labour this point, because it is perfectly clear that it was only possible to connect him directly with the Torque if Nealeron was eliminated as a necessity; if Nealeron stands, then his conduct is consistently explained. It was argued that, as the evidence showed that Neale and Herron acted in a very irregular manner in doing business without formal meetings of directors, and without minuting their proceedings they must be taken to have acted for themselves, without reference to any company; but that was one of the features in Solomons' case relied on without avail before the House of Lords. I cannot come to any other conclusion than that Herron acted in good faith throughout the whole business. He put in the £2,000 promised by him, and lent the Nealeron Company £1,000 more. There is no evidence that he gained any profits while the business was running, and in the end he was a heavy loser. I come to the conclusion that the contract between Nealeron and Neale was a valid contract, and neither directly nor in its legal results made Herron a partner of Neale in the Torque Company. The next question is whether Herron conducted himself so as to induce people generally to believe that he was a partner, and to give credit to the business on the strength of his being a partner, with the result that he is now estopped from denying his partnership. I repeat that his share in the working of the business is explained by his being largely interested in it under the Nealeron contract, and his position could have been ascertained upon inquiry. The business was described in the contract with the Exhibition Company as that of Neale, carrying on business as the Torque Company. Apart from the existence of the Nealeron Company, there was nothing in the conduct of Herron, or in the manner he carried on some of the correspondence, to lead to the necessary inference that he was a partner. He did not give himself out to the public as a partner, and if he made statements to two or three persons, which induced them to think that he was a partner, whatever estoppel might in consequence arise in their favour, Herron would not thereby become a partner in respect of creditors generally for the purposes of sequestration in insolvency. In that view of the case it is unnecessary to decide whether the two or three persons referred to were justified upon what Herron said to them in coming to the conclusion that he was a partner in so far as to stop him from denying it as against them. But, although I hold that Herron was no partner in Torque, and do not go into the question of estoppel, still circumstances did exist which led to the reasonable belief in the partner of the four last-mentioned defendants that Herron's interest in the business was such that he might in law be regarded as a partner, and I am of opinion that they did not act maliciously in the legal proceedings taken by them. The plaintiff sets up a claim against the insolvent estate of the Torque Company for £1,000, and also claims a right of pledge for this debt in respect of certain machinery. But it seems to me he has mistaken his remedy. The machinery for proving debts and setting up preferent claims is provided by the Insolvent Ordinance, and the plaintiff must proceed in the ordinary way. But I am quite prepared to express the opinion that the pledge was never validly constituted. The machinery remained in the possession, and under the control of Neale, and at the time of the alleged delivery was actually still in the course of erection for use by Neale. The Court will order that the final order of adjudication be varied by striking out the name of Herron as partner in the Torque Company. Defendants to pay the costs

Application granted and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

DELBIDGE V. HARRIS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, with costs.

Order granted.

RUNCIMAN AND CO. V. PEINER.

Mr. Gutsche moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final. Final order granted.

Mr. Gutsche afterwards moved for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the insolvent estate.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the application had not been set down, and could not, therefore, be heard now.

PICTON V. PERRINS.

Mr. Roux moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

WHITE, RYAN AND CO. V. JACOBS.

Mr. Swift moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

JONES V. UDWIN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,100, with premiums of insurance, etc., the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable, and for the rents of the property to be attached as they accrue.

Order granted as prayed.

COMMONWEALTH BOOT CO. V. VAN ROOYEN.

Mr. McGregor moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £78 18s. 1d., with interest.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

GIBBS V. HOGGARD. { 1905.
July 6th.

Mr. McGregor moved for judgment under Rule 319 in default of plea on a declaration filed for £144 1s. 2d., goods and materials sold, work and labour done, and disbursements.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones (for defendant) said that his client had given notice of application to purge default. Counsel read an affidavit by Mr. A. W. Steer, defendant's attorney, in support of the application, the ground being that there had been certain delay in preparing the plea, and that it had required to be printed.

Mr. McGregor read a replying affidavit by Mr. C. E. Price Hughes (plain-tiff's attorney), who said that the defendant was not barred from pleading until three days after the time had expired, and that he had given an extra day's indulgence, but the plea was not even then tendered. Counsel read a further affidavit by the plaintiff, who said that he was seriously prejudiced in his business by the delay.

Defendant was granted leave to purge default, plea to be filed within 24 hours, and defendant to pay costs.

FRIEDLANDER AND DU TOIT V. MYBURG.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £31 7s. 2d., balance of account for professional services rendered and money disbursed, with interest a tempore moræ and costs.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the release of the estate of John Brinton from sequestration.

Order of sequestration superseded and applicant reinvested with his estate.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

HARRIS V. EXECUTORS OF { 1905.
ESTATE HARRIS. { July 6th.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of plaintiff, Charlotte Ann Harris, and Mrs. Isabel Harvey, who, it was stated, were about to leave for England.

Application granted, Mr. Advocate Giddy, K.C., to be commissioner, and costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte CREDITORS IN ESTATE DE LANGE.

Mr. Benjamin moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of Mr. C. M. van Coller, attorney-at-law, as trustee in the insolvent estate of Stephanus de Lange, farmer, Cathcart.

Order granted, Mr. Van Coller to be provisional trustee, with powers as prayed.

Ex parte BOUWER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of a certain farm in the district of Queen's Town, in the names of James A. Bremner and N. Lionel Goldsmid.

Buchanan, A. O. J., said that he saw no need for the application to have been made, because the debts must be paid. An order would be granted as prayed. Petitioner was obliged to sell to pay the debts, and he would have a perfect right to sell.

Ex parte HANNAY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising petitioner to pass mortgage bond for £300 on certain property in the estate of her first husband, Vincent Arthur Hutt, deceased.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte LAWRENCE AND WIFE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to execute a certain contract embodying the provisions of an ante-nuptial agreement as if it had been an ante-nuptial contract, and for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register the same.

Leave granted to execute a contract embodying the provisions of the ante-nuptial agreement between the intending spouses, excluding community of property, and securing to the wife sole control of her own property, rights of creditors before the filing of such contract reserved.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE
MCNAUGHTON.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising the provisional trustee, Mr. H. Gibson, to proceed with the liquidation of the estate, the only asset being the Market Buildings, Sir Lowry-road.

Order granted as prayed.

In re THE COLONIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for confirmation of the liquidators' report.

Report confirmed as prayed.

IMPERIAL TOOL CO. V. GREEFF AND WALTERS.

Mr. Upington moved for an order of personal attachment against the respondents for failing to obey an order of this Court to file true and proper accounts of their dealings as agents of the plaintiffs in the collection of certain money. Defendants had carried on business as law agents at Laingsburg.

Application refused, his lordship holding that there had been no contempt on the part of the respondents.

Ex parte EXECUTRIX ESTATE KNOESEN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for an order sanctioning the sale of certain property in the district of Steytleville, and authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register the transfer.

Order granted as prayed.

SNYMAN AND OTHERS V. EXECUTOR ESTATE SNYMAN.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for an order for the removal of respondent, Karl Petrus Snyman, junior, from his office as executor of the estate. Respondent had become insolvent, and petitioners alleged that since his insolvency he had not exercised proper care and attention in the management of the estate.

The Court granted an order for the removal of the respondent, the Master being directed to take the necessary steps to appoint a tutor for the minors and an executor dative.

PLUMER V. PLUMER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for leave to the applicant to sue in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation. The applicant was the wife of the respondent.

Mrs. Plumer stated that her income was £1 a week, with which she maintained herself and children.

A rule nisi was granted calling on defendant to show cause why the plaintiff should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis, personal service to be made if possible, rule to be returnable on the 3rd August.

Postea (August 3rd). Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte THE EXECUTOR OF THE ESTATE OF TEMLETT.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising the purchase and registration of certain property sold to an executor dative. The affidavits of the vendor and the auctioneer showed that the sale was well advertised and the price realised satisfactory.

Order granted.

VILANDER CONCESSION SYNDICATE V.
COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The application was not opposed.

Leave was granted.

DELPOR V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Dr. Rainsford moved for arbitrators' award to be made a rule of Court.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones for the Government, consented.

Order granted.

BRADLEY AND CRAVEN V. RANER.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of certain witnesses in England. It was asked that the commission should be appointed in Wakefield.

Mr. Burton, for the respondent, said he did not oppose the application, but he would suggest that it would be better to appoint a commissioner in London. It would be difficult to know who to appoint in Wakefield.

The application was granted. Mr. D. G. Oliver, of London, to be commissioner.

Ex parte* BROLE.

Mr. Gutsche moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain properties. The consent of the heirs had been obtained.

Order granted.

APPLE V. THE DEPUTY SHERIFF.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from selling certain 15 horses. Petitioner alleged that the horses were his property, and that they had been seized in execution of a judgment against another person. He asked that the Deputy Sheriff should be restrained from selling the animals pending an action to decide the ownership.

Mr. Bisset opposed the application.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The sale to Apple is alleged to be a fictitious sale, but, on the affidavits, it is impossible to decide this question. The parties must call their witnesses, and it must be determined after hearing witnesses—it cannot be determined on affidavit—to whom these horses belonged. A prima facie case has been shown why the sale of these horses should be restrained, pending this action, which is to be instituted forthwith. Leave, however, will be reserved to the parties to arrange for the sale of these horses, on condition that the proceeds be paid into court, to abide the result of the action, costs to abide result of the action.

SPIERS AND CO. V. INSOLVENT ESTATE
I. AND J. HERMANN.

Mr. Upington moved (1) for leave to sign judgment against the plaintiffs for not proceeding with the action within the time fixed by rules of Court; (2) for the rule nisi to be set aside; (3) for the sum of £120 deposited in court on behalf of the estate I. and J. Hermann to be paid over; and (4) for costs to be paid by plaintiffs.

Order granted, giving leave to applicants to sign judgment for the £120 paid into court to be returned, and for the rule nisi to be discharged.

STONE AND GIDDY V. SATISKY.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for an order to aid the jurisdiction of the Eastern Districts Court in directing a certain writ against the goods of Max Satsky, who was now at Willowmore, and was formerly at East London.

Order granted as prayed.

In re* DUSSEAU AND CO.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for confirmation of the official liquidators' report.

Order granted, ordering that all claims against the company be filed within six weeks from this date, that the name of Mr. Hoogendoorn be placed on the list of shareholders for 50 shares only, and that the list of shareholders so amended be settled as the list of contributories; that calls on shares not fully paid up be paid on or before the 1st August, and that the remuneration of liquidators be fixed at 5 per cent. of the amount received by them.

Ex parte* TRUSTEE, THE ZULU AND KAFIR WAR SUFFERERS' RELIEF FUND.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on the petition of the Hon. Alfred Ebdon and the Rev. Rice Thomas, as surviving trustee and hon. secretary respectively of this fund, for a certain order. The petitioners said that about the month of January, 1879, a committee was formed in Cape Town to collect and administer funds for the relief of sufferers by the Zulu War, the money so collected and administered being afterwards styled the Zulu and Kafir War Sufferers' Relief Fund. Sums amounting to £9,066 were collected in this colony and in England on behalf of the said fund. The whole amount of the moneys had been disbursed in relief of the sufferers, with the exception of £1,000, which had been invested by the executive committee in Government 4½ perpetual stock on behalf of the fund, and a further sum of about £136 now standing to the credit of the fund in the Standard Bank in Cape Town. The Venerable Archdeacon Lightfoot and the first-named petitioner were appointed trustees for the said investment of £1,000. The Venerable Archdeacon Lightfoot was now deceased. The sufferers, for whom the £1,000 was invested, and who annually received payments from the interest, were nearly all deceased. In paragraph 7 of the petition the petitioners suggested that the £1,000 invested as aforesaid be retained as a nucleus of a fund for any similar emergency in the future, and that the annual interest therefrom be disbursed as follows: (a) The sum of £18 per annum to the present annuitant; (b) the balance, after deducting administrative charges, to be equally divided among certain six widows of soldiers killed in the Zulu War of 1879, whose names were set forth in the annexed memorandum marked "a," and who were now residing in this colony, to supplement a small grant which they received from another fund. In paragraph 8 the petitioners further suggested that any money which may from time to time accrue, by reason of the decease of the said widows or any of them, be paid to the general fund of the New Somerset Hospital, Cape Town. The petitioners were desirous of being relieved of their responsibility under the said trust fund, and suggested that the South African Association for the Administration and Settlement of Estates be appointed trustees of the said fund. The association were willing to accept this trust. The petitioners prayed for an order (a) releasing them from the trust, and (b) appointing the South African Association as trustees of the relief fund, with full power to such association to retain the capital of the fund, consisting of the £1,000 invested as aforesaid and the amount standing to the credit of the fund in the Standard Bank for any similar emergency as referred to in paragraph 7 of the petition, and to pay the annual interest derived therefrom in manner as set forth in paragraphs 7 and 8.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: This is an old matter in which the public are more or less interested, and some notice ought to be given to the public. You may take a rule nisi calling upon all persons interested to show cause on the 3rd August why (a) petitioners should not be relieved of their trust; (b) the South African Association should not be appointed trustees of the balance of the fund; (c) the interest derived from the said balance should not be distributed as recommended in the petition; and (d) payment of costs of the application should not come out of the fund, rule to be published once in the "Cape Times" and once in "Ons Land."

Postea (August 3rd). Rule made absolute.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TABLE BAY HARBOUR BOARD { 1905.
V. CITY LINE, LTD. { July 7th.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for the defendants, applied for a postponement of the trial and for a commission to take certain evidence. Counsel said that, while the City of Perth was being taken out of the Cape Town Harbour under compulsory pilotage, it struck and damaged one of the quays. The Harbour Board supplied the compulsory pilot, and the Board relied upon two regulations. The first regulation was that the employment of a pilot was compulsory when a vessel left the docks, and that the Board was not responsible for the failing of any such pilot, and the second regulation was that the masters and owners of a vessel should be liable for any damage to quay's fittings, etc., whether such damage was done directly or indirectly by the ship. The defendants pleaded that the ship was under the control of the pilot supplied by the Board, without which the ship could not leave the docks. The defendants did not admit that the pilot was competent, and the pilot was suspended shortly after the accident had occurred. Defendants further pleaded that the regulations were unreasonable and ultra vires, and it clearly became necessary to obtain the evidence of the master and officers of the ship, which would be in Glasgow at the end of September.

Mr. Searle thought the evidence would show that there might have been an error of judgment on the part of the pilot.

Maasdorp, J., ordered that the case be postponed sine die, and that a commission be appointed to take evidence of the master and officers of the City of Perth at Glasgow, the costs to be costs in the cause.

Subsequently Sir H. Juta asked that Mr. Robert Scott Browne, advocate, of Edinburgh, be appointed commissioner.

The Court made an order accordingly.

SECOND DIVISION.

CHANNING V. CHANNING. { 1905
{ July 7th.

This was an action brought by Janet Channing, of Woodstock, against her husband, Matthew Channing, whose whereabouts are unknown, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce. Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Hopley, J., said that there appeared to have been some irregularity in the matter of publication, because the rule was not published in the "Gazette" at least one calendar month before the return day, as required by the rule of Court.

Mr. Buchanan said that some delay had been occasioned by correspondence with the railway authorities in Natal and the War Office in Cape Town, in order, if possible, to effect personal service on defendant. He submitted that the irregularity was purely technical, and that it would not be likely to make any practical difference, since the defendant had not been heard of for five years, having been a member of the Railway Pioneers.

Hopley, J., said he was sorry that another delay must occur, but he had no alternative but to decline to hear the case at present. The return day would be extended until the 15th August, rule to be published once again in the "Gazette."

Ex parte ROSE.

Mr. Roux moved, on the petition of Marcus Rose, general dealer, Prieska, for a temporary interdict restraining the Registrar of Deeds from passing transfer of erf No. 120, situate in the village of Prieska, from Walter Percy Shutte and Sidney Richard Shutte, trading as Shutte Bros., to one Leopold Rose, until recently trading in partnership with the petitioner as Rose and Rose, pending an action to be instituted as to the legality of the sale of the erf to Leopold Rose.

Interdict granted as prayed, pending result of an action to be forthwith instituted by petitioner against Shutte Bros., or any other parties whom petitioner may be advised to sue.

GREENWOOD V. DE VILLIERS. { 1905.
July 7th.
" 20th.

Sale and purchase — Broker —
Identity of property sold.

This was an action brought by James Henry Greenwood, builder, Observatory-road, against Frances E. de Villiers, wife of Daniel J. de Villiers, of 182, Lower Main-road, Observatory-road, for an order requiring her to take transfer of certain property.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that defendant was married without community of property to Daniel Johannes de Villiers, and was by him duly assisted in this action. In January, 1905, plaintiff was owner of certain land and four houses situate thereon in Lower Main-road, Observatory. On or about the 13th January, 1905, plaintiff sold and defendant bought a portion of land, with house thereon, No. 188, Lower Main-road, for £500, the terms being £100 in cash and balance in two mortgage bonds, a first bond of £200 and a second bond of £200, defendant agreeing to pay off the bonds in monthly instalments. Thereafter, on the 20th January, the parties agreed to substitute for the house and land defendant had bought other land and house, being No. 182, Lower Main-road. Defendant had paid £100 on account, but refused to take transfer of the land and house No. 182, which she had bought. Plaintiff tendered transfer of the property against passing of mortgage bonds. He claimed an order requiring defendant to take transfer of the property No. 182, Lower Main-road, and to pass mortgage bonds for the balance, or, in the alternative, cancellation of the sale, £100 damages, and costs.

Defendant, in her plea, denied that she bought the property No. 188, Lower Main-road, but said that she bought No. 182, including the portion on the diagram above the black line marked "E" and "L" bounded by the red dotted line, which showed the position of the fence at the back. She denied the alleged substitution of the properties set out in paragraph 2 of the declaration. She admitted having paid £100, and also that she refused to take transfer of the property, but she said that she had tendered for and was willing to take transfer of the property actually sold to her by plaintiff. She had tendered to complete her part of the purchase. She prayed that the claim might be dismissed with costs. For a claim in reconvention she said that she had been put to considerable trouble and expense by the failure of the plaintiff to transfer to her the property she had actually bought, and she claimed damages in the sum of £100 and costs.

Plaintiff, in his replication, denied that he sold the property No. 182, in the first instance, and he also denied that he sold to defendant the portion of ground on No. 182, which she alleged she had purchased.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Barly) was for the plaintiff; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. De Waal) was for defendant.

Mr. Gardiner said that the issue, briefly, seemed to be that plaintiff said there was to be the common passage shown on the diagram, while she denied that, and said that she bought from plaintiff the land forming the passage. The whole question was whether or not plaintiff sold to defendant the piece of ground mentioned.

Thomas Sloan, broker, Cape Town, said that in January this year Mr. Greenwood placed with him for sale the property known as 188, Lower Main-road, Observatory. Witness saw Mrs. De Villiers, who was then Miss Kotze.

Witness's wife went with Mrs. De Villiers to look at the property. Subsequently witness drew up a broker's note, and this was signed and accepted. About a fortnight afterwards defendant said she would like to exchange for the house occupied by Mr. Greenwood, who, she understood, was prepared to move out of No. 182. Witness explained to her that on account of the municipal regulations the fence of the yard might have to be set back to the line of the house, in order to provide a sanitary passage. The defendant understood that the land she was buying was in a line with the house. Defendant agreed to buy No. 182 on these terms. Defendant came and occupied No. 184 until Mr. Greenwood could move out of No. 182, and she subsequently went into occupation of No. 182, and was now residing there. Witness had a conversation with defendant after the sale, and she then raised no objection to the property.

Cross-examined: He was not aware that objection was raised to the alleged encroachment shown on her property immediately the diagram was sent to her. He was not aware that her attorneys wrote on the 10th April stating that the common passage marked on the diagram not only took away a portion of her property at the back enclosed in the zinc fence, but the line or passage was against the wall and windows of her house. Witness would swear that he asked his wife to go and show defendant and Mr. De Villiers the property No. 188, Lower Main-road. He admitted that defendant was shown through No. 182, which was a similar house to No. 188.

Mrs. Sloan (wife of the last witness) said that in January Mr. Sloan had for sale 188, 186, and 184, Lower Main-road, and that they showed to would-be customers No. 182 as a sample house. Mr. Sloan offered an option of any of the three first houses at that time, and told defendant that if she wished she could have No. 182 afterwards. Witness told her that No. 182 was not for sale at that time, but might be afterwards when Mr. Greenwood vacated. Witness told her of the possibility of the fence having to be set back. There was some question of plaintiff buying No. 182 before the broker's note was made, and witness told her that she would have to wait for it, but plaintiff was in a hurry to get things settled up.

James Henry Greenwood (plaintiff) said that Mr. Sloan was instructed to sell No. 184, 186, and 188, and when he had sold these he could sell No. 182. Witness consented to the exchange of 182 for 188, and he consented to Mrs. De Villiers occupying 184 in the meanwhile. Witness saw Mrs. De Villiers about the fence, and she gave him an open letter to take to her attorneys, stating that she fully understood the position. Defendant read that letter to him. Defendant was afterwards informed that if she refused to take transfer, witness was prepared to cancel the sale, and return the £100, less an account for £25 for rent, fees, etc. He had been required by the Municipality to set back the fence.

Cross-examined: He told Mrs. De Villiers that if the Municipality allowed the fence to remain, he was quite willing. He did not remember having met Mrs. De Villiers, or her brother-in-law, Mr. De Villiers, of Durbanville. Witness got a notice from the Municipality on the 18th May to remove back the fence. He had not spoken to Mrs. De Villiers in June. He had a conversation with Mr. De Villiers, in which he told the latter that he thought the Municipality would be satisfied if the fence were set back one foot. The passage, he had always taken it, was to be a common passage for the block of four houses.

By the Court: The Municipality insisted upon a 3 ft. passage all round the property for sanitary purposes.

Peter Maskew, Government land surveyor, Cape Town, gave evidence as to preparing diagrams of the property under instructions from Mr. Sloan.

Cross-examined: Sloan instructed him that there was a common passage, the other houses having a servitude over the lane adjoining No. 182.

John Edward Jones, building inspector, employed by the Woodstock Municipality, said that plaintiff, in his original plans, showed a 10 ft. passage, or lane, but afterwards reduced this to a width of 6 feet. The practice of the Municipality was to obtain a 3-foot passage for each property, when there was only one ownership, but if the ownership were separate, then they demanded a 3-foot passage for each house.

Cross-examined: If the block of houses had remained in one ownership, the Council would not have insisted upon a passage of more than 3 feet for the property.

By the Court: If plaintiff had chosen to alter the 10-foot lane shown on his original plan to 3 feet, the Council could not have objected.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Daniel Johannes de Villiers (husband of defendant), said that he was engaged to be married to Miss Kotze in January last. Witness spoke of the inspection which he made of No. 182, Lower Main-road, under the guidance of Mrs. Sloan. Witness said that he would buy the property if he could arrange to get £100 from his brother. Not a word had been said about the purchase of No. 188, Lower Main-road. Witness and his brother subsequently went to look at No. 182 and saw Mr. Greenwood, who pointed out a peg at the back, and said that a width of 3 feet remained behind, and at the side. Witness swore positively that not a word was said about buying

No. 188. Witness had a conversation subsequently with Mr. Greenwood, who said he thought all trouble and expense would be saved if he gave one foot off the lane.

Cross-examined: Witness had only signed one broker's note; he had not seen a broker's note in the possession of his wife. Witness did not read the broker's note before he signed it; Mr. Sloan read the document over, and witness took it that it would be all right. Mr. Sloan did not read out No. 182, Lower Main-road. Witness had never thought of buying No. 188. The peg that witness saw was at the back of No. 183. Mr. Greenwood took him to the back of No. 188, and showed him the peg, saying that all the houses had a 3-ft. passage along there.

Mr. Gardiner: You only claim the 3 feet where your yard comes out. Why don't you claim 3 feet right to the front, alongside your house?

Witness: We claim a 3-foot passage right round the house.

By the Court: When they bought No. 182 there was no other house on the Salt River side.

Frances E. de Villiers (defendant) said that she specially fancied No. 182, because of the open space, where the windows faced. Other houses had been built on that side since. Nothing was said to her about a common passage beside the fence. Witness had no other intention at that time than to buy No. 182. She did not remember her husband signing the broker's note. It was some days after the note was signed that No. 186 was mentioned, and she said she would have No. 182, or she did not want any property at all.

Cross-examined: She would pay the costs of this action if she lost it. With regard to the letter given to Mr. Greenwood to give to her attorneys, stating that she understood the position regarding the fence, and that they might take transfer, the letter was drafted by Mr. Greenwood, as she did not know much about business, and she copied it.

By the Court: After she had consulted her attorney she withdrew her instruction.

Cornelis de Villiers (brother-in-law of defendant) said he considered that if the fence round the yard were moved back in a line with the wall of the house, it would reduce the value of the property by £50.

Mr. Sloan (re-called by his lordship) said that the number in the broker's note had, he thought, originally been 186, but it had been amended to 188. Afterwards, number 182 was, at the request of defendant, entered at the side. A copy was given to defendant, and it was unfortunate that she could not produce it. Witness always made out his broker's notes in duplicate, and handed a copy to the purchaser.

Mr. Sloan (in reply to Mr. Burton) stated that only recently he adopted the system of keeping a counterfoil. He was perfectly clear that he had used three sheets out of the book produced. The defendants were handed a stamped copy on the day the transaction went through.

By Mr. Gardiner: A clean copy of the broker's note was handed to Mr. Gie.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (July 20).

Hopley, J.: The plaintiff is a builder, who had, before January, 1905, acquired a piece of ground at Observatory Road, with a frontage on Lower Main Road in that suburb, which, in 1904, he had divided into equal portions; and on the southern half he had built four houses which have since been numbered 188, 186, 184 and 182 Lower Main Road. This southern half he had mortgaged, and had caused to be deducted from his diagram for mortgage purposes. The dividing line had been pegged out by the land surveyor, and the four houses placed thereon were so located that the most northerly of them, now known as 182, stood about three feet from this boundary line. In submitting his plans to the municipal authorities he had, it is said, shown a three-foot passage on the north side, as apparently was compulsory under the Municipal Regulations. When the cottages, which were built in a continuous block with common party-walls, were completed, the plaintiff got tenants for the other three, pending a sale, and himself occupied No. 182, which he intended to inhabit until he had completed a somewhat similar block on the other moiety of the ground. In December, 1904, or early in January, 1905, he had placed these cottages in the hands of a broker named Sloan for sale. It would have been instructive to see the letter, or any correspondence, whereby this was done; but none has been produced corroborative of the statement that he placed at first only 188, 186 and 184 in Sloan's hands, and for the time being withheld 182. That, however, is what the plaintiff and Sloan state to have been the position of affairs in January, 1905, when the defendant, who was then Miss Kotze, a spinster, about to be married, and her present husband, Mr. De Villiers, were looking out for a house to live in. Attracted by one of Sloan's advertisements they applied at his office, and somewhere about January 13 they were conducted by Mrs. Sloan, who assists her husband in business, to these cottages. They were taken to 182, and they inspected that and only that. This, the Sloans explain, was done in order not to disturb or annoy the tenants of the other three cottages, who might take umbrage at such intrusions; whereas the plaintiff, who wished to sell, would put up with the inconvenience. Mrs. Sloan says she explained that 182 was shown merely as a specimen of the rest, while Mr. De Villiers and the defendant say that it was, as they understood, shown them as the house they might buy. Be that as it may, they thoroughly inspected and liked the place; and, inter alia, they inspected the back yard, on the size and convenience of which Mrs. Sloan expatiated. Now as the back-yard is the cause of the present suit, it would be well to state at once what the plaintiff had done there. In it he had placed an iron shed, and as to the extent of the yard itself he had encroached on the three-foot reserve on the northern side; so that the yard instead of running in the same straight line as the northern boundary of the house jutted out into the three-foot reserve, practically overlapping the whole of such reserve from where the yard started to the back, or western, boundary of the lot. At the time the defendant inspected, however, there was nothing to call attention to this, because to the north, where the encroachment was, all beyond the fence of the yard and wall of the house was open field. After the inspection, Mr. De Villiers went to Sloan's office and told him that if he could get his brother, who lives at Durbanville, to advance him the £100 (a cash payment of such amount being one of the conditions of a sale) he would buy the ground. This was about, or on, the 13th of January, and Sloan, who was apparently very anxious to push the transfer through, at once drew up a broker's note, in which he treated Mr. De Villiers as the buyer, and in which the property sold was described as "No. 188 Lower Main Road." According to Sloan, De Villiers signed the bought note then and there, and, for some reason which has not been given, a press copy was immediately, or soon after, taken of the manuscript portion of the note as it then stood. This copy was produced in Court at the end of the case, so that not much evidence was elicited about it. The note must then have run as follows:—

"January 13, 1905.—Bought on account of Mr. D. J. de Villiers, from Mr. J. H. Greenwood, certain piece of land, with house and buildings erected thereon, being No. 188, Lower Main Road, Observatory, for the sum of five hundred pounds sterling (£500). Buyer pays transfer and survey fees and bond charges. Payment £100 cash by January 20, 1905. Balance £200 on first mortgage, and balance repayable in monthly instalments of, say, five pounds sterling on second mortgage; first instalment payable 1st April, 1905. Interest, 1st and 2nd bonds, to be at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

"SLOAN AND CO."

Sloan alleges that this note was signed by De Villiers on January 13, and if so that would be evidence of a completed contract of sale on that date of No. 188 between plaintiff and De Villiers; but I find it impossible to believe that De Villiers did sign the note on that date. Besides, the fact that there is no impression of his signature in the press copy, which might be explained by his having used ordinary and not copying ink, there is the extreme improbability of a man like De Villiers concluding such a contract when he had never actually seen the property. He had seen 182; and Sloan wishes the Court to believe that he thereupon and without further inquiry or inspection signed a note proving that he had purchased 188; and Sloan's case is that De Villiers knew quite well what he was doing, and that he was purchasing not the place he had inspected, but that at the other end of the block of cottages. Besides the improbability of such conduct, there is a further feature in the circumstances which would make such conduct almost impossible since De Villiers admittedly could not have bought without an advance by his brother of £100, and his brother had at that date not yet agreed to provide that sum.

I am inclined to think that at that stage there was a misunderstanding between Sloan and De Villiers, that the latter had gone to Sloan's office and told him that if he could get his brother to advance the £100 he would purchase the house at the end of the block, or words to that effect, that Sloan had thereupon concluded that the house meant by him was 188, and that he drew up the note in anticipation of the final settlement. After that, Mr. Cornelius de Villiers, the brother in question, came in to inspect the property. He says he came in on the 13th, but I think that he came in only on the 16th, the date when the bargain was admittedly completed; but whether he came in twice or only once it is useful and instructive to observe what he actually did look at and inspect. He was not taken to, nor did he inspect, 188, but he did look carefully at 182, after which he agreed to advance the money, and accompanied his brother and Miss Kotze to Sloan's office. He also took his attorney, Mr. Gie. Now it seems clear to me that the two Messrs. De Villiers and Miss Kotze all thought that they were about to complete a purchase of 182. It is inconceivable that they would have acted as they did if they had thought that they were purchasing 188. In that case they certainly would have at least entered it to see if the internal arrangements were the same, if the rooms were equally conveniently situated and in equally good condition, and generally to satisfy themselves that it was an equally desirable property to purchase. As a matter of fact, I understand that 182 and 188 are not constructed on exactly the same lines, and that they vary internally in not unimportant particulars, and this is a material point for consideration, because if the intention of Mr. or Mrs. Sloan was to sell 188 they should at least have insisted on an inspection of that property before the contract was concluded. At the meeting in Sloan's office on January 16 it is quite possible that no great attention was paid to the actual number inserted in the note, as the buyers were prepossessed with the idea that they were purchasing 182, and probably concluded that that number had been properly placed there by the broker. Now the bought note, as it finally appears in the broker's so-called "record-book"—which is merely a scrap book into which he pastes bought or sold notes of transactions concluded by him—has been considerably changed from what it was on January 13. The name of the buyer, Mr. D. J. de Villiers, has been erased, a pen having been run through it, and that of Miss Frances Elizabeth Kotze substituted. The number 188 has also undergone a change. According to the press copy the final 8 was originally a perfectly clear figure; but in the note it is by no means a clear figure. It still resembles an 8 more than anything else, but it is blurred, and evidently has clearly been changed from what it originally was by something done with pen and ink, causing it to be by no means clear and indisputable, as it originally was. Opposite it in the margin of the scrap-book is written without comment of any kind the number 182. The monthly instalment of five pounds has been changed to four pounds, the word "five" having been scratched out and the word "four" written above it. Then comes the rest of the note as quoted above. Then above the signature of D. J. de Villiers come the following words, crowded in, "Shed to be erected same as on No. 182 within one month from date." (This 182 was clearly originally 180). Then comes the signature of De Villiers scratched out with pen strokes. Then evidently after this signature had ceased to be operative and partly written over it came the words, "The wall between 188 and No. 186 is a party wall." Then in defendant's writing comes her signature thus, "Miss Frances Elizabeth Kotze." Attempts have been made to explain all these alterations; but there is a serious and direct conflict of evidence with regard to some of them. There is no great conflict as to the change of names. Apparently De Villiers thought he was to be the purchaser, and signed the note at first, but it had been arranged that the property was to be settled by ante-nuptial contract on Miss Kotze, and to effect that simply it was decided that it should be purchased in her name, and so the changes were made. With regard to the other changes, however, the two Messrs. De Villiers and Miss Kotze all swear positively that they saw, or thought they saw, 182 on the note, and that Sloan, who read the note, read "182"—and they swear most positively that they know nothing about the provisions as to the erection of a shed, or as to the party walls. Mr. Gie, it is said, can throw no light on the matter as he was mainly interested on behalf of his client in the portion of the note arranging the terms of payment. Sloan, however, swears that the purchasers knew quite well that they were buying 188—that they stipulated for a shed such as they had seen at 182, and for the provision about party walls. He swore most positively also that he had written the contract out in duplicate on two broker's notes, and that he had delivered the second copy (which I suppose would be the old note) to Mr. Gie or the defendant. As to the latter point Sloan was undoubtedly very much surprised on the second day of the trial, when he was re-called, by having it pointed out to him that he had, in his "record book," but eight pages further back, this second copy of the contract in the form of a sold note. As to that note, it was clearly the original duplicate, when Mr. De Villiers was expected to be the purchaser, for his name appears thereon as purchaser. It has been erased by pen stroke and that of Miss Kotze substituted. In it "188" is clearly written, the instalment originally five pounds has been changed to four pounds, and for the rest it is a clean copy of the other note without, however, any reference to De Villiers's erased signature. The whole is in Sloan's writing, and ends thus: "(Signed Frances Elizabeth Kotze), Sloan and Co." It therefore, though in form a sold note, purports to be a copy of the bought note, at all events as to Miss Kotze's signature; and I am convinced that this was the second copy made by Sloan, of which he speaks in his evidence. He was therefore guilty of an inaccuracy when he swore most positively that he had given that document to the defendant or Mr. Gie. I was somewhat impressed by the fact of the stipulation about the party walls between 188 and 186 which Sloan swore was inserted at defendant's or Mr. Gie's instigation until I found, by looking through his record book, that it was apparently an invariable stipulation introduced by Sloan into all sales of similar semi-detached cottages, and that he had inserted it in broker's notes before January 13. Now if the changes in the notes were made subsequent to the completion of the contract on January 16, I could readily construct a plausible theory for what reasons such changes might have been made; but I prefer not to express myself in that sense. All I am disposed to say as to this branch of the case is that when brokers, who are business men expected to keep accurate documentary evidence of their transactions, wish the Court to rely implicitly upon their business documents they should produce them in such a state as to be practically unimpeachable per se. They generally have to deal with people less skilful and experienced in such matters than themselves, and it is their duty not only to have clear documents but also to deliver them to the parties to whom they relate in such a manner and in such condition that there should be no possibility, or hardly any possibility, of a dispute about the matters involved. In the present case the documents are in such a state that they can be attacked, and they are most strongly impugned by the sworn testimony of the contracting parties on the one side; and a close study and anxious consideration of them, and of the evidence given in regard to them, have left me in a state of perplexity as to how they were completed, and when the changes and additions which are apparent upon them were actually made. I am also satisfied that for some reason or other no note, copy or duplicate, of any writing embodying the contract was at the time delivered either to the purchaser or to anyone on her behalf. Now the onus of proving his claim is on the plaintiff, and he wishes to rely on these so-called broker's notes, but they are so unsatisfactory that I can place no reliance upon them, and the case must be decided as though they were non-existent. In view of what subsequently happened the exact terms of the broker's notes, in so far as they set forth the number of the house sold, are not of primary importance, as I shall presently explain; but I have felt obliged to enter somewhat fully into that portion of the case, as it seems to me to determine the credibility of the witnesses and the proper weight to be given to the conflicting parol evidence as to the later stages of the case. As to the original contract, I am satisfied that the two Messieurs De Villiers and Miss Kotze clearly thought that they were purchasing 182, and that Sloan, if he thought on January 13 that the property intended was 188, found out his mistake very shortly afterwards; but that he pushed the sale through nevertheless, either hoping to persuade the purchasers to be satisfied with 188, or to induce the seller to vacate 182. Now as to what happened afterwards, Sloan states that Miss Kotze came to him about a fortnight later saying that she had heard that plaintiff was going to leave his house (182), and asking whether she could not have that instead of 188. He does not explain how Miss Kotze could have heard such a rumour—which apparently was unfounded—but he says that he got plaintiff's consent to the exchange. The defendant's version, however, which seems to me much more likely, is that shortly after the contract Mrs. Sloan approached her saying that the plaintiff wished to remain somewhat longer in 182, and asked her whether she would not exchange to the other corner lot of the block (188). She states that thereupon she went with Mrs. Sloan, that she inspected 188 then for the first time, that she at once and unhesitatingly refused to make the exchange, and that she heard no more of the matter until she received a letter from Sloan on January 28 which is produced and which states that he had arranged that she should occupy 184 until the plaintiff should vacate 182, which he expected would be in about six weeks' time. Here again it seems to me that all the probabilities are on the side of the defendant's version, and I am convinced that, whether a mistake was or was not originally made by Sloan or his wife in selling 182, they got the plaintiff to acquiesce, as indeed it was in his own interest to do. As I find, then, that the original and only contract was the sale of 182, the one point for consideration that remains is whether there was any condition attached to the sale as regards the fence on the back-yard of that lot. Now on the Sloans' own evidence it would be very unlikely that there was anything of the kind. The plaintiff had not, so they say and so he says, on January 13, or on January 16, given them that property to sell; it is therefore eminently improbable that he had then given them any instructions about its yard, and Mrs. Sloan, when she showed them the premises, on January 13, must therefore have been in ignorance that there was any encroachment on the three-foot space reserved for sanitary purposes. No demarcation of the lines of the adjoining block had then taken place, and there was nothing to indicate in the adjoining open field where the next block of houses would be placed. the defendant and her witnesses is the I think, therefore, that the version of correct one, and that they must be held to have bought the property as it stood and as they saw it; for it should be remembered that at that time there were no diagrams in existence either of the lot being sold or of the adjacent lots, about to be built upon, and the property was admittedly not sold to diagram or plan. At that stage the only diagram in existence was that of the plaintiff's entire block from which had been deducted one-half for mortgage purposes; but the sub-division of this latter half into its various lots and the demarcation and creation of the dividing passage between it and the other half were not begun until February, when the Surveyor, Mr. Maskew, surveyed the respective blocks; and as far as I can judge from the dates upon the diagrams the work as not completed and passed through the Surveyor-General's Office until March. To revert to the written documents, there is not a word in any of them showing any conditions or restrictions or stipulations anent the yard fence. It may be said that as, according to the Sloans, the sale was of 188 there was no need to insert such conditions, which could affect only 182; but that would not explain why when according to them, the exchange was effected nothing of the kind was put into writing. All this part of the plaintiff's case rests on alleged conversations between the Sloans and the defendant, which the latter denies, and which from the nature of the case are extremely unlikely to have taken place, until long after the contract was concluded. No doubt afterwards, when the surveyor had remonstrated that the encroachment on the passage was somewhat serious, and when transfers had to be arranged the plaintiff and Sloan became alive to this phase of the matter, and then conversations took place, and endeavours to adjust the matter were made; but the defendant, having bought, as I hold, without notice of any objection to set back the fence or of any servitude over a portion of the backyard which she bought, was not bound to take transfer in derogation of her rights under the contract without compensation for so doing. No such compensation was ever tendered to her, but an offer to cancel the sale was made on condition that she should pay certain costs and damages to the plaintiff. I have not lost sight of the letter which the defendant wrote to her attorney on April 11, in which she told him that she quite understood that she would have to move the fence if necessary, and authorising him to take transfer on that condition. That document, however, was obtained by the plaintiff from the defendant at a personal interview after the matter had been placed by her in her attorney's hands. It was drafted by plaintiff and simply copied by her, and in the circumstances cannot be approved of or supported, nor can any weight be attached to it as evidence since she was entirely without legal or marital assistance when she was induced to write it. Her attorney, on her behalf, repudiated the action, and she withdrew the instruction which she says was obtained by undue personal influence and pressure. The Municipality exercising authority in the locality in question have now given the plaintiff, who is still the registered owner of the passage upon which the yard encroaches, notice to move back the fence to the line of the house on defendant's property, and it is plain that the plaintiff cannot give the defendant the absolute and unrestricted ownership of the whole of her yard. When Mr. Maskew had completed his survey the plaintiff made his declaration of seller, in which he declared that he had sold to the defendant Block D, as shown by the said survey. That would embrace all the ground to the middle of the passage which has been left between the defendant's house and the new houses to the north of it; and though she cannot be held to have actually bought that portion of the passage between the street and the yard, still it will be in the interest of all parties and of the public that the plaintiff should be held to his declaration as to the extent, while the defendant should receive some compensation for the servitude of common passage to which she will have to submit, and for the loss of a portion of the yard which she purchased. The Court therefore orders that the plaintiff do give, and that the defendant do accept, transfer of Lot D of the subdivisional lots as shown by the diagram, being Exhibit 5 in the present proceedings, upon the terms and conditions set forth in the deed of transfer, being Exhibit 20 in the present proceedings; that the defendant do allow the plaintiff to set back such portion of the fence of her yard as encroaches upon the common passage of 5 feet 4 inches, shown in the said diagram, as required by the municipal authorities; that the plaintiff do pay to the defendant the sum of fifteen pounds as damages; that the defendant do fulfil all the terms of the contract as to payment of the balance of the purchase price; and that the plaintiff do pay the costs of the action.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN), the Hon. Mr. Justice KOTZE, and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP,]

WRIGHT V. ASHTON. { 1905.
July 10th.

Game, property in—Animals feræ naturæ—Trespass.

A., being lawfully on the farm of W., shot thereon certain game, although W. had by public notice expressly prohibited the shooting of game on his farm. Thereupon W. summoned A. in the R.M. Court for damages for the game killed and removed by him. The R.M. gave judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the High Court held that the Magistrate should have dismissed the case.

Held on appeal, that as there can be no property in animals, feræ naturæ, W. was not entitled to damages for the killing of game on his farm. Semble: that as a person who enters upon land for one express purpose with the consent of the owner and takes advantage of that consent to do something which the owner has never sanctioned, thereby becomes a trespasser: W. might have recovered damages from A. for trespass.

This was an appeal brought by the plaintiff in the original action, which was heard in the R.M.'s Court, at Mafeking, from a judgment given on appeal to the High Court of Griqualand.

The Resident Magistrate's Court summons was as follows:—

Summon Henry P. Ashton, Government Land Surveyor (hereinafter styled the defendant), that he appear before the Court of the Resident Magistrate of this District to be holden at Mafeking on Friday, the 3rd day of February, 1905, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon with his witnesses (if any) to show why he hath not paid to Richard Wright of Mafeking aforesaid (hereinafter styled the plaintiff), the sum of £20, which the plaintiff complains that defendant owes him as and for damages.

And thereupon plaintiff complains and says that heretofore, to wit, in May, 1904, defendant did without the consent or authority of plaintiff, and notwithstanding notices to the contrary in the "Mafeking Mail," a newspaper published daily in Mafeking, pursue, shoot and kill certain game, to wit, certain three stembok and five guinea fowl, on the farm "Neverset," in the District of Mafeking, the property of plaintiff, and did convert to his own use the said game, by reason whereof the plaintiff has sustained damage to the extent of £20, which sum though demanded the defendant neglects to pay, wherefore the plaintiff prays that he may be adjudged to pay the same with costs of suit.

The Magistrate gave judgment for plaintiff for £3 5s., with costs.

His reasons were as follows:—

In this case I found defendant did destroy the game alleged in the summons, on the property of plaintiff and after he had given due notice in accordance with Section 7, Act 36 of 1886, in a locally published paper, prohibiting this being done; that in addition to the penalties he might have been entitled to, under the section of Act above quoted, had criminal proceedings been taken, he was entitled to be compensated for the value of the game destroyed on his property, I came to this conclusion, otherwise, the penalty in the Act being limited to £5, for first offence, a person might with impunity shoot considerably more than £5 worth of game and so be indifferent to any action which might be taken against him; that I assessed the value of the game at 15s. per buck, and 4s. per guinea fowl, making in all a total liability of £3 5s.

From this judgment the defendant appealed to the High Court. That Court upheld the appeal.

The Judge's reasons are as follows:—

The defendant in the original action was admittedly not a trespasser on plaintiff's farm when he shot the game in question. It appears that he was temporarily residing on the farm with plaintiff's consent while engaged in surveying the sites of certain graves on behalf of the Government. The action was therefore not founded on trespass but merely claimed damages for the loss of the game shot by defendant, which consisted of stembok and guinea fowl, animals undoubtedly feræ naturæ and in which the plaintiff had no ownership in law. This Court therefore held that the Resident Magistrate should have dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the authority of De Villiers v. Van Zyl and Another (Ford. S.C. Reports 1880, p. 77), which was quoted in argument before him. For these reasons the appeal was upheld and the Resident Magistrate's judgment altered to one for the defendant with costs. It was pointed out by the Court that the plaintiff was not remediless because if he had proceeded criminally against the defendant under the Game Law Amendment Act 36 of 1886 as he might have done, he would undoubtedly under section 7 have recovered the whole of the fine imposed by the Magistrate, which would probably have exceeded the value of the game as assessed in the case.

Against this judgment the respondent in the Court below (the original plaintiff) now appealed.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton), for appellant. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones), for respondent.

Sir H. Juta: If a man is allowed to go on land on certain terms, he is no trespasser as long as he conforms to those terms, but the moment he violates them he becomes a trespasser. Here the respondent was allowed on the appellant's farm to make a survey. The moment he shot game he became a trespasser. There is such a thing as an action for shooting game without the leave of the owner of the property. De Villiers v. Van Zyl (Foorde 77), and Voet (41-1-4), even although animals ferae naturae are primi capientis.

In this case, the main question is, are the terms of the summons sufficiently wide to cover the case? The Court will not insist on too much nicety in Magistrate's Court pleadings. It may be true that a man cannot claim the game which another has shot on his ground, but he can claim damages. I need hardly pursue the point that in such cases an actio injuriarum lies, Breda and Others v. Muller and Others (1 Menz, 425). There the word "trespass" was used, but it is not necessary to use the very word if acts constituting trespass are set out.

No doubt the consideration of trespass did enter largely into that case, but here the essence of the whole case is the shooting of the game. The respondent had a right to be on this farm, but not to shoot game there. By shooting the game he was guilty of "injury." The shooting of game on a man's land without his permission is a trespass. People may not surround a man's land and shoot his game from outside. A person may be a trespasser anywhere, even on a public road the moment he exceeds his rights there.

[Maasdorp, J.: Suppose a man comes on to my farm with my permission, and while walking across it fires his gun in the air; would he be liable in an actio injuriarum?]

No, but see Harrison v. The Duke of Rutland (1 Q.B. 142), and Queen v. Pratt (4 El. and Bl. 860).

[Maasdorp, J.: In such a case of trespass should the trespasser be sued civilly or prosecuted criminally? Who can bring the action?]

The owner of the soil.

[Kotzé, J.: The game on your land is not yours.]

No, but I have a right to prevent anybody else from shooting it, see Act 38 of 1891, section 3.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: There is nothing there about the ownership of the game.]

No, but the legislature recognises an exclusive right of shooting. See Act 36 of 1886, Sec. 7.

[Kotzé, J.: The Magistrate does not find that Ashton was a trespasser.]

No, but the whole case shows that he was sued on nothing else. He was not sued for the value of the game. As to shooting rights, see O'Brien v. Hansen and Schrader (10 E.D.C. 153).

[Kotzé, J.: The shooting of game on a man's land is a very different thing from going on a man's land to shoot game.]

If a man has a right of shooting, that right must be protected by a remedy. That remedy is damages, and these it was that the plaintiff claimed in his summons.

Mr. Searle was not called upon.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The respondent in this case—a Government land surveyor—was on the land of the appellant in the exercise of his functions as surveyor. While there, and when he was going to do his work, he says he shot certain game. Upon this the appellant brought an action against him. Now, if this action had been founded upon trespass, the whole of the argument learned counsel addressed to the Court would be very strongly in favour of our holding that there would be a ground of action for damages for trespass, although the respondent was on the farm lawfully for another purpose. I think that Sir Henry Juta is right in arguing that when a man goes to a farm for one purpose, which he has a right to do, the fact of his being there does not give him the right to do something else which otherwise he would have no right to do, but the fallacy all through this case is that the action is not one of trespass. It is not so brought, and the whole of the argument addressed to us to-day is therefore outside the case. The appellant does not allege trespass when he sends his letter of demand, and in the summons his allegation is that the defendant "did pursue, shoot, and kill certain game, the property of the plaintiff, and did convert to his own use the said game." Then the plaintiff, in his evidence before the Magistrate, says: "I consider £20 a fair value for the game shot, because I am trying to preserve the game. I don't actually claim for value of the game destroyed, but I want an amount paid to prevent my game being killed." Then he goes on to say: "Respondent was not a trespasser; he was not charged as such; this £20 damages is in no respect to trespassing." In face of that, I do not see how it is possible for the Court to hold that this is an action for trespass. It is an action simply for value of the game shot by the respondent. The Magistrate, in his reasons, stated that the action was one for £20 damages for killing the game, that he found the respondent had destroyed the game, and that plaintiff was entitled to be compensated for the value of the game destroyed on his property. Well, there is no ownership in game which is running wild. Of course, if the game were reduced into possession by an enclosure or otherwise, it would be different, but when game is running wild, there can be no ownership. The essence of the action which might have been brought is trespass, but as the action has been limited to one for shooting things which are wild by nature, there can be no damages in respect of the shooting of them. That is the view taken by the High Court of Griqualand, and I think it is the correct one. I think that the previous decisions of the Court show that there is no property in such game. In the case which has been cited of De Villiers v. Van Zyl, a distinction is clearly drawn between the shooting of things in the nature of animals and an action for trespass, by which damage is done. Had this been an action for trespass, I think the evidence would have disclosed a good ground of action, but no damage can be held to be suffered by a person by the destruction of property which is not his according to our law. On these grounds, the appeal must be dismissed.

Cape Town Municipal regulations,
No. 143—Fine.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that this case, in which the defendant was charged with contravening No. 143 of the Cape Town Municipal Regulations, had come up for review in Chambers. The regulation in question had reference to the obstruction of drainage pipes. The Magistrate convicted the accused, and he (the Acting Chief Justice) thought the evidence justified the conviction, but fined him £10. Now, the regulation under which the accused was charged provided for a penalty of not exceeding £5. It was true the same regulation went on to say that a further penalty might be incurred by a person of £2 a day for every day during which the obstruction was not removed, and the sentence might have been justified if there had been an additional charge under which the additional penalty could be imposed. But the Magistrate had taken the evidence led and not confined his sentence to the charge laid. The fine must be reduced to one of £5. When so amended, the conviction would be confirmed.

Act 28 of 1888—Prescription—Servitude.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of King William's Town.

The appellant was charged with contravening regulation 2, framed under the provisions of the Forests Act (Act 28 of 1888), in that, on the 6th April, 1905, in undemarcated Crown forest land he cut and removed certain three reserved trees without the permit or licence required by law. He was sentenced to pay a fine of 10s. The evidence disclosed that there was a dispute between the local Board and the Government as to the right of cutting trees in the forest. The Board claimed control, and had given a permit to the defendant to cut the trees, the defendant having paid 7s. 6d. for such permission. It was claimed that the Board had acquired a right by prescription. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that the title to property being in question, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction. A further ground of appeal was that the charge was invalidated by reason of the fact that the charge did not state that the defendant had a servitude; while it was also contended that the regulation was ultra vires, in that the Act did not give power to fix a penalty of the amount named in this regulation. Other grounds of appeal were that it had not been shown that this was undemarcated forest, in that the trees were dead, and were not "growing," and that the Village Management Board were the proper parties to be charged, and not the defendant, who had no criminal intention.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan appeared for the appellant; Mr. Pyemont for the Crown.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that this seemed a very cumbersome way of settling a dispute between the Village Management Board and the Government—to fine a man who cut wood in this way. Another point which the Court would have to consider was whether, the Government having given their consent to regulations by the Village Management Board, which vested in the Board the right to grant licences to cut wood on the commonage, that would not debar the Government from prosecuting anyone who cut wood under a licence.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The appellant in this case was charged with contravening regulation 2 framed under the Forest Act, No. 28, of 1888, in that he did cut, take, and remove certain three trees specified as reserved trees in the X schedule to the Act. The evidence shows that this case really arises out of a dispute between the Government and the Village Management Board of Frankfort. The dispute is one of long standing, and has been before the Court on a previous occasion. During the course of the case in the Court below the case of Queen v. Schultze (6 C.T.R. 211) was referred to, in which another inhabitant in the village of Frankfort had been charged with cutting wood on the commonage, in contravention of the Forest Act. It was there shown that the section of the Act under which the accused had been prosecuted was not applicable to the case, and it was said that if any crime at all had been committed, it was punishable only under regulations which might be framed under section 8 of Act 28 of 1888, which dealt with Crown property on which a servitude existed. It was there shown that a servitude had for a long time existed in favour of the inhabitants of Frankfort to cut timber on the village commonage, and His Lordship, in deciding that case, distinctly said: "In my opinion, the owners of the allotments in Frankfort have such a servitude by prescription. The Village Management Board have passed certain regulations, to which the assent of the Government has been given, regulating the cutting of wood on the commonage. One of these says that no person shall be allowed to chop wood of any description on the commonage without the consent of the Village Management Board, and that any inhabitant wishing to cut such wood shall obtain from the board a licence, the money for which must be paid to the Board. In this case the Village Management Board gave authority to cut down certain three trees on the commonage, which trees were dead. The appellant paid 7s. 6d. for his licence. Here we have then an act done under a regulation which has been ratified by the Government, but which is in this case repudiated by the Government. It is now said that in cutting those trees the appellant contravened the regulation which had been issued under the Forest Act. Section 2 of the regulation in question refers to land over which public bodies or persons have a servitude or right to cut wood, and it says that on these lands no person shall cut any reserved tree specified in the schedule to the Act. Section 8 states that regulations may be made to regulate the use of forest trees and produce, and that such regulation may specify the species of wood which may be cut, the season for cutting and the quantity to be cut. But the regulations which have been framed do not attempt to regulate the use of the wood to which the inhabitants are by their servitude entitled. On the contrary they prohibit the cutting of any wood specified as reserved trees in the schedule to the Act. When I look at the schedule it embodies every tree which may be called a forest tree, and in effect prohibits the cutting of every such tree. It may well be argued that such regulations are unreasonable and ultra vires, but I will express no opinion on that point now. The regulation issued by the Village Management Board of Frankfort and confirmed by the Government is now to be limited to brushwood for the use of the inhabitants as firewood. Whether the regulation is ultra vires or not has been raised in this case. It may be that the regulation is ultra vires, but, as was remarked by the Chief Justice in the case of Queen v. Matthys Arnoldus, which was also a charge of cutting wood by inhabitants of a town, who claimed a right of servitude on Crown land—"If the Court decided to confirm the conviction they would be deciding that these people had no right to cut wood on the land; on the other hand by quashing the conviction that would only leave the question to be decided hereafter." His Lordship said that the question must be left for a test case in which all possible evidence should be brought. In this case the rights of the whole of the inhabitants of the village of Frankfort are involved. The Government are now at issue with the Management Board as to the extent of their rights. The accused in this case has acted as an innocent agent who had obtained a licence from the local authorities which under their municipal regulations they claimed they had the right to grant. On this ground I think it is only right to quash the conviction and follow the course indicated by his lordship in this case just referred to, and where there is so much in dispute as to the rights of public bodies to leave the questions to be decided by a case raised for that purpose. Taking one individual in this way and convicting him of a quasi criminal offence for the purpose of testing that right is rather a stretch of procedure that should not be encouraged. The question whether these people have a right to cut timber on the commonage or not will be left open for a decision hereafter. The appeal will be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

Contempt of Court.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of MacLear, who had convicted the appellant of contempt of Court.

Accused had been convicted under section 54 of the Resident Magistrate's Court Act (No. 20, of 1856) of contempt of Court, in that on the 22nd June he appeared in the witness-box in a civil action brought against him and gave evidence while in a state of intoxication. He was fined £3, or in default two days' imprisonment.

The Magistrate stated that he informed defendant on the day in question that he would be committed for contempt, and ordered him to appear on the following day for sentence.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the appellant; Mr. Pyemont was for the Crown.

Mr. Jones submitted that the moment the accused committed such acts as would render him liable to be prosecuted under section 54, the Magistrate should have dealt with the matter instantly, and should not have allowed defendant to go away and ask him to come back on a subsequent day. The section again did not refer to persons who were taking part in the proceedings before the Court. The Magistrate, he contended, should not have allowed the man to continue his evidence; he really invited this contempt by allowing the man to give evidence.

Without calling upon Mr. Pyemont.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The Magistrate's Court is a Court of Record, and has also special statutory authority given to it to punish persons guilty of contempt. Punishment for contempt of Court is not a power which personally I am very much in favour of exercising, but the power is vested in the Court, and circumstances may arise which may render it necessary to exercise that power. Three objections have been raised to the conviction in this case. The first is that the Magistrate did not pass sentence on the day the contempt was committed. Out of consideration for the accused, the Magistrate postponed judgment until next morning, and I do not see how the accused was placed in a worse position by the consideration of the Magistrate. I do not think the Magistrate's postponing it until next morning was vital to the conviction. The next objection was based on the fact of accused being a party to the case. The only authorities cited apply to cases in which the prisoner in the dock created a disturbance, and it was in those cases held that prisoners under arrest could not be punished under the 54th section of the Act for contempt. That does not apply to a person in the position of accused. The third objection was that the Magistrate induced the contempt, but the improper conduct of the accused was due to his voluntary intoxication, not to his being called as a witness. It is not showing proper respect to the Court that a person should go into Court in a state of intoxication. There was contempt on the part of the appellant. I do not see any ground for interfering with the conviction in this case, and the sentence is not an excessive one. The appeal must be dismissed.

REX V. VERWEY.

Magistrate's finding on facts.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Acting Resident Magistrate of Aberdeen convicting the appellant upon two counts of contravening Act 36, of 1886.

Appellant was charged on the first count with contravening section 4 of Act 36 of 1886, in that on the 23rd April, at or near Wallacedale, in the Aberdeen district, he did kill, catch, capture, pursue, hunt, or shoot spring-buck without having first provided himself with the necessary licence, as provided by section 4 of the said Act. He was further charged with contravening section 7 of the Act. He was found guilty and sentenced to a fine of £1, or 14 days' imprisonment, with hard labour, on the first count, and £3, or one month's imprisonment, with hard labour, on the second count.

Mr. Swift was for the appellant; Mr. Pyemont was for the Crown.

Mr. Swift submitted that the conviction was against the weight of evidence, and that the charges should have been dismissed.

Mr. Pyemont having been heard in regard to the conviction on the second count, Buchanan, A. C. J.: In this case the accused is charged, firstly, with contravening the game law in hunting or shooting at a buck without a licence. This charge is clearly proved. On the second count, under which the charge is laid under the 7th section, the offence consists of shooting over private property without the consent of the owner, who had advertised under that section that he wished to preserve his game. The Magistrate has also convicted on this charge, but I must say, looking at the evidence, that the evidence does not establish the charge. What appears from the evidence is that the accused was not on the private property when he fired this shot. He was on the outspan, or on Mr. Hurndall's ground, adjoining. The fence, which I take to be the boundary fence of complainant's farm, was 200 yards or more from where the accused was seen when he fired the shot, and the accused had only a single-barrelled shot gun which would not carry to anywhere near the complainant's land. I do not think therefore that the evidence is sufficient to justify the conviction on this count. The appeal will be allowed, and the conviction quashed on the second count. On the first count the appeal will be dismissed and the conviction sustained.

REX V. WALAZA AND FUNDAKUBI.

Malicious injury to property.

M. and F. had killed a certain ox, the property of complainant. The ox was sick, complainant was absent, and the accused told complainant's son that they killed the ox to avoid quarantine.

Held on appeal, that this statement negatived any presumption of malice.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the A.R.M. of Tsomo, who had convicted the appellants (two natives), of malicious injury to property.

Accused had been charged, firstly, with cattle theft in contravening section 198 of the Penal Code, and, alternatively, with the crime of malicious injury to property. Both had been found guilty of malicious injury to property, and fined £5, or, in default, imprisonment, with hard labour, for one month.

Mr. Upington was for the appellants; Mr. Pyemont was for the Crown.

Mr. Upington said that the ground of appeal was that the conviction was contrary to law, and was not supported by the evidence. It was alleged that the accused killed a certain ox belonging to a man, who came from Whittlesea, in the district of Queen's Town, and who was travelling in the Territories. The ox was sick, and prosecutor obtained medicine for it. He alleged that the accused killed the animal without his permission, and that they ate portions of the meat. They, on their part, denied that they killed the animal, and said that they did nothing more than assist the prosecutor to kill the ox because it was sick. The Magistrate, in his reasons, said he did not think the defence was to be relied upon, and he believed perjury to have been committed. He had committed the defendants on a charge of perjury.

Mr. Upington contended that upon the evidence of the prosecution itself, it was clear that no malicious intention was shown: that any presumption of malice that might arise from the nature of the act was rebutted by the evidence of the Crown witnesses themselves.

Mr. Pyemont submitted that if there were anything in the evidence of the Crown witnesses to rebut the presumption of malice, such presumption was more than re-established by the evidence for the defence. Malice, he contended, was the doing of a cruel thing needlessly.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The appellants in this case were charged with contravening section 198 of the Native Territories Penal Code, in that they wrongfully and unlawfully killed a certain ox with intent to steal the carcase or part thereof. They were charged in the alternative with malicious injury to property. The Magistrate acquitted them of the former charge, but convicted them of malicious injury to property. From the evidence it is clear that the ox which belonged to the complainant was sick and unable to be used in travelling. The complainant stated that he went to get medicine for the ox, and that while he was away the ox was killed by the prisoners. The persons present at the killing of the animal were according to his account, his wife and grandson. The grandson is called; the wife is not called. The Magistrate found that the prisoners were not guilty of killing this ox with intent to steal the carcase or portion thereof, but convicted them of malicious injury to property. The essence of this charge consists in the malicious motive. Generally the motive has to be gathered from the act done, but in this case the motive was expressly stated. The boy who was present says that the accused announced that they intended to kill the ox in order to save him from being put into quarantine. It is not clear what disease the ox was suffering from, whether it was red-water, as some of the witnesses say, which is highly infectious, or whether it was gall sickness, as others say, which is not infectious. But here we have the fact that the accused stated their object in killing the ox. This object may not have justified them in killing it, but I think this negatives the allegation of malice, especially as the Magistrate has found the prisoners not guilty of killing the ox with intent to steal the carcase. I think there was no malice, and that the prisoners ought to have been acquitted of the second charge. There may be civil liability on the part of the prisoners to the complainant, but I do not think they should be punished as criminals. Under these circumstances, the appeal must be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

Ex parte BOTTOMLEY. { 1905.
July 10th.

Mr. Benjamin moved as a matter of urgency for an order restraining James Patrick Boyle from parting with a diamond ring and using a certain season-ticket on the railway. Petitioner was agent for Bottomley and Co., of Bradford, and early in the year he entered into partnership with Boyle, under the style of Bottomley and Co., carrying on business at Cape Town, Kimberley, and East London. A diamond ring of the value of £85, the property of James Bottomley, of Bradford, was sent out to him to sell, and petitioner handed it to Boyle to dispose of in the course of his travelling. The respondent was also in possession of a railway season-ticket, valued at £75. Petitioner and respondent dissolved partnership on June 30, and petitioner continued to trade under the style of Bottomley and Co. Boyle refused to return the diamond ring or the ticket, which petitioner believed he was using for his own business.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable on July 14, calling on respondent to show cause why he should not deliver up the ring and the ticket, the rule to operate as an interim interdict, with leave to serve a copy on the Railway Department.

Will—Construction—Failure of conditional legacy—Impossibility of performance of condition—Adiation—Family arrangement—Authorization nunc pro tunc.

A husband and wife, married in community, owned certain farms, over 16,000 morgen in extent, in a contiguous block. By a joint will made in 1860, they divided the land into two nearly equal portions, and bequeathed the more valuable half to their eldest son M. for his life, at the price of 10s. per morgen, with strict prohibition against bonding or in any way alienating any portion thereof, the said property to pass after M.'s death to his eldest son for his lifetime for 5s. per morgen. and after his death to his brothers in succession, and on the decease of the last of these them to his eldest and other sons in succession, and on the demise of the last of such great-grandsons of the testator, the property was to be sold, but only among the direct male descendants of the testator, and the money divided among the descendants of M. per stirpes. They bequeathed the less valuable half similarly, but at a less price, to three of their other sons and their male descendants with similar restrictions. As to the residuary estate, the survivor and the children were appointed the heirs of the first dying, and the survivor was appointed executor. The testator died in 1869, leaving his widow and eleven children surviving, of whom M. and two others, not immediately concerned in the land, were then majors. The farms had been mortgaged for £5,100 by the testator in his lifetime, and these mortgages still subsisted at his death. M. was wholly unable to pay the bequest price of £4,000 for his land, and the other three sons, at that time minors, had no prospect of being able at majority to pay the £2,000 necessary to procure their life estate. The estate, unless the land was realised, was unable to meet its liabilities. The widow thereupon determined in 1870 to take over the land at a fair valuation, and she liquidated the testator's estate on that basis, but never got the sanction of the Court to such an arrangement, nor did she ever get transfer of the land into her own name. She, however, paid out all the heirs of her husband as they came of age, and resided and farmed on the land, treating it in all respects as her sole property. No protests from any quarter were ever made to this family arrangement. The testatrix died in 1904, having made a will, disposing of the land among her sons, but in a different manner from that laid down in the will of 1860. In an action brought by the executors against the executors dative of her husband's estate and against the curator ad litem for a minor grandson of the testator,

Held, that the arrangement made by the widow in 1870, and acquiesced in by all parties since that date, must be held good, and that it should be sanctioned nunc pro tunc; and that transfer of the land should be given to the plaintiffs, so that they might deal with it in terms of the will of the survivor.

Also held, that the widow had not by her conduct adiated or accepted benefits under the joint will, so as to debar her from treating the land in a different manner from that laid down in the joint will.

Ferreira v. Otto (3 Juta, 193) followed.

This was an action for a transfer of certain property and a declaration of rights, brought by Henry Hamilton van Breda, executor in his mother's estate, against the executors dative in the estate of his father, M. J. van Breda, of Bredasdorp. The plaintiff was third surviving son of Michael van Breda and Elsie van Breda, who executed a joint will in 1860, and the action arose out of a further will, made in 1902 by Mrs. Van Breda, who survived her husband. Under the first will, provision was made for certain of Mr. Breda's sons and their sons, on condition that they should pay a certain amount of money into the estate, which, however, they were unable to do. It was also a condition of the will that the land could not be mortgaged or disposed of. All the landed property, excepting certain parts, was bequeathed under the mother's will to Henry Hamilton Breda, and before executing that will, she filed a liquidation account, and by virtue of the community of marriage, paid the heirs their shares out of one-half of the joint estate, and reduced certain debts on the estate. Plaintiff sued for a declaration of rights and transfer of the property, as the legatees had not complied with the conditions of the first will, and must be taken to have repudiated their title, or, in the alternative, for a declaration as regards one-half of the property, which the surviving spouse was entitled to deal with. The first defendants, in their plea, denied any knowledge of the material facts alleged in the declaration, or that the provisions of the will were generally stated. Subject to certain statements being accepted, they submitted to the judgment of the Court. The plea put in by the curator was somewhat similar in effect, but further denied that the heirs were paid, and claimed in reconvention for a declaration of rights on behalf of the minor child, and any possible children that might be born.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Joubert), was for the plaintiffs; Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the executors dative in the estate of M. J. van Breda, and Mr. Gardiner appeared as curator ad litem for a certain minor child.

Henry Hamilton van Breda, third surviving son of the late Michael and Elsie van Breda, said the only male heir of the next generation was his son. His father was particularly energetic and industrious. He had considerable property at Bredasdorp. A couple of years before his death he was attacked with rheumatic fever, and was forced to dispose of property at Caledon, which was just about to become remunerative. His mother took over the estate on the death of his father, and became sole executrix. Witness left school to assist his eldest brother and his mother on the farm. A valuation of the property was made by his uncles, one of whom was a sworn appraiser. The property was bonded for £5,100. The bond was almost paid off in four years by his mother, who also got about £1,500 from her parents. Witness was away from 1873 to 1892, when Michael, the oldest son, became insolvent, and Dr. Albertyn (his brother-in-law) leased the farm. Witness took the property over on the same conditions as Dr. Albertyn for ten years. Witness had no means to take over the property on the conditions specified, and he was satisfied with his mother's arrangement. No objection was raised by any of the heirs to the arrangement made by his mother.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness was executor in his mother's estate, the moveables of which were valued at £1,500. At present between £6,000 or £7,000 was a fair valuation for the landed property. Witness was suing the executor dative to pass transfer of the property to his mother's estate. Witness was prepared to give the money to cancel his father's bond before he got transfer. As executrix in his father's estate, his mother sold certain morgen at Agulhas to the Government and a piece of land to the English Church. The arrangement was that his mother should control the farm until the heirs were in a position to take over the property.

Re-examined by Mr. Gardiner: His son was thirteen years of age.

Dr. Frederick Albertyn stated that he had lived in the Bredasdorp district since 1869, and knew the late Mr. Breda. Witness married the third daughter. Witness's wife was paid by Mrs. Breda, and of his own knowledge another daughter was paid. Witness never heard of any objection to the arrangement made by Mrs. Breda.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Except that he paid the rent he had nothing to do with old Mr. Breda's will.

Pieter Johannes Albertus Breda, youngest son but one of Michael Breda, said he was paid his share by his mother about 1886 or 1887.

Michael Dirk Breda, eldest son of the late Mrs Breda, stated that he was now 62 years of age, and was of age when his father died. Witness paid all the heirs their share of inheritance. The bonds on the farms were reduced by his mother's inheritance from her father's estate. Witness had never been rehabilitated.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: While he was working on the estate the bond was reduced year by year. He had the management of the property. The bond was reduced down to a couple of hundred pounds. A fresh bond was raised by his mother. Witness could have raised enough money on bond to have paid the amount into his father's estate. He never agreed to his mother dealing with the property as her own. He always told her it was not hers. Witness paid his brothers and sisters £155 and took £155 for himself. This, witness calculated was the proper share in the moveables. When he went insolvent in 1889 the property was brought up in the schedules, witness regarding it as his.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: He told his mother he was going to take over the property, but she said that there were minors concerned, and that the bond would have to be paid off. Witness had never been in a position to pay the £4,000 bond. He thought he could raise it on bond.

[Hopley, J.: But would you find anyone to advance you this money on your interest?]

The witness said he had not ascertained whether anyone would do so.

[Hopley, J.: Do you advance any claims under this will of your father's? I don't suppose you have any idea of taking your life interest over for the £4,000?]

Witness: If I could raise the money, I should like to take it over.

[Hopley, J.: You don't suppose that any money-lender would advance a considerable sum of money on a security like that, do you?]

Witness: No, I suppose not.

[Hopley, J.: Well, are you a consenting party to your brother taking it over on paying the money?]

Witness: Well, I suppose if my brother has the money, I ought to waive my right to him.

You would rather him have it than some outside party?—Yes.

Sir H. Juta said it might be thought the witness would get more if the property were realised.

Hopley, J., said it was not clear whether the witness would or would not gain by allowing his mother's will to stand.

Carl F. F. Juritz, accountant at the Colonial Orphan Chamber, agents for Dr. Carl Albertyn, gave evidence as to the bonds held by Dr. Albertyn. There were four bonds, for £2,000, £500, £300, and £200 respectively. Dr. Albertyn took over the bonds in May, 1893, from Mrs. E. C. van Breda, who obtained cession from the Board of Executors in 1882. The total amount of the present bonds on the estate held by Dr. Albertyn was £2,800. There was a bond on other property of £800.

R. de Waal Steyn, clerk in the Master's Office, produced certain books from the Master's Office.

Thos. Chas. van Breda, youngest son of the testatrix, said he thoroughly understood the proceedings. He had received his share of the estate. The only objection he had was that the inheritance under his mother's will could not be sold except to his brothers or their issue. He was quite willing to abide by the decision of the Supreme Court.

Henry Robert du Preez, law agent, Bredasdorp, who acted as local agent for the plaintiff in the case, stated that he communicated with all of the heirs, and got the certificates from them.

Chas. Willoughby Herald, the acting attorney in the case, stated that he had seen Mrs. Backhouse, one of the heirs in the estate, and fully explained the matter to her.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel having been heard in argument,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (August 2nd).

Hopley, J.: In or about the year 1840 the late Mr. Michael Jacob van Breda, then a young man of about 23 years of age, married Miss Elsie Catharina Smalberger, in community of property, and the couple thereafter resided chiefly at Zoetensdalsvallei, in the division of Bredasdorp, where they owned a contiguous block of land over 16,000 morgen in extent, made up of the farms Zoetendalsvallei, Klipfontein, Langerug, Waschplaats, Papenkuilsfontein, Brakkefontein, and Rhenos-terkop, on the security of which properties Mr. Van Breda borrowed in 1857 and 1862 sums of money amounting in the aggregate to £5,100, for which he gave mortgage bonds over the said farms. On October 13, 1860, when the children of the marriage numbered eleven, Mr. and Mrs. V. Breda made their will, in which, after the revocation of all previous testamentary acts, the above landed property was dealt with in two elaborate clauses, and a codicil bearing the same date. I think, in view of the contentions that have been raised in this case that it would be well to state the terms and effect of these clauses (the original will being in Dutch) as I understand them. Clause I is as follows: (1) And now disposing anew, and, in the first place, the testator who declares that he bequeathed to his eldest son Michael Dirk van Breda, his (the testator's) farm, named Zoetendals Valley, in its entire extent, as also the farms Klipfontein, Waschplaats, and Langerug, and all other lands situate within the enclosure as at present existing, having the Honing Nest River, the sea, and the valley as boundaries on the north-east and west sides, and such for the sum of ten shillings per morgen, with this understanding, however, that the said Michael Dirk v. Breda shall not be empowered to take possession of these farms and lands until after he shall have attained his majority or some other previously approved state, at which time he will be obliged to satisfy and pay to the estate of him (the testator) the bequest value of these farms and lands, the testatrix, however, during the minority of the said Michael Dirk v. Breda being entitled to all the income and profits of the said farms and lands provided that she applies the same to the education, maintenance, and support of the said Michael Dirk v. Breda, and if necessary to her own support and maintenance. Everything, however, with this express condition, understanding, and provision, that the said farms and lands, or any part thereof, shall never at any time be mortgaged, sold, or alienated, nor shall any disposition of them be made in any way whatsoever, either by will or inter vivos, by the testator's said son (or by his male descendants in the cases hereinafter set forth), but that the said farms and lands after the death of the said Michael Dirk v. Breda shall pass over to and devolve upon his eldest son undivided and in their full extent under the same condition, understanding, and provision (but only at a reduced price of five shillings per morgen to the estate of the said Michael Dirk v. Breda), and after the death of the said eldest son to his next eldest brother, and to continue in this way to the last son of the testator's said son, Michael Dirk v. Breda, and when all these sons are dead the said farm and lands shall pass over to and devolve upon the oldest son of the testator's grandson, who was last in possession, under the same condition, understanding, and provision as aforesaid, without, however, any further pecuniary compensation or payment, and after the death of this eldest great-grandson of the testator, to his next eldest brother, and to continue in such wise to the last great-grandson of the testator, and on the death of all these great-grandsons the said farm and lands shall be sold entire and undivided and turned into money, yet only and exclusively amongst and between the male descendants of him, the testator, who bear the name of Van Breda, and then the proceeds thereof shall be divided amongst the then living descendants of the testator's said son, Michael Dirk v. Breda, per stirpes. Should, however, the testator's said son, Michael Dirk v. Breda, die before majority or ("en") without male descendants, it is the testator's express will and desire that the said farm and lands shall pass to and devolve on his next eldest brother, and his male descendants, in the same way as hereinbefore set forth, for the same price of ten shillings, and subject to all the aforesaid more fully defined express conditions, provisions, and understanding about never at all being able to bind, mortgage, or alienate the said farm or lands or any portion thereof until they shall have to be sold and turned into money in manner prescribed after the death of the testator's great-grandsons. Moreover, the testator declared that he prohibits and forbids his aforesaid son, grandsons, and great-grandsons from demanding the Trebellian or any other portions known to the law, it being the testator's express will and desire that the said farms and lands are to be occupied, for the entire time and periods prescribed, free and unencumbered, and undivided, without contradiction of anyone in the world. In clause 2 of the will the testator made the same elaborate disposition in almost the same terms with regard to the farms Papenkuilfontein, Rhenoster Kop and Brakkefontein. Complicated, however, by the fact that they were bequeathed in the first instance jointly to his sons, John Wilhelm and Hendrik Hamilton, who were not to be allowed to take possession until they were both respectively of age, at which date they were to pay the price, which was to be five shillings per morgen, with further devolution at their death to their "respective eldest son," but without further payment, and so on, as in the case dealt with in the first clause, with the same instructions as to alienation, etc., and eventual sale. Failing Johan and Hendrik and any descendants through males issuing from them, these properties were to pass to the sons Dirk and Pieter and their male line in the same way. These farms were eventually, by a codicil, made in November, 1866, left jointly to the three brothers Hendrik, Pieter, and Thomas, the last-named having been born in 1863. Various other elaborate provisions were made, all with the object of keeping the properties in the male line descended from the testator, with express prohibition of alienation to strangers; and these it is not necessary here to set out more fully. The intention, however, was again set forth and emphasised in a codicil executed by the testator and testatrix on the same day, but after the execution of the will, in which the testator declared it to be his will and desire that the farm Zoetendals Vlei and the adjoining farms, after they shall have been sold, on the death of the last surviving great-grandson in terms of the will, shall never be allowed to be sold to strangers, but only amongst the male descendants of Michael Dirk van Breda, and in default of such, then to male descendants of Johan, Dirk, and Pieter, or any other son or sons of the testator, and in the same way he limited the sale of Papenkuilsfontein, Rhenoster Kop, and Brakkefontein to the male descendants of Johan, Hendrik, Dirk, and Pieter, and in default of such, to male descendants of Michael Dirk, or of any other son or sons begotten by the testator—everything, however, with the understanding that such male descendants shall bear the name of Van Breda. The will having thus dealt with the land in question proceeded in clause 3 thereof to deal with the estate generally, and the testators therein nominated and appointed each other reciprocally, the first dying appointing the survivor, together with the children of the marriage, to be the sole and universal heirs of all the goods left by the first dying, of whatsoever description, on the understanding, inter alia, that, should the testatrix be the survivor, she should be bound and obliged to have the joint estate (with exception of the aforesaid bequeathed farms and lands) valued by two impartial persons, who were to be appraisers of immovable property in the division of Bredasorp, in order, by so doing, to ascertain and decide the respective portions of the testator's heirs, she, however, having the enjoyment of the income arising therefrom during the minority of the children for their education and for their and her own maintenance and support. In the case of the survival of the testatrix, she, together with the testator's brother, Dirk Gysbert van Breda and Mr. Hendrik Willem van Breda were appointed executors. Such are the material portions of this will. After its execution another child, Thomas Charles, was born, in 1863, and in July, 1869, the testator, Michael Jacob van Breda, died, leaving his widow and eleven children surviving (his son Johan Wilhelm having predeceased him). Of these children only three were then majors, viz., Maria, who was then married to Mr. Baynes; Michael Dirk then in his 26th year; and Dirk, who was a barrister-at-law, a year or two younger; and the widow, who was the sole executrix, the other two having declined to act, was face to face with the problem of suitably maintaining, educating, and providing for this large family. In due time, she caused an inventory of the assets of the estate to be made, and found that, exclusive of the land specially devised, their value was about £5,902: and she found that the estate owed moneys to the extent of about £9,000, of which £5,100 was represented by mortgages on the said land. Without the land, therefore, the joint estate would be insolvent. Now, the land had by the will been divided into two almost equal extents, each somewhat exceeding 8,000 morgen, and, consequently, if Michael Dirk had been willing and ready to pay as he had the right to do 10s. per morgen for the life interest of the farms devised to him a sum of £4,000, and over, would have been immediately available to pay off the larger portion of the mortgages and to place the estate in a solvent condition. But Michael Dirk was a young man of no means, totally unable to make any such payment, and he consequently did not take up the farms at the bequest price. He states that he did ask his mother to let him take over the farms, I presume, without any cash payment: but she very naturally answered him that she had the minors to think of, and refused to let him have them without the necessary payment. Whatever way I look at the matter I can see no possible mode by which Michael Dirk could, in the circumstances, have become the owner, that is the owner for life of these farms bequeathed to him. He says now that he might have borrowed the £4,000 by mortgaging the farms, but it is obvious that no money-lender would have advanced such a sum on such a security to a tenant for life hedged around with a complicated set of entails and stringent prohibitions against alienation. To the executrix then it must have become clear that Michael Dirk could never fulfil the necessary conditions to enable him to take up the bequest in his favour, and when she turned to the case of the other farms, which were situated in the Downs and not so valuable as the Zoetendal Vlei group, and which therefore had been bequeathed at 5s. per morgen (with no subsequent payments by the remoter heirs), it must have appeared equally clear to her that her three penniless boys, Hendrik (then 18), Pieter (then 12), and Thomas (then 6 years old) would never, on attaining their majority, be able to produce the £2,000 which would be necessary before they could get possession for life of these farms. Now, I do not think that the true meaning of the will is that the ownership of the properties should be kept in abeyance for an indefinite time to ascertain whether either the immediate legatees, or some future persons claiming through them, would, at some period more or less remote, make up their minds to pay the heavy price exacted by the will for the somewhat doubtful benefits conferred. I think that the testators had in their mind the children not benefited by the bequest of the land, and that they intended that those who obtained the land should forthwith contribute towards their education, support, and maintenance, and to the eventual portions to be inherited by them. The will states clearly enough that those who were indicated by the will should take the land as soon as they attained majority, and that they should then pay in the bequest price to the testator's estate. I think that the devisees of the lands in both cases were doomed to failure, on account of the impossibility of the performance of what was by the will exacted and demanded from the legatees as a condition precedent to their obtaining possession of the land, and the widow seems to have made up her mind, shortly after letters of administration were granted to her, that these bequests must fail. Her position then was that she was by virtue of the community of property which had existed between her and the testator entitled to one-half of the joint estate, and by virtue of the testator's will, she was also entitled to a one-twelfth portion of the testator's half (see Smith v. Sayer's Executors—Foord p. 66). In view of the state of her family and of the somewhat embarrassed condition of the estate, and having regard to the inability of Michael Dirk v. Breda to pay £4,000 for his life interest in the farms bequeathed to him, and of the certainty that Hendrik, Pieter, and Thomas would, for similar reasons, be likewise unable to obtain their life interest in the farms bequeathed to them when they respectively attained their majority. I am of opinion that had she petitioned this Court at that time, she would have obtained leave to realise the farms free of any restrictions or encumbering conditions. She, however, did not take that course; but taking into consideration the impossibility of the situation created by the will, and the necessity of keeping a home in which to bring up her family, she seems to have decided to disregard that portion of the will dealing with the land, and to take upon herself the responsibility of the land with the burdens upon it. She caused the land to be valued in May, 1870, by three qualified appraisers, who valued all the farms together at £7,000, and she determined to take them over at that price, and to liquidate her late husband's estate on that basis. This was an arrangement which, I feel sure, this Court, if applied to, would have sanctioned as being in the best interests of the family as a whole; but unfortunately the executrix made no such application. She, however, sent in a liquidation account to the Master of the Supreme Court in February, 1871, in which she indicated clearly the position she had decided to take up. In that account she stated that she had taken over the farms for the sum of £7,000, and she placed that sum to the credit of the estate, while among the liabilities she included an amount of £175 due to her as executrix by way of commission on the realisation of these farms. By taking this step she showed a credit balance on the whole joint estate of herself and the deceased of £3,775, of which amount she assigned to herself one-half by virtue of the community, and one-twelfth as an heir under the testator's will. The residue, amounting to £1,730 4s. 2d., she assigned to the 11 children in equal portions of £157 5s. 10d., of which they were to receive, after payment of succession duty, £155 14s. 4d. net. Such sum was immediately paid to each of the three majors, and thereafter to each child in succession, when she or he became of age, or as soon thereafter as their mother had funds in hand for the purpose. It will thus be seen that the testator did not abide by the terms of the will, in so far as the landed property specially bequeathed was concerned, and that she awarded and paid out to the heirs, from time to time, sums of money which could not have been in the estate for distribution, but for the sale either to herself or some stranger of the said immovable property. These sums of money were in turn accepted by all the heirs on their attainment of majority, the widow meanwhile managing the whole of what had been the joint estate and farming on the whole of the properties in question. She farmed with considerable success, for besides maintaining and educating the children, and paying them their paternal inheritances, she managed to reduce the mortgages, and eventually to practically pay off all the debts secured by bonds upon these farms, and apparently to free them from any claims by strangers for a short time. In this result, however, she was aided by inheriting, in the course of 1872 and 1873, about £1,460 from her parents, which she devoted to the extinction of these debts, but the larger portion of the debts on the estate must have been paid for by the profits made by her out of the careful and successful management of the farms. The mortgage bonds in question were originally given to the Master of the Supreme Court, N.O., for trust funds in his hands advanced to Mr. Michael Jacob v. Breda, one bond for £3,600, dating from 1857, and another for £1,500 from 1862. In 1873, the Master had ceded these bonds to the Board of Executors, and the widow, Mrs. V. Breda, had paid them off by 1882. Now, I have no doubt that if the farms had been transferred into her name she would have caused these bonds to be cancelled at that date; but as they still were registered in the name of her deceased husband, she, no doubt, in order to have some security for herself, simply took a cession of the bonds to herself individually from the then holders, the Board of Executors. These cessions were made on April 18, 1882. Shortly after that date the widow took a step which adds to the difficulties of the present case. It is possible that she may have then received some advice, or she may have been moved by other considerations, of which there is no evidence; but, whatever her motive may have been, what she did was to send in a so-called amended liquidation account of the estate which she had been administering since September, 1869. This account is dated June 1, 1882, and it omits all dealing with the land, but is in other respects simply a repetition of the account of 1871 the result of the change being to show the joint estate to have a deficit of £3,049 17s., which was, in the words of the account, "to be found against the land." This was, however, the sole step in apparent contradiction to her previous conduct, which she took, and no one seems to have taken any notice of it, nor does she herself seem to have treated it seriously or made any change in the course of affairs, because of it. She went on living, managing, and farming as before upon the properties, still treating them apparently as her own, and eventually, as will hereafter be shown, she treated them in her separate will as though they were her sole property, and actually spoke of them as registered in her name. It is also noteworthy, in this connection, that in 1884 she paid out his inheritance of £155 14s. 4d. to her son Thomas, who in that year attained his majority, thus proving that though she had sent in the "amended account," she was still acting on the principle and figures of the original liquidation account of 1871, the basis of which was the taking over by herself of the immovable property for £7,000. After she had held the bonds as cessionary for about eight months, she ceded them by Notarial Act to Dr. Abraham Albertyn for an advance of £2,000. They have since passed by cession to Dr. Carl Albertyn who made further advances on them, and finally took cession on them on May 4, 1893, for £2,800, such being by that date the full amount advanced by him, and the consideration whereby he became the legal holder of these securities. Of the moneys so advanced by the Doctors Albertyn, there is no reason to suppose that any was used by Mrs. Van Breda, save in the interests of the family, which had then grown up, and was more expensive to maintain, as is stated in his evidence by Mr. Michael Dirk v. Breda, who admits that his mother so applied the amounts borrowed by her. With regard to the land itself, it appears that since 1886 Mrs. v. Breda has ceased farming the estate personally, she leased it from 1886 to 1892 to her son-in-law, Dr. Frederick Albertyn, and from 1892 onwards until the present time the property has been leased and worked by Mr. Hendrik Hamilton v. Breda, the second eldest of her surviving sons, but the rents have apparently always been treated by Mrs. V.

Breda, as accruing for and due to herself personally, and she has, since the debts were incurred, always paid the interest on the bonds to the successive holders thereof. It is clear, therefore, that but for the isolated act of sending in the "amended account" in 1882, Mrs. V. Breda acted consistently throughout her life, which lasted until January, 1904, on the basis of the arrangement made by her in 1870, when she took over the farms as stated by her in the account rendered in 1871. For over a third part of a century, she remained on the farms as their owner, treating and using them in all respects as though they were her sole property, and during all that time there was never a single protest raised by anyone against the arrangement which she had thought it in the best interests of her family to make. The youngest of her children, Mr. Thomas v. Breda, attained his majority in the year 1884, and all the daughters have been married; but no one ever questioned the arrangement, and none of the sons ever made any tender of the bequest-value of the farms or asked to be put into possession in terms of the will, or of the codicil of 1866, nor do they, even at the present time, advance any such claim. Upon such a state of facts I can see no just or equitable pronouncement, save that the arrangement made by the late Mrs. V. Breda in 1870, as shown by her account of 1871, whereby she took over the lands belonging to herself and her deceased husband for the sum of £7,000 was in the best interests of all concerned, that it was acquiesced in by all parties, and that it continued until the death of Mrs. V. Breda, in January, 1904, of full force and effect. It is an arrangement which the Court would have sanctioned in 1870, and I am of opinion that on the same equitable principles as were applied by the Court in the case of Ferreira v. Otto (3 J. 193), it should be sanctioned nunc pro tunc, and that the necessary transfers should be given of the farms to the executors of her estate to enable them to deal with the farms in terms of her will. Now it was argued that she had no power to make a will, at all events, regarding these lands, for two reasons—first, because there had been a massing of that portion of the estate; and secondly, because she had adiated under the will of her husband and accepted benefits under it, and that, consequently, she could not change the elaborate devices created by the will. But there clearly was no massing of these joint assets. There was no clear disposition of the farms after the death of the survivor to which she had assented. She had assented to nothing more than an elaborate conditional disposition of the land, which was to become effectual during her lifetime, and under which she would have benefited in a pecuniary sense if it had been carried out; nor had she adiated or accepted benefits under the will, in so far as it dealt with the farms. Instead of living under the terms of the will, she distinctly and radically departed from them; and even if she had not taken over the farms in 1870, I know of nothing which could have prevented her from making a will dealing with her half-share and a child's portion of the farms at her death. But as I have already stated, I am of opinion that owing to the steps she took and the arrangement which was acquiesced in by all parties, she was entitled to deal with the whole of the farms, as her own, by her will. She executed her last will in May, 1902, and bequeathed thereby all the said landed property to her son, Henry Hamilton van Breda, for the sum of £4,800, with the exception of three defined lots of fifty morgen each at Struy's Bay, part of Papenkuilsfontein, which, with the houses and buildings thereon, she bequeathed respectively to her three sons, Michael Dirk, Pieter, and Thomas, in each case for the sum of £200; and these properties carry with them certain grazing rights over the remainder of Papenkuilsfontein, but the alienation of these portions and rights, save to their brothers or their male issue, is distinctly prohibited. After disposing of individual portions of her property leaving all her movable property to her son Henry Hamilton, she appoints all her children jointly as heirs of her residuary estate. This disposition of the landed estate seems to me to be carrying out as well as the fortunes and circumstances of the family will permit, and as far as possible the wishes and intentions of the testator Mr. Michael Jacob van Breda; since the land, which he so much prized, and which he tried so hard to keep in his family, will remain for this generation at least in the possession of his direct male offspring; moreover, the three of his sons who so far have no male issue are prohibited from alienating the portions which have been left to them except to the members of the direct male lines bearing the name of Van Breda; and the son Mr. Henry Hamilton v. Breda, who is to get the main bulk of the property and the residence at Zoetendals Valley, is the only son who hitherto has had male issue. He has one son, named Michael Jacob v. Breda, who in all probability may in his turn become possessed of the lands, the continued possession of which by his descendants was the object so close to the heart of his grandfather, whose namesake he is. It will be in the power of his father and himself if they be so minded to keep this land in the family for further generations, and as far as I can see that is the course which contains the only chance of the testator's desires with regard to the devolution of this land being fulfilled. The Court therefore declares that the farms in question were at the time of her death the sole property of the testatrix, and that they should be dealt with in terms of her will, and orders that the first-named defendants do give transfer, and that the Registrar of Deeds be empowered to pass transfer to the plaintiffs as executors of the estate of the said testatrix, and that the plaintiffs in their said capacity should thereafter deal with the said land in terms of the will of the testatrix. With regard to the claim in reconvention made by the second-named defendant the Court orders that it be dismissed. With regard to the costs it is clear that they should come out of the estate of the testatrix, as it was owing to her default that she did not obtain transfer of the property during her own lifetime; but it appears to me inequitable to make the heirs generally responsible for these costs as the ownership of the land was the sole matter which was in dispute, and they as a body did not add to the difficulties of the situation, nor did any of them individually make any opposition. The persons mainly interested were Mr. Henry v. Breda and his minor son, and the result of the action certainly is of considerable pecuniary advantage to the former, who obtains full property in the farms at a figure much below their market value. Had the testatrix in her lifetime made good her title it is clear that she would have had to pay the costs of the proceedings, and in that case her movable property would have been diminished. I think, therefore, that the costs should be met in the first instance by the movable property left by the testatrix, and in case of their insufficiency then by the general assets of her estate. This order as to costs applies to the costs of all the parties to this suit.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

Ex parte RAMJUTTUM { 1905.
BABOOLACE. } July 12th.

Mr. Lewis moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Ramjuttum Baboolace, shopkeeper, of Sussex-road, Wynberg. for an order restraining his wife from removing the child of the marriage, aged nine years, beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. Petitioner understood that his wife was leaving the Colony for Mauritius that day, and that she had no intention of returning. She intended to take the child with her. Petitioner was instituting an action for divorce against his wife. There had been considerable delay in the proceedings owing to difficulties in obtaining a copy of the marriage certificate.

Maasdorp, J., said that it was no use giving a futile order interdicting a person who was about to leave the country. An order would be granted placing the child in the custody of the applicant, pending a further order of Court, the Sheriff to execute the order.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY]

KORNOLUM V. HIGHMAN. { 1905.
July 12th.

This was an action for damages for malicious arrest.

Mr. Alexander (for the defendant) put in a letter from the plaintiff's attorneys stating that they had withdrawn from the case.

Upon the plaintiff's name being called, there was no appearance, and the Court granted absolution from the instance.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1905.
July 13th.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Henry Alfred Ready Clark, as an attorney and notary. Counsel said that the application was made under section 17, Act 27, 1883, applicant being a B.A., of Oxford.

Ordered to stand over for production of authorities.

Later in the day Mr. Sutton referred to ex parte Scanlon as an authority for the application.

Buchanan, A.C.J., in granting the application, said that at the time the previous application of a similar nature was made, it was pointed out that, through what was no doubt an oversight in the Act, applicants could obtain admission without having passed a law certificate examination. The defect was one that should be remedied, and, in fact, he had been under the impression that it had been remedied, but counsel assured him that that was not so. However, as long as the statute stood as at present, the applicant was entitled to be admitted. Leave would be given, as asked, to take the oaths before the R.M. of Idutywa.

Dr. Greer moved for the admission of Wm. Tell Paschoud Hutchinson, as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Port Elizabeth.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of John Brand Ross as an attorney, notary, and conveyancer.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

SHEAR AND RYAN V. NORTJE.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent., the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Order granted.

SHEPPARD V. MCINTOSH AND STEER.

Mr. Burton moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for the defendant.

Mr. Burton said that the defendants had filed affidavits objecting to the final adjudication. He (counsel) was instructed that an arrangement had now been entered into between the parties, by which the plaintiff was prepared to accept a certain settlement for his debt. Upon this settlement being confirmed by the Court, the plaintiff was prepared to withdraw his application.

By consent, the order of provisional sequestration was discharged upon the conditions set out in the consent paper filed.

DUNCAN V SHAW.

Mr. Roux moved, on behalf of the plaintiff, for a provisional order of sequestration, to be suspended.

Provisional order discharged.

DONELLAN V. ESTATE CAROLUS.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated, to be declared executable.

Order granted.

PAUL V. BAUMGARTEN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for a decree of civil imprisonment, upon a judgment of this Court for £11 14s. 5d.

Defendant, who was stated to reside at De Aar, did not appear.

Decree granted.

ZACKON V. ENGELBRECHT.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence upon promissory notes for £50 and £73 10s. 4d., respectively.

Order granted.

S. A. BREWERIES V. STEVENSON.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence for £220, balance of promissory note, and for judgment, under Rule 329d.

Order granted.

WALKER V. TURMAN.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

FIELD AND CO. V. SOLOMON.

Mr. Bailey moved for the discharge of a provisional order of sequestration. Provisional order superseded.

PAINTER V. WESTWOOD.

Dr. Greer moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final. Final order granted.

MARAIS V. BARNARD.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £360, less £54 paid on account.

Order granted.

GILL V. AUGOOD.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage for £3,000, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Mr. Benjamin also moved for provisional sentence on a lease for £38, rent due, and judgment under Rule 329d for ejectment from certain two houses, 3 and 4, Weston Villas, Sea Point. Counsel said he understood that a consent paper had been filed.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that an order would be made in terms of consent paper.

Mr. Benjamin said that the consent paper did not provide for the property being declared executable, and he would prefer that the order be given in terms of the summons.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that counsel had elected to accept the consent paper.

The matter was ordered to stand over.

Later in the day Mr. Benjamin said that the defendant consented to judgment in terms of the summons.

Final judgment was given.

THORNE AND STRUBEN V. GELB.

Mr. Struben moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Mr. Close opposed the application, and read an affidavit by Woolf Gelb (the defendant). He denied that it would be for the benefit of the creditors that the estate should be sequestrated. He stated that it would be possible to liquidate the estate under the deed of assignment, which had been entered into. Affidavits by other creditors were put in to a similar effect.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 1st August to enable the plaintiffs to file answering affidavits.

BRILL V. MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO

This was an application upon notice of motion, calling upon the respondent company to show cause why they should not be ordered to discover certain documents to the attorneys of the plaintiff in the action.

Mr. Burton was for applicant, Walter William Brill, of East London; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), was for respondent, the General Manager for the Mutual Company in South Africa.

From the affidavits it appeared that the applicant asked for an order on the respondent to allow his attorneys to inspect certain papers, documents, and writings set out in a schedule attached. Plaintiff was the cessionary for value of a certain life policy for the sum of £500 effected by one Edward Richard Camies, of East London, with the Mutual Insurance Company, of New York. The assured had since died. Plaintiff was now claiming payment of the proceeds of the policy, together with any other moneys which might have accrued. He claimed a right of inspection by his attorneys of certain documents in possession of the company, pertaining to the policy in question. This, respondent refused on the ground that an inspection was demanded of documents which were of a confidential nature, and, being inter-departmental, were privileged.

Sir H. Juta said that a number of the letters referred to by applicant contained the evidence collected with a view to the defence of the case, being privileged communications between defendants and their attorney, Mr. Drake. The applicant did not state which letters he wanted and to what they referred, and the defendants wanted further particulars. His (counsel's) inquiry went to show that, although a party was entitled to facts, he was not entitled to disclosure of the evidence which the other party had got for the purpose of proving those facts. Counsel added that before the case would come to trial it would be necessary to send a commission to England, because one of the issues in the case would be the condition of the assured in London, and medical testimony would be called. Counsel further stated that defendants would raise no objection to immediate discovery of a number of the documents except such as he had mentioned. As to the others, it would be necessary to decide whether they were privileged.

The matter was eventually ordered to stand over until August 1, respondents undertaking to disclose the documents in schedule (b), which he had no objection to do, within three days.

ESTATE DE KOCK V. MALMESBURY BOARD OF EXECUTORS.

This was an application for an order declaring the applicant entitled to administer the funds belonging to the estate of her late husband, now in the hands of the Board, at her discretion, and for the best interests of the estate, and for a further order directing the Board to pay the applicant the sum of £2,314 12s. 3d., and hand over all mortgage bonds and securities belonging to the estate. The affidavit of the applicant set out that a mutual will was executed between her late husband, to whom she was married in community of property, and herself, by which the deponent, as surviving spouse, was appointed sole heir and executrix, by by a codicil, which she stated she signed and did not read, all the moneys and securities were to be paid into the respondent Board, which was done. The deponent had requested the Board to hand over the moneys and securities, but they refused to do so. On the £2,314 only 4½ per cent. interest was allowed, although the ruling rate of interest on first-class securities was 6 per cent. It was a stipulation of the will that the survivor was to be sole and universal heir, to support the children until such times as they reached the age of majority, and pay to the children such sums of money as the survivor was able to pay and the position of the estate justified.

The answering affidavit of the secretary of the respondent Board, set out that the applicant never acted as administratrix of her husband's estate. The money was put into the company from time to time. In face of the codicil, he did not feel justified in handing over the money. The money was invested on fixed deposit, and the usual interest was regularly paid.

Mr. Burton for applicant; Mr. Searle, K.C., for respondent.

Application granted, the respondents ordered to hand over the assets and securities of the estate, the moneys on fixed deposit to be paid over when the deposits fell due, the costs to come out of the estate.

INSOLVENT ESTATE VAN DEN HEEVER V. VAN DEN HEEVER

Mr. Gardiner moved on behalf of the trustee in the insolvent estate for an order expunging a certain claim for £220, which had been proved in the estate by the respondent, wife of the insolvent, to whom she was married out of community of property, and, further, that the applicant be allowed further time in which to file the liquidation and distribution accounts, owing to the delay caused by liquidation pending.

Order granted expunging the debts with costs, extension of time of five months given to the trustee.

THE MASTER V. WALTER.

Mr. Morgan Evans moved for an order calling on the respondent to file a liquidation account.

Granted.

VAN ZYL V. OCHBERG.

This was an application to have a rule restraining the respondent from diverting certain water on to the property of the applicant made absolute. From the applicant's affidavit it appeared that he was the owner of certain premises on the High Level-road, at Sea Point. During the heavy rains the respondent, who was building at the back of applicant's premises, diverted certain storm-water on to the applicant's property. The garden was seriously damaged, and applicant had to keep his gardener and two Kafirs busy endeavouring to minimize the damage.

The answering affidavit of the respondent stated that the applicant agreed to withdraw the matter if the respondent cut out certain trenches. Before the work was completed the applicant set down the motion. Respondent denied that he caused any storm-water to flow on to the applicant's ground, but said that it was due to the exceptionally heavy rains between 1st June and 15th June, and the situation of the applicant's property. Affidavits adducing expert evidence set out that the erection of the houses which the respondent was building would reduce the natural flow of storm-water on to the applicant's land.

The replying affidavit of the applicant stated that he adhered to everything stated in the first affidavit, and, further, that the work of cutting the trenches was not carried out as agreed upon. It was merely agreed to postpone the matter, not withdraw it, and during the week's postponement the respondent did practically nothing.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: There will have to be an action in any case. The only question is, who is to bring it?]

Mr. Upington was for the applicant and Mr. Alexander for the respondent.

Mr. Upington submitted that the respondent himself admitted that he had diverted water.

Mr. Alexander submitted that everything was in dispute. If the rule was made absolute, it would prejudice the respondent's case, by implying that he had diverted water on to the applicant's ground.

Rule made absolute, pending any proceedings taken by the respondent in action to have it set aside, with leave to recover the costs of the motion on an action being brought, costs limited to the costs of opposition.

Insolvency, foreign—Process in aid—Comity.

M., who had certain immovable property in this Colony, had been declared insolvent in the Transvaal, where he was domiciled. The trustees in this Colony now applied for leave to administer the estate as far as the property within this Colony was concerned. The Court granted a rule nisi, calling upon all persons interested to show cause why the appointment of trustees by the Transvaal Court should not be recognized within this Colony.

Mr. Alexander moved, on behalf of the trustees in insolvency, for leave to administer this estate so far as certain property in the Peninsula was concerned. The insolvency had taken place in the Transvaal, and the trustees were appointed in the Transvaal. Counsel quoted Stegmann v. Cohen (1 C.T.R., 82) in support of the application, and said that the order would not prejudice the rights of Cape creditors, who ranked concurrently.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that if there had been a request from the Transvaal Court, under the Imperial Act, the Court would have complied with the request, but as this was an adjoining British colony, and as the Transvaal recognised the judgment of this Court and the orders of this Court in insolvency, any comity which would obtain even between foreign nations should certainly apply as between the two Courts of these colonies. The system of administration in insolvency in the Transvaal was almost identical with the system of administration here. The Transvaal Court had, in the case of Stegmann, recognised the power of trustees appointed by this Court to administer property in the Transvaal, and he thought this Court should reciprocate that comity, and grant an order authorising the Transvaal trustee in this case to administer the property of the insolvent in this colony. That procedure had been followed in the Transvaal and was he (the Acting Chief Justice) thought a good procedure. A rule nisi would be granted calling on all persons interested to show cause why the appointment of the applicants as trustees in this insolvent estate should not be recognised in this Colony, but, of course, it would be on condition that the rights of creditors in this colony would not be prejudiced; the rule to be published once in the "Government Gazette" and once in the "Cape Times," and would be returnable on 24th August next.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the amendment of a certain marriage register, and ante-nuptial contract. The petition set forth that the first-named petitioner's real name was Walton, but that he subsequently changed his name, being at the time in poor circumstances—without employment—and thinking that the change of name would lead to better fortune. He married the second petitioner under the changed name, and now applied that the register should be amended by substituting his proper name. Affidavits were read, in which the deponents stated that they were convinced that the change of name was bona fide made, and that the first petitioner adopted the new name, under the impression, in his depressed state, that it would bring him better fortune. The Registrar reported in favour of the petition.

WILLIAMSON V. BERGL.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the appointment of a commission de bene esse. The affidavits in support of the application set forth that it was desired to take the evidence of the defendant Bergl on commission in London. He was now travelling on behalf of a company in Europe, and his engagements would not permit of his returning to the Colony before the trial.

Mr. Upington, for the respondent (Williamson, plaintiff in the action), read an affidavit by the respondent's attorneys, stating that the taking of Bergl's evidence in London would be expensive and unnecessary, and that, there being direct conflict of testimony between the plaintiff and defendant, it was essential that the defendant should give evidence to the Court in person.

The Court granted the application, the evidence of the defendant to be taken before the 1st October in London, Mr. Oliver being appointed commissioner, costs to be costs in the cause.

Divorce—Domicile.

Where a wife, who had come to this Colony, sought to sue her husband for restitution of conjugal rights; the husband having promised to follow her to the Colony, but never having done so: the Court refused to assume jurisdiction.

Mr. Close moved on behalf of the wife for leave to sue by edictal citation. Petitioner alleged that she came out here to start business in 1898. It was arranged that the respondent should follow her to this country, but he failed to do so, and his present whereabouts were unknown. Petitioner intended to sue her husband for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, for a decree of divorce on the ground of desertion.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said he did not think the Court had jurisdiction. There was no evidence that the defendant changed his domicile.

Mr. Close said he submitted that there was proof of the intention of the husband to change his domicile. He sent his wife out here, and told her he would follow her.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said he did not think this was a case in which the Court could assume jurisdiction. The domicile of the parties at the date of the marriage was not this colony. The marriage had not been solemnized in the colony and the defendant had never been in this colony. It was true he told his wife he would follow her here, but he did not do so. He was last heard of in England. He (the Acting Chief Justice) thought that, in matrimonial procedure especially, a decree of the Court, even if granted, would not be one which would command respect elsewhere. He did not think that an order should be granted, much as one would like to assist the applicant.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN DER WALT.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for leave to amend a certain order of Court so as to authorise the purchase of property elsewhere than in the district named in the original petition.

Leave was granted, subject to the approval of the Master.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE ELLIS.

Mr. Roux moved for the appointment of a commission to take evidence at Umtata. The evidence related to an action, in which undue preference was alleged.

Order granted, the R.M. of Umtata being appointed commissioner.

Ex parte ESTATE SCHOLTZ.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on the petition of Agnes Scholtz, as executrix in the estate of the late Dr. Scholtz, for the attachment of certain property ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and for leave to sue the Princess Radziwill by edictal citation. From the petition, it appeared that the Princess had pledged certain jewellery with Dr. Scholtz during his lifetime, and that an application had been made for payment of the amount against the return of the property. After some time a communication was received, requesting that the pledged property should be sent to London, with instructions to hand the same over to the Princess against payment of a sum of £160. The jewels were sent to Messrs. Vauxhall and Vauxhall, solicitors, London, and by them handed over to Mr. Charles Otto, representing the respondent. In November, 1904, a letter was received by applicant from Mr. Otto stating that the jewels were in his custody, and that he was without instructions as to how they should be disposed of. The pledged property had since been returned to Cape Town, and was now in the custody of Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne, applicant's attorneys. Applicant intended to institute an action against the Princess for £160, the amount represented by the pledge, and she desired that the jewellery should be declared executable for such judgment as she might obtain. The respondent was not residing within the jurisdiction of the Court, and her whereabouts were to the petitioner unknown.

Buchanan, A.C. J., asked counsel how it was proposed to effect service of the citation upon the respondent.

Mr. Benjamin said that he supposed substituted service would probably have to be made, as respondent's movements in Europe were not known.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the Princess seemed to spend a good deal of her time in Paris, and if the citation were published in one of the leading Parisian newspapers it might possibly come to her notice.

Leave was granted to attach the property ad fundandam jurisdictionem and to sue by edictal citation, citation to be returnable on the 1st November, personal service to be effected, failing which service on Mr. Charles Otto, of London, and one publication in "Le Temps" (Paris).

Postea (September 26). Leave was granted, in Chambers to set down this case for hearing on November 9.

Postea (November 10). Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment under Rule 319, the defendant having been barred for default of plea.

The Court granted judgment as prayed.

His interest in the estate was sold by his trustee to one Becker who now desired to take transfer on payment of transfer duty on the transfer from the trustee to himself. Becker could only have purchased this property subject to the onus of paying a certain sum into the joint estate bequeathed to the heirs. This sum he proposed to raise on a mortgage on the property bequeathed and sold to him. The Registrar of Deeds reported that in his opinion such mortgage could not be raised consistently with the terms of the will of the original testators, and that as the bequest had vested in the insolvent prior to his insolvency, his estate was bound to pay transfer and succession duty.

The Master recommended that the prayer of the petition be granted on condition that the double transfer duty and the succession duty be paid.

He denied that they had had notice of the summons in the Lower Court, and said that the plaintiff, Dr. McMullen had refused payment of his accounts. Replying to the Court, Israel said that the plaintiff claimed £11 19s. 6d., and the funds in the bank amounted to £10. Respondents said that they only owed him £9 17s. 6d.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TWEEDIE TRADING CO. v. GARDINER AND EASTON. (July 14th, 1905.)

This was an action for debt incurred by the plaintiffs on behalf of the defendants, in connection with the return of certain West Indian cattlemen, who had mutined on the barque Nordkin in September last.

The claim was based on an agreement under which the plaintiffs had victualled the cattlemen, and had paid the expenses of their return to an American port, the defendants agreeing to relieve them of all responsibilities and expenses in Cape Town. From the pleadings it appeared that it was the duty of the defendants to pay the expenses in connection with their return to Barbadoes. The responsibility was on the ship to prevent the men escaping, and take them somewhere, as they could not land here under the immigration laws. The plaintiff company employed police to watch the men on board. The cattlemen were sent back by another barque, and £100 was paid for their passage. For victualling, it cost the plaintiffs £6 15s., police protection £6 10s. 6d., and for removing the fittings, which was the duty of the defendants under the charter party, £14 17s. 6d.

The defendants in their plea set out that the plaintiffs agreed to return the men to a United States port, and they (defendants) were only liable for any expenses incurred in Cape Town. As the men had never been landed, the defendants submitted that no expenses had been incurred in Cape Town, and they denied all liability. Defendants further claimed that the cattle had been detained for 24 hours in an unsuitable enclosure at the Docks, and they claimed in reconvention £107 10s. for damages.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan), was for the plaintiff; and Mr. Close (with him Mr. Gutsche) was for the defendants.

James Matthew Keene, representative of the African Shipping Co., who acted as agents for the plaintiffs, stated that the vessel was berthed on the 22nd September. The cattle were discharged in the usual kraal at the South Arm. The discharge was finished on the 24th September, and within a day or so she went into the bay. The cattle were detained because the defendants had not paid the freight until the 28th September. It was not until the 30th September he got the bills of lading 3 to 11, the remaining three being unimportant. On the 29th Mr. Plant told witness he paid the deposit of £170 into the Supreme Court, and promised to hand over the bills of lading, and witness allowed him to have the cattle. The bills of lading were not forthcoming until the following day. The consignees looked after the watering and feeding of the cattle. The cattle were not in a good condition on arrival; a large percentage died on the voyage. When the vessel went into the Bay, Mr. Plant said it would be cheaper to get the cattlemen to remove the fittings. The cattlemen not only removed the fittings, but they cleaned the ship. Under the immigration laws of the Colony, the cattlemen could not land. Witness employed police to watch the ten West Indians on board. The sum of £6 10s. was paid by witness for police supervision. £14 17s. 6d. was paid to the white cattlemen for removing the fittings. Witness subsequently paid £100 to another ship to take the West Indians back. Witness had to victual the ten coloured men, which cost him £6 15s. On the 27th September witness drew the defendants' attention to the insufficient food given to the animals at the Docks.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: It would be the captain's duty to make a protest at Barbadoes. The captain, in his protest, stated that he put into Barbados, not only on account of the mutiny, but on account of being short of coal and water. The protest was extended to Cape Town. Witness knew nothing of the cattlemen mutinying through the bad food supplied. On the 23rd, witness withdrew the claim for freight on the dead animals, but that was not the cause of the defendants delaying the payment of the freight. Witness detained sufficient cattle to cover the freight charges. It was on the 23rd that the claim for freight on the dead animals was abandoned. On the 25th, notices were sent to the defendants about insufficient feeding. Defendants took action in the Supreme Court, and an order was made for the delivery of the cattle on payment of £170. Witness did not know that the defendants applied for the delivery on that day, and had been refused. As soon as Mr. Plant showed witness the deposit, a telephonic communication was despatched to the Harbour Board to release the stock, Mr. Plant promising witness to let him have the bills of lading that day. Witness did not make any arrangements with Mr. Gardiner, as Mr. Plant had given all the instructions. The defendants, in a letter, denied all liability for the return of the men to America, and on October 8 a further letter denied liability for the other items claimed.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: It was untrue that Messrs. Gardiner and Plant handed witness all the bills of lading on the 29th.

John Joseph Holland, in the employ of the Harbour Board, said that the mules, etc., landed on the occasion in question were landed in the usual place, and that the usual precautions were taken. The Harbour Board had nothing to do with the feeding.

John Bellam, accountant for the New Zealand Shipping Company, produced accounts, showing payments made to the cattlemen. It was in consequence of instructions from the captain of the Nordkin, and after collaboration with him, that the amounts had been apportioned.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: He paid Cook and Son for the men to return to New York. That was via England.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Gwendoline Gardiner, sister of the defendant Gardiner, said that she came on board the ship, with her brother, at New Orleans. A short way out some of the men mutinied. She heard the captain say that the grumbling was about the food, coal, and water. She was at the office when the agreement was drawn up.

Sir H. Juta objected to evidence as to what passed at the making of the agreement.

[Hopley, J.: The agreement is quite clear; at all events, it was not for Miss Gardiner to agree.]

Mr. Close submitted that the agreement was an ambiguous one, and he was entitled to ask the witness what her impression of it was.

Hopley, J., said he could not see any ambiguity in the contract, and at counsel's request, noted that the evidence was tendered to explain the meaning the parties attached to the words "Cape Town."

Charles Gardiner, partner in the defendant firm, said the firm's business consisted chiefly of exporting live-stock from North and South America. Witness was at New Orleans when the cattle were shipped. The ship put into Barbadoes, and ten new cattlemen were engaged. Four days after they left the mutiny commenced, and witness and the captain wrote each other letters on the ship.

Witness further stated that he wrote to the captain protesting against the ship calling at Barbadoes for bunkering, and drawing attention to the unsatisfactory food given to the cattlemen, and warning him that the ship would be held responsible.

Mr. Close said he would formally tender the evidence as to the interpretation of the contract.

[Hopley, J.: Same ruling as in the case of the last witness. I will note it.]

Examination continued: He never deviated from the position he took up in the correspondence. He repudiated the liability altogether. Under the charter party the ship was liable.

John E. McCullum, delivery clerk in the employ of the Harbour Board, deposed that he signed the delivery tickets produced. The last delivery—160 mules—was made on the morning of the 1st October. The dates upon which the lighters went out with the corpses of cattle were marked on the tickets. Three mules, two donkeys, and four horses were taken out on September 30.

By the Court: There was nothing about the kraal likely to kill any cattle.

Mr. Gardiner (recalled) stated that he had paid the expenses of the men who had to return from Barbadoes, and had also paid the freight on the animals in Cape Town. After the order of Court on September 29, witness went with Mr. Plant to the Standard Bank, and had the draft honoured. They were informed by Mr. King, an official of the bank, that the bills would be ready in an hour's time. Later in the day Plant told witness that he had the bills, and witness understood that he (Plant) was going down at once. Witness went at midnight to get the animals, but was told they were not released, and it was not until the following night that he got possession of the animals, and took them to his place at Mowbray, where two of the mules subsequently died. Witness kept a watchman at the Docks during the whole time the cattle were there. At that time the enclosure was unsuitable on account of building operations which were going on. He considered that the fact that only two of the mules died was proof that the general health of the consignment was good.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He did not contend that he could get the cattle before paying the freight. He maintained that he could get his consignment from a ship without the bills of lading; that was, as an act of grace; legally, he supposed, he could not. He contended that the cattle were illegally detained from the 29th until the 30th, because the bills of lading were produced on the 29th, and there should have been delivery that day. He could not say when the cattlemen were last paid—that was Mr. Plant's business—nor could he say up to what date they were paid. Some of the men were paid for the trip; others by the month.

Re-examined by Mr. Close: He paid his last instalment on the freight on the 28th.

Mr. Close closed his case, and counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J., said he thought the agreement clearly meant that the defendants undertook to return the men to Barbadoes, and to pay the expenses of the men here after the ship had completed the discharge and the other expenses claimed for. He therefore found for the plaintiff in convention for £125, with costs. On the claim in reconvention he did not think that there was any illegal detention, or, even if there were detention, that any cattle had died as a result. He therefore gave judgment for the defendants in reconvention (plaintiffs in convention) on the claim in reconvention.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX V. SEARIGHT AND CO. { 1905.
July 18th.

This was a motion to make absolute a rule nisi, calling upon Messrs. James Searight and Co., as agents of the wrecked steamer Clan Monroe, to show cause why they should not be ordered to remove certain dynamite and gun-cotton from the Clan Monroe by Thursday morning, and, upon their failing to do so, why the Government should not be authorised to remove the same at their expense, and why they should not be ordered to pay the costs of these proceedings.

The affidavit of Mr. H. Hawkins, manager of Messrs. James Searight and Co., Ltd., stated that he had perused a copy of the affidavit made by the Chief Inspector of Explosives (Mr. Foakes). Immediately after the wreck of the Clan Monroe had been communicated to him (Mr. Hawkins), he put himself in communication, by cable, with the owners of the steamer in Glasgow, and asked for instructions. On Saturday evening, the 8th July, he received a reply, and on Monday, the 10th July, he advertised for tenders on the "no cure, no pay" principle for salving the cargo. In response to the advertisement five tenders were received, and after referring them he received cabled instructions on Wednesday evening, the 12th inst., to accept the tender of the Cape Town Stevedoring Co. On Thursday he communicated with the successful tenderers. In the meantime he arranged for immediate steps to be taken for the commencement of the salving. On Thursday morning the second and third officers of the Clan Monroe went out to Kommetje, but they came back in the evening, and reported that the sea was too rough to go off in a boat to the wreck. On Friday, the 14th inst., the successful tenderers went out to the spot, and made an endeavour to reach the ship, but found it impossible, owing to the sea that was running. On Thursday witness received a notification that an application was to be made to the Court by the Government on the following day, but that application was not proceeded with. He was surprised now to learn of the application made to the Court on Monday. On Saturday, deponent went to the scene of the wreck in company with Mr. Wilshere, of the Customs, and Mr. Foakes, when it was found to be impossible to reach the wreck, as the sea was breaking over her. On Sunday the weather had moderated somewhat, but it was not possible for a boat to put off to the wrecked vessel. On Monday the weather was still moderating, and if it continued the tenderers hoped to get off in a boat and to commence active operations. A considerable part of the gear required for the salving operations was aboard the wreck, and lines would have to be passed from the vessel to the shore, which could only be done when the sea had moderated sufficiently to allow a boat to get alongside. He submitted that the application was unnecessary and premature. He protested against the suggestion that the Government should now interfere in the salving, and repudiate any liability for loss or damage that might result from interfering in such operations.

The replying affidavit of Mr. Foakes stated that he visited the wreck on Sunday and again on Monday, and that it was possible on both days to get on board and commence operations. Counsel also read an affidavit by Mr. H. W. Carolin (of Messrs. Reid and Nephew, Government attorneys), stating that he called at the respondent's office on Monday morning, and informed Mr. Alex. Phillips that an application would be made to the Supreme Court that morning.

Mr. Evans moved. Mr. Benjamin appeared to show cause.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the right to save the cargo was purely one vested in the owners, who were doing everything they possibly could.

Maasdorp, J., said that was a general question. The real question was that there was danger to the public in the vicinity of the wreck, and that danger must be removed.

Mr. Benjamin: They are doing all they can to avoid danger.

[Maasdorp, J.: And have the inhabitants been informed of the danger?] I cannot say they have.

[Maasdorp, J.: It would be well for those responsible to make sure. Then anybody who remains in the neighbourhood will know the risks.]

Mr. Benjamin said he understood that the Government had arranged to have police guards to keep the public away.

[Maasdorp, J.: People go there at their own risk. I am thinking of the inhabitants within the danger zone.]

Mr. Benjamin said the great anxiety of the owners was to save the cargo, not so much for the value of the cargo, but on account of the danger. Counsel commented upon the absence in our ports of the apparatus necessary for salving operations, and said that the Civil Commissioner, as the harbour authority of the district, could have taken charge of the wreck.

Mr. Evans submitted that the respondents had not exercised due despatch in the preparations for carrying out the salving operations, and pointed out that they had it on affidavit that the weather had been fit to take out a boat from the shore to the vessel.

Maasdorp, J.: When a nuisance is proved to this Court, the Court has jurisdiction to order those who are responsible for the nuisance to remove it or authorise others who are willing to remove it to do so. Now, it is admitted that the existence of the wreck there, with the explosives on board, is a source of danger, and it is quite certain that this Court would have the jurisdiction to interfere to order the removal of the danger there existing. The question arises now whether circumstances have arisen calling upon the Court to exercise that jurisdiction. There is conflict of evidence upon the principal facts in the case, and that is as to the endeavours on the part of those responsible for the nuisance to remove it, and their power, or that of any other person, in taking means for its removal. Now, in that conflict of evidence, I am not now satisfied that it was possible for the respondents to have done more than they did do. I may say I am not satisfied upon that point, though there are circumstances of suspicion that they might have done more than they have done. The respondents will have to bear in mind that if any serious consequences arise through any neglect which may hereafter be proved, they may be responsible for the consequences, if it is injury to property or life, in more respects than one, but, on the whole, I have come to the conclusion that no case has yet been made out for this Court to interfere. On the one hand, the applicants have produced evidence stating that it would be quite possible to do more than the respondents have done. The respondents have given equally strong evidence that they have made every effort that lay in their power. The Court would, therefore, give a futile order unless it were convinced that it gave an order which could be carried out. If the Court were now to give an order on the respondents to effect a work which they could not possibly do, it would give an order which could not be of any value. The applicant has come forward in the interest of the public and, for that reason, although I consider that the Court is not now in a position to make any order, the Court is not in a position to say that he was not justified, with his knowledge of the circumstances, in moving in the matter. When the Court, therefore, refuses this order, it makes no order as to the costs in this case. I may also point out that it has now been suggested that if the Government wish to undertake the work themselves, no opposition will be offered. If that is so, the Court need not interfere. But the suggestion is made that the Court should now express an opinion as to what the respective rights and liabilities of the parties will be in case these operations are carried out. A case has been cited very much in point, but it amounts to this, that the work was first done, and then the Court was asked to decide as to the liabilities of the parties, and consequently, I give no expression of opinion at all as to what the legal consequences will be if the Government undertake the work. If the liability is laid down in any statute or in any common law rules on the subject, the parties must consult the law in order to be guided in their action. No order will be made on the application, and no order as to costs will be given.

REX V. MCCOMA AND ANOTHER. 1905. (July 18th.

Hopley, J., reviewed the facts in the case of Rex v. John M'Coma and Willem Maigas, on a charge of destroying a koodoo at Steytlerville, and held, as the first prisoner pleaded guilty and was called to give evidence before he was sentenced against the second man, the conviction must be quashed.

Ex parte NOHLAJI.

Mr. Roux moved for an order on the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer from the original grantee to the eldest son.

A rule was granted, calling upon all persons concerned to show cause on the 31st August, 1905, why an order should not be granted as prayed, the rule to be served personally on Edward, Richard, Ura, and Samson Nohlaji, to be advertised once in the "Kokstad Advertiser."

Postea (September 1). Rule made absolute.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte BADENHORST.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on behalf of the petitioner, for orders: (a) interdicting and restraining the respondent, Rudolf Badenhorst, from alienating any goods or rights belonging to the farm Raasfontein; (b) for the attachment of all moveable assets of the said Rudolph Badenhorst; (c) restraining the Standard Bank of S.A. (Colosberg) and Johannes Jacobus Norval, and the firm of Schutz and De Jager from parting with any of the funds or assets of Badenhorst; (d) compelling Rudolph Badenhorst to furnish the applicant with sufficient funds to enable her to prosecute her action for divorce and costs.

Order granted in terms of a, b, and c, of the application to operate as an interim interdict. As to (d), a rule nisi granted calling upon Badenhorst to furnish the petitioner with £40 to enable her to institute her action. Order to be served personally, and, if necessary, to be telegraphed, rule returnable September 12.

REX V. ZIMMERMAN AND OTHERS.

This was an application to have the accused, who were at present confined in Caledon Gaol, on a charge of murder, released on bail. The matter had previously been before the Acting Chief Justice, when he ordered further evidence to be taken, and counsel citing the evidence, submitted that there was every reason to assume the prisoners' innocence while they were in gaol, and that they would be greatly prejudiced in their defence.

Mr. Burton for applicants; Mr. Evans for the Crown.

Hopley, J., said that the application, though formally opposed, was not strenuously opposed by the Attorney-General's Office, and he thought, under all the circumstances, it would be right to admit the accused to bail. Zimmerman's case was on a somewhat different basis to the others, and bail in his case should be somewhat heavier. The other applicants would be admitted to bail, themselves in £200 and sureties to the satisfaction of the Magistrate in a like sum. In regard to Zimmerman, the bail would be fixed at £500 in the accused himself and £500 in sureties to the satisfaction of the Resident Magistrate.

Ex parte LOUW AND OTHERS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to transfer certain property in the estate of the first-named petitioner and his deceased spouse. The first-named petitioner was 94 years of age. Consent papers were filed.

Order granted.

Ex parte MARAIS.

Mr. De Waal moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem, to represent certain minors in the partition of property.

Order granted, Mr. H. J. Swanepool being appointed curator, costs to come out of the minors' inheritance.

Ex parte KEMP.

Mr. Benjamin moved for authority to sell and transfer certain property. The petition set forth that the petitioner owned certain property which he wished now to transfer to his children, in lieu of other property bequeathed to them. There was a provision in the will that the property bequeathed should not be alienated by the heirs. It was stated that the property belonging to the children was overrun with prickly pear, and the petitioner had no means to rid the land of the pest. The property which he sought to transfer was more valuable. The Master recommended that the application should be granted, subject to the same restriction being placed on the property to be transferred to the minors.

Leave was granted to the petitioner to sell his and his wife's portion in the farm and to transfer it, on condition that he transfer to his children, born and to be born of his marriage, free and unencumbered, the property set forth in the petition.

Ex parte VAN ZYL.

Mr. Russell moved for confirmation of the sale of certain property purchased by the petitioner from her husband's estate, of which she is executrix. The sale was by public auction, and the sum paid was stated to be of fair value.

Order granted.

Ex parte PAPERT.

Mr. Alexander moved for leave to register a certain contract after marriage, having the effect of an ante-nuptial contract. It was stated in the petition that the petitioner and his wife fully intended to be married out of community at the time of the marriage. They were married before the Acting Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, but did not understand at the time that they were being married, believing that they were only going through a form of registration. Last Sunday they went through the religious ceremony, which they had understood to be required to complete their marriage.

Leave granted.

SUPREME COURT

Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

PROVISIONAL TRUSTEE.

In re INSOLVENT ESTATE { 1905.
MCLEOD. { July 19th.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on the petition of Blaine and Company and other creditors, for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of John McLeod, trading as a grocer and provision merchant under the style of Ford and McLeod at Port Elizabeth. Counsel said that he understood that the estate was voluntarily surrendered yesterday (Tuesday), and that the surrender was accepted by a Judge in Chambers. Petitioners suggested that Mr. Charles Anderson, of Port Elizabeth, was a fit and proper person to be appointed trustee until such time as a trustee was elected, and prayed that he should be appointed and be vested with power forthwith to endorse cheques payable to the estate, and to pay the same into the bank for collection, and also to dispose of the perishable assets and receive the proceeds thereof. Counsel added that his learned friend, Mr. Roux, he understood, had an application to make, but he was not sure that it was in the same estate.

Maasdorp, J., said that an order would be granted as prayed.

Mr. Roux immediately afterwards rose and moved, on the petition of Mr. James McLagan, manager for Forbes and Caulfield, merchants, Port Elizabeth, for his appointment as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of John McLeod. The petitioner stated that his firm were creditors to the amount of £2,975 18s., while the total liabilities—according to the schedules which had been filed—were £3,239.

Maasdorp, J., said that it was strange that they should now have this application in view of the order just made.

Mr. Benjamin explained that he had been led to believe that his learned friend was moving in quite a different estate.

Maasdorp, J., asked whether Forbes and Caulfield were secured creditors?

I understand that they are secured by bond.

Maasdorp, J., said that no order would be made on this application, in view of the order already made.

Mr. Roux applied for costs against the insolvent estate.

[Maasdorp, J.: There seems to be a rush for the appointment of provisional trustee. The applicant in this matter applies for his own sake merely. No order will be made.]

DOUGLAS V. FISHER.

This was an action brought by John F. Douglas, bricklayer, Yzerplaats, Cape Division, against Thomas Fisher, of Maitland, to recover a sum of £50 in respect of an alleged sale of ground.

The declaration set out that on the 29th June, 1904, defendant lent to plaintiff a sum of £15 sterling. In or about September, 1904, plaintiff and defendant entered into a verbal contract by which it was agreed that plaintiff should sell and defendant should buy for £65 certain portion of redeemed quitrent land. It was further agreed between the parties that the sum of £15 referred to should be taken in part payment of the purchase price. Plaintiff had at all times been willing to pass transfer against payment of the balance of purchase price, and had tendered and hereby again tendered transfer. He prayed for judgment for £50, with interest a tempore morae, alternative relief, and costs of suit.

Defendant, in his plea, denied that he had purchased from plaintiff land at Yzerplaats or elsewhere. He instructed his agent, Mr. Martin, to inspect the plaintiff's title deeds, but no agreement of sale was ever entered into between plaintiff and defendant. In re-convention defendant claimed judgment for £15, money lent to plaintiff on the 29th June, 1904.

Mr. Gutsche was for plaintiff; Dr. Greer was for defendant.

Mr. Gutsche asked for leave to amend the declaration by substituting for "in or about September, 1904," the words "at the same time."

Dr. Greer objected to the proposed amendment, and said that, if allowed, it would set up a totally different case from the one they had now come to Court to meet.

Maasdorp, J., said that the amendment would be allowed, and the question mentioned by Dr. Greer could be raised afterwards if necessary.

John F. Douglas, bricklayer, Yzerplaats, said that he applied to defendant in June of last year for a loan of £15. Defendant asked him if he would let him have the land for £65, and take the £15 in part payment. Witness agreed to do so. It was arranged in September that Fisher should give him £30 more before he passed transfer. There was nothing settled in June about passing transfer. Mr. Rosen at that time held the deeds as security for a debt. Fisher never asked him for the return of the £15. Witness took no steps in the matter until the end of the year. Mr. Carmichael, Mr. Rosen's agent, then told him that Mr. Fisher had not paid up, and witness entered into an agreement to pay off his (Douglas's) debt.

Cross-examined: On the 27th April witness received a summons at the instance of the defendant, claiming payment of the sum of £15. Witness then issued in self-defence a summons for payment of the balance of purchase price.

James Carmichael, manager for Mr. Rosen, furniture dealer, said that his firm took the deeds from plaintiff as security for a debt of about £50. Plaintiff came in September for the deeds, and witness went with him to see Mr. Martin. Witness could not wait, and he agreed to leave the deeds with Mr. Martin, upon the latter giving him a receipt. He had since pressed Martin for payment of the money or return of the deeds. Witness had treated the transaction throughout as a sale to Fisher.

Mr. Gutsche closed his case.

Thomas Fisher, the defendant, said the plaintiff had been in his employment as foreman bricklayer. In June last plaintiff came to him and said he was "in a bit of a hole," having no money wherewith to pay interest on a mortgage. Witness lent him £15, but got no receipt. At that interview nothing was said about the purchase of property. Witness was told by his foreman (Potter) at the end of August that Douglas had some plots for sale. Witness asked Douglas one morning for the money, and Douglas asked him to buy two plots, and to allow the £15 to be retained as part payment. He said witness could pay the balance when he pleased. Witness said he would think over it. Later on he asked Douglas to take the title-deeds to Mr. Martin in Strand-street; that gentleman was auditing witness's books at the time. It was not until Martin told him that witness knew the deeds were held by Mr. Rosen. Witness told Martin to send the deeds back, as he had not the £30 to pay at that time. Witness wanted to get hold of the property as security for the £15 he had lent Douglas, and he expressed his willingness to pay £15, and the rest in three months. Martin told him that this was not accepted. Witness did not agree at any time to a sale. Witness did not agree to give a post-dated cheque. Martin said he had suggested giving a post-dated cheque, conditionally upon witness ratifying it. He sued Douglas in the Magistrate's Court for the £15.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gutsche. It was arranged in the first place that the £15 should be deducted from Douglas's wages, and witness instructed his foreman accordingly, but it was not done. Witness's only connection with Martin was that he employed the latter to audit his books. He understood that Douglas had the title-deeds in his possession. He had not seen or given instructions to Martin before Douglas took the title-deeds to his office.

George G. Martin, accountant, said his first knowledge of the matter was upon Douglas coming to his office with the title-deeds. Witness made out a receipt, the terms of which were suggested by Carmichael. Witness acted in the bona fide belief that there had been a sale from Douglas to Fisher. He had had no instructions from Fisher on the matter. When witness told Fisher that there was a debt of £30 against the deeds, Fisher was surprised, and said it would be better to return the title-deeds. Witness suggested to him that it would be better to try to arrange terms, in order to secure the £15 lent to Douglas. Witness tried to make arrangements with Rosen. Fisher would not agree to give a post-dated cheque.

Edward Potter, carpenter, in the employ of the defendant, said he paid the men's wages, and Fisher instructed him to deduct so much a week from Douglas's wages to pay off the £15, but witness did not do so, as Douglas said he was in a "tight corner."

The plaintiff (recalled) said Potter never tried to stop any part of his wages.

Dr. Greer closed his case, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff's case is that in June he desired to obtain a loan of £15 from the defendant, but that the defendant, who had heard that the plaintiff had land for sale, suggested instead of the loan going through they should come to some arrangement for the purchase of the land, and then he would let him have £15 as part payment of the purchase price. He agreed to the proposition made by the defendant, and a contract was entered into by which the land was sold for the sum of £65. £15 was paid on the spot, and £50 remained due. The defendant denies the purchase of this property, and says that the only thing that happened was the lending of the £15 to the plaintiff, which was to be repaid by stoppages of part payment of his salary. If the case rested there it would certainly be very difficult to decide the issue, but the question arises whether there are other circumstances which throw light upon this case, and whether the Court can gather from anything that was said or written by either of the parties, that which would go to corroborate the statement made by the plaintiff. After reviewing the evidence, His Lordship gave judgment for the plaintiff for £50 upon the plaintiff tendering to the defendant the necessary documents to pass transfer of the land, the defendant to pay costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: G. Trollip.
Defendant's: G. J. O'Reilly.]

Ex parte VILJOEN.

Mr. Burton moved as a matter of urgency for an interdict restraining Ferdinand Wm. Roberts, of Lady Grey, district of Aliwal North, from removing from a certain farm in the district of Aliwal North a quantity of tobacco obtained from petitioner, who resided at Belfast, district of Lydenburg, Transvaal. Petitioner said that the respondent obtained from him 1,221 lb. of uncut tobacco, valued at £45 15s., on a fraudulent representation that he had funds at the bank in Belfast, and that respondent had removed the tobacco to the farm, Noodefontein, Aliwal North district.

Interdict granted, with leave to all parties interested to move to have it set aside.

APPEALS.

WATSON AND MALCOLM V. WILLIAMS.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Middelberg, in an action brought by the present respondent against the appellants for 9s., balance of wages, alleged to be due.

It appeared from the record that the respondent had been employed by the appellants as a carpenter, at 1s. 10½d. an hour. He was entitled to £11 8s. 9d. wages, but the appellants only paid him £10 19s. 9d., withholding the balance, as per agreement, for quarters provided for the respondent. The Magistrate gave judgment for the plaintiff, with costs, and held that the agreement was unwarrantable and inequitable.

Mr. Burton was for appellants; respondent in default.

Counsel submitted that the agreement was clearly proved, and that the Magistrate erred in his judgment. The Magistrate himself found that such an arrangement had been entered into between the parties.

Maasdorp, J.: Plaintiff consented to forego so much of the wages in respect of the quarters which were at his disposal. He did not actually occupy them, but he agreed to forego those wages for the right he would have to occupy those buildings. This agreement was clearly proved before the Magistrate, but the Magistrate held that it was an unreasonable thing. That is a ground upon which, I think, the Magistrate's judgment should not have proceeded. Plaintiff is not entitled to recover this alleged balance of wages. The Magistrate's judgment must be reversed to judgment for the defendants, with costs in this Court and the Court below.

KRUGER V. DU PISANI.

Magistrate's jurisdiction—Counter-claim.

Where a counter-claim in excess of the jurisdiction is brought in a Magistrate's Court, the Magistrate must take evidence as to the bona fides of the counter-claim.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Willow-more in an action brought by the respondent against the appellant for £30, with interest a tempore morae, for rent alleged to be due by virtue of a lease. Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for appellant; there was no appearance for respondent.

Mr. Jones said that the defendant had a counter-claim for work and labour done amounting to £49 13s. 9d., which was beyond the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and he submitted that the Magistrate erred in not taking evidence as to whether the counter-claim was bona fide. He submitted that the case should be remitted to the Magistrate to take evidence on the counter-claim.

Maasdorp, J.: The case will be sent back to the Magistrate in order to ascertain whether this is a bona fide claim that the defendant sets up, and, if he comes to the conclusion that it is, then he will be unable to proceed further in trying the case. The parties may then proceed to their remedy in a court of higher jurisdiction. The respondent must pay costs of appeal, costs in the court below to remain in the discretion of the Magistrate. For the present the judgment of the Magistrate is reversed, with costs.

HEYDENRYCH V. ABDURHAM.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town in an action, in which the appellant sued the respondent upon a promissory note for £110.

From the record it appeared that the note in question was dated the 17th August, 1903, and was signed by the defendant, promising to pay a sum of £110 on the 6th November, 1903, to Abdol Gaffoor, of 25, Pope-street, Salt River. The note was endorsed by Gaffoor, and appellant sued as the legal holder thereof. The defence was that the amount due under the note had been extinguished by payment in account with Abdol Gaffoor. Defendant further said that the note was signed by him in blank, and that it was fraudulently filled in as £110; the correct amount being £10.

The plaintiff had taken over the note from Gaffoor, who had borrowed a sum of £1,000 from him, for which Gaffoor had been charged interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per month. The Magistrate, in his reasons, stated that the allegation of fraud, as to which he expressed no opinion, did not affect the validity of the plaintiff's claim, and the main question was whether the plaintiff was beyond all reasonable doubt still the bona fide holder of the note at the time the action was instituted. He (the Magistrate) came to the conclusion, for various reasons, that he was not, while recognising the presumption from the holding of the note in his favour. The Magistrate reviewed the circumstances at length, and said it was clear that the plaintiff treated this note as discharged, and released the defendant from liability on the passing of the bond.

Mr. Burton was for appellant; Mr. Gardiner was for respondent.

Maasdorp, J., said that the question arose whether it had been proved that the note had been settled with the plaintiff. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that upon the whole of the case it was impossible for him to ascertain the exact state of accounts between Gaffoor and Heydenrych, that certain settlements took place, but that it was impossible for him to ascertain whether such a full settlement had taken place as to dispose of this promissory note. His Lordship reviewed the evidence, and said that payments had not been proved with respect to the promissory note. As to the further defence of fraud, His Lordship saw no necessity, on the authorities cited, for sending the matter back to the Magistrate. Judgment would be for the plaintiff for £130, with interest, from the January 6, 1904, the defendant to pay the costs in this court and in the court below.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GRASSICK V. B.S.A. ASPHALT CO. 1905.
July 20th.
" 21st.
" 24th.

Contract, fraudulent and immoral.

This was an action brought by Alexander Grassick, contractor, Cape Town, against the B.S.A. Asphalt and Manufacturing Co., of 62, Strand-street, Cape Town, to recover a sum of £162 3s. 6d., balance alleged to be due for work and labour done.

The declaration set out that on or about the 30th March, 1904, the defendant company entered into a contract with the Cape Town Council, by which the company agreed to do and carry out certain tar-paving of a portion of the Early Morning Market grounds at Sir Lowry-road. In June, 1904, plaintiff agreed with the company to carry out the work of laying the said tar-paving, defendants undertaking to supply all plant and materials necessary for the due carrying out of the said work. The terms agreed upon were that plaintiff should be paid at the rate of 2s. 3d. per superficial yard of the paving that he laid, that weekly payments should be made to him on an approximate estimate of the work done, leaving the exact amount to be determined by the measurements of the City Engineer. Plaintiff thereupon proceeded to do and carry out the work of laying the tarpaving, and continued to do so until the 14th September, 1904, when he was required by the defendant company to cease continuing to do so. On or about that date he had duly completed 3,023½ superficial yards. He had also done 2,073 superficial yards, which, while not completed, were advanced to the stage known as seconds, for which plaintiff was entitled to charge 1s. 6d. per yard, making £207 19s. 6d. He had also advanced 411 yards to the stage known as thirds, for which he charged at the rate of 1s. per yard, making £20 11s. 6d. He said that the charges of 1s. 6d. and 1s. for seconds and thirds respectively were fair and reasonable. The defendant company had paid to plaintiff a sum of £368 14s. for work done. The total amount to which plaintiff was entitled for labour which he had done was £530 17s. 6d., leaving a balance owing of £162 3s. 6d., for which judgment was prayed, with interest and costs.

Defendants, in their plea, admitted paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the declaration, save that they said that plaintiff undertook to carry out the work properly and skilfully, and in accordance with the terms of the specification and contract, and to the satisfaction of the City Engineer. The defendant company admitted that plaintiff proceeded with the said work until the 14th September, but said that he did not carry out the work properly and skilfully, or in accordance with the terms of the specification and contract in regard to paragraph 2, or to the satisfaction of the City Engineer, and accordingly he was given notice to discontinue. By reason of plaintiff's breach of contract, defendants were compelled to replace and re-execute a large portion of the work at a cost of £231 12s. 5d., which said sum the defendant company were now entitled to claim from plaintiff. Defendants claimed as a set-off £231 12s. 5d. against the plaintiff's claim, so far as may be necessary to extinguish the same. In reconvention, the defendant company claimed judgment for £231 12s. 5d. additional expenses incurred as aforesaid.

Plaintiff, in his replication, said that he did not undertake to carry out the work to the satisfaction of the City Engineer, and that, so far as he was concerned, he had always been ready and willing to carry out the work according to the specifications. If the work had not been satisfactorily carried out, it was owing to the failure of the defendant company to supply him with proper plant and materials, and their failure to give him proper facilities for doing the work. He prayed that the claim in reconvention should be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) for plaintiff. Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Struben) for defendants.

Alexander Grassick (the plaintiff) was called. In the course of his evidence, he said that he was told by Mr. Allan the manager for the company, whose instructions he was to take while he was executing the sub-contract, that—

Mr. Upington objected to this, on the ground that it was evidence varying the agreement, as set out in paragraph 3 of the declaration, and that a written agreement had been proved, dated 6th June, 1904, whereby the plaintiff agreed to carry out the work according to the City Engineer's specification, which provided that the work was to be carried out under his supervision.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the City Engineer's supervision applied to the contract, and that the City Engineer had no supervision over the sub-contract.

Hopley, J., ruled that the evidence should be admitted.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that Mr. Allan told him that he must take instructions from him, and witness drew his attention to the clause in the specification regarding the City Engineer's supervision. Mr. Allan said, "never mind, I will arrange with the City Engineer." Witness's first tender was 3s. a yard; he afterwards made a tender of 2s. a yard, but he never agreed to satisfy the City Engineer at that figure. He was told not to bother about the specifications. Witness considered that the B.S.A. Company, as the contractors, never attempted to approach the conditions set out in the Council's specification. The materials with which he was supplied did not come up to the specification. The roller with which he was supplied was too light for the work that was to be done. No proper covering was provided for the engine. The site of the works was too low, and could not be kept dry. Witness went on to speak of the defects of the plant furnished to him. Witness said that more than once he pointed out to Mr. Allan that he was not complying with the specifications, and that Mr. Cook might pass and make a complaint, but Mr. Allan said, "Never mind; I will arrange with Mr. Cook." A good deal of the material was put down during the wet weather, although the specification said that it must only be laid in dry weather. Afterwards, about the 14th or 20th September, the City Engineer came on the scene, and complained about the way in which the work was being done, and stopped operations. Witness went to the B.S.A. Asphalt Company's offices and saw the manager and secretary, who said that it was his fault, through mixing the material while it was wet. At that time he claimed on his approximate measurements that a sum of about £55 was due to him. Subsequently he had an offer of £25 from the company, and a proposal that he should recommence the work, defendants promising that such sum as was found to be due to him upon the measurements of the City Engineer should be paid. The company also required him to withdraw the action that he had commenced.

Cross-examined: He had not laid macadam in this country before he took this contract, but he had laid considerable macadam in Australia. He had laid tar paving in Johannesburg on the Geldenhuis Estate. This was the first contract for tar paving he had taken in this country. The letter which he signed for 2s. a yard was a facsimile of the letter he had had sent for 3s. a yard, except as to the figure. Witness told Mr. Allan that he could not carry out the specification at 2s. per yard. Mr. Allan said, "Grassick, you can do it; never mind the specification—that is my business." Witness heard that a letter had been received from the City Engineer stating that the work was being done in a slovenly manner, but it was impossible to do it otherwise than slowly at that time owing to the terribly wet weather.

The tar-paving he had laid was still there. The "bottoming" was laid on an uneven surface, consisting of "loose stones, boulders, and brick-bats," as the City Engineer described, material supplied to him by the defendants. Witness tried to make the surface even. He attended a meeting of the company's directors on the 30th October.

Mr. Upington asked witness whether it was correct, as set out in the company's minute-book, that "the foreman, Grassick, then attended the meeting, and, after some discussion, it was resolved that the sum of £25 be paid to him on account of the balance of his measurements. This payment was made entirely without prejudice to the company's position, Grassick agreeing to let the matter stand over pending the City Engineer's further contract."

Witness replied that the record was incorrect, because he was told at the meeting that it would be settled at once.

Mr. Upington asked witness if he understood that the terms, "without prejudice to the company's position," referred to the company's right to make him responsible for any improper workmanship?

Witness said that he did not understand the terms in that sense. In further cross-examination, witness said that he received a payment of £25 on the 1st November. During subsequent negotiations, witness agreed to allow the company £5 in respect of a small portion of the paving, if he were allowed to complete the work. Witness claimed a balance of £30 10s. 6d., and he took up the position that, if that balance were paid to him, he would be prepared to go on with the work. Witness thought that the company were charging him too much in the claim in reconvention. Witness had had experience of estimating for tar-paving in Australia. He had had experience of estimating at the Early Morning Market. He agreed to try the contract at 2s. per yard.

Mr. Upington: You did not tender to carry out the specification of the City Engineer?—No.

You tendered for a cheap and nasty job at a very low price. Is that so?—No, that is not so. I tendered at 3s. a yard.

What did you tender to do for 2s.?—I agreed to do the work in a most slovenly manner to the satisfaction of the B.S.A. Company, and not to the satisfaction of the City Engineer.

Re-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Allen threatened to clear witness off the work if he did not continue to lay the macadam in wet weather. In the early stage of the work witness asked for a heavy roller, but his request was not met with when he was filling in the foundation. It was a great mistake to put on a steam roller when the asphalt was laid, as it crushed the tar through the clay. He found fault with the charges made by the Asphalt Company for wages and labour.

By Hopley, J.: Allen told witness that he (witness) was taking the contract too seriously. Witness understood that Allen was going to put the specification to one side, and carry it out to his own idea. Allen said he would make the matter all right with Mr. Cook. Witness quite understood, as he laid down every yard of stuff that the corporation were not getting what they specified for.

William P. Turner, Superintendent of Roads, in the City Engineer's Department, stated he had under his supervision all the tar paving under the Corporation. He had other work on at the same time as that at the Early Morning Market, so that he could not give it his undivided attention. He knew of the work going on in wet weather. During process of mixing some of the substance got on to dirty ground. The cover which was necessary at the maturing stage was insufficient. There was not sufficient stacking to make the quantity of tar for the area to be covered.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness might have visited the place three times a week. He might not have been on the spot when the clay shale arrived. The bluestone could be obtained without any clay shale. From time to time he noticed that the stuff was being properly mixed, and reported that, as he also did the work taking place in wet weather. The accommodation for the preparation of the stuff was unsuitable.

By Hopley, J.: Witness left it to his chief after reporting the defendants to stop the bad work.

John Cook, City Engineer, who had under him the paving in question, said the contract provided there should be no sub-letting, and he never heard of the arrangement between the plaintiff and the defendants until the present trouble began. Witness always understood the plaintiff to be foreman in the employ of the B.S.A.A. Company. The site was sufficiently large for the making of the tarred macadam, but there ought to have been more room for maturing, which could only have been done with considerable delay. Witness drew defendants' attention on July 14 to the unsatisfactory way in which the work was being carried out, and they replied they would pay attention to witness's requirements. It was improper to mix and lay the material as fast as it came from the crusher, and witness did not know of any instructions being given to the defendants to do that. When witness drew attention to the cartload of wet stones, defendants replied that their "foreman" was very careful, but sometimes the ordinary workman was careless. On the 6th September he gave defendants notice to stop the work until such time as the Council met, when he would advise the cancellation of the contract. If there was manure deposited he would be glad to have the asphalt dug up if the spot was pointed out. On the 17th September the defendants asked for a reconsideration of witness's decision, pointing out that there had evidently been a misunderstanding between them, defendants thinking that it was the wish of the Corporation that the work should be pushed on as quickly as possible. In the correspondence or in any interviews between witness and the defendants, there was no room for any such misunderstanding. It was only last week that he finally passed the work, and not the 17th April, as set out by Mr. Davis in his affidavit.

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: On the 17th April the first payment on account was made. The material was quite good enough if there had been proper consolidation. Outside the Corporation Quarries there was a general attempt to mix the bluestone with a certain amount of clay shale.

Mr. Uppington: Generally, I take it that your objection was to the manner in which the actual work was carried out, more than to the materials that were employed?

Witness: It was to both.

Mr. Uppington: Your objection was rather to the way in which it was carried out?

Witness: It was carried out in wet weather.

Further cross-examined: He had sworn an affidavit in which he said that his chief reason for condemning the work was because of the use of wet and dirty materials, the materials not being matured, and having been laid in wet weather. The company afterwards took the whole of the toppings off the portion that witness had complained of, and allowed the material to dry, and re-toppings were afterwards placed in that part. He had reported to the City Council that the work was fairly satisfactory. The work had been accepted, but it was a question whether the pavement would carry the traffic, and that time alone could decide. The Corporation desired that the work should be pushed on reasonably and early after the contract had been signed, but they did not want the materials to be mixed in the rain or to be laid in the rain.

By the Court: It was not chiefly because of the quality of the stone that he condemned the work that was partly the reason, but the stone had been brought from the Barracks site and was dirty, and the tar would not adhere. All the stuff that had been put down was still there. The toppings had since been chipped off about an inch down, so as to expose the seconds and bottomings to the atmosphere. There were three causes of the trouble—unmatured materials, wet weather, and dirty stones. The bottomings and intermediate layer were faulty, and had to be dried by the air, but the job was not now as good as it would have been if it had been carried out according to specification. Witness could not from memory say how much of the work done by Grassick was satisfactory.

David John Clarke, stonemason, Henry F. W. Rohr, manager for Jenkins and Co., and John H. Gibbs, iron-founder, also gave evidence for the plaintiff.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

George Allan, manager for the defendant company, said that he did not tell the plaintiff that he was to take no notice of the specification to the contract, and that he was only to listen to witness. The site for the mixing materials was above the level of the gutter. Grassick never complained about the unsuitability of the mixing site, nor did he complain about the drying table. Plaintiff was fully authorised to turn away bad stuff, and did actually turn away certain stones. Witness had not told plaintiff to work in wet weather. The company got several crushers for the plaintiff. Plaintiff found fault with the first, and he selected the second one himself, and it was erected under his supervision. The company afterwards got him a third crusher. Witness did not think that the stone was wrong. The company paid a good price for the best stone they could get in the district. They obtained blue stone from the Mount Prospect Quarries, and also from the Barracks. He believed the cost of the stone obtained from the quarries was about 7s. 6d. a cubic yard. He had not told plaintiff to do the work in a slovenly manner, but on several occasions he drew plaintiff's attention to the terms of the specification. He complained to plaintiff about the way in which he was doing the work. Plaintiff was putting too much tar into the stuff, with the result that the finished surface was too soft. Plaintiff's brother was employed on the job for some time, and the City Engineer found fault with his work. Witness called Grassick's attention to the need of dispensing with the services of his brother. When the work had been stopped the City Engineer did not make any complaint about the materials which had been used. He complained rather of the way in which the work was done, the surface being soft and uneven. Witness's intentions all the way through was to make a first-class job of the contract; that was why he wanted to fix the responsibility on the man who was putting down the paving.

Witness: I did not notice anything very bad until he came to the surface. When you stood on the material you sank down. The surface was all hollows. Witness (continuing his evidence) said that he was not aware that the plaintiff was using damp stones; he had always been under the impression that Grassick was using dry stones. Grassick had a good fire burning all the time so as to enable him to dry any wet stones. Witness did not see any leak in the roof of the drying and mixing shed. In regard to the claim in reconvention, witness said that the amount of £213 odd represented actual expenditure. Plaintiff was in error in stating that a cart load of stones went to one yard of paving; three loads would be equal to two yards. Witness did not deny that if the plaintiff had done the work properly he would have been entitled to the amount that he claimed, but plaintiff was indebted to the company for the wastage caused by having to re-execute the work. They did not claim anything against plaintiff for the rest of the contract that they had executed. On the whole job, the company would make a loss.

[Hopley, J.: There ought not to have been a loss at that price of 2s. a yard?]

Witness: There should not have been, but the way we have been humbugged about has caused us to make a loss.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: They came to the conclusion that Grassick was not satisfactory when the City Engineer complained. He had no idea that Grassick was laying the paving in wet weather, until the City Engineer drew his attention to the matter some time in July and August. Witness went to the job every day, but he did not see Grassick laying the paving in wet weather. Witness admitted having written on the 30th August to the City Engineer, saying: "Our foreman exercises all the care possible." He meant by that that Grassick had promised to be as careful as possible.

Mr. Gardiner: Did you mean what you said, that he did exercise all the care possible.

Witness: While I was there, he certainly did.

Mr. Gardiner: Yet, you tell us you had to complain to him on several occasions that he was not carrying out the specification. I suppose you meant to tell the truth when you wrote to the City Engineer?

Witness: I always tell the truth as far as I know.

Cross-examination continued: Grassick first tendered at 3s. per yard for the labour. Witness told him that the figure was too much, and Grassick went and looked into the matter again, and tendered for 2s. a yard. The defendants did not ask the consent of the Corporation when they gave this work to Grassick. He did not consider that they had sub-let the contract, and thus broken their undertaking with the Council. He did not think it was necessary to obtain the consent of the Corporation to sub-let piece work. He was anxious to fix the responsibility for doing the work upon the man on the job. Dirty stone was not used on the job. Only the clean stone in the company's yard was intended for the job. Witness never intended that the materials should not be matured. When he said in his letter to plaintiff that the material should be used as fast as it came from the crusher, he did not mean that it must be immediately laid, but that it should be used at the same rate as it came from the crusher. They could have done with more space for maturing, but he did not think that Grassick was hampered by want of sufficient space. He denied that they had a misunderstanding with the City Engineer as to the kind of weather when they should lay down the paving. It was not correct that the City Engineer took one view as to the weather when the work should go on, and that the company took another. Witness was not aware that the defendants offered Grassick 6d. a yard if he would do the re-topping.

Alexander Allan, brother of the last witness, said the time-sheets produced passed through his hands, and the stuff that was used for the re-topping was entered in his books, and made up the defendants' counter-claim.

H. Davis, secretary of the defendant company, gave evidence as to the de-defendants' outlay for wages on the time-sheets and other expenses.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Mr. Gardiner was heard in argument on the facts.

Without calling upon Mr. Struben,

Hopley, J.: In this case the plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendant company to do a certain piece of work in a certain way. The defendants had entered into a contract with the Town Council to do certain tar-paving at the Early Morning Market according to certain carefully drawn specifications, to the satisfaction of the City Engineer. This contract the defendants employed the plaintiff to carry out; he agreeing to do it at 2s. a yard. Now in making that agreement he signed a document which clearly sets forth that he undertook to do the work at the price stated in terms of the specifications, a copy of which he had received; but he now says that it was understood from the start and before he signed that document that no attention should be paid to the specifications, and that the work should be scamped; that he should do cheap and bad work, and cover it over rapidly and that the defendant's manager should in some way or other satisfy the City Engineer. This seems to me, if true, to amount to a dishonest and immoral contract between the plaintiff and the defendants; but it was the only line the plaintiff could take up, as he was forced to admit that he did do bad work, nowhere approaching the specifications. When he made out such a case I listened to it with considerable impatience and repugnance for it amounts to nothing short of a combination between the plaintiff and the defendants to swindle the rate-payers of Cape Town, who were under the contract with the defendants paying a handsome price for the work which they might therefore expect to be thoroughly well done. If such a contract had in fact been made, it seems to me that no Court should assist either of the parties to recover under it. If the plaintiff's evidence on this point is true, it seems to me that he should fail in his action by reason of the immorality and dishonesty of the contract. The defendants, however, entirely deny the plaintiff's version and say that the contract was honestly entered into as set forth in the written document, and that the plaintiff should have performed the work in terms of the specifications. Now this seems to me a much more likely version. The defendants are a large paving company, and it would be little short of suicidal on their part to do such work for such a customer as the Town Council in the city where they hoped to do a large business: and in any case I feel inclined to hold that the contract was the honest thing which the written document states it to have been, and not the fraudulent arrangement which the plaintiff endeavours to set up. Plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum of £162 3s. 6d. that he claimed for the work that he did. A lot of the work that he did had to be picked up again, the surface had to be exposed so as to let the air reach the parts underneath, and a fresh topping had to be put on. The amount claimed in reconvention by the defendants was £213 odd. It had been admitted that 15 per cent. was included in the claim for profit. He (the learned judge) did not think that defendants should be allowed any profit, and judgment would be given for the claim in reconvention, less profit. The judgment of the Court would be for the plaintiff in convention for £162, and for the defendants (now plaintiffs) on the claim in reconvention for £172, leaving a balance due to defendants of £10, plaintiff to pay costs of suit.

BABOOLALLAND V. BABOO- { 1905.
LALLAND. } July 20th.

This was an application on notice calling on the respondent to show cause why a certain order of Court should not be reviewed and rescinded. On the 12th July the present respondent made an ex parte application to the Court, and obtained an order giving him the custody of the child of the marriage of the then respondent and himself, pending further order of Court. The wife now applied to have the order rescinded, and the child restored to her custody, and for an order upon the respondent to pay the sum of £8 per month towards the maintenance of the applicant and the child.

In an affidavit made by the present respondent on the occasion of the proceedings in July, he stated that he was married to the respondent in 1897 at Mauritius. He alleged that his wife had deserted him, and was living with another man named Pandey, and that she intended to leave the Colony and to take with her the child.

In support of the present application, the wife deposed on affidavit that her husband had ill-used her, and had deserted her, leaving her and the child destitute a few months after her arrival here in 1898. She denied the allegations of desertion and of living with another man for other than moral purposes. Her husband had been sentenced to three years' imprisonment for wounding another man with a knife. She was afraid of the respondent, and so kept away from him. She further alleged that the respondent was living with another woman. He had endeavoured to take the child forcibly from her. She had intended to visit her parents at Mauritius, but it was her intention to return to the Colony.

The replying affidavit of the respondent said he intended to sue his wife for divorce. He admitted the sentence referred to, but said that he had discovered criminal intercourse between his wife and the man he assaulted. He denied the allegations of adultery. The child made an affidavit in support of the allegations of adultery against the wife, and stated that he wished to remain with his father. In a replying affidavit, the wife asked that the child should be brought before the Court.

Mr. Gardiner moved. Mr. Burton for respondent.

The child, a boy of nine years, was called, and interrogated in Dutch by His Lordship. He said that he had lived with his mother in the house of one Pandy, at Worcester. His mother and Pandy occupied the same room. His father lived in the same room as another woman.

[Hopley, J.: Who would you like to live with—your father or your mother?]

The Boy: Both.

Later on, his lordship repeated the question, and the lad said that if he had to choose, he would prefer to live with his mother.

Hopley, J., asked Mr. Gardiner whether his client would agree to remain here pending the action to be brought by the husband.

Mr. Gardiner said his client would remain if she were given the custody of the child in the meantime.

Mr. Burton urged that the father should have the custody.

The wife, examined on oath, said she would stay here until the action.

Replying to Mr. Burton, she said Pandy was on the ship by which she had arranged to go to Mauritius, but he did not intend to accompany her. He was going as far as East London on business. She kept house for Pandy at Worcester, but they did not occupy the same room.

By the Court: The boy was taken from her on the ship, and she did not, therefore, go to Mauritius; nor did Pandy go to East London. She asked him to look after her luggage.

Hopley, J., said that it appeared that the child had never been away from his mother, and it was quite natural that his genuine feelings were as he stated to the Court: that if he had to choose between his parents, although he would rather see them re-united, he would prefer to live with his mother, of whom he appeared to be very fond. He (the learned Judge) did not think there was anything underhand or clandestine about the departure of the mother for Mauritius, which was only natural in the circumstances, as she wanted to visit her mother. But the father of the child came before the Court, and on an ex-parte statement got an order giving him the custody of the child pending further order of the Court. He (Mr. Justice Hopley) took it that if the learned Judge had then had all before him that he (Mr. Justice Hopley) had that day, he would have hesitated about giving the father the custody of the child. Putting aside the question of the morality or immorality of either of the parents—a matter with which the Court at present had very little to do, because it was a question which would have to be tried very shortly—one had to look at the general features of the case, and on that basis alone one found that the father had been convicted of very violent behaviour, that he had been in prison, and that for a number of years he had had nothing to do with the support of this child. He had been out of gaol for a couple of years now, and had apparently had nothing to do with the mother or the child. If he were aware of the immorality of his wife, he did nothing to make the Court think that he cared about having either his wife or the child back. He took no steps until, at a very inconvenient moment for his wife, he came before a Judge in Chambers, to stop her going to Mauritius. He (Mr. Justice Hopley) thought that if the learned Judge in Chambers had known of these facts, he would have taken into consideration the conduct of the man, his past history, and that probably he would have held that he was only doing this to annoy his wife, and would not have given him the temporary custody of the child. The final issues of the case and the ultimate custody of the child could be settled very shortly by action, but at present his (Mr. Justice Hopley's) feeling was that the child's own feelings should be respected. The child had always lived with his mother, and it was very natural that he should prefer to remain with her. He (the learned Judge) thought that during the short time which would elapse before the action he should continue to remain with his mother, who had apparently looked after him well during all these years, which was more than one could say about the father. The Court would order that the child be restored to the custody of the mother. The matter of costs could be decided at the trial.

BENYA V. MAGUGWANA AND OTHERS.

Mr. Burton moved for an order on the respondents to restore certain stock, alleged to have been unlawfully seized from the applicant at a location in the district of Butterworth.

Order granted, leave being granted to either of the parties to bring an action as to the final rights. A rule nisi was also issued calling on the respondents to show cause why they should not pay the costs of the proceedings.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

CORNEY V. SHAW. } 1905.
 } July 24th.

Mr. Alexander moved for a commission to take the evidence of Alexander Robert Smith, who was about to proceed to Johannesburg. The case was set down for the 16th August. Counsel read an affidavit by applicant's attorney.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones read a replying affidavit by the attorney for respondent (plaintiff in the action), who said that the applicant should bear the costs of the application.

Commission granted, Mr. Advocate Giddy, K.C., to be commissioner. Costs to be costs in the cause.

REX V. HARRIS.

Undesirable alien—Act 47 of 1902
—Deportation.

Act 47 of 1902 makes no provision for the deportation of an undesirable alien who having been permitted to enter this Colony and having been naturalized therein has not subsequently acquired any domicile of choice elsewhere.

This was an application as a matter of urgency calling upon the Attorney-General to show cause why one Max Harris, a naturalized British subject, who had been arrested, and whom it was proposed to deport at once should not be set at liberty.

The applicant's affidavit was as follows: "I am a naturalised British subject in pursuance of letters of naturalisation granted to me whilst residing in this colony on the 7th August, 1903, a certificate of which I have in my possession at the present time, and can produce to the Court. I have lived in the Cape Colony for a period of seven years, and the same is my permanent home and residence. I have no other. I have always intended to stay here and recognise same as my permanent abode. I am a tinsmith and plumber by trade, and have carried on business as such here, and acquired landed property. I have been duly qualified to vote for the Municipal Council of Cape Town, and its Parliamentary division, and acquired all the necessary qualifications to entitle me to the position of a British subject, duly and properly domiciled in Cape Town to the best of my knowledge and belief. About the 7th July, 1904, at Cape Town, I was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, with hard labour. On the 18th April, 1905, I was discharged from gaol. At the time of my discharge I obtained a certificate thereof, of which the following is a copy: "This is to certify that number H 3,646, Max Harris, was tried at Cape Town on the 7th June, 1904, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour, and, having a mitigation of sentence for good conduct from His Excellency the Governor, is discharged accordingly. Given under my hand, 18th April, 1905, at Tokai Convict Station." (Signed) H. W. A. Coly, Assistant-Superintendent." The affidavit proceeded: "I am not aware of any terms or conditions relative to my release and discharge, and, so far as I know, the same was unconditional, and I bound myself to no promise or consideration to leave this colony, either before or after my release. Immediately after my release, under the advice of my agent, Mr. Shaw, I, at my own expense, obtained a return ticket for Durban, Natal, and left Cape Town by boat on or about 19th April, 1905, for a short rest, and I left only on account of my health, and not with any intention of quitting South Africa, or acquiring a new domicile. On my arrival at Port Elizabeth I felt too ill to proceed further, and I landed at that port, and returned to Cape Town the same day, when I immediately went to my house in Cannon-street, where I have lived ever since. I left Cape Town on the 19th April and was back on the 24th April, 1905. On Thursday, 20th July, 1905, two detectives, one named Grant, and another, came to where I was living in Cannon-street, Cape Town, and requested me to accompany them to the office of the Immigration Offices in Burg-street, which I did, and from that office I accompanied them to the office of Mr. Broers, the Acting R.M. of Cape Town, who ordered my detention pending my deportation from this colony as an undesirable. Since my release from gaol I have made no attempt to conceal myself, but gone about my business as usual, and Detective Grant, who escorted me to the gaol on the 20th inst., knew of my residing in Cannon-street some months previously, as he came there and saw me, and at his request I produced the letters of naturalisation granted to me as aforesaid. I am now wrongfully and unlawfully detained, I submit, in gaol, and I claim to be released on the ground that amongst other things I am a British subject, properly domiciled in South Africa. Application has been made to the said Acting Resident Magistrate for bail on my behalf, pending this application, but refused.

The answering affidavit of Henry Benjamin Shawe, Acting Under-Colonial Secretary, set out that the applicant obtained the letters of naturalisation by fraudulent misrepresentation, and they were therefore null and void. The applicant had never acquired a domicile in this colony, and if any was acquired it was abandoned on the 19th April, 1905, when he left the Colony, and his domicile of origin (Russia) thereupon revived. The applicant was released from gaol on the understanding that he would leave the Colony for ever. On the 19th July, 1905, deponent was officially informed by the hon. the Attorney-General that, in pursuance of section 2, sub-section F of Act 47 of 1902, the applicant was an undesirable immigrant, and should be excluded from the Colony.

An affidavit by Sir John J. Graham, Secretary of the Law Department, called attention to a petition received from the applicant while he was in gaol, and to a letter received from his law agent, Mr. W. B. Shaw.

The applicant, in his petition for release, drew attention to the fact that during the period covered in the indictment upon which he was convicted in June, he was some three months previously convicted under another section of the Act, and sentenced to pay a fine of £150, which he duly paid. At the time of the first prosecution, which was for keeping a gambling house, it must have been well known to the police that he was also liable to prosecution under the latter clause of the Act, for the contravention of which he had been tried and convicted. If both charges had been brought simultaneously, as he submitted they ought to have been, his sentence, if convicted of both offences, could not have been greater than that passed upon him for the single charge of contravening section 33 of the Act. He humbly begged for leniency also on the grounds revealed in the subsequent prosecution against the police officers. He took the course of giving evidence simply in the interests of justice generally on the advice of his law agent. He ventured to submit that he had rendered some service to the State that would tend to prevent crime in the future, and which was worthy of some consideration. What he had done had naturally ostracised him from those who had been his friends and associates in the past. He was a ruined man in every sense of the word, and it was his intention to go away to some new country, where, by a life of future rectitude, he might in some measure redeem the past. The petitioner's law agent, Mr. W. B. Shaw, in applying for a consideration of the accused's case, pointed out that the information given by Harris was true and correct, and had been of great service to the Crown. The accused had spent his time and money in getting that information, and further his health was such that his release would be a general advantage. In the event of the Crown being willing to grant him a reprieve, he (Mr. Shaw) was prepared, if so desired, to arrange for him to at once leave the Colony.

Dr. Greer for applicant. Mr. Evans for the Crown.

Mr. Greer said that under the circumstances of both these affidavits the police authorities had taken a course that was altogether ultra vires. They had done a thing that they had got no possible right to do. They were proceeding under section 8 of Act No. 47, of 1902, and that dealt directly with people immigrating into this colony, not with people living in the Colony, who had acquired domicile here. The sub-section (f) of section 3 distinctly exempted from the operation of this Act persons domiciled in South Africa. As to the question of the applicant's domicile in South Africa, that seemed to be perfectly clear. He was naturalised on August 7, 1903, having then been some time in this colony. It was said now that letters of naturalisation were obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation. But, of course, that was not a thing that Mr. Shawe could pronounce upon; that was a matter for the Court; it was not a matter that any official could pronounce upon.

It must be done by proper authority. It cannot be done by an official of the Colony.

[Hopley, J.: What is the procedure for cancelling letters of naturalisation?]

Dr. Greer: I take it that it would be by application to the Court for cancellation, and on cause shown that there had been fraudulent misrepresentation. Continuing, counsel said that so long as these letters of naturalisation remained, Max Harris remained a citizen of this country. He had not shown any intention to leave here; he had lived with his wife and family, and had acquired property here. Before he was convicted of this charge under the Gambling and Betting Act he had acquired the right to vote both at municipal and Parliamentary elections. There could be no clearer case of the domicile. Harris was clearly excluded from the operation of this Act. Mr. Shawe had further said that if Harris had acquired a domicile he had lost it by leaving Cape Town on the 19th April last. But, as a matter of fact, he was never outside the Colony; he was never outside the Colonial waters. He said himself that he did not intend to stay away from Cape Town.

[Hopley, J.: He had taken a ticket to Durban.]

Dr. Greer: Yes, a return ticket, my lord, intending to come back. Proceeding, counsel said that it had been attempted to set up an undertaking by Harris that he would leave the Colony altogether. That was a position that was not supported by practically any evidence whatever. Harris said distinctly that no such condition was made, and that he received his good conduct discharge, without any condition whatever endorsed upon it. Then it was attempted to bind him by some proposal in the petition made by him on the 7th July, 1904. He said then that he was sick, and the whole thing was in such a position in Cape Town in reference to his associates that he would probably clear out altogether. But there was no undertaking to do that. His law agent used the words "if so desired," but that was more than six months before Harris was released. Where was the evidence that the Government ever asked Harris to leave? He (counsel) submitted that, upon all the points, the case attempted to be set up by the Government had broken down, and that their attempt to extend unduly the scope of the Immigration Act, which was never intended to apply to a case of this kind, had failed. It was intended to apply, as the 8th section distinctly said, only to people coming into the Colony for the first time. Counsel submitted under the circumstances that the Court would grant the applicant the relief asked for.

Mr. Evans on behalf of the Crown, said that this case was one of very great importance from a constitutional point of view, and also, he thought, from a criminal point of view. It was one of the first duties of the Executive to see that crime was prevented as far as possible, and if they found coming into the Colony a man whose character they knew to be bad, and who had been living on the earnings of prostitution, it was the duty of the Executive to do all in their power to keep that man out, and if there were any statutory enactment in their favour, they should take advantage of it. In this case his learned friend presumed that they were acting under the Immigration Act. They did not by any means bind themselves down to the Immigration Act. It had been held that it was within the prerogative of the Executive to keep out an undesirable alien. That power of excluding aliens was one that was not exercised arbitrarily. In the case of Raner v. Colonial Secretary (14 C.T.R., 247), the Executive had an intimation that this man was an undesirable. They found that he was not a British subject, and exercised the prerogative of the Crown, and shut him out.

[Hopley, J.: What was Raner?]

He was a Polish Jew.

Hopley, J., put it to counsel whether there was not a difference between the two cases, seeing that Harris was already in the country, and that the Government were trying to turn him out.

Mr. Evans: Raner was also in the country.

[Hopley, J.: How had he got in? He had never got in as a matter of right.]

Mr. Evans: He was in Cape Town. Counsel went on to argue that the prerogative of the Crown also applied to expulsion.

[Hopley, J.: That's just it. Where are your powers of transportation and expulsion?]

Mr. Evans: That is the prerogative of the Crown. It is one of the few remaining prerogatives of the Crown; it still exists, and may still be exercised. Its exercise, as a matter of fact, is subject to a certain amount of control by precedent and practice. Counsel went on to refer to the Immigration Act, and said it was clear that the Act applied to all British subjects. It was not a defence to any prosecution under the Act that a man was a British subject, but it did not apply to certain classes of British subjects, and one of these classes was all persons domiciled in South Africa. So far there had been no decision on the meaning of that expression, "persons domiciled in South Africa." It looked as if the Legislature used the expression "domicile," not in its ordinary legal sense, because in law a person must have a domicile in a country, whether it were England, Scotland, Ireland, Cape Colony, Orange River Colony, or the Transvaal but he could not have a domicile in South Africa any more than a man could have a domicile in Great Britain.

[Hopley, J.: What the Act obviously means is a man who is domiciled in any of the States of British South Africa.]

Mr. Evans went on to urge that the intention of the Legislature was to exclude a certain kind of person. He did not think that the Legislature had used the word "domicile" in its strict legal meaning, but rather in its wide signification. He thought they meant persons whose domicile of origin was South Africa, and that they did not wish to exclude persons who had always lived in South Africa.

[Hopley, J.: Oh, no. It is no use arguing that point; if you argue here till night, you will not convince me of that.]

Mr. Evans (proceeding) submitted that it was for Mr. Harris to satisfy the Court that his domicile was in South Africa. Clearly, from his own affidavit, his domicile of origin was Russia. They all knew that in law it was very difficult to get rid of one's domicile of origin. It was for a person who asserted the acquisition of a domicile or choice to show that he had acquired it, because the Court would always regard a person's domicile as the domicile of origin, unless satisfied by evidence that he had acquired a new domicile. The burden of the proof was on the person who asserted a new domicile, as had been decided in a number of cases. The Court had no evidence, except the applicant's own words, that in coming to this colony he ever gave up his Russian domicile.

[Hopley, J.: There could be nothing stronger than the fact that he has actually got letters of naturalisation, signed by the Governor of this colony.]

No, that is not so; naturalisation is not essential proof.

[Hopley, J.: Surely it is not for the country that has granted him letters of naturalisation to now come and say that he has not lost his domicile of origin?]

It is not conclusive evidence of domicile.

[Hopley, J.: Take that in conjunction with other circumstances?]

If a man comes to this country with the bona fide intention of remaining, then that is evidence.

[Hopley, J.: I wish I saw some prospect of some of these people who do come to this country wishing to leave it.]

Mr. Evans submitted that the applicant by his subsequent conduct showed what his intentions were. He had no intention of staying here, and subjecting himself to the laws of this colony.

[Hopley, J.: He has subjected himself to the law of this country; he has had a taste of it already.]

Mr. Evans submitted that the very mode of the man's life showed that he did not intend to live here permanently. He began his career by shebeening, and after that he was convicted of living on the proceeds of prostitution. Surely he could not intend to live permanently in a country the law of which he contravened every day.

Hopley, J.: If your argument is worth anything at all, nobody born in this country, and who has a domicile of origin here, would engage in the illicit diamond trade or live on the proceeds of prostitution. There are a great many people born here who do break the law in that respect.

There is nothing at present to show that he ever acquired a domicile here.

[Hopley, J.: I think there is everything to show it. Of course, you may show me how he lost it.]

Mr. Evans said that the applicant arrived here from Russia, and no doubt, like others, he was forced to leave that country.

[Hopley, J., said that counsel should not assume that the applicant was forced to leave Russia.

We do know a number of cases of immigrants who have left Russia because they were forced. Proceeding, he said that the applicant must show that he intended to permanently reside in this colony. He (counsel) should be able to show that, as a matter of fact, he did not reside all this time in the Cape Colony.

Dr. Greer (interposing): There is nothing of this in the affidavits.

Mr. Evans said that the affidavits had been hurriedly prepared, as the Law Department only got notice about half-past eleven of the application.

Hopley, J., put it to counsel whether he was supposed to go behind the letters of naturalisation granted by His Excellency the Governor.

Mr. Evans said that if there were any false statements in the declarations, then the letters of naturalisation were void. If there were not absolute fraud in this matter, there was suppressio veri. At the very time Harris applied for his letters, and declared that he was a respectable man, he was living on the proceeds of prostitution, according to his own evidence in the Charteris case.

[Hopley, J.: Is not that rather a matter to be determined by a trial.]

Mr. Evans said that there was no need to declare the letters null and void, because if they were obtained by false representations they were void.

Hopley, J., said that it was perhaps the intention of the applicant, when he petitioned for release, to leave the Colony, and set up a home elsewhere. It was not fair to assume now that that was a deception practised by him to get a remission of sentence.

Mr. Evans pointed out that in his letters the applicant said that he intended to leave the Colony if released. His agent also said so. It was upon the belief that what the applicant said was true that he was released.

[Hopley, J.: You know yourself how a man's intentions may change from time to time. Had you made a contract with him that he should be bound to leave, it might have been different. Did you make any condition?]

Mr. Evans said that the Governor could not attach any condition to the discharge.

[Hopley, J.: Very well, then; it would have been ultra vires.]

Mr. Evans said that the Governor could not attach such a condition, but they were satisfied that it was the man's intention to leave the country.

[Hopley, J.: It shows you how dangerous it is to believe those people.]

Mr. Evans went on to argue that the applicant had lost his domicile by leaving the country in April last.

[Hopley, J.: He only goes from one post to another; from one South African port to another.]

Mr. Evans contended that as soon as the applicant put his foot on board the ship and proceeded beyond the territorial waters of the Colony, he left the Cape Colony and his domicile of origin revived, and he would have no other domicile. It did not matter whether he intended to make any other domicile.

[Hopley, J.: Still, he is a naturalised British subject. Even if he had gone back to Russia, he would have been a naturalised British subject. If he had been naturalised in London that would have carried him anywhere.]

He was not naturalised in London, my lord, but in Cape Town.

[Hopley, J.: That is just the point.]

A Colonial Legislature has no power to grant any certificate which is operative outside the territorial limits of the Colony.

[Hopley, J.: Still, we are in this colony now.]

But Harris went out of it.

[Hopley, J.: Never mind, you let him in again.]

He sneaked in. He came in in contravention of our Immigration Law. I submit that he has failed to satisfy the Court that he is domiciled in South Africa. He cannot show continuous residence here, and that he came here as a law-abiding subject.

[Hopley, J.: Assuming for a moment that these letters should be declared null and void, then how do you shut him out?]

Then he is deported under prerogative.

[Hopley, J.: Where do you get that from?]

Mr. Evans: That was upheld in the case of Rainer.

[Hopley, J.: Have you any power to expel one of your own subjects?]

Mr. Evans: I think we have under statute.

[Hopley, J.: Which?]

Mr. Evans (after a pause): No; I think we have not.

Proceeding, counsel submitted that the letters of naturalisation were null and void ipso facto. Those letters of naturalisation could only have effect within certain limits. This man was not an international law British subject.

[Hopley, J.: He has every right of a British subject in this colony.]

No; because a British subject has a right to be a British subject all round the world. The rights Harris has are clearly rights of a certain kind; they are not international law rights.

[Hopley, J.: You seem to think that one of these Colonial-made British subjects, when he goes outside the three-mile limit, is no longer a British subject.]

He is not an international law British subject.

In further argument, counsel said that when Harris was released the Law Department had no reason to disbelieve him when he said he would leave the Colony.

[Hopley, J.: You see to-day why you should have disbelieved him.]

Not necessarily. I honestly believe that at the time he sent in that petition he intended to leave the Colony. I do not believe that he had an idea of defrauding the Government.

Mr. Evans proceeded to read from the applicant's petition for release, and said it was from a man down on his luck; in fact, it was like a dying deposition.

[Hopley, J.: Quite enough to deceive the Attorney-General's Department apparently. Surely all that canting nonsense did not take the department in?]

He said he would leave Cape Town. Why should he remain hiding like a rat in a hole? Was his conduct consistent with the case which he wished to make out to the Court now that it was bona fide?

[Hopley, J.: He might be afraid of having his neck broken by some of the people he gave evidence against.]

Mr. Evans urged that the applicant should be put in the box in order to undergo a cross-examination as to his whereabouts since he arrived in South Africa.

[Hopley, J.: How do you know he left at Port Elizabeth?]

He landed as a passenger on the way to Durban.

[Hopley, J.: If you had been a little bit more prudent, you might have excluded him from doing that.]

We might have; but we did not know he was going to land.

[Hopley, J.: You are singularly trusting in the Criminal Department.]

Mr. Evans said there was every reason to believe Harris that he would quit the country. Counsel said he believed that Mr. Shaw, the agent, believed in Harris's bona fides.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose your intention is to deport him. How will you get rid of him?]

We will get rid of him at five o'clock.

[Hopley, J.: By a ship?]

Yes.

[Hopley, J.: Supposing he remains in this colony, are you going to bring any further criminal action?]

I don't think so.

Dr. Greer was not called upon in reply.

Hopley, J.: In this case, it appears that the applicant, Max Harris, was in the course of 1904 sentenced by the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, under the Morality Law, to a sentence of two years' imprisonment with hard labour, and to a certain number of lashes. I can take it, therefore, ab initio, in this application that Harris was proved in 1904 to be a most undesirable person to have in this country. A man who not only contravened the Morality

Laws, but contravened them in such a way that the Magistrate would go almost to the extreme of his jurisdiction, which is very extensive in these cases, and inflict such a punishment must in the Magistrate's opinion have offended against those laws in a very gross manner. We also have it stated that Harris followed a career of systematic crime in this country. While Harris was undergoing the punishment which the law had awarded him for immoral conduct, the Government made use of him as a Crown witness, and he was instrumental, apparently, in furthering the ends of justice by getting other malefactors convicted. Now, whether it was in consideration of that conduct or in consideration of general good conduct, it appears that there was a considerable mitigation of the sentence given, and a pardon was issued by the Governor, no doubt with the advice of the Executive Council. I think it was in April last that the rest of the sentence was remitted, and the ground there stated is simply one generally of good conduct. It will be observed there was absolutely no condition attached to this mitigation of sentence by His Excellency or by the department which had to do with this matter making it obligatory on this man to leave the country. But it is said that the Attorney-General's Department thought that the petitioner, as he then was, was quite sincere in his expressed intention to go to a new country and live a new life, and so redeem the errors of his past, and that acting upon that assumption, which they thought must be sincere, coming from such a source, at such a time, they advised His Excellency the Governor to grant this mitigation of sentence. All I can say is that they proceeded on very slight grounds if they were taken in by words of that sort. In this particular case there was abundant opportunity of knowing the character of the man they had to deal with. A man of honour might consider that having obtained his release, he should at once leave the country, but in this case they were not dealing with a man of honour. The very fact of the man's career, so far as it had been exposed, ought to have shown that there was not a shred of honour in him. Having got his release, it seems to me he might have gone about the streets of Cape Town or about this colony generally without anybody being empowered to get rid of him. But it is contended that, because, shortly after his release, he took a return ticket from Cape Town to Durban, he became once more an alien. I should remark that, while he was residing here, and in the year 1903, he had obtained letters of naturalisation from His Excellency the Governor, which letters are now produced in court, and are still apparently of full force and effect. According to them on the 3rd June, 1903, Max Harris, was, under His Excellency's hand, granted a certificate of naturalisation as a British subject, giving him all the privileges and rights and subjecting him to the laws of a natural-born British subject in this colony. It seems to me, as I have said, that when he got his release on the ground of good conduct, he could have gone about wherever he wished, and he need never have left this country, there being nothing at all making it obligatory on him to do so. The fact that he took a return ticket to another colony in South Africa is very material in the present circumstances, and in view of the contention that has been raised against him by the Crown, because one has to judge his intentions by his acts. One would say that his intention when he left for Natal was to return again to Cape Town within three months, which I believe to be the time for which such return tickets are available. We have the further fact that he has a house here at the present time, and that he has a wife living in that house. As far as one can judge from his acts, it seems that when he expressed his intention to go away to a new country, he did not intend to fulfil that intention, although apparently the department which had to do with this matter thought they might trust him to carry it out. Mr. Evans has argued this matter as though it were a case of losing domicile of choice. Harris had clearly obtained a domicile of choice and that in South Africa. Has he lost that by anything he has done? Mr. Evans is forced to go so far as to say that Harris when he left Cape Town with the return ticket in his pocket, and went on board a British ship bound from one British port to another, as soon as he went beyond the three-mile limit, ceased to be a British subject as far as this colony was concerned. I do not think that any case has ever gone anywhere within measurable distance of such a proposition as that, and it would be impossible to hold that that it is founded on good law. It is quite possible that if the Attorney-General's Department had been very suspicious and very vigilant, and had telegraphed to every intermediate port between this and Durban, it might in the circumstances have prevented his landing at any such port, but whether it was on account of his illness or whether it was by subterfuge or stratagem, he got back here again. What the man did was to get off at Port Elizabeth—I think he said he was too ill to proceed—and then he took train, and came back to Cape Town almost immediately, where it is said he has been living ever since. Now, it is stated on behalf of the Government, that he is a most undesirable man, who should be got rid of, and he certainly is one of whom I wish the Colony could be rid. The Under-Colonial Secretary says that applicant is to be deported from this colony under sub-section (f) or section 2 of the Immigration Act (No. 47 of 1902). That section, however, is simply a defining section. Sub-section (1) simply defines a prohibited immigrant. The fourth section of the Act says that subject to the provisions of this Act it shall be unlawful for a prohibited immigrant to enter this colony either by sea or by land. All that is very well when a person is seeking to set foot in this colony and for a case such as that of Raner. The Attorney-General knew what sort of man this Harris was, and he could certainly have prohibited him from landing in this colony if sub-section (f) of section 2 of the Act could be made to apply. But it was stated at the beginning of the case that an important constitutional point was involved, and, however much one may wish to get rid of undesirable people, the Court must always be guided in the first instance by great constitutional principles and be careful not to infringe upon the rights and liberties of any of His Majesty's subjects, or any other human beings, so far as they have rights and liberties. Is there anything in this Immigration Act which authorises the Government of this colony, if they think a man a British subject, is an undesirable person to have in this colony, to get rid of him? I see nothing at all in this Immigration Act which enables the Government, if a man is living here, and especially if he has taken out letters of naturalisation, even though he may be an undesirable, to deport him to some foreign country. Under the Act a person who is undesirable would not be allowed to land here, but, still, through some oversight or other, or because it was done in ignorance, Harris has been allowed to land in this country, he has been allowed to be naturalised as a British subject, and it is impossible now to get rid of him on such grounds as are now relied upon by the respondents, though they may possibly discover some legitimate way of doing so. It seems to me, therefore, that the application must succeed.

Hopley, J., said he regretted, under the circumstances, because he knew something of the character of this man, that such an order must be given, but it seemed to him, as a matter of law, that applicant should be released from custody as prayed. An order would be granted accordingly.

[Applicant's Attorney: C. Brady.]

SUPREME COURT

GRASSICK V. B.S.A. ASPHALT CO. 1906. { July 31st.

Mr. Struben, on behalf of the defendants in the action, moved for an order for the return of a sum of £162 paid into court by defendants as security, in order to purge default. The action had resulted in a judgment for the defendant company for a net sum of £10.

Order granted as prayed.

STEER V. KALK BAY MUNICIPALITY.

This was an argument upon an exception taken by the defendant municipality to the declaration of the plaintiff, an auctioneer and conveyancer, residing at Sea Point.

From the pleadings, it appeared that the plaintiff in 1903 entered into an agreement to lease for a period of three years from the Venerable Archdeacon Lightfoot, since deceased, certain premises at Kalk Bay, known as Douglas Cottage. In October, 1904, the premises were purchased by defendants, and plaintiff was accepted as tenant under the agreement of lease. In his declaration plaintiff said that the lease provided that the lessee should, during his tenancy, keep in repair the interior of the buildings, so let, and that he should at the expiration of the lease deliver over the premises in the like order and condition as he should have received them, reasonable wear and tear only excepted. There was no clause in the agreement relating to the repair of the exterior of the building. Plaintiff said that defendants had allowed the exterior to become extremely dilapidated, and had refused to put the same in repair. In paragraph 7 of his declaration, plaintiff said that by clause 6 of the said lease it was provided that the lessee should have the right to sublet the property or any portion thereof, and the plaintiff had been prevented, by reason of the premises, for a long period from sub-letting the property or from having the use and occupation thereof, and had sustained damages in the sum of £100. He claimed (a) an order requiring defendants to put the exterior in due repair, or, in the alternative, to pay him £56 3s. 6d., which amount it was estimated would be required to place the premises in repair; (b) £200 damages, as set out in paragraph 7; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

The defendant municipality excepted to the declaration, and especially to paragraph 7 thereof, and said that it was vague and embarrassing, and did not set forth a cause of action. The excipients prayed that paragraph 7 and prayer (b) of the declaration may be struck out, with costs.

Mr. Russel was for the excipients and defendants; Mr. Upington was for the respondent and plaintiff.

Mr. Russell: The exception is taken to paragraph 7 of the declaration on the ground that it is vague and embarrassing and does not set forth a good cause of action. The plaintiff does not allege knowledge on our part of any defect in the premises.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Do the premises belong to you?]

Yes.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Surely you know the condition of your own premises.]

But our knowledge is not alleged.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Paragraph 6 of the declaration covers that.]

The cause of action must be stated in the declaration. Here the respondents claim £100 as damages, and yet we have been owners for only six months and they could only be prejudiced by any action of ours to the extent of £5 a month.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: In paragraph 6 the allegation meets your exception.]

The words used there are de presenti. But the declaration was filed after the damage was alleged to have been sustained, and it does not say that we knew anything about the alleged defect anterior to that date. I submit that the plaintiff has not set out any cause of action to which the defendant can plead.

Mr. Upington was not called upon.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: The plaintiff is the lessee of certain premises now belonging to the defendants, and sues the defendants for a breach of the contract of lease, the alleged breach being the want of repairing by the landlord of the exterior of the premises leased. To the declaration a general exception is taken, stating that it does not set forth a cause of action, and in argument learned counsel has stated the grounds of his exception to be firstly, that there is no allegation that the defendants knew of the defects in the repairs to the premises; and, secondly, that the damage claimed for occurred before such knowledge was brought home to the landlord. I see in paragraph 6 of the declaration an allegation that a demand was duly made upon the landlord to execute the repairs, and that he refused to do so. That is a distinct allegation of knowledge in the declaration. As to the second ground of exception it is true that the declaration does not go on to say that the notice was given before the damage occurred. That is a matter of evidence and the evidence may or may not prove defendant's liability. I think there is not sufficient ground upon which to take exception to the declaration. The exception must be over-ruled, with costs.

BOULDER BROS. V. COLONIAL (1905.
GOVERNMENT. (July 31st.

Pleading — Exception — Demurrage—Consignee.

H. Bros. contracted under a C.I.F. contract to supply certain coal to the Cape Government. The Government agreed to pay demurrage to the owners of the vessels conveying the coal at certain rates. Plaintiffs alleged in their declaration that this contract had subsequently been varied by a certain letter written by them to the Agent General for the Colony, but this amendment was not specially pleaded.

Held on argument on exceptions, that the declaration was irrelevant, embarrassing and bad in law.

This was an argument upon an exception taken by the plaintiffs to the defendant's plea in an action for demurrage.

Plaintiff's declaration alleged that in the month of August, 1901, and in London, there was an agreement made between the parties in regard to the supply of certain coal. Plaintiffs had to supply certain coal, send it from England, and deliver it in this colony. They alleged that it was agreed between the parties that the delivery should be taken at a certain rate, or that the Government was to be liable for demurrage at the rate of 4d. per net registered ton per day for sailing vessels and 6d. per net registered ton per day for steamers. The delivery had to be at the rate of 120 tons per day for sailing vessels, and 250 tons per day for steamers. The plaintiffs said that the defendants neglected and failed to take delivery as agreed upon, and that they thereupon became liable in demurrage at the rate agreed upon. In the alternative, plaintiffs said that, by reason of the failure and neglect of the Cape Government to take delivery, the steamers were unduly and improperly detained in Table Bay, and plaintiffs suffered loss and damage, which loss and damage the Government had paid, with the exception of a certain amount now claimed.

The defendants in their plea said that the terms of the agreement referred to in the said paragraph were contained in a certain letter addressed by the plaintiffs on the 7th August to the Agent-General for the Cape of Good Hope, and for greater certainty, prayed leave to refer to that letter.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Struben), was for the excipients and plaintiffs; Mr. Searle, K.C. (With him Mr. Burton), was for the respondents and defendants.

Sir H. Juta said that the defendants, in that plea, did not set up the point which was now before the Court, but they received leave to amend their plea, and they put this particular plea in paragraph 7. Sub-section (a) said that the ships referred to in paragraph 4 of the declaration were all of them ships chartered by the plaintiffs, and the rates of discharge and demurrage stipulated for in the charter parties were different from those mentioned in the said letter of August 7, 1901, which constituted the contract between the parties. The liabilities of the defendants, if any, were to the owners of the said ships respectively, and not to the plaintiffs, and were for amounts which depended upon the terms of the bills of lading for the cargoes transferred by the plaintiffs to the defendants, and not otherwise. In sub-section (b), defendants said that if the plaintiffs suffered any loss or damage by reason of the alleged detention of the said ships, the amount of such loss or damage, if any, was in respect of the liabilities of the said plaintiffs under the said charter parties, and no particulars had been supplied to defendants of any such loss or damage. To this plea the plaintiffs excepted, in that, according to the true intent and construction of the annexed letter (of the 7th August), the Cape Government contracted liability direct to the plaintiffs, and not to the owners of the said ships, with whom the said Government had no priority of contract. As to paragraph 7 (b), by the agreement in the said letter, the said Government undertook to pay demurrage at a specific rate, and were liable to damages for detention of the said ships without any reference whatever to the liabilities, if any, that the plaintiffs had or may have in respect of the said charter parties. By reason thereof, the said paragraphs were irrelevant, embarrassing, and bad in law, and the excipients prayed that the said paragraphs might be ordered to be struck out of the said plea, with costs. Counsel argued that the reason why the exception was taken was that, should the plea be allowed, there would have to be a commission appointed to go to England in order to ascertain what the meaning was of the various charter parties, and in order to obviate any unnecessary costs, the exception had been taken. The excipients said that the contract was between themselves and the Government.

Mr. Searle said this must be considered as a C.I.F. contract, and not an F.O.B. contract. That was set out in the declaration. The freight and insurance had to be paid out here by the shipowner and the consignee, and the cost had to be paid to the consignor. It was quite clear that under a contract of this kind Houlders took up a ship to deliver this coal, and the Government who took part in that were liable to the shipowners for demurrage. They were liable under the C.I.F. contract. The meaning of this contract was that the Government could not make Houlders liable for more than fourpence per ton per day, and if they got it for less the Government would benefit. The Government could not be liable to two people, and they were liable to the ship. An action had already been entered in England with regard to this case, and many of the documents were at present there. His point was that under a "C.I.F." contract the consignee had to become definitely liable to the shipowner, and a contract sprang up between the two parties, and there could not be a contract with a third party. The meaning of the letter written to the Colonial Government by Houlder Bros. was that in chartering a ship they were not to incur more liability for the Government than fourpence per ton per day as demurrage. He submitted that this was not a matter that could be disposed of on exception. It was a matter that should form portion of the evidence given at the trial to show exactly what happened. They wanted the charter parties, the bills of lading, and the whole amounts paid before them. He really thought it was impossible to settle this point without going into the whole of the contract. The exception had been raised because it was thought that that would do away with the cost of a commission, but evidence on commission was absolutely necessary, especially the evidence of a gentleman in the Agent-General's office, and without that evidence he did not see that the Court could give judgment in this case.

Sir H. Juta, in reply, said he did not see how any gentleman in the Agent-General's office in London had anything to do with the delay in the vessels arriving here. Under a C.I.F. contract the man in Europe sold for a lump sum, and if the freightage in the meantime went up that was his look-out. He submitted that this contract was perfectly clear, the terms were perfectly clear, and consequently they were liable to his clients for the amount. The point the Court had to decide about the demurrage was whether it was fourpence or sixpence per ton per day. They had not to decide the amount due.

In reply to Buchanan, A. C. J., Sir H. Juta said the exception they raised was that the defendants wished to set up under paragraph 7a some liability inconsistent with the contract which they themselves entered into.

Sir H. Juta applied for leave to withdraw his alternative claim.

The application was granted.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said the plaintiffs in this action (Messrs. Houlder Bros.) entered into a contract with the Cape Government for the supply of certain coal on terms stated in a letter of August 7, 1901. In this letter provision was made for shipping the coal to Table Bay and Port Elizabeth at a certain rate covering all charges—a C.I.F. contract. The agreement went on to say that if there was any delay in discharging the ships carrying the coal the Government was to pay a fixed amount of demurrage at the rate of fourpence per ton per day for sailers and sixpence per ton per day for steamers. The contract was entered into during the late war and from the condition of the port of discharge, demurrage became payable, as no doubt both parties to the contract anticipated it would. The Government, to obtain delivery of the coal from the various vessels, paid them a certain amount of demurrage, leaving a balance now claimed by the plaintiffs of some £10,000. The defendants pleaded the letter of August 7, which set forth the terms of the contract, and then two paragraphs of a plea, to which exception was taken to as being inconsistent with that letter. One of the clauses—clause 7 (a)—stated that "the ships referred to in paragraph 4 of the declaration were all of them ships chartered by the plaintiffs. The rates of discharge and the rates of demurrage stipulated for in the charters of these vessels were different from those mentioned in the letter of August 7. The liabilities of the Cape Government were to the owners of the ships respectively, and not to the plaintiffs, and were for amounts which depended upon the terms of the bills of lading for the cargoes transferred by the plaintiffs to the Cape Government, and not otherwise." Now, he thought that the exception that this paragraph was inconsistent with the letter of August 7 was a good one. The letter of the 7th August was the basis of the contract between the parties, and if there was any subsequent contract which rendered the Cape Government liable for another scale of charges that should have been set forth. There was no allegation of any subsequent contract in between the parties departing from the original terms. In the absence of any clear assertion of that kind, the plea was inconsistent with the letter and would have to be amended. If the Government could show any specific subsequent contract, then that should be specifically pleaded so that the plaintiffs would know what they had to meet. If there was any such contract to be found in the bills of lading, it was not sufficient merely to have a casual reference in the plea to these bills and not to set out the new agreement whatever it might be. Paragraph 7b had also been excepted to. It would be very difficult to say that it was bad, in view of the fact that Sir H. Juta had applied for leave to withdraw the alternative claim. This withdrawal of the declaration would necessitate the alteration of the plea. The question as to whether a commission should be appointed would have to stand over a little until they had the pleadings before the Court. On those grounds the exception would have to be allowed, and costs would be costs in the cause.

Sir H. Juta said that as the exception had been upheld he thought costs should be given against the defendants.

Mr. Searle said that as the plaintiffs were withdrawing portion of their case, he thought the costs should be costs in the cause. It would necessitate his clients amending their plea.

An order was made allowing the plaintiff the costs of the exception, but the plaintiff would have to pay any costs necessitated by the amendment of the declaration.

GROBBELAAR V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

This was an argument upon an exception taken by the plaintiff to the defendants' plea in an action instituted for £204 10s., salary alleged to be due to the plaintiff as sheep inspector in the employ of the Government.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a sheep inspector residing at Murraysburg, and the defendant was the Minister for Agriculture. On the 9th November, 1900, defendant employed plaintiff as inspector of sheep under the provisions of section 10, Act 28 of 1899, for Field-cornetries 5 and 6, division of Murraysburg, at a salary of £175 per annum, the employment to be terminable at one month's notice. He had at all times material been ready and willing to perform and had performed the duties of his office. Defendant duly paid to the plaintiff salary in respect of the said employment up to and including the 6th July, 1901, and from the 1st August, 1902, to the 25th August, 1902, upon which latter date the defendant purported to summarily dismiss the plaintiff, and terminated the said employment. There was now due and owing to the plaintiff a sum of £204 10s., as and for salary aforesaid from the 6th July, 1901, up to and including the 31st July, 1902.

Defendant in his plea, admitted the formal allegations, and admitted that the plaintiff duly entered upon the said employment, but he denied the other allegations in paragraph 4, and said that on the 12th August, 1901, plaintiff was deported from Murraysburg by the Imperial military authorities, and continued to be so deported, and was wholly unable to perform, and did not perform the duties of his employment from the said date until the 31st July, 1902. Defendant had tendered to the plaintiff salary due to him up to the 12th August, 1901. He denied that the sum of £204 10s. was due to plaintiff from the 6th July, 1901, to the 31st July, 1902, and said plaintiff was entitled to claim for the period 6th July, 1901, to 12th August, 1901. Defendant prayed that the claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Plaintiff excepted to the plea as bad in law, and disclosing no defence to the plaintiff's claim, and said more particularly that the allegations contained in paragraph 3 thereof, even if proved, afforded no answer or defence in law to the said claim.

Mr. Upington was for the excipient and plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the respondents and defendants.

Mr. Upington said that their lordships would recollect that the liability of the Government in regard to the salaries of sheep inspectors, and other Government contractors, who had been unable to perform their duties, owing to the existence of martial law, had been before the Court in several cases. The first case was that of a postal contractor, Muller v. Colonial Government (12 C.T.R. 946) Then there was the case of Van der Merwe v. Colonial Government (14 C.T.R. 732) and recently there had been the case of Lubbe v. Colonial Government (15 C.T.R. 521) Lubbe's case was one of deportation, but the judgment did not go upon that point. His (counsel's) submission in the present case would be that a sheep inspector, who was engaged on a contract terminable at one month's notice, and who was prevented from performing his duties owing to the intervention of the military authorities, acting under martial law, was entitled to recover salary, unless the Government took the course which was open to them of terminating the contract; in other words, the Government could not continue their contract with their official and have the right to call upon him at any time to perform his duties, and at the same time refuse to pay him salary. Counsel went on to quote at length from the judgment of Mr. Justice Maasdorp in the case of Van der Merwe v. Colonial Government (21 Supreme Court Reports, 320, and 14 C.T.R., 732). He stated that the only difference between Van der Merwe's case and the present plaintiff's was that the former was not actually deported from the scene of his duties, but was kept in Aberdeen and refused a pass by the military authorities, while the present plaintiff was deported.

Without hearing Sir H. Juta,

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The matter for decision now is purely a question of pleadings. The plaintiff, in his declaration, alleges that in pursuance of his contract with the Government he duly entered upon his employment, and that he was at all times ready and willing to perform and did perform all the duties of his said employment. In answer to this allegation, the defendant in his plea denies that the plaintiff was at all times ready and willing to perform, or that he did perform the duties of his employment; and further alleges facts to show that the plaintiff could not and did not perform his employment, and said that, at the very time he was claiming for, plaintiff had been deported by the military. An exception is now taken that the plea does not disclose a defence to the claim. Well, it is a defence when a man alleges that he did perform his duties, to say that he did not perform his duties. In the replication plaintiff pleaded over and admitted that he was deported, but said that he was deported without default on his part. Well, these are questions which may very well be dealt with at the trial. I do not wish to say anything that may prejudice the case, especially in view of the cases which have already been decided. I think it is rather a question of evidence than of pleading. The exception will be overruled, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS.

Ex parte CLARK. { 1905.
Aug. 1st.

Attorney—Admission—Sec. 17 of Act 27 of 1883—Sec. 1 of Act 11 of 1903—Withdrawal of admission.

C. had been admitted as an attorney in July, 1905, under Sec. 17 of Act 27 of 1883,

On its being discovered that this section had been repealed by Sec. 1 of Act 11 of 1903, the admission was withdrawn.

Held, that as the applicant was not articulated prior to the date of the passing of the former Act, he was not entitled to admission.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Henry Alfred Ready Clark, of Idutywa, as an attorney and notary. Counsel said that the matter had already been before the Court (15 C.T.R., 559), and Mr. Clark, who was an Oxford M.A., was admitted, but subsequently, on its coming to the notice of the Court that the 17th section of the Act 27 of 1883, under which Mr. Clark applied, had been repealed, the order was withdrawn. Counsel contended that the repeal of the 17th section brought into effect 14th section and that the case of such applicants as Mr. Clark was therefore safeguarded, inasmuch as he had been articulated prior to the repeal of the section.

The 14th section of Act 27 of 1883 provided that nothing contained in that Act should apply to the admission of any person who had been articulated previous to the taking effect of that Act. So likewise Act 11 of 1903 was not retrospective. Mr. Clark had actually completed his service of articles before that Act was passed, and it would be a great hardship upon him if after having in all good faith served his articles, he now found his admission barred by an Act which was not in existence during his term of service, and which in view of ex parte Scanlen (7 C.T.R., 209) he could not have anticipated.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: Before the Act of 1883, which now regulates the admission of attorneys, it was not compulsory on any candidate to pass a law examination. That Act made such an examination compulsory, but in the 17th section exempted persons who came under the 10th section of the English Solicitors' Act. One admission was made under the exemption provided by the 17th section, but the circumstances there disclosed showed that there had been an oversight in authorising exemption in the terms stated. Afterwards the Legislature repealed the 17th section absolutely, without any saving clause. When the Act of 1883 was passed a proviso was put in that nothing in the Act should apply to any person who should have been articulated previous to the taking effect of the Act. When the Legislature repealed the 17th section, they made no such proviso. Now, some years after the passing of the section of the Act of 1883, the applicant wishes to come in and take the benefit of a clause which has already been repealed. It may be a hardship on the applicant, but at the same time I cannot make an exception in his case. No order will be made at present.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the admission of Ernest H. Solomon as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Registrar of the High Court, Kimberley.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Ockert Jacobus Oosthuizen as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Sidney S. Saayman as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Riversdale.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of Walter Reid as a conveyancer.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Bailey moved for the admission of Vivian Lionel K. Murray, as a conveyancer, and for leave to applicant to take the oaths before the R.M. of East London.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said it appeared that the applicant applied to be admitted as a conveyancer of British Kaffraria, to which he was entitled as the Statute stood. Here again he (the learned Judge) would point out that a different examination, a more searching examination, was required for conveyancers admitted in the Registry of Deeds of this Court than in British Kaffraria. It had been repeatedly pointed out that it was a question that the Government should consider whether all the Registries should not be consolidated. Applicant would be admitted as prayed, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of East London.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

NOCHAMSON V. NEL. { 1905.
Aug. 1st.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence for £150, upon a promissory note. The action was originally heard in the R.M.'s Court at Calitzdorp, and was removed, at the request of the defendant, to this Court. The question to be decided was as to the genuineness of the signature on the note.

Mr. Burton (for defendant) said that his client's position was that the signature was a forgery.

Buchanan, A. C. J., directed that the case should be removed to the next Circuit Court, at Oudtshoorn, for determination of all questions, including costs, both in the Magistrate's Court and the Supreme Court.

NEIMAN V. NEIMAN.

Mr. Roux moved for the discharge of the applicant, who was in custody, under a writ of arrest.

There was no appearance for respondent.

The applicant was discharged.

NATIONAL BANK V. HARRIS.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence for £600 upon a promissory note, and costs.

Order granted.

DE WAHL V. DE ROUBAIX.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £800 and £100 respectively, due by reason of the non-payment of interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

HIGGS V. KROUSE.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £400 and £100 respectively, due by reason of the non-payment of interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

TRILL V. BOYCE.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, and for £2 9s. insurance premiums, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and for the rents due to be declared executable. Counsel said that notice had not been given to defendant of the application, so far as rent was concerned.

Order granted as prayed, His Lordship remarking that in future these applications must be put in order, and proper notice given to the parties concerned. He hoped that there would be less laxity in the practice of the Court.

DAY V. MOEZELANY.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,600, due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

THORNE AND STRUBEN V. GELB.

Mr. Struben moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. The petitioners, Sir Wm. Thorne and Mr. H. W. Struben, said that Gelb was indebted to them in the sums of £6,600 and £1,600 respectively for money lent and advanced upon bond. The estate had been assigned, but, under all the circumstances, the petitioners said that they did not think the estate beneficially liquidated by the assignees any longer.

The affidavit of defendant stated that nothing had happened to justify the assignees in sequestrating his estate. He had been, and was still willing to render the assignees all the assistance in his power in connection with the liquidation. He pointed out, further, that the petitioners put the value of their claims at the full amount of the bonds. Affidavits of P. J. Bosman and other creditors, said they thought it would be to the benefit of all the creditors if the estate continued to be liquidated under the assignment.

The affidavit of Mr. G. W. Steytler, joint assignee of the estate, confirmed the allegations and statements contained in the petition. He said that there was an annual loss of not less than £220, and he gave particulars showing how the losses occurred. Instead of the liabilities being liquidated, they were, he said, being increased.

The affidavit of Mr. E. R. Syfret, co-assignee of the estate, confirmed the allegations in Mr. Steytler's affidavit. The answering affidavit of defendant repeated that it was perfectly possible to beneficially continue the liquidation.

The replying affidavit of Mr. Steytler stated that the statement of the receipts and disbursements made by Gelb was misleading, and repeated that there was an annual deficiency as he had alleged.

Mr. Close for defendant.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A. C. J.: There is no allegation of fraud or concealment on the part of the debtor; there has been no act of insolvency by the debtor and there is no allegation of misconduct since the assignment, and no ground is shown for this application, except the bare fact that the assignment is not working out so beneficially to the creditors as it is thought that sequestration would work out. Because the estate does not now work out so well as they thought it would, they want to go back upon their previous decision. The provisional order for sequestration must be set aside, with costs.

KANSLEY V. SABER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Final order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. AND OTHERS V. DAWOOD.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

OHLSSON'S CAPE BREWERIES V. EASTON.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

MALMESBURY BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. SMUTS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,500, due by reason of the non-payment of interest, less £79 paid on account of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

GIBBS V. FISK.

Dr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £600, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Defendant said that he had paid £28 for the rents to the plaintiff's agent, Mr. Steer.

Order granted.

MARSH V. FISK.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £700, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Defendant said that he had paid £10 to the agent, Mr. Steer.

Order granted.

TREGIDGA AND MOSSOP V. GOODSON.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £60, and also £1 premium of insurance, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ALBOW V. SANDLER AND OTHERS.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

WHITE, RYAN AND CO AND ANOTHER V. ASHLEY.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence upon a promissory note for £146 11s. 6d., with interest and costs, and for judgment under Rule 329d for £18 11s., balance of account for goods sold and delivered.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the power of attorney granted by defendant, which had been put in, was not stamped. An order would be granted as prayed, subject to the stamping of the power of attorney.

LAWRENCE V. MELEKOW.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,300, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MEYER V. BOTHA.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

SAACHS, CHIATT AND ANOTHER V. FRANKEL.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

ZOUTENDYK AND CO. V. TRUTER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £356 2s., less £116 16s. 8d., credit given by plaintiffs to defendant in the summons.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

Ex parte THE RED TRADING STAMP CO.

This was a petition for an order calling upon the Registrar of Deeds to hear an application by petitioners for registration of a certain trade mark.

The Registrar of Deeds, in his report, said that the objection to the registration of this mark was raised by the Trading Stamp Co. on the ground that it bore a close resemblance to the objectors' mark, and was therefore calculated to deceive. It was not necessary, he thought, to decide that point, seeing that it transpired, in the course of the inquiry he held, that the so-called mark was not in reality used as a mark at all. He found that the so-called mark was really used for a system of coupons used in the course of trade. These tickets or coupons were issued by dealers to their customers; those tickets represented a certain money value, and entitled the holders to exchange them for goods from the applicants. Under the circumstances, he exercised his discretion, and decided that the application was one that he need not determine.

Mr. Gardiner was for the petitioners, the Red Stamp Co., merchants, Johannesburg; Mr. Close opposed on behalf of the Trading Stamp Company, of Cape Town.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the Registrar of Deeds was wrong in the position he had taken up. The first Act of 1877 did not actually lay down what a trade was. The next Act, No. 12 of 1895, did not specify what the use of a trade-mark should be, but it did, by section 2, specify what it should consist of. The Registrar, in his report, said: "The function, I take it, of a trade-mark is to give an indication as to the manufacture or quality of goods, and to induce the public to purchase those identified with such mark." The petitioners said that they intended to have the representation blown into the glass goods they sold, and printed on the wrappers they used. The applicants, he contended, had shown that they intended to use this mark in connection with goods.

Mr. Close said that the application originally was for the registration of coupons, and thus for a mark which would not be affixed to goods at all. The application now made was quite different. The applicants now said they were going to have the mark burned into crockery and affixed to various goods.

The matter was referred back to the Registrar of Deeds, to hear the application for a trade-mark in regard to certain goods specified in the application, no order as to costs; notice to be given to respondents of the hearing before the Registrar.

Ex parte THE ESTATES E. T. CHADDOCK AND R. J. CHADDOCK.

Dr. Rainsford moved to make absolute a rule nisi to assume death, granted May 11th, 1905 (15 C.T.R., 373). The Chaddocks were supposed to have been drowned at sea some years ago.

Rule made absolute.

SCHUTTE V. TURNER.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi authorising the attachment, in part satisfaction of a judgment of certain moneys be paid to the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg, and to be handed to the respondent from the War Losses Compensation Commission. Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for applicant; Mr. M. Bisset was for respondent.

Owing to certain affidavits of the respondents not being available,

The matter was ordered to stand over.

LEY V. JOHNSON.

Mr. Close moved to make absolute a rule nisi, calling upon the respondent to show cause why certain moneys should not be declared executable.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte IESTER.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis by edictal citation. Counsel having certified.

Rule nisi was granted, returnable on the 17th August, to be served personally, failing which one publication in the "Cape Times."

Postea (August 24th). Rule made absolute.

Ex parte THE GRAAFF-REINET BOARD OF EXECUTORS.

Mr. De Waal applied for the attachment of property ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

to submit himself to a medical examination

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: And has he done so?]

Mr. Upington: Yes, my lord. Continuing, counsel stated that Mr. Walker had been cross-examined by Sir Victor Horsley and Dr. Ferreira, two very eminent specialists. They stated in their affidavit that they had visited and professionally examined Mr. Walker in reference to the state of his health and ability to undertake a voyage to Cape Town to undergo the ordeal of a trial in a court of law. They were of opinion that he was not unfit to undertake the voyage. Mr. Walker was well advanced in years, and was of gouty habits. Continuing, Mr. Upington said that if Mr. Walker's evidence was taken on commission it would entail considerable expense and great delay in the winding up of the affairs of the company, as many of the books required daily would have to go from Cape Town to England.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Is it necessary to have Walker's evidence to go to trial?]

Mr. Russell: He thinks so.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: He is only one of the firm connected with the case. The others probably know as much as he does.]

Mr. Russell: Cameron Walker, his son, does not. He has made an affidavit to that effect.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Judgment was reserved until Thursday morning.

Postea (August 3). Application for commission refused with costs.

The action to be proceeded with within the first week in October term.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

VEDASZ V. VEDASZ. { 1905.
Aug. 2nd.

This was an action heard in which Lajos Vadasz, a commercial traveller, residing at Long-street, Cape Town, sought a dissolution of his marriage with his wife, Florence Mercy Vadasz, of 276, Lower Main-road, Observatory, by reason of her adultery with one Sydney Morrell, of Maitland. Plaintiff also claimed the custody of the children of the marriage, and that the defendant be declared to have forfeited half share of the property held in community between them. He also claimed £500 damages from the co-defendant.

The plaintiff's declaration set forth that he was married to the first defendant in community of property at Hackney, England, on June 1, 1895. There were two girls, aged respectively 9 and 3 years, issue of the marriage. During the years 1898-1905, the first defendant committed adultery with the second defendant, but more particularly on the 9th, 10th, and 11th May, 1905, at 276, Lower Main-road, Observatory.

The defendants' plea denied all the allegations.

For a claim in reconvention, the first defendant applied for an order of judicial separation a mensa et thoro custody of the children, and payment of the sum of £12 per month for the maintenance of herself and children. She alleged that the plaintiff assaulted her on divers occasions, from which she had suffered severe injuries, and, in consequence, had been obliged on more than one occasion to summon medical attendants.

As a replication to defendant's plea, the plaintiff stated that he never ill-treated or assaulted defendant, but that on the 14th and 15th May last, whilst endeavouring to possess himself of certain correspondence material to the issue of the suit, the defendant closed with him, and during the struggle they both fell to the ground. He denied that she had suffered severe or any injuries in consequence of any action of his.

Dr. Greer appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. Burton (with him Mr. P. Jones), for the defendants.

After evidence had been led and counsel heard in argument on the facts:

Postea (August 4).

Maasdorp, J.: I don't think it will be necessary for me to go into great detail in the evidence which has been adduced. I think I shall be able to base my decision on some of the more outstanding portions of the evidence which will really establish the relationship which existed between the parties. The main question is, what was the character of the visits that were paid by the co-defendant to the defendant on the 9th, 10th, and 11th May last? The plaintiff alleges that on these occasions adultery was committed. The attitude taken up by the defendant and the co-defendant with respect to these visits is this, that they were the ordinary visits of a friend who had no reason to consider that he would be an unwelcome guest. If that position was true—if I were satisfied that up to that time the co-defendant was not unacceptable in that house—the case would bear one aspect. But it would be quite different if it is proved that previous to that the relationship that existed between them was to their knowledge regarded with suspicion by the husband. Now, it was suggested by the defendant when Osberg reported these visits to the husband that these visits were made at the invitation of the husband and she said as much and all through the position is taken up that the husband was on friendly terms with the co-defendant, and there was no reason why he should not occasionally call on the wife at the house. Now, to establish that position, it must be shown that what is said to have occurred on the 4th—what is said by the plaintiff to have occurred on the 4th—is not correct. The plaintiff makes a statement, the result of which would go to prove that on the 4th certain occurrences took place, which brought matters to a head, and which revealed his feelings in respect to the co-defendant in this case. Now, the defendant says that up to the 10th she was not aware that the plaintiff regarded the co-defendant with suspicion. As a matter of fact, we find it proved that on the 5th—the day after the hot altercation between plaintiff and his wife, the plaintiff went to Osberg and made a statement with reference to his wife, and he directly connected her name with that of Morrell, and he placed the case in the hands of Osberg for the purpose of discovering the relationship he complained of between Morrell and his wife. I think that proves that on the 5th it was Morrell who was suspected, and it was Morrell who was regarded on the 5th by the plaintiff as the man whom he would not have in his house. Now, if that were so, why should he on the 4th, when he gave expression to his indignation, have kept that secret from his wife. She says he stated to her: "I don't believe it is Morrell—meaning to suggest, if it is Morrell, I have no objection—I want to find someone else." I am convinced that is not true. The plaintiff went directly to Osberg as against Morrell, and I am positive he mentioned the name of Morrell to his wife, and he charged his wife with having intercourse with Morrell. If this is established, then the wife knew Morrell was the person who was not a welcome guest in the house, and when she pretended that the visits on the 9th, 10th, and 11th May took place on the invitation of her husband, she said what was absolutely untrue. Now, the question arises as to what relationship had sprung up between Morrell and the defendant before that. It is not necessary to go back to what happened two or three years before. On those occasions, as far as Mrs. Vedasz and Morrell are concerned, no suspicion is attached to anything that had taken place between them until lately, when we find that the husband was away for some days before the 4th May, and upon his arrival he finds that some gentleman had been to his house, and had dinner with his wife. Well, he was naturally displeased, and he had his suspicions. However, that throws no light upon the question as to whether adultery had been committed with Morrell. Subsequently, upon the night of that day, the plaintiff says he discovered a letter, and that letter has an important bearing on the case, and it is necessary to find whether that letter was written or not. We must contrast the evidence of the plaintiff with that of his wife. Is the wife a truthful witness? In this case she is brought into conflict with the plaintiff's evidence, and that of Bouker and of Osberg. As to the incidents referred to by Bouker and Osberg, I believe both of them, and I disbelieve the wife. Bouker says she came to the house after she left, and she removed certain letters from the fireplace. She denies that. I believe that the bundle removed was a bundle of letters, and I don't see any reason why Bouker, who showed her some kindness, should have given false evidence against her, and as I believe his evidence, I must reject the evidence of Mrs. Vedasz. I believe Osberg's account of the struggle over the telegram. Now the question arises, what is the conclusion to be arrived at with regard to the letter which the plaintiff says he saw in her possession, which she denies? The letter was written in the most warm and endearing terms to some person, and the improper feelings expressed showed some sort of illicit relationship between her and someone else, and the question is, who that someone else is? The only person proved to have been in communication with her at that time is Morrell. If she wrote that letter to Morrell, and Morrell did not at once repudiate his relationship with her, he puts himself in a compromising position. This warm relationship was existing between plaintiff's wife and Morrell, we find these visits paid by him at night at a time when the co-defendant was well aware that the plaintiff was away, because the plaintiff bade him farewell at the station, and immediately afterwards we find these two visits paid. While he was actually charged with having illicit relationship with the wife of this man, she says she goes to him as a friend to take advice, because her husband had been cruel to her. It is quite possible under such circumstances a woman might seek consolation from a good, honourable friend, but here she goes to the very man who is charged with committing an improper act. According to Osberg in one of these visits, a man was closeted with her for a considerable time, and when a summons appears at the door, which, under the ordinary circumstances would have been responded to, and which must have been heard, there is no answer. What were they engaged in that prevented them from opening the door? He remains with this woman from nine o'clock to about 11 o'clock, and under all the circumstances previously existing I think it is not only an act of imprudence, but it shows a tendency to some illicit relationship, and I have no doubt they carried out their intentions. I believe Osberg when he says the co-defendant admitted he had been there the night before. I come to the conclusion, under all the circumstances, that adultery was committed, and that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree of divorce. He makes a further claim against the co-defendant for damages, but although there is no actual evidence of unpleasant life between the plaintiff and his wife, the damages must be based upon a consideration of the loss which the husband suffers through losing the society of his wife and the happiness of his home that had been destroyed. There is no positive evidence that they lived unhappily together, but on the letters I come to the conclusion, as far as her feelings towards him were concerned, they could not have been those of sincere affection, and in losing the society of a woman who made these virulent and abusive attacks upon him, it is not such a loss as to call for heavy damages against the co-defendant. It is necessary in an action like this that the Court should see that the plaintiff does not suffer any actual loss through the conduct of the co-defendant, and I think he is entitled to some damages. There is always in these cases certain costs that cannot be recovered as taxed costs, and the Court should see that no loss falls upon the plaintiff in that respect. I think if the damages are assessed at £30 it will cover these costs. I find, under the circumstances, that there is no evidence to show that the plaintiff is not entitled to the custody of the children. With respect to the property transferred to the wife formed one of the considerations received by her only in respect of this marriage, and she has forfeited that benefit. A decree of divorce will be granted, the plaintiff ordered to have custody of the children, the wife declared to have forfeited the benefits accruing to her through the marriage, and is ordered to transfer the land to the plaintiff, and the co-defendant is ordered to pay the damages in the sum of £30 and costs.

Mr. Burton: I suppose Mrs. Vedasz will be allowed access to her children.

[Maasdorp, J.: Oh, yes.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GEPP V GEPP. } 1905.
} Aug. 2nd.

Mr. Burton moved for a decree of divorce on the ground of malicious desertion. He said that the matter was before the Court some time ago, when evidence was taken, but the case was ordered to stand over pending production of the marriage certificate. The parties belonged to Somerset West and Woodstock respectively. The certificate, he understood, had now been lodged with the Registrar.

Decree of divorce granted; no order as to costs.

TUTT V. TUTT.

This was an action brought by Wm. Benjamin Tutt, tailor, Kimberley, against his wife, Jane Dinah Tutt, of East London, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, on the ground of the defendant's malicious desertion. Mr. Lewis was for the plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Hopley, J., said that no notice of set down appeared to have been served on the defendant.

Mr. Lewis said that he would call evidence to show that notice of the trial had been given.

Reginald Metcalfe, attorney, in the office of Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, said that his firm had represented the defendant. Upon the plaintiff agreeing to waive the claim for division of property, it was arranged that they should withdraw from the case, and to save expense of serving declaration on the defendant personally, his firm accepted service in due course.

Hopley, J., said that he would, under the circumstances, allow the case to proceed, but at the same time it must be understood that proper notice in these cases must be given of the set-down, in accordance with the practice of the Court.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage registry, gave formal evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Plaintiff said that he was married to defendant at the Metropolitan Church, Cape Town, in April, 1885. Two years afterwards they went to reside at Kimberley. About five years ago unhappiness commenced, because witness had cause to complain of his wife's infidelity. She admitted the accusation, but witness forgave her, on the ground of saying that the boy who had been born was illegitimate. In 1903 his wife left the house without his consent, and went to reside at East London. He had asked her to return, but she had refused.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to plaintiff on or before the 1st September, failing which, to show cause on the 12th September why a decree of divorce should not be granted, personal service to be effected.

BAIN V. HAMMERSLEY-HEENAN.

Defamation—Privilege—Express malice—Recklessness.

This was an action to recover £1,000 damages for alleged defamation.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that in the year 1902 plaintiff was employed by the Harbour Board as chief claims clerk, but in or about December, 1902, defendant, unlawfully, maliciously, and with intent to injure the plaintiff, wrote and published to the members of the Board the following false and defamatory words of and concerning the plaintiff: "He (Mr. Bain) is incompetent for the position he holds, and has not the necessary qualifications for the office." In consequence, the plaintiff was in January, 1903, superseded in his post of chief claims clerk, and in or about April, 1903, he was altogether dismissed from the employ of the said Harbour Board, and had suffered grievous injury and had sustained damages in the sum of £1,000, which amount he claimed.

The defendant, in his plea, admitted that he wrote and published the words set forth, but said that he did not do so maliciously or with intent to injure the plaintiff. He denied that the said words were false or defamatory, but said that the said words were written by him without malice and in the belief that they were true and correct, and in such circumstances as to make it a privileged occasion, being contained in a memorandum sent by him to the Board in the course of his duty as manager. As an alternative, in case the plea of privilege failed, defendant pleaded that the words were true in substance and in fact, and that the publication to the said Board was made without malice and for the public benefit. He admitted that the plaintiff was in January, 1903, removed from his post as chief claims clerk, and that in April he was altogether dismissed from the employ of the Board, but denied that this was in consequence of the aforesaid statements. He said, further, that prior to the issue of summons more than one year had elapsed since the words were written and published.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the plaintiff; Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. M. Bisset) was for the defendant.

Mr. De Villiers said that the words complained of did not come to the knowledge of the plaintiff until the 13th

May, 1904, and the summons was issued within one year of that date.

Mr. Gardiner said that his client admitted having said that the plaintiff had not the necessary qualifications for the post, and that, after considering his report, the Board sanctioned his dismissal.

Kenneth Alexander Bain (the plaintiff) was called. He said that previous to October, 1901, he was employed by A. R. McKenzie and Co., dock agents, as chief claims clerk. In October, 1901, the Harbour Board took over the delivery of all cargo at the docks; he was appointed by the Harbour Board to organise the claims department. He was afterwards appointed permanently chief claims clerk as from January, 1902, at a salary of £250 a year. Witness had to instruct a staff and to investigate all claims brought against the Harbour Board. From December, 1901, the department was divided, and Mr. Grave was appointed to look after the current claims, while witness had to look after the claims up to December, 1901. Witness objected to this arrangement. Mr. Grave had a totally separate office and staff from witness. This continued till the 19th July, 1902. In May, 1902, Mr. Grave had got in arrear with his claims; he was unable to cope with the claims from the beginning. About the end of May the arrear claims were sent to Mr. Close, accountant, for adjustment. Witness had nothing whatever to do with those claims. Mr. Grave received a salary of £30 a month. About 30 or 40 of witness's claims were also sent to Mr. Close; these had been partially investigated by witness. In July, 1902, Grave had again fallen into arrears. Witness had finished the old claims. He was offered an appointment under Mr. Grave, but declined, and eventually the two staffs were combined, and witness was put in full charge, while Mr. Grave was put in the accountants' department. Witness took over considerably over 1,000 old claims from Mr. Grave. Witness continued in charge until the end of 1902. The claims continued to come in at a great rate. Witness and his staff coped with all the claims that were received. In December, 1902, witness was superseded, and Mr. Girdwood who had been freight clerk in the Union-Castle Company's office was appointed chief claims clerk, at a salary of £600 a year. Witness's salary was not reduced. Witness worked in the office for four months longer on the old claims. On February 12, 1903, Mr. Girdwood got leave of absence, and was away for four or five weeks. During that time witness dealt with the whole of the current claims, except a bundle left by Mr. Girdwood bearing a note asking him to look into those. Witness did not investigate those claims. Witness put the bundle back. On the 30th April, 1903, witness received a letter from Captain Leigh, dispensing with his services as from the 31st May, and saying that in view of the late hours he had worked he (Captain Leigh) had recommended that he should receive a bonus. Subsequently, he received another letter from Captain Leigh saying that he was advised that as he (Bain) had received three months' salary in lieu of one month's notice, the General Manager could not recommend that he should be paid a bonus of £100. Witness considered that he was on the fixed establishment, and that he was under a yearly appointment. Witness afterwards saw Mr. Pyott, M.L.C., with a view of having his case brought before Parliament. Mr. Pyott made verbal inquiries from the General Manager of the Harbour Board, and, in response, received a letter from the General Manager, in which he said: "Mr. Bain was placed in charge of the claims department by Mr. Underwood, but he proved unfitted for the position, for, although a zealous and painstaking officer, his manner with the public was not such as would conduce to amicable working, and he seemed unable to get the amount of the work out of his staff, which was necessary to enable him to keep pace with the claims." Mr. Heenan went on to say that these drawbacks, added to the incompetency of the outdoor staff, had led to the arrears of current claims, and to certain of them being sent to Mr. Close. Mr. Heenan also said: "Mr. Bain's honesty, integrity, and capacity for work the Board had every reason to be satisfied with, but he was quite unfitted for the position to which he had been appointed." Witness did not want to go to law, and he then wrote to the Treasurer-General, asking him if he could re-open the case, in view of the information which had come to his knowledge. The Treasurer-General, however, said that he could not re-open the case. Nine months after he left the Board he got a temporary situation with McKenzie and Co., and remained there until they failed. He was dispensed with in November last. He was paid £2 10s. a week by McKenzie and Co. Witness was afterwards out of employment for about five months, and he had since been in his present employ at Messrs. Murray and Stewart's at £3 a week. Witness had a wife and six children. Nobody knew how he had suffered both in body and mind since he had had to leave the Board's service.

Cross-examined: Witness was paid his salary by the Board by the month. He thought it was Mr. Heenan's duty to speak to him if he had any fault to find. He was inclined to think that Mr. Heenan was animated by personal spite. He thought Mr. Heenan did not believe what he wrote. Mr. Heenan rarely met witness. Mr. Heenan had always acknowledged in the correspondence that witness had worked hard and zealously in the interests of the Board. He did not know that Mr. Heenan had endorsed Mr. Robb's recommendation that witness should receive a bonus of £100. He did not think that Mr. Girdwood was half as competent as himself. Mr. Girdwood was appointed in the interests of the shipping ring. He thought Mr. Heenan was working in the interests of the shipping ring.

Mr. Gardiner: You have no foundation for that statement?

Witness: Common report.

That is your only foundation?—No, not my only foundation. Claims have been passed by Mr. Girdwood which ought not to have been paid by the Harbour Board.

Further cross-examined: Witness was not at the office when these claims were passed. He was speaking from what he had heard. He knew the way Mr. Girdwood was working when he was at the Board. He pointed out what was taking place to Mr. Robb. Mr. Heenan wanted to get rid of witness and his chief clerk for the sole reason that he wanted to get a man in from the shipping ring. Witness did not repudiate a certain claim, which Mr. Girdwood had ordered to be paid with the result that the Board were summoned, and he never heard any complaints about his attitude to the public until Tuesday.

Captain R. A. Leigh said he was Dock Superintendent for the Harbour Board in 1902, and he was now assistant superintendent. Witness was Mr. Bain's direct superior officer. The staff Mr. Bain had was almost the same as now, and was quite competent. Mr. Bain worked nights, holidays, and Sundays, but witness did not think he had good results from his labour.

Cross-examined: Witness had no reason whatever to believe that Mr. Hammersley-Heenan had any personal spite against plaintiff, and he could not understand the suggestion that Mr. Heenan was working in the interests of the shipping ring.

Frank Robb, Assistant General Manager of the Harbour Board, said it was impossible for any mortal man in the beginning of 1902 to cope with all the claims. From about May, 1902, however, an improvement should have been apparent, as the conditions were better. Witness made the statement that, on the whole, Mr. Bain got good results from a financial point of view, and the General Manager agreed with him.

By the Court: In the circumstances, he would have dispensed with Mr. Bain's services, as the General Manager had done. He did not remember disapproving of Mr. Bain's dismissal, but he disapproved of Mr. Girdwood's appointment.

Cross-examined: Mr. Bain was not the man he would have selected for the post, but he worked under the very worst conditions, and never had chance of showing what he was capable of. He was on the monthly staff.

Frank William Oliver said he was in the employ of the Harbour Board about the same time as Mr. Bain, as assistant clerk in the Claims Department. He never heard anything about Mr. Bain disobeying the orders of Mr. Girdwood, or complaints by the public against Mr. Bain. The whole office staff worked well under Mr. Bain.

Mr. De Villiers closed his case.

Mr. Gardiner said that he had thought of applying for absolution from the instance, but he thought it would be better to call evidence in order to obtain judgment.

Robert Henry Hammersley-Heenan (defendant) said that he had to cast about to get a good man, because there were claims outstanding at that time to the tune of about £32,000. He ultimately found a man in Mr. Girdwood. Bain was not competent for the position; he had not got the capacity to do the work, in witness's opinion. Bain failed in administrative and organising ability. Witness had invariably testified that Bain was a hard and zealous worker. There were complaints from the public. Witness's life was a perfect burden, owing to the complaints he received from the Chamber of Commerce, and merchants, and everybody else, that their claims were not settled. Bain was not a tactful man. Witness had no personal malice against Bain; on the contrary, he did all he could to assist Bain into a situation in another department. Witness considered that he had no alternative but to do as he did in the discharge of his duty.

[Hopley, J.: Is there any foundation for the suggestion that you got Girdwood in in the interests of the shipping ring, or any interest but the Harbour Board's?]

Witness: Absolutely none.

Cross-examined: The very fact of Bain trying to squeeze down the merchants and to drive unnecessarily hard bargains wasted his time, and he exerted his energies on that, instead of on the general administration of his department. Mr. Robb had described Bain as "too much of a ferret and too little of an administrator." Witness thought that that just touched the point. Bain had not got the width of mind to grasp big questions. Witness found that the relations between Girdwood and Bain had become very strained, and of the two men, he had no hesitation as to which he should retain. He was satisfied that the action he took in dismissing Bain was the right and only thing he could do. He had satisfied himself, before he dismissed Bain, that the position between him and Girdwood was an impossible one. He admitted that Bain had worked nights, Sundays, and holidays, and had saved money for the Board, but he considered that Bain's energies were misdirected. Witness had not said the words that "Bain was incompetent," but he admitted having said that Bain "had not the necessary qualifications for the post."

At this stage the plea was amended to read that defendant denied having said that the plaintiff was incompetent, but admitted having said that he had not the necessary qualifications for the post.

Cross-examination continued: Witness dismissed Bain from the Board's service, and afterwards reported what he had done to the Board. Witness found that Bain was not acceptable to the public. The complaints he had referred to were not against Bain personally, but against the results in the Claims Department. Witness admitted that the conditions at the Docks were bad when Bain was employed on the claims, but he did not think that he rose to the occasion.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Mr. De Villiers having been heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J.: One cannot help feeling a certain amount of sympathy with the plaintiff, and one cannot help also regretting that he should have been advised, or that he should have insisted, on coming into this Court in order to try and right his imaginary or real wrongs in the circumstances in which he finds himself placed. He has a very hard and uphill fight to sustain an action of this sort. He has first to prove that the words, as having been made use of by a man in the position of Mr. Hammersley-Heenan, were false, and malicious, and defamatory, and then he has to prove that if in the circumstances those words were privileged, they were used with express malice on the part of the defendant, so as to destroy the benefit of the privilege. We all have some idea of the state of things at the Docks at the time that plaintiff was engaged, and when he was carrying on his work. There must have been a state of great confusion and a large accumulation of claims against the Harbour Board: but then it is often said that the presence of such a state of things will bring out the best points in a good man. Plaintiff had a fair trial. There is no doubt from the evidence before me that he was a most zealous and most industrious man, and most zealous in more than one direction. Besides working whenever he could possibly be expected to work, he showed his zeal in another direction, by trying to cut down, as far as he could, the merchants' claims, and in other ways to save money for the department in which he was engaged. All this zeal is very well in its way, but it does not follow that a man who shows those qualifications has really got the qualifications necessary for the post he holds, any more than a head gardener, for instance, does if he persists in spending his time in digging. As to the question of what effect the words complained of had, it does not appear that the publication procured the plaintiff's dismissal, because, as a matter of fact, he had been dismissed by the General Manager before the words complained of had been written. But it may be that the words had, or must be held to have had some effect in procuring the Board's confirmation of the defendant's action, and I must consider them in the state of the pleadings as having been written before the final dismissal took place. Now, when a General Manager makes a report like this, he writes it on a privileged occasion, and all I have now to consider is whether the plaintiff has succeeded in showing that there was express malice actuating the defendant when he wrote the words in question, and as to that I confess that throughout the whole of this case I have not been able to find one shred of evidence which will show the slightest scintilla of malice against the plaintiff on the part of the defendant. Every written document that there is has shown that he was treated with great regard and that his good services were always eulogized. The defendant has made use of no expression indicating malice on his part, and none of his conduct points to a malicious state of mind; but it has been argued that he was reckless in making the charge he did. I can see nothing to substantiate this. He acted on the best information at his disposal, and on the reports of the officers subordinate to himself who had to deal with the plaintiff; and he also had had personal complaints from members of the public of plaintiff's want of tact in his position. Under all the circumstances, the plaintiff must fail, and judgment must be given for the defendant. One cannot help having some sympathy for the plaintiff, but that sympathy is, I must say, to a great extent removed by the fact that he himself has not scrupled, when in the witness-box, to make a very grave and unfounded charge against the defendant and others responsible for the appointment of Mr. Girdwood, which was virtually a charge of corruption on the part of the defendant and others associated with him. There is not the slightest evidence to support these charges. It is an improper thing for the plaintiff to take advantage of the privilege of the witness-box to make accusations of that sort, which he cannot bring any evidence to support. Judgment will be given for the defendant with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the
Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

REVIEW.

REX V. MEITJE SWARTZ. { 1905.
Aug. 3rd.

Concealment of birth—Ordinance
10 of 1845.

By Ordinance 10 of 1845, concealment of birth is not punishable with a fine.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The case of Meitje Swartz came before me as Judge of the week, in which the accused was charged with contravening Ordinance 10 of 1845 by concealing the birth of a child was laid against the accused. The case was remitted under Act 43 of 1885, and the Magistrate sentenced accused to a fine of £25, or, in default, to imprisonment, with hard labour, for six months. The Concealment of Birth Ordinance gives no option of payment of a fine, so the option of a fine is struck out of the sentence. The sentence of imprisonment will stand, and the sentence as so amended will be confirmed.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MACLEOD V. EGBERS.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable

Order granted.

LARMER V. PERELMAN.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,200, with interest, less £25 paid on account, and for £2 12s. 6d., premiums of insurance, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

JOHNSON AND CO. V. BURRILL.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant. When the matter was last before the Court (15 C.T.R., 414), defendant said that he would make an offer, but he had failed to do so.

Decree granted.

ROBERTSON V. REES AND CO.

Mr. Alexander moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Defendant said that had he been left alone by the petitioning creditor he would have been able to carry his business through, with the assistance of English creditors. Plaintiff would not allow him time, otherwise he would have been able to arrange all.

Buchanan, A. C. J. (to defendant): I am afraid that the man has his remedy; he has the whip hand of you, and I am sorry for you. Final order granted.

Mr. Alexander moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of a provisional trustee, on the petition of Mr. Sherwood. It was stated that the business was that of a tin and sheet metal worker, and was the only one of its kind in the Peninsula. Counsel added that it was only fair to say that in 1903, Mr. Robertson advanced £1,100 to defendant, and had not received a single sixpence.

Mr. A. N. Foot was appointed provisional trustee of the estate.

LETTERSTEDT V. WENTZEL.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence for £355 on certain conditions of sale, plaintiff tendering transfer of the property.

Defendant put in an affidavit saying that there had been some difficulty about obtaining securities.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

DURANT V. HAARHOFF.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £67 7s., goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

TURNBULL V. TURNBULL. 1905.
Aug. 3rd.

Mr. Lewis moved for a decree of divorce on the petition of the wife, in default of compliance by the defendant with an order for restitution of conjugal rights.

Rule made absolute.

MEYER V. MEYER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for a decree of divorce on the petition of the husband, in default of compliance by the defendant with an order for restitution of conjugal rights.

Rule made absolute.

NATIONAL MUTUAL LIFE ASSOCIATION
V. ESTATE TILNEY.

This was an application, upon notice of motion, calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not furnish security in the sum of £600, in order to meet the costs of defending an action instituted against the applicant company, and further, why he should not be debarred from proceeding further with the suit until he should have furnished such security due from him owing to his want of domicile in this colony.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the late Mr. Tilney insured with the applicant company for a sum of £1,000, and that he died at King William's Town in July, 1902, about eight or nine months afterwards. Mr. Bowen was appointed executor, and he proceeded to take out letters of administration in Rhodesia. He had applied to the company for payment of the proceeds of the policy, but they declined to pay the money, and the executor had commenced an action. The only asset in the estate was the insurance policy. The ground of the present application was that Mr. Bowen was domiciled in another jurisdiction, that large expense would be involved in a commission which had already sat in Cape Town and other commissions that it was proposed should sit in other parts of the country, and that applicants were entitled to some security for their costs. The Master of this Court further took up the position that the letters of administration should have been taken out in this Colony. The company, in their plea, set out two defences: (1) That the deceased committed suicide to get the proceeds of the policy for the benefit of a friend; and (2) that he made false representation at the time the policy was issued, as he was at that time intemperate, and he had already expressed an intention of committing suicide.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin) for applicants. Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Swift) for respondent.

[Buchanan, A. C. J. (to counsel): That question might have been decided on exception.]

Mr. Searle: I was going to suggest whether it would not be worth while now to consider whether that point could not be decided. Mr. Searle went on to argue that his clients were entitled to their order for security for costs, seeing that, although the deceased was domiciled in this colony at the time of his death, administration had been taken out in Rhodesia, where the executor resided. He added that it might be necessary to take certain evidence in King William's Town, connected with the inquest proceedings.

Mr. Upington said that if the application were granted it would have the effect of absolutely stopping the proceedings. It was not a question of the estate being unwilling, because they were willing to do everything in their power to take up their domicile, which they had never lost, in this colony. The objection now taken was a purely technical one. He submitted that it was inequitable that the respondent should now be called upon to furnish security in the enormous sum of £500 to enable defendants to substantiate a ridiculous charge that deceased entered into this life policy to commit suicide for the purpose of benefiting a friend.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the respondent's attorney had already entered into a personal guarantee for the payment of costs up to what was called the exception stage when the applicants were given leave to amend their plea. There was now no undertaking for the costs since then. The Court would order that the proceedings in the matter be stayed until further security for costs was given. He (the learned Judge) thought it would be sufficient if, in addition to the attorney's personal guarantee security for a further sum of £250 was furnished, costs of the application to be costs in the cause, failing such security being given, costs to be paid by the respondent.

GAFFOOR V. HIGH SHERIFF AND HEYDENRYCH.

This was an application upon notice of motion calling upon the respondents to show cause why an order should not be granted discharging from attachment certain goods in the applicant's shop at the corner of Campbell-street and Polo-road, Observatory-road, which had been attached by virtue of a writ directed against the goods of one Gadje Abduraman.

The applicant's affidavit stated the goods were his bona-fide property, and denied that the shop belonged to Abduraman, or was in any way connected with Abduraman. Other affidavits were read from merchants in Cape Town stating that they had supplied applicant with goods.

The answering affidavit of William D. Herbert stated that he had proceeded to the shop of Abduraman, at the corner of Cooke-street and Polo-road, to levy execution, and had found that it contained no goods. He had reason to believe that the businesses in Cooke-street and Campbell-street were combined, and he found in the former shop handbills advertising the business in Campbell-street. Deponent added that he had had great experience in attaching the goods of Indians, and his experience was that Indians would adopt almost any course to prevent their goods being attached. Supporting affidavits by B. G. Heydenrych and the landlord of the shop at the corner of Campbell-street, stated that up to March of this year Abduraman had paid the rent, and that he (the landlord) still looked to Abduraman for payment of the rent. Replying to the Court, Mr. Molteno stated that the amount of the judgment was £100, and the value of the goods attached was about £75.

The replying affidavit of applicant stated that the reason why his shop was advertised on the handbill of Abduraman was because of the saving in cost of printing. He had received goods in the name of Abduraman, but it was only because he had been made to obtain goods on his own credit, and had used Abduraman's name as security. Counsel also read other replying affidavits.

Mr. Close for applicant. Mr. Molteno for respondents.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said it was impossible to decide the ownership of the goods on affidavit, and an action would have to be instituted. On the documents before him, however, it was clear that the goods for Gaffoor went to Gaffoor's shop, and the goods for Abduraman to Abduraman's shop, and it would be an injustice to the merchants who supplied Gaffoor to allow goods they had supplied to him to be attached in order to pay Abduraman's debts. If the creditor wanted to show that these goods were executable under his writ he could bring an action, but meanwhile the attachment on the goods must be set aside, costs to be costs in the cause, or, failing an action, respondents must pay the costs.

SHUTTE V. TURNER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute, calling upon the respondent, Daniel Turner, of Constantia, to show cause why a certain sum of £50, to be awarded him by the War Losses Compensation Commission, and paid to the R.M. of Wynberg, on his behalf, should not be attached in part satisfaction of a judgment of the R.M.'s Court, at Prieska.

Mr. M. Bisset, on behalf of respondent, opposed the application, and read an affidavit by Turner, stating that the award referred to certain animals handed over to the military for protection while he was at Upington during the late war, and that respondent was only entitled to two-tenths of the amount of the award, as the owner of only two of the animals. Deponent added that he had lost all his property through the war, and was now practically penniless. Affidavits sworn by respondent's sons were also read to the effect that certain of the animals were their property. Respondent did not oppose the application so far as £10 of the award of £50 made by the Commission was concerned.

Mr. Jones read replying affidavits to the effect that the applicant had good reason to believe that Turner owned the animals, and that Turner, as a matter of fact, put in the claim to the Commission in his own name as owner of the animals.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

The rule was made absolute to the extent of £10, respondent to pay costs of application.

GOUSEN V. GYSELAAR.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to sign judgment against the plaintiff, who had failed to file his declaration.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE MOSTERT.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to pass transfer of certain property, at Observatory, in the estate of the late Adrian Mostert, and his subsequently deceased spouse. It appeared that the matter was complicated by the fact that the late Mr. Mostert some time in the '60's surrendered his estate.

Ordered to stand over for further information.

CLACK V. CLACK.

Mr. M. Bisset (on behalf of plaintiff) moved for the removal of trial to the Eastern Districts Court.

Application granted, costs to be costs in the cause.

ESTATE HOFFMAN V. GOTTLIEB.

This was an application upon notice of motion, calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to disclose and deliver up to applicants, the trustees in the insolvent estate, Wm. Hoffman, all such books of account, documents, and vouchers, as are in his possession, and control, relating to the business of the insolvent prior to his insolvency in connection with the Dominicon Tobacco Company, which business had been taken over and continued by respondent. Mr. Benjamin was for applicant; Mr. Upington was for respondent. The ground of application was that the books and documents were required for the liquidation of the insolvent estate.

Affidavits having been read,

Mr. Upington said that his client was prepared to hand over the vouchers and documents of Hoffman, but that it was most inconvenient to hand over the books of account, because he was using them in the business. He had not, however, any objection to allowing the applicant reasonable access to the books of account.

Mr. Benjamin said that Gottlieb had taken part in a very suspicious transaction, and it was only right that the trustee should have facilities for investigating the affairs of the business. The sale of the business from Hoffman to Gottlieb took place less than six months previous to the insolvency of Hoffman. He submitted that, at the very least, the applicants were entitled to the fullest inspection of the books. When the respondent was asked for an inspection of the books, he replied, "What do you want to see them for?"

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that there was absolutely no necessity for the applicants to come to the Court. The application would be refused, with costs, it being understood that the books were open to the applicants for inspection at all reasonable times.

Ex parte PROBART.

Mr. M. Bisset moved, on behalf of the petitioner, for an order on the executors for payment of a sum of £150 at present from the joint estate of her deceased husband and herself, and also for such other sums as may be required by her from time to time up to her one-half share.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the application was very much like asking the Court to give an opinion on a will. Instead of a barrister giving an opinion, an ex parte application was brought for the purpose of asking the opinion of the Bench. The difficulty, to his mind, was how he was to make an order. Why didn't the executors pay the money?

Mr. Bisset said that the executors were not prepared to take the responsibility.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: The Court is not here to advise executors on these questions. Why not bring an action?]

Mr. Bisset said that the reason, he thought, was on account of the expense. The matter could be settled in a few minutes if his lordship would look at the will.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: I am not here to give opinions. The petitioner may take the opinion of counsel, or bring an action. There will be no order on the present application.

LAW SOCIETY V. O'BRIEN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for directions as to service in an application for the removal of respondent from the roll of attorneys. O'Brien had been in practice in Cape Town, but his present whereabouts could not be traced.

Notice of motion was ordered to be given by publication, once in the "Government Gazette," "Cape Times," "Cape Argus," and "South African News."

SMITH V. ESTATE GROSS AND SMITH BROS.

Mr. Roux moved for a commission de bene esse to take certain evidence in Johannesburg.

Mr. Upington said that the respondent raised no objection to the application so far as two of the three witnesses were concerned. The action involved a question as to an alleged fraudulent transaction between David Smith (the plaintiff) and Joseph Smith (one of the insolvents), and it was desirable that one of the witnesses—Joseph Smith—should give his evidence in the witness-box.

Mr. Roux read an affidavit by David Smith, who said that he was a poor man, and it would be very convenient if the evidence of the three witnesses could be taken in Johannesburg.

Further affidavits having been read on both sides, and counsel having been heard in argument, Buchanan, A. C. J., said that a commission would be granted to examine two of the witnesses, Nathan Charnas and Jacob Schwanek, Mr. Krause to be commissioner.

DAVIDS V. DAVIDS.

Mr. Roux moved, on behalf of Magdalena Davids, a Griqua, of Kokstad, for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of petitioner and her witnesses at Kokstad.

Application granted, the R.M. of Kokstad to be commissioner, failing him the A.R.M.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

RILEY V. RILEY. { 1905.
Aug. 4th.

This was an action brought by Martha Johanna Jacoba Riley, a nurse, residing at Nelson Villa, Maitland, for a decree of divorce against her husband James Riley, an employee on the C.G.R., on account of his adultery.

The plaintiff's declaration stated that she and defendant were married in community of property at St. Mary's Church, Woodstock, in December, 1897. There was no issue of the marriage. During the early part of the year 1905 the defendant committed adultery with women at Cape Town and Claremont, and in consequence contracted a venereal disease.

Dr. Greer for plaintiff. Defendant in default.

William Thos. Birch produced the register containing the marriage of the parties.

The plaintiff stated she was married in 1897. She was a nurse by profession. Since marriage she had lived in Cape Town and Hex River. She had been very unhappy in her married life. Three weeks after marriage her husband assaulted her whilst under the influence of drink. He was a joiner by trade, but was now an engine-driver. The cruelty was mainly due to his drinking. In November last he threatened to shoot witness whilst under the influence of drink. Witness identified certain letters, in which the defendant admitted adultery on several occasions.

Dr. Greer: We ask for a division of property, but there is none to divide.

A decree of divorce was granted.

GRAY AND SON V. DEN DAUW.

This was an action brought by W. H. Gray and Son, of Cape Town, against Ellen Priscilla den Dauw, to compel her to return to them a bond for £300.

The plaintiffs' declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are William Harrison Gray and John William Gray, carrying on business in Cape Town as brokers and otherwise, under the style or firm of W. H. Gray and Son. The defendant is Ellen Priscilla den Dauw, now or lately of Cape Town, who is sued as duly assisted by her husband John Leonard Constant den Dauw to whom at some date subsequent to 1887 she was married in England according to the laws of England.

2. On or about 25th June, 1903, the plaintiffs, at the request of defendant's husband, J. L. C. den Dauw, and for his accommodation, endorsed a promissory note for £200 made by J. L. C. den Dauw in favour of H. M. Arderne, upon the express condition agreed to by the said J. L. C. den Dauw that the plaintiffs should, in return therefor as security, receive cession of a certain second mortgage bond for £200, then to be passed by Lewis Levin in favour of J. L. C. den Dauw, hypothecating in favour of J. L. C. den Dauw certain property (to wit, Lot 74 of original Lot No. 8, Woodstock, transferred to the late J. M. Wentzel on 20th April, 1841), purchased from him by the said Levin in or about June, 1903.

3. On the 12th August the said second bond was passed, but for the sum of £300 instead of £200, and in favour of defendant instead of her husband. The plaintiffs agreed to the said alterations on condition that plaintiffs' claim to receive cession of the said second bond should not be affected, and the defendant and her husband duly agreed thereto.

4. In or about October, 1903, the defendant, assisted by her husband, duly endorsed on the said bond a cession of all her right therein in favour of plaintiffs as security, as aforesaid, and plaintiffs duly obtained possession of the said bond.

5. The defendant's husband failed to meet his obligations on the promissory note aforesaid, and plaintiffs had to pay the full amount thereof, with interest, amounting in all to £216.

6. Subsequently the defendant became indebted to plaintiffs in further sums advanced by them to her from time to time, amounting in all to £105 19s. 3d.

7. In or about September, 1904, the defendant agreed to take over the liability of her said husband to plaintiffs, as aforesaid, and to make a complete and absolute cession of the bond in favour of plaintiffs in discharge of the indebtedness of herself and her husband to plaintiffs to the extent of the amount of the aforesaid bond, and the bond was delivered by plaintiffs to defendant for the purpose of signing the necessary endorsements of cession in plaintiffs' favour.

8. The plaintiffs repeatedly endeavoured to obtain the return of the bond from defendants, but were unable to do so, and on or about the 17th October, 1904, the defendant and her husband left this colony without the previous knowledge of plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs have not since then obtained possession of the said bond.

9. The plaintiffs have not received payment of any portion of the sums of £216 and £105 19s. 3d., aforesaid, amounting in all to £321 19s. 3d.

Wherefore plaintiffs claim: (a) An order calling upon defendant to restore to plaintiffs forthwith the second bond for £300, as aforesaid; (b) an order calling upon defendant forthwith to take all steps necessary to effect the completion in writing of the absolute cession of the said bond to defendants as aforesaid, and of the registration thereof, and, failing compliance therewith, the plaintiffs pray that this Honourable Court will make such order as it shall deem fit to enable plaintiffs to secure and register their rights in respect of the said second bond; (c) payment of £321 19s. 3d., moneys paid by plaintiffs to, or on behalf of, defendant, and at her special instance and request, or for which she has taken over liability, as aforesaid, less the sum of £300 (the amount of the said bond), to be deducted as from the date of registration of the said bond in plaintiffs' favour; (d) interest a tempore morae; (e) alternative relief; (f) costs.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraph 1 of the intendit save that she says that she was married in December, 1887.

2. As to paragraph 2 she admits that the plaintiffs at the request of her husband and for his accommodation endorsed the said promissory note; but she does not admit that her said husband agreed that the plaintiffs should in return as security receive cession of a certain second mortgage bond for £200 then to be passed by Lewis Levin nor does she admit that the plaintiffs endorsed the said note upon any such condition. She says that it was always intended that the said bond should be passed in her favour, and it was never intended that it should be passed in favour of her husband. If her husband did agree that the said bond should be ceded to the plaintiffs she was no party to the said agreement and is not bound thereby.

3. Save that she admits that the said Levin did on the 12th August, 1903, pass a second bond in her favour for £300, instead of £200, she denies the allegations in paragraph 3.

4. As to paragraph 4 the defendant denies that in October, 1903, or at any time she endorsed on the said bond a cession to the plaintiffs or that she ever agreed to cede the said bond to the plaintiffs as security or otherwise. She admits that on the said bond there appears what purports to be a cession above the names of herself and her said husband, but she says that what purport to be the signatures of herself and her husband are forgeries and were not written by herself and her husband respectively.

5. She admits that the said bond came into the possession of the plaintiffs, but says that this was in or about September, 1903. In or about the said month the defendant delivered the said bond to the plaintiffs in order that they might lodge it with the Bank of Africa and thereby obtain moneys from the said bank for her husband. She denies that she delivered it to the plaintiffs as security for any moneys then owing to them.

6. As to paragraph 5 she admits that her husband was unable to meet his obligations on the said note, but she has no knowledge as to the other allegations in the said paragraph.

7. As to paragraph 6 she denies that she is or ever was indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of £105 19s. 3d. or in any sum.

8. Save that she admits that the plaintiffs returned the said bond to her, she denies each and all the allegations in paragraph 7.

9. She says further that on the 17th December, 1903, in her capacity as agent for her husband who was then absent from this colony she passed in favour of the plaintiffs a certain first mortgage bond for the sum of £800 hypothecating certain land with buildings thereon situate at Green Point the property of her said husband. The said last-mentioned bond was passed as security for all moneys owing by her said husband to the plaintiffs and is still of full force and effect.

10. She admits that on or about the 17th October, 1904, she and her husband left the Colony and that she has possession of the aforesaid second bond and has refused and refuses to deliver it to the plaintiffs, but otherwise denies the allegations in paragraph 8.

11. As to paragraph 9 she admits that she has not paid any portion of the sums of £216 and £105 19s. 3d. claimed by the plaintiffs, but denies that she is liable therefor. Further with regard to the sum of £216 she refers to the allegations in paragraph 9 hereof. Wherefore she prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs. And for a further plea, in case this Honourable Court should hold that at any time she agreed to cede the aforesaid second bond to the plaintiffs as security for any debt due by her husband, she says as follows:

12. She is not bound by any agreement to be surety for her husband or to cede the said bond as security inasmuch as she has not renounced the benefits of the Senatus consultum Velleianum or of the Authentica si qua mulier.

Wherefore she prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Gutsche) for plaintiff. Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) for defendant.

The plaintiff, examined, stated that on the 25th June, at the request of defendant's husband, he endorsed a promissory note for £200 for him in favour of H. M. Arderne, upon the express condition that the plaintiffs should in return as security receive cession of a second mortgage bond for £200 then to be passed by Lewis Levin in favour of Den Dauw. At this time witness did not know that there was a second bond on the property. Mr. Den Dauw did not tell witness of the second bond. Witness wanted the transfer deeds, and went to the deeds office to get them. There he found that there was a bond to Mr. Arderne for £600. Witness asked Den Dauw why he did not tell him about the bond. Den Dauw said he had not done so. They went to Mr. Arderne together, where Den Dauw admitted the second bond. An arrangement was arrived at by which Mr. Arderne agreed to take off his second bond on the Argyle-street property and take a third bond on the Green Point property for £500, on condition that witness signed a promissory note for £200 as collateral security. Mrs. Den Dauw was waiting in witness's chambers to know the result of the interview with Mr. Arderne. Witness told Den Dauw that he would not sign any promissory note unless he had a cession of the property to be transferred to Levin. This was agreed to, and the note was signed. The bond was passed by Mr. Levin on August 12, 1903. The note was for four months. It was torn up when subsequent ones were substituted. It was accepted by Den Dauw and endorsed by witness. On the 12th August the second bond came. Finding it impossible to get a bond for £1,000, they had to take £800 and raise a second bond for £300. It was arranged that the bonds on the Argyle-street and Green Point properties were to be in defendant's name. The reason this was done was to protect the property, as the husband was going through the money rapidly. Witness only said that certain papers connected with the case had disappeared from his office.

[Maasdorp, J.: Where were these papers kept?—In the files of papers in my private office.

[Maasdorp, J.: When did they disappear?—I did not miss it until after this action commenced.

[Maasdorp, J.: You made full search in your office?—Yes. Mrs. Den Dauw was in your office as an assistant clerk for some months, and she had full access to these papers. Of course, I do not mean to say that she took them.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that that was no proof of the disappearance of the papers.

Continuing, witness said that the agreement about changing the ownership of the property would not affect their rights. Witness got possession of the bond after it was passed. Mrs. Den Dauw knew witness had it. Witness kept the bond in the office some time. One day Mr. Den Dauw was in the office, when Mrs. Den Dauw also entered. Witness told them they had better sign the cession. They signed, and it was witnessed by "J. W. Gray and C. le Roux." At that date there were no stamps on the document, Witness had at that time opened an account with the A.B.C. Bank. Witness deposited the bond with the bank as security for an overdraft. Mr. Smith, the manager, said the bank were not satisfied with the signatures to the bond, and wanted a cession form filled up. He wanted Mrs. Den Dauw's signature to it. The signature "E. P. Den Dauw" to it was in defendant's handwriting. Witness changed his account to the Bank of Africa in July, 1904. Shortly afterwards witness got defendant to cancel the stamps on the bond. It became necessary for Mrs. Den Dauw to sign the document, and at the defendant's request witness allowed her to take the document home on a Saturday to get it signed, and she promised to return it on Monday. On Monday she did not turn up, and witness sent to inquire about the bond. She sent back word to say she was sick. As the bond was not returned, witness wrote to defendant stating that as the bond was held by the bank as security for an overdraft, that if it was not returned he would have to realise on his property to meet the overdraft. He was very anxious to get the bond back. Witness went to see Mrs. Den Dauw about the bond. She was in bed. Witness asked her about the bond, and she said she had left it with a lawyer. Witness said he wanted it back, and she replied that as soon as she could get out she would take it back. Witness went away then. He repeatedly sent for the bond, and the reply was always that Mrs. Den Dauw was too ill to attend to business. Mrs. Den Dauw left for England a little later on. She wrote to witness the day before she sailed, but witness did not get the letter until six days had elapsed. She said nothing in the letter about the bond. The defendant did not communicate with witness during her absence. Witness swore to the signatures on the bond. They were not forged.

In cross-examination by Mr. Gardiner, the witness stated he purchased the Green Point property for £1,400. He got nothing on his bond which he held over that property. Mrs. Den Dauw consented in March, 1904, to make an absolute cession of the bond. Witness released Mr. Den Dauw when the wife became security. Witness was positive that Mrs. Den Dauw signed the documents produced bearing her name. He emphatically denied that he signed them for her.

Maasdorp, J., at this stage said he really thought both parties should consider their position.

Mr. Gardiner said he would consider it.

Mr. Gardiner said his client took up the position now that while she had no recollection of putting her signature to the document, she did not feel justified in insisting on the charge of forgery.

[Maasdorp, J.: I think she could not have done otherwise, knowing the signature was supported by two or three witnesses.]

William Gray, in reply to Mr. Gardiner, said he informed the defendant in March, 1904, he must have an absolute cession of the bond. He did not know that the bank manager had put on a cession as security. Sometime in September he wanted the defendant to strike out the words "as security," and make it as a complete cession, and sign it along with her husband. The bond was to be ceded as security for Mr. Arderne's promissory note. He would not have advanced Mr. Den Dauw a single penny, except through his wife, who guaranteed it. Mr. Den Dauw was to go to Belgium to get some money left to him by his mother, and witness believed him when he advanced the money to Mrs. Den Dauw for his passage. The advance made to Mrs. Den Dauw on the Ashtead-road property was a personal matter, and not to her in her capacity as holder of her husband's power of attorney. The cash payments were not made to Mrs. Den Dauw on behalf of her salary as a clerk in witness's office, where she received £5 a month, and her tram fares. The £800 bond had nothing to do with the liability in respect of Arderne's promissory note.

Re-examined by Mr. Close: He did not know at the time that there was a second bond in favour of Mr. Arderne; Mr. Den Dauw led him to believe there was not. He lent the money to Mrs. Den Dauw to give to her husband in order that he might go to Belgium.

John Gray, son of the last witness, stated he was present when the arrangement was made about the passing of the bond which was given as cession to his father. There was no question of an advance of money to her husband after the Belgium incident. It was fully understood that the bond was to be an out and out cession when the money was advanced. Mrs. Den Dauw never raised the defence that she raised now that plaintiff had no right to the bond as against the promissory note.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He was present when the memorandum was drawn up, and it was at that time the question came up about putting the Green Point property in her name. In suing by edictal citation, it said that it was suggested to the defendant to cede the bond in September, 1904, but witness thought the suggestion was made in December, 1903, or March, 1904. He told the bank manager that the cession of the bond was an absolute one, and not as security. While he knew that Mrs. Den Dauw was holding her husband's power of attorney the advances were made to her personally, and not in her other capacity.

Frederick William Brooke, manager of the Bank of Africa, Cape Town, stated that in July, 1904, he was at the market branch when some securities were deposited by Grays with him. He wanted to get the cession registered, and on the 16th September the Deeds Office threw it out on account of the words "as security" appearing on the bond.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Witness told Mr. Gray that he would have to have another cession.

Lewis Levin, a prospective purchaser of the property, said that the broker's note showed that the purchase was to be from Mr. Den Dauw.

Mr. Close closed his case.

Mrs. Den Dauw (defendant) stated she was married in England. She came to the Cape in 1897 and had some £500. Her husband had between £300 and £400 of her money, which was used for the purchase of certain ground. She never persuaded her husband to put the bond in her name because he was a spendthrift; it was simply on account of her money advanced. In September, 1903, her husband wanted more money, and it was arranged that Gray should deposit some other securities along with the bond, and get an overdraft. Witness did not agree to be responsible for her husband's passage money. One of the conditions was if she passed the bond for £800 her bond would be returned. It was never understood, although Mr. Gray had repeatedly asked her to do so, that it was an absolute cession. She was not prepared to say that the signature on the bond was a forgery, but she did not remember signing it. When she left the country it was with no intention of evading any liability; she simply left on account of her health. She never agreed to take over her husband's liabilities. She had no knowledge where her husband had gone to. When she went to Europe she left her husband here, and on her return he left the address of P.O., Kimberley, but the letters had been returned.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: She had not a banking account, and that was the reason she passed the bond through Mr. Gray. The bond at length got into her possession, and she was not satisfied with certain signatures on it. Gray asked for it, but as she had not signed it she refused to hand it over. When she left for England she left her address with Mr. Steer. She left the bond with a Mr. Kerr in case of a sale. She could not say why Steer or Kerr refused to answer the letters to Gray's attorneys. She never took away the bond for her husband to sign it.

Alfred S. Kerr, with whom the defendant and her husband lived for a time, stated that when Mrs. Den Dauw went to England the bond was left with him.

Both of the Grays came to him and asked him for the bond, which he refused to give up pending an order of the Court. He did not give her address because the Grays knew the address of her family in England.

Cross-examined: He was positive that the Grays knew where the defendant was.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J., said that in order to determine the questions at issue between the parties it was necessary to determine what took place in June, 1903, when the property was sold by Mr. Den Dauw to Mr. Levin. It was said on the part of the plaintiff that when the sale of the property in question took place between Den Dauw and Levin it was found that some difficulty would stand in the way of passing transfer, because there was a bond on the property in favour of Mr. Arderne. It became therefore necessary to obtain the consent of Mr. Arderne to the transfer taking place, but he refused to give his consent unless his liability was reduced or secured to the extent of £200. In order to overcome that difficulty it was quite clear, there being no contradiction, that Mr. Gray consented to become a party to a promissory note made by Mr. Den Dauw in favour of Mr. Arderne. The liability was taken by himself for the purpose of facilitating transfer. It was natural to suppose that he would require some security for such liability, and it was agreed that the bond to be passed by Levin should be handed to him as security for the liability he undertook. Up to this point there was no dispute as to the facts. Then Mr. Gray said the question arose as to whether the bond should be made in favour of Mr. or Mrs. Den Dauw. Mrs. Den Dauw wished to protect both herself and her husband, because of the latter's spendthrift habits, by getting the bond out of her husband's possession, and having it in her own name. Mr. Gray said he was a consenting party to that as long as it was handed over to him as security for the £200. The conflict on this point was that raised by Mrs. Den Dauw, who said that no question arose as to securing herself with respect to the retention of the bond in her own name, and that she secured the bond by a debt that was due to herself. He quite agreed that if that was so then an important question would be raised as to the liability of Mrs. Den Dauw with regard to her suretyship for her husband, for which she received no benefit. It was therefore important to decide the facts upon this point. There was this conflict between Mr. Gray and Mrs. Den Dauw, and it was very necessary to see what position Mrs. Den Dauw had taken up in this case, in order to decide whether her evidence was quite reliable in the matter. The first defence raised in the case was that her alleged signature was a forgery. That had been withdrawn with an explanation, that even now she was not satisfied that it was hers. He would go no further. He was satisfied that it was hers, and that the signature was made in such a way that she could not have forgotten it. The signature was supposed to have been made in August, 1903.. It was quite possible that if that was all, it might have escaped her memory, because it was a signature in blank, but they found that in August, 1904, the matter was conspicuously brought to her mind, because she was called upon to cancel stamps on a document containing a full cession of the bond as security. That was a circumstance that could not have escaped her memory. Then there was another point. It was undoubtedly a fact that this document was handed to her to submit to her husband to obtain his signature for a full cession. She got the document out of Mr. Gray's hands and took it away, and she now said that she thought she had a perfect right to do as she liked with it, and she cancelled the cession and struck out her own signature and that of her husband. That was most improper conduct. That being so, the question was whether Mr. Gray had not given his evidence in such a manner now as to raise a likelihood or an absolute conviction that it was correct. He found that although the bond was placed in favour of Mrs. Den Dauw's name, it was simply for the purpose of securing both her and her husband, and it was really her husband's property that was given at that time as security for debt due by the husband to Mr. Gray. Up to this point it appears that a contract was entered into between the parties for giving the bond as security. The plaintiff alleged that the position was subsequently altered, and that a further contract was made to the effect that an absolute cession should be passed. The plaintiff stated that this occurred in March. Now, he (his lordship) was rather doubtful at one time whether the question of absolute cession had been raised, until the bank appeared on the scene, but Mrs. Den Dauw admitted that the question was raised, and that she would not consent to it. He was satisfied that if it was raised it was consented to, because the defendant was in some difficulty and required subsequent assistance in financial matters, after her husband left for Europe in a business in which she and her husband were interested. Therefore the Court had to accept Mr. Gray's statement that it was agreed in September to pass an absolute cession. The question was raised as to whether there was power under the English law in the wife to bind herself, but counsel had admitted that under the circumstances during the absence of her husband she had a perfect right to enter into such a contract. The contract was a bona fide one, and it amounted to this. She agreed, instead of giving this bond simply as security for the payment of £200, to give absolute cession of it as payment for £210 due on the promissory note, and further payment of moneys advanced amounting to nearly £300. It had been said that at the time the agreement took place the liability did not amount to £300, and that consequently it was unlikely that a cession would be agreed upon for the payment of a debt of that amount, when it did not exist, but from the accounts he was satisfied that the debt was very nearly £300. There was no doubt that it was agreed that the cession should be out and out. It seemed that in September, 1904, this bond was handed to Mrs. Den Dauw for the purpose of carrying out the subsequent agreement. She received possession of this document, and kept it. She struck out the cession as security. The document was therefore in such a condition that in order to restore the rights to the plaintiffs it would be necessary to have a proper cession executed, and the plaintiffs were entitled to specific performance of their agreement by full cession of the bond. An order would therefore be given in terms of prayers (a) and (b) of the declaration. It appeared that the full debt now due to the plaintiffs amounted to 321 19s. 3d. The Court would therefore give judgment in favour of the plaintiffs for that amount.

Mr. Gardiner said he understood the plaintiff only claimed the £300.

Mr. Close: That is so.

Maasdorp, J.: Then judgment on those terms will be given. The bond will now be handed to the Registrar, and from him to the plaintiff, and defendant is to give full cession of the bond to the plaintiff by noon to-morrow. The defendant is to pay all costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

STERN AND CO. V. HARRIS. { 1905.
Aug. 4th.

This was an action brought by Stern and Co., of Uppington, against Harry Harris, of Capo Town, to recover damages in the sum of £2,000 for an alleged breach of agreement arising out of the purchase by the plaintiff firm of the business formerly carried on by defendant at Upington under the style of Harris Bros.

Plaintiffs' declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are William Stern and Leopold Nussbaum, trading together in partnership at Upington under the style of W. Stern and Co.

2. The defendant Harry Harris now resides in Cape Town, but heretofore, before the 16th day of July, 1900, he carried on business at Upington, under the style of Harris Brothers.

3. On the 16th day of July, 1900, the parties entered into the agreement in writing, whereof a correct copy is hereto annexed, to which the plaintiffs crave leave to refer as though the same were here set forth in full.

4. By the said agreement the plaintiffs purchased, inter alia, for £1,500, the different forms of business, with the goodwill thereof, carried on by the defendant, and the defendant, by clause 5, specially undertook not to start, open, or support any business such as store, shop, bar, liquor, produce, etc., within fifty miles of Upington, in opposition to the plaintiffs.

5. In connection with and as part of the business heretofore carried on by the defendant and purchased by the plaintiffs, he was accustomed to contract for the supply to the Colonial Government of such produce, mealies, oats, oathay, and the like, as was required from time to time and year to year, for the public service in connection with the gaol and in connection with the police engaged in the town of Upington, the district of Gordonia and neighbouring localities, and it was the duty of defendant, in conformity with his said agreement, neither personally nor as a member or partner of any firm to tender or offer to contract for the supply of such produce at or from the town of Upington, or within the radius of fifty miles from the said town.

6. In breach of his duty and acting in concert or partnership with another or others, and using the style of Harris Brothers, the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully in 1903 tendered for and obtained the contract with the Colonial Government for the supply of such produce to the police throughout the district of Gordonia for the year 1903 to 1904, and thereafter in 1904, in like manner, acting with another or others, and again using as aforesaid the style of Harris Brothers, the defendant in breach of his duty wrongfully and unlawfully tendered for and obtained the contract for the like supplies for the town of Upington, the plaintiffs on this occasion being also tenderers, and being successful in obtaining the contract for such supplies for the neighbouring field-cornetcies, but not for the town of Upington.

7. During the year of the contract for police supplies for 1903 to 1904, the defendant by his agents used the town of Upington as a base or central place of business for the distribution of the required produce, and both during that year and since that contract expired he has wrongfully and unlawfully started, opened, and supported a business as a merchant or purveyor of produce within the town and within the radius of fifty miles from the town of Upington.

8. The plaintiffs have sustained serious injury in their business and the goodwill thereof by reason of the wrongful and unlawful acts of the defendant committed as hereinbefore set forth in opposition to them, and the defendant to the detriment of the plaintiffs has made great profits in business out of the contracts aforesaid, which he has wrongfully and unlawfully obtained in violation of his agreement with the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs estimate their damage in the sum of £2,000, and claim accordingly.

Wherefore the plaintiffs pray for judgment for the sum of £2,000 sterling, or for other relief and costs of suit.

Clause 5 of the agreement was in the following terms: The said Harris Bros. and the said Harris undertake not to start, open, or support any business such as store, shop, bar, liquor, produce, etc., within 50 (fifty) miles of Upington, in opposition to the said Wm. Stern and Co.

Defendant, in his plea, said that plaintiffs did not now and had not for some considerable time traded at Upington, or within fifty miles thereof. In January, 1900, his (defendants') business premises were burnt down, and he carried on no business thereafter at Upington, and in July he entered into the said agreement. He had theretofore tendered for the supply to Government of produce, etc., as might be required for the public service in connection with the gaol and police engaged at Upington, and the neighbourhood and such tenders were sometimes accepted, but the defendant said that when the said agreement was entered into he had no contract with the Government. He admitted that in 1903 the firm of Harris Bros., of which he was a member, and which carried on business in Cape Town, sent in a tender to the Colonial Government for the supply of produce to the police throughout the district of Gordonia for the year 1903 to 1904, which tender was accepted by the said Government, and thereafter the said firm, as aforesaid, trading in Cape Town, sent in a tender for the like supplies for the town of Upington, which tender was accepted by the Colonial Government. He denied that that was a breach of the agreement that he entered into with the plaintiffs, or that it was wrongful or unlawful. He said that plaintiffs did not tender for the said supply to the said police in 1903 for the year 1903-4. During the said contract for police supplies the aforesaid firm of Harris Bros. sent the said required and ordered supplies under the said contract with the Government, by rail and otherwise, to Upington, from whence their agent, for that purpose only, sent the various supplies, which arrived at Upington to the outlying stations. Defendant said that neither of the contracts for the supplies for the police in Gordonia and the town of Upington was a breach of the agreement with the plaintiffs. He, therefore, prayed that the claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Plaintiffs, in their replication, admitted that on the 1st September, 1904, they sold their business, but said they continued to carry on business at Upington, especially in the way of purchasing produce and other requisites, to be supplied under contract with the Colonial Government, and the Government of German South-west Africa. They said that the tendering and contracting to supply produce was part of the defendant's business, which they purchased. They admitted that they did not tender for the supplies for 1903-4, but said that they did not see any notices calling for tenders for such contracts. They admitted that defendant carried on business at Cape Town, but said specially that he had carried on business at Upington in respect of the matters complained of in this suit, both personally and by agents, and had not only distributed produce, but had purchased supplies in the neighbourhood of Upington.

Upon this issue was joined.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Russell) for plaintiffs. Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton) for defendant.

Mr. Searle said that since the pleadings were filed, the plaintiffs had discovered, he believed only yesterday (Thursday), that not only did the defendants tender for the 1903-4 contract, but also for the 1902-3 contract, and he applied for an amendment of the declaration accordingly.

Sir H. Juta objected to the amendment asked for, and said that it would raise a point that he had no evidence at present to meet. He added that if it were merely a question of whether the contract with the Government was a breach of the agreement, then that could be discussed without any evidence. That point would decide contracts for 1902-3-4, or any other years.

[Hopley, J.: It almost seems to me that, unless there be a considerable dispute on the facts, the matter might have been settled by a special case.]

Sir H. Juta said that he did not know why an exception was not taken to the plea.

Mr. Searle urged that the amendment to the declaration should be allowed.

Hopley, J., said that the amendment would not be allowed at present, but it would be open to him to allow the amendment at a later stage if he thought no prejudice would accrue to the defendant.

William Stern (one of the plaintiffs) was called, and gave evidence in support of the case set out in the declaration. He spoke of the way in which the prices of produce were forced up in 1903 by reason of the way in which Jacobson bought up the local produce. Witness had as a consequence to send to Port Elizabeth for mealies and bedding. In 1904-5 goods came in direct to the police camp. Witness sold his business in September, 1904, to take effect from November. Robinson and Hugo came into possession in November, 1904. Witness had prepared a schedule showing how his damages were made up. On the 1903 contract he estimated he lost in his trading about £1,000, on account of farmers whom they would have bought mealies from not having traded at his stores.

[Hopley, J.: Why didn't you throw a sprat to catch a herring, and bid higher than Jacobson?]

It would have been too big a loss on the other side. He tendered for forage in 1903 at 45s. per 100 lb. The cost would have been 30s., so that if he had got the contract he would have made 15s. a bag. The profit on 1,000 bags would have been £793 15s. The bags were reckoned at 150 lb. each.

By the Court: He could not say that if Harris had not got the contract he (witness) would have got it. Nobody else seemed to know about it. The contract was let at 60s.

[Hopley, J.: Do you suggest a police scandal commission?—If there were no notices and no other tenders were called, the Government should certainly inquire.]

Sir H. Juta said that, on behalf of the Government, he might say that the contract was advertised.

Mr. Searle said that the contract was not advertised in the "Victoria West Messenger," which was the recognised organ for Government notices in the district of Gordonia.

Witness, replying to the Court, said that he could not have tendered for the contracts in 1903. He tendered to the Kimberley police district later on. As regarded the contract for 1904-5, he obtained the contract for the outstations, but Harris obtained the contract for Upington. Witness tendered for both Upington and the outstations at the same figures, viz., 24s. 6d. for oats, 24s. for oathay, 21s. for mealies, 5s. for bedding, 24s. for bran, per 100 lb. in each case. The margin of profit was very much smaller on the outstation contracts than on the Upington contract in consequence of the cost of transport riding. Witness estimated his damages on the Upington contract at £759 15s., being the difference between the tender prices that he sent in and the cost of the produce landed in Upington. In addition, he claimed damages because he could have bought the mealies and oathay required in Upington, and would have done trade with the farmers which he estimated at £450, yielding a profit of £150. The profit on the out-station contracts would have been very small. He also claimed that he had lost in Upington on the first contract £1,000 worth of trade, on which he estimated the profit at £333.

Cross-examined: He had sold the goodwill for the contracting, general stores, and bottle stores for £250. He denied that he assumed that Government contracting was not included in his contract with Harris. He did not look at the "Government Gazette" at the time of the 1904 contract, and he did not ask the Magistrate or the Quartermaster. That was not because he knew that contracting was not included in the contract between himself and Harris. Henry Harris was not several times at witness's store trying to buy chaff for this very contract.

Re-examined: Harry Harris and Henry Harris were different persons. Henry Harris was brother of Wolf Harris. Henry Harris never told witness that Harry Harris was in the contract.

Thomas Jacobson said he had carried on business at Upington for five years as a general dealer. He knew Harris Bros. He entered into a sub-contract with them in March, 1903, to supply produce to the police.

Hopley, J., said that he proposed to allow the amendment in the declaration asked for by Mr. Searle, and at the conclusion of that day's hearing adjourn the case till Tuesday, thus enabling defendant to prepare to meet any new points.

Sir H. Juta protested, and said that, as he had already pointed out, if the tendering and contracting in 1903-4 were a breach of the agreement, then it would make no difference to the main issue whether there had been this contract in 1902-3.

Hopley, J., said that he would not allow the amendment at present, under the circumstances.

The witness Jacobson said his first agreement with Harris Bros., was that he should supply at 45s. per 100, Harris Bros., to take the difference between that figure and the contract price. Witness afterwards had an agreement with Harris to supply at 40s. per 100. These agreements lasted six months, at the end of which time he became an agent of Harris Bros. at 8s. 6d. per 100 for transport for the first three months, rising to 9s. in the following three months. In March, 1904, Henry Harris came to Upington, and hired witness's store at £10 a month. Witness had then ceased to be agent of Harris Bros. Witness had sold bedding for the police contract to both Harry and Henry Harris. Witness did not tender for the contract in 1903, because he did not see any notices. He had tendered for the contract in 1904, and also in 1905, but had not got the contracts.

Cross-examined: He discussed this police contract with Stern in 1903, when the goods were arriving at his store. Witness and Stern had shops opposite each other. He was certain that Stern knew in 1903 that Harris Bros. had got the contract, and that Harry Harris was Harris Bros.

Hendrik Pieter Steyn, farmer, Upington, said that in the winter of 1903 Jacobson came and told him that he would give 2s. a bag more than any other shopkeeper for mealies that he wanted for Mr. Harris, who had to supply the police at Kenhardt and Upington. Jacobson said that he could tell the other farmers of this offer. Jacobson purchased nearly all the mealies grown that season. It was usual for the farmer to deal with the shopkeeper who bought his produce.

Cross-examined: In the year 1903 he did not sell his mealies to Jacobson, but to his own children. He charged his children £2 a bag.

Jacob Jacobus Hugo, of the firm of Robinson and Hugo, general dealers, Upington, said that he entered into an agreement with Stern that they should join equally in the proceeds of any contract they entered into.

Cross-examined: This arrangement did not refer to the police contract that his firm had taken over from Stern.

Certain Cape Town witnesses remained to be called for the plaintiffs.

Major F. A. Elliott, C.M.P., called for the defendant, said that in 1902 he was Acting Commissioner for Cape Police, District No. 2, at Kimberley. He also occupied that position in 1903. It was customary to send notices to the various districts for supplies. In 1903 a tender by Harris Bros. for supplies to Gordonia was accepted. He did not remember a tender having been sent in by Stern. The notice was inserted in the "Government Gazette." He thought the notice might not have been inserted in the local paper owing to an oversight. When the tender of Harris Bros. was accepted, he did not know anything of Harry Harris; he simply looked to Harris Bros. He remembered having seen Wolf Harris.

Cross-examined: All the tenders in 1902 were rejected, because they were too high. He did not know how many tenders were received. Harris Bros. afterwards sent in a tender for £902 3s. He thought that tender was lower than those that had been received. They looked to the surety attached to the tender. He thought the rejected tenders of 1902 would be obtainable from the office of the Quartermaster of the C.M.P.

Re-examined: After the contracts had been let, the police at Upington were advised who the tenderers were.

Hopley, J., on Mr. Searle's application, allowed the amendment of the declaration already mentioned.

[The case was settled out of Court.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN) and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

COMMISSIONER OF TAXES V. { 1905.
DE BEERS CONSOLIDATED } Aug. 7th.
MINES. " 21st.

Income tax—Share of profits made by a foreign syndicate on diamonds found in this Colony—Sec. 42 of Act 36 of 1904.

The D.B. Diamond Mining Company, carrying on business in this Colony, had arranged to sell their diamonds to a London syndicate, on condition, inter alia, that they should receive a certain percentage of the profits made by the syndicate. Upon this percentage the Colonial Commissioner of Taxes now claimed income tax under Act 36 of 1904.

Held on appeal from the Court of Review, that as the company's share of the profits made by the syndicate was derived from diamonds found in this Colony, Sec. 42 of Act 36 of 1904 was wide enough to cover this, and that it was, therefore, subject to income tax.

This was virtually an appeal (in the form of a special case stated) from a decision of the Court of Review on questions of Income-tax as to the liability of the De Beer's Consolidated Mines to pay Income-tax on a certain share of profits derived by them from the operations of a certain London Syndicate.

The case was stated in the following terms:

1. The De Beers Consolidated Mines, hereinafter called the company, carries on, inter alia, the business of mining in this colony.

2. The company was assessed by the Commissioner of Taxes (hereinafter called the Commissioner) under Act 36 of 1904 for income tax purposes on its general sources of income for the year ending 30th June, 1904.

3. The company objected under section 72 of the said Act to the Commissioner's assessment of £8,135 9s. as income tax in respect of a certain sum of £162,709, this latter sum being an amount received by the company as its share of profits on certain dealings in diamonds hereinafter referred to. The objection was made on the ground that these profits were made in London, and not in this colony. The company did not object to the remainder of the assessment by the Commissioner in respect of the rest of its income, and has paid income tax thereon.

4. The company appealed against the assessment, and on the 6th and 7th March, 1905, the appeal was heard at Kimberley by the Court of Review, constituted under Act 34 of 1904. The appeal was allowed.

5. The Commissioner, being dissatisfied with the decision of the Court of Review, has, under section 74 of Act 36 of 1904, requested that a case be stated for the decision of the Hon. the Supreme Court on the question of law involved in the decision given by the Court of Review.

6. On the 2nd December, 1901, certain persons (hereinafter called the syndicate) entered into an agreement with the company relative to the disposal of the company's diamond output.

7. Clause 1 of the agreement provides as to the purchase of the output for a period ending February, 1902. Clause 12 gives an option to continue the agreement as to the output for the period ending June, 1902; while clauses 15 and 16 give further options for periods extending finally to 30th June, 1906.

8. The agreement was during the year ending 30th June, 1904, of full legal force and effect between the company and the syndicate, in terms of, and to the extent covered by clause 20 thereof, the right of election and option under clause 16 aforesaid having been regularly and duly exercised.

9. Some of the members of the syndicate, with large interests therein, also hold a large number of shares in the company. Some are directors in the company. Mr. Hirschhorn, who is an alternate director of the company with Mr. Beit (who is largely interested in the syndicate), is the valuator, who, acting on behalf of the syndicate, fixes with Mr. Brink (acting for the company) the valuation at which the company actually takes over the diamonds which it purchases.

10. Some of the members of the syndicate were not shareholders of the company.

11. The quantity of diamonds purchased by the syndicate during the year of assessment largely exceeded the minimum provided for under the agreement.

12. The price of the diamonds purchased by the syndicate under the agreement was, during the year in question, arrived at under clause 13 of the agreement. The price was an adjustable one, and the adjustment was made every six months for the ensuing six months.

13. In practice the actual value of and amount to be paid for each parcel of diamonds bought by the syndicate under the agreement was determined by two valuers, one acting for the syndicate and one for the company. There is nothing to show that such price was not the fair market price in the Colony.

14. The syndicate purchased the diamonds as rough diamonds at Kimberley, and the price to be paid for any parcel of diamonds having been ascertained and defined at Kimberley by agreement between the valuers as above mentioned, the syndicate took delivery at Kimberley from the company, making payment there at the price fixed as against the delivery of the diamonds, and the syndicate's insurance of the diamonds took effect on such delivery.

15. No further business in connection with the diamonds was done in the Colony. The syndicate would forward the rough diamonds to London, there re-sort them for the various markets of the world, and sell the diamonds still as rough diamonds, save that occasionally an exceptional stone would be cut.

16. The entire contract for the dealing in the diamonds after delivery to the syndicate was in the hands of the syndicate, and the company had no control of such dealings.

17. The company, however, had, under clauses 10 and 11 of the agreement, in addition to the payments made for the diamonds as aforesaid, a right to a share in the profits made in the dealings of the syndicate with the diamonds after it received delivery thereof. The company was also bound to share in the losses incurred in such dealings.

18. The company, in its books, kept two separate accounts in connection with these diamonds. One account was for the dealings in Kimberley, the other was for the share of the profits received from the syndicate thereafter. In this latter account, the company would enter for each half-year the amount of profit received for such half-year, but there was nothing to ear-mark the profits earned in the half-year as being for the diamonds bought by the syndicate in such half-year.

19. In its annual published profit and loss account, the amounts received on both accounts are brought up under one heading, to wit, the "diamond account," standing at £4,918,567 18s. 5d.

20. The amount received by the company from the syndicate as its share of the profits for the year of assessment (the year ending 30th June, 1904), and included in the sum mentioned in the preceding paragraph, was £162,709—the sum on which the income-tax assessment now in dispute was made, as set out in paragraph 2 hereof.

21. The Commissioner contends: (a) That in its own accounts the company treats the amount received from the syndicate as part of the proceeds of the diamonds produced in the Colony during the year; (b) that, although the sale in Kimberley to the syndicate is an out-and-out one, the price to be paid to the company is not finally fixed until the diamonds have been disposed of by the syndicate; (c) that the wording of clause 10 of the agreement shows conclusively that the additional payments made are portion of the purchase-price for which the company disposes of the diamonds to the syndicate, and therefore that the whole amount received by the company is income derived from the production and disposal of diamonds in this colony, and is liable to taxation.

22. The company contends: (a) That the agreement (annexure "b") is in two parts—one an agreement as to the dealings in Kimberley, the other an agreement in which the company and the syndicate are partners in the dealings in London; (b) as to the dealings in Kimberley, as soon as each parcel of diamonds is definitely taken over, and the fixed, agreed on price paid, and delivery of the parcel taken, a complete out-and-out sale is effected under the agreement, and the transaction in the Colony is finally concluded, the company, as miners, are the sellers, and have no further control over the dealings; (c) the profits made abroad are on a distinct transaction, and form no part of the purchase price, and in law cannot be part of the purchase price, as the price cannot be left open to be determined at indefinite times, and by indefinite persons; (d) the dealings in London are matters only for partnership between company and syndicate, and are not taxable in the Colony.

23. It was admitted for the Commissioner that if profits also on the dealings abroad are not to be treated as deferred payments on account of the purchase by the syndicate in the Colony, such profits are not taxable, as the dealings would then be part of the business carried on outside the Colony.

24. The company did not dispute the correctness of the figures set forth in paragraph 2 hereof.

25. The Court of Review held that the dealings with the diamonds by the syndicate in London must be treated as distinct from the transactions in Kimberley, that the profits received in connection with the syndicate's transactions abroad formed no part of the purchase price, the full amount of which, the Court held, was the amount paid at Kimberley, and that the company was not liable to pay income-tax on such profits.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Nightingale) for the Commissioner of Taxes. Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Phear), for De Beers Company.

Mr. Searle said that this matter came before the Court by way of a special case, stated under section 74 of the Income-tax Act, No. 36, of 1904. The only exception taken by the company was as to the amount of £162,709, being portion of a larger sum of £4,918,567, and upon which amount of £162,709 the income-tax assessed by the Commissioner was £8,135. The amount of £162,709 in question was received in connection with a certain contract entered into at Kimberley between De Beers Company and a certain syndicate. The agreement was that eight firms of diamond buyers contracted with De Beers Company to purchase the diamonds produced up to a certain point. The syndicate of buyers had the option to take all the diamonds produced, but they only bound themselves to take the diamonds up to a certain quantity. De Beers could not sell to anyone else without giving the syndicate the option first upon the same terms upon which anyone else was willing to purchase them, so that the syndicate got the right to the whole quantity. They paid when the agreement started at a certain fixed price for certain classes of stone. This agreement had been carried on from year to year. The important clause of the agreement was the following: 10. In addition to the payment to be made by the syndicate to company pursuant to the preceding clauses, the syndicate shall account for and pay to the company one-half of all net profits that may be made by the syndicate on realisation, or dealing with the said diamonds under this contract as appearing from the said accounts. All risks in the realisation or dealing with the diamonds under the contract shall be on joint account, and borne by the company and the syndicate in equal shares, and the syndicate, whenever it covers any risk, shall cover it on joint account, but the provisions of this clause are subject to the stipulations in the following clause. Counsel went on to say that the sole point in the case was whether the income-tax Court was right, and whether they could possibly distinguish between the two amounts due under this contract. This was not an out-and-out agreement. De Beers would never have entered into this agreement with the syndicate unless they were going to get these profits afterwards. They entered into the agreement with the syndicate in order to keep up the price of diamonds. They got a certain payment down, and they had a certain payment in the future. There was 12 per cent. deducted to be put into the account later on. It was merely a six months' adjustment. It could not for a moment be urged that the payment down was the full amount. The whole arrangement showed that this was merely a provisional payment down of what would be certain to come afterwards, and they said that the rest would come in at the end of six months. If that full amount did not come under the Act, then it was really difficult to see how companies could be got at. It would be a wholly unfair assessment otherwise. It would be unfair to both parties. To say that only the amount paid down should bear income-tax, and not the full amount, would be contrary to the spirit of the Income-tax Act, which was intended to tax sources of wealth in the Colony. Mr. Searle went on to put the case of an ostrich farmer who might send all his feathers for disposal on the London market.

[Hopley, J.: How would you treat a wool farmer who shipped all his wool to London and had it sold there?]

I submit that he could not, by shipping all the valuable clip to London, get out of this tax by the selling of the wool in England. Counsel went on to say that this agreement between De Beers and the syndicate only continued until 1906. If at the end of that time they had shipped all their diamonds to England, as they did formerly, and sold the whole of the diamonds in England, was it to be said that the whole produce of the diamonds would go free of tax because they were sold in England? Surely such an argument would not hold water. The object of the Act was to tax the wealth produced in this country.

[Hopley, J.: You say it is income arising out of trade or business carried on in this colony, whether they sell the produce of that trade in London or anywhere else.]

That is so. Counsel went on to quote from Dowell on income-tax laws in reference to what was called the area of charge. He submitted that the English cases of Colquhoun v. Brooks (14 appeal cases, 493) and Sully v. Attorney-General (5 Erskine and Norman, 511), were not parallel with the present case, because here they were dealing solely with one business, and the income from that business. Counsel proceeded to refer to the cases of the San Paulo Railway Company v. Carter (1895 appeal cases, Q.B.D., 580), and Denver Hotel Company v. Andrews (11 "Times" Law Reports, 238). In those cases it was held that where a business was partly carried on in England income-tax was payable on the whole of the income. The case of Kodak v. Clarke (vol. 2, 1902, Law Reports, K.B.D., 450), referred to in the Court below, did not, counsel submitted, bear on the present case. He submitted that none of the English cases laid down any principle which could be said to help the respondents. The matter was clear under our own Act, and, he submitted, should be decided under our own Act.

Sir H. Juta said that this was a special case under our Acts. What his learned friend had been arguing was not a special case at all. The case put before their lordships by the commissioner was this, that there was an out and out sale of these diamonds at Kimberley, and it was admitted by the Government—and it was part of this case—that unless the share of the profits obtained in England should be deemed to be part of the purchase price of the sale here in the Colony the Government had no case. So that their lordships had not to enter into these new questions which his learned friend had raised upon the Income Tax Act; they had only to deal with the case which had been submitted by the commissioners upon the admissions of the Government, and he submitted that by the case which had been stated and by the admissions the Court would be bound. It was found, first of all, by the commissioners, that there was an out-and-out sale. It was admitted by the Government, although the sale in Kimberley to the syndicate was an out-and-out sale, the price to be paid to the company was not finally fixed until the diamonds had been finally disposed of by the syndicate, and his simple submission to their lordships was going to be this, that if there were an out-and-out sale at Kimberley, by our law the price must be fixed. They could not have an out-and-out sale, the price of which was to be determined. Heaven only knew when, by something which was going to happen hereafter, it might be months and months afterwards. As far as the transaction in England was concerned, there was a partnership. It was impossible to conceive a clearer partnership. The parties were to share in the profits and the losses, and no better criterion of what a partnership could be could be brought forward. If there was this partnership in England between De Beers and the syndicate, then the sale to the syndicate could only be a sale in Kimberley, and could not be a transaction that took place in England, which was a partnership transaction between two parties. How else could there be an out-and-out sale to the syndicate in Kimberley. That was what the case was founded on, and that was the admission. It was impossible to say that the partnership sale in England constituted portion of the sale in Kimberley. Supposing that the sale to the syndicate was whatever was obtained from the diamonds over and above the valuation placed on them in Kimberley. If that was so, then where did the partnership transaction come in by which De Beers had a share in the losses. His learned friend had not explained what became of that portion of the agreement by which De Beers became the partners of the syndicate. Supposing that the two persons shared in the profits, and in the losses a very inconvenient state of affairs would arise. Supposing that in the year 1904 a certain number of diamonds were purchased by the syndicate, and disposed of in England at a profit, according to his learned friend, De Beers would have to pay on that. Supposing the realisation of these diamonds did not take place for 18 months, and there was a heavy loss on the surplus, how would that be adjusted with the Government. That loss would be a loss on the trading of 1905. In 1904, there was a sale. If that was a trading under the terms of the Act, then if that sale had a profit, De Beers would have to pay for it. It could not be ascertained until 1906 whether there was a profit or loss on that transaction.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Do you say that this £160,000 is on the trading of 1904?]

Sir H. Juta: No. Continuing, he said that what he held was that until 1906 they could not tell whether there was a profit or a loss on the whole transaction. Supposing that during 1904 portion of these diamonds were sold at a profit, De Beers had to pay income tax on them, and supposing that in 1906 it was found that on the whole thing there was a loss the Government would not pay back to De Beers what had been paid. They held that there was an out-and-out sale of diamonds at Kimberley. His argument of the sale was that it was finished and agreed upon in Kimberley, and that it did not go further. There was a sale to the syndicate in this colony, and if De Beers went into partnership with somebody in England, with regard to that they had nothing to pay. According to the agreement the syndicate had the full control of everything that had to be done with regard to the diamonds in England. If there was a sale to this syndicate, and there was another persona which dealt with these diamonds in England, the Commissioner of Taxes, who knew his business exceedingly well, knew that they would not be entitled to claim on these diamonds sold in England.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: All through the point that recurs to my mind is, is not this part of the sale price in Kimberley? If the De Beers Company had absolutely nothing to do with the profits realised from the sale of diamonds, of course, the syndicate that bought the diamonds in Kimberley would not be liable to income-tax here.]

The persona who dealt with the diamonds in London was not the same persona as the one in Kimberley. The one persona was De Beers, and the other was the syndicate, whereas the sales which were made in England were made on behalf of a persona consisting of De Beers and the syndicate. The sale took place in London by an entirely different persona. If this was only one transaction, and the transaction in England was part of the trading in this colony, then the syndicate must be liable for income-tax. But there was no machinery for such a state of affairs, and the want of machinery was pointed out in one of the cases to which he had referred as showing that the Act could not be intended to apply to such a state of affairs in this country. There was no means by which we made the syndicate liable to income-tax in this country. The only person who could fix the price of diamonds was the syndicate, and the vendor was, so far as London was concerned, absolutely helpless as to the fixing of the price. It was a fluctuating price at the will of the purchaser. Counsel went on to refer to the case of the Bartolomy Brewing Co. (1893, Q.B.D., vol. 2), and, in closing, submitted that the sale was one at Kimberley, and the only price at which their lordships could arrive at was the price there fixed upon and determined.

Mr. Searle, in replying, said that the case of Bartolomy had clearly been overruled. The principle which was contended for by De Beers was subversive of the whole Act, and they would be able to say if that principle were correct they could drive a coach and six through the Act. It would deprive the Government of a large part of its revenue if a firm could use a device such as was contended for in this case. He did not say that this was a device by De Beers to evade payment of income-tax, because the arrangement was entered into long before the Income-tax was passed. He pointed out that the Colonial Act was wider than the English Act. There was no section in the English Act exactly the same as sub-sections 3 and 4 of section 50 of the Colonial Act. He submitted that this was merely a deferred payment under the contract, as contended for by the Commissioner. It was impossible to distinguish between the two amounts in Kimberley and London. On the ground of trading, according to the principles of the English cases, the company would be liable to tax on this amount of £8,000 odd. He added that it did not seem to him that the case of De Beers v. Surveyor of Taxes, recently decided in England, had any bearing on the present case. He also quoted from Murray and Carter's Income-tax guide.

Hopley, J., remarked that by the recent case decided in England the unfortunate De Beer shareholders who resided in the Cape Colony had got to pay income-tax twice.

Sir H. Juta: On the bulk. We are trying to save a small portion of it.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (August 21).

Buchanan, A. C. J.: This is in the nature of an appeal from the decision of the Court of Review appointed under the provisions of the Additional Taxation Act, No. 36, 1904. The Commissioner of Taxes had assessed the respondent company, inter alia in the sum of £8,135 9s., as income tax payable in respect of certain £162,709 received by them as their share of profits on certain dealings in diamonds in London. The Court of Review discharged this assessment, whereupon the Commissioner applied, under the 74th section of the Act, to have a case submitted for the decision of the Supreme Court. All material facts have been clearly set forth in the statement of case which has been filed, and in the documents annexed thereto. From these it appears that the respondent company carry on the business of diamond-mining within the Colony. The report and balance-sheets of the company showed the amount realised on their diamond account during the period covered by the assessment, the whole of the receipts being lumped in one item, and in this amount was included the £162,709 in question. No objection was taken to the rest of the assessment, but exemption was claimed for this £162,709 on the ground that it had been received from a certain syndicate as the company's share of the profits made by the syndicate on certain dealings in London. It was contended that these were not gains derived in the Colony, and therefore were not taxable here. The company relied upon the written agreement annexed to the statement of case, which had been entered into in London between the company and a syndicate of diamond merchants. The agreement was a lengthy one. The first clause indicated the object of the contract as it commences by saying that the company shall sell, and the syndicate shall purchase, the output of rough diamonds as it is produced by the Company. The agreement dealt with a number of subjects, such as the classification and valuation of these diamonds, the minimum quantity the syndicate was required to take monthly, the proportions of stones to be taken from one or other of the company's mines, and similar matters which do not enter into this case, and need not be further referred to. The 4th clause stipulated that delivery of the diamonds should be made at Kimberley against cash, and subsequent clauses provided for the manner in which what is called the purchase price was to be determined. The 9th clause required the syndicate to keep in London proper books and accounts of all their transactions relating to the diamonds purchased from the company, which books and accounts were to be open to the inspection of the auditors of the company. Then came the 10th clause, upon which the contention of the company was mainly based. It reads as follows: "In addition to the payments to be made by the syndicate to the company pursuant to the preceding clauses, the syndicate shall account for and pay to the company one-half of all net profits that may be made by the syndicate on realisation or dealing with the said diamonds under this contract, as appearing from the said accounts. All risks in the realisation or dealing with the diamonds under the contract shall be on joint account, and borne by the company and the syndicate, in equal shares, and the syndicate, whenever it covers any risk, shall cover it on joint account." The contract then provided how the accounts were to be kept, and what charges were to be allowed before profits were taken. Subsequent clauses gave the syndicate the right of pre-emption over the whole output of the company. Upon these provisions it was argued for the company that the agreement should be read as containing two separate contracts, the first for an out-and-out sale of the diamonds when delivered at Kimberley and the price paid; and the second a contract of partnership between the company and the syndicate to carry on a venture in London in dealing with these diamonds, as distinct from the company's business in this Colony as miners; and this view was taken by the Court of Review. A clause in the statement of case was much relied upon in argument as being an admission on the part of the Commissioner, that if the profits on the dealings abroad were not to be treated as deferred payments on account of the purchases by the syndicate, such profits were not taxable, as they would then be derived and form part of a business carried on outside the Colony. While recognising that the decision of the Court must be restricted to the issues raised in the special case, it may be pointed out that this clause does not contain any statement of fact, but rather a conclusion of law drawn from the facts of the case by the Commissioner, it stands much in the same position as the paragraph which contains the contentions of the Commissioner, and which was also relied upon as admitting that the transaction in Kimberley constituted a completed sale and purchase. True, the Commissioner in this paragraph, setting forth his contention, speaks of an "out-and-out sale," but he goes on to say that the price to be paid was not finally fixed until the diamonds had been disposed of by the syndicate. Neither of these paragraphs of the statement of case, in my opinion, preclude us from drawing our own conclusion from the facts put before the Court. On the partnership question, it was argued that the company which carried on the mining business in the Colony was a distinct persona from the confederation of diamond dealers in London, the persona of which was the syndicate plus the company. I fail, however, to find sufficient ground in the contract to justify the finding that the company and the syndicate ever intended or desired at any time to amalgamate themselves into one body. On the contrary, I think that all through the agreement the company and the syndicate intended to keep themselves, and did keep themselves distinct. The elaborate document begins by calling itself a memorandum of agreement between the De Beers Consolidated Mines, Limited, called "the company," of the first part, and a number of merchants who are named, called "the syndicate," of the second part; and then goes on to say that it is agreed between these respective parties, the one to sell, and the other to purchase the property in question. There is nowhere any expression of an intention to create a partnership. On the contrary, it is significant of the absence of any such intention that provision is made, in case of a European war, that the syndicate should no longer be bound to continue its purchases, but that it might act as the agent of the company to sell the diamonds on commission. Neither do the usual consequences of a partnership result from the contract. If, as is contended, there was an absolute sale, and the property in the diamonds passed to the syndicate upon the delivery and payment of the price determined by the valuers at Kimberley, there was no subsequent contribution by the company to the common stock of either property or of services. The syndicate was given the sole control of the realisation of the diamonds, the company having no say therein. The company could not as a partner bind the syndicate in any way. Indeed, if this agreement was anything more than a contract of sale and purchase, it might better be argued that it created the relationship of factor and principal rather than that of co-partners. It was contended that the agreement could not be held to be only a contract of sale, because no definite price was fixed for the diamonds sold. Our law undoubtedly requires in a contract of sale that the price should be certum, but this requirement of definiteness may be either per se, or by relation to some condition by which a definite price was ascertainable. The clauses to which I have referred provide the means of determining the price to be paid for the property sold. A portion of the price was to be ascertained by valuation, and, as the 10th clause provides, "in addition" to the valuation the balance was to be ascertained from the result of the dealings of the syndicate. On the resale in the diamond market the adjustment of the price to be paid for the diamonds became a simple matter of account. Taken as a whole I think it is clear that the object of the contract was the realisation of the diamonds won by the company to the best advantage. The business of diamond-mining was one of a very special character, and required special arrangements to be made to realise the property acquired. This realisation could probably best be effected with the assistance of others. But, however, the legal relationship of the parties might be described as far as the liability to taxation was concerned, part of the proceeds received by the company for their property was the share of profits accruing from the retail of the diamonds to smaller dealers. These profits were directly derived from the diamonds produced in this colony. These profits were remitted to the company in this colony, and were taken into the general account upon which the company ascertained the result of its transactions and declared the dividends payable to its shareholders. If instead of a profit the realisation resulted in a loss, it would proportionately decrease any amount available for dividends. Now the 50th section of the Act No. 36, 1904, imposes a graduated tax in sub-section (1) upon income arising or accruing to any person (and by the interpretation clause a "person" includes a company) wheresoever residing, from any trade of whatsoever nature carried on in this colony, whether the same be carried on by such person or on his behalf wholly or in part by any other person; and in sub-section (4) upon income derived by any person from any source whatever within this colony. By section 42 "income" is defined as meaning "any gains or profits derived or received by any company or persons in any year or by any means from any source within the Colony," and includes "all profits derived from mining or quarrying." The English decisions to which we have been referred cannot, unfortunately, afford much assistance in determining the question before us, owing to the different phraseology of our Act and of the English Statute. While our law limits taxable income to gains from a source within the Colony, 16 and 17 Vic. c. 34, schedule D, extends the English tax to gains accruing to residents from property or employment whether in the United Kingdom or elsewhere. Admitting that in a taxing measure like the Act before us, it must be clear that a charge is imposed on the taxpayer by the language of the statute, I think the intention of the legislature to render liable to duty such receipts as are in question in this case, is sufficiently expressed. These receipts are part of the company's income, derived from a source within this Colony, and to realise that income, it is immaterial whether or not the business of the company be wholly or in part carried on by any other person than the company itself. I am of opinion, therefore, that decision of the Court of Review cannot be supported, and that the assessment, as originally made by the Commissioner, must be sustained. As to costs, I think that as far as the proceedings in this Court are concerned, they are in the discretion of the Court. The 73rd Section of the Act provides that the Review Court may only make an order as to costs when the claim of the Commissioner shall be held to be unreasonable, or the grounds of appeal therefrom to be frivolous. The issue in this case was a fair one to be argued, and we may well follow the line indicated by this section, and make no order as to costs.

Hopley, J.: For the purpose of the matter with which this Court has to deal, the facts are sufficiently set forth in the first twenty paragraphs of the special case submitted by the President of the Court of Review. That Court decided that the agreement of 1901, and the practice of the parties thereto, constituted two separate businesses, or divisible sets of transactions, of which the one was purely a sale and purchase in this Colony of the company's output of diamonds in such quantities as they had won month by month, or week by week, which transaction was completed when the diamonds were delivered to the syndicate at Kimberley, and when the syndicate had paid the price fixed by the valuers at Kimberley, which price was determined and fixed for each parcel, according to the qualities of the stones of which it was made up on the lines laid down in the agreement. Upon such conclusion of the first portion of the bargain, the Court held that the parties then entered upon its second branch, which was a partnership carried on abroad for the resale of these same diamonds: and the Court held that the profits made, or the losses incurred in the course of such branch of the business, did not proceed from any source within this Colony, and were consequently not liable to assessment as income in terms of Act 36, 1904. Now, the contract between the parties is complete and binding when on the stipulated date, which I take to be the 20th of June, or of December, during the continuance of the contract, the syndicate signify that they have elected to continue it for another six months. At such time they contract to purchase from the company, who are bound under the agreement to sell to them, the whole of the production of diamonds for the ensuing six months. When the contract is thus concluded the exact thing bought has not yet been disclosed or ascertained; but it is certain in the ordinary course of events to be ascertained; and the exact price to be paid, which cannot possibly be stated when the contract is made, will, by following the directions and methods laid down in the agreement, also become certain in an inevitable way. The procedure is that experts separate each parcel of diamonds as it is produced from the mines into the various classes known to the trade and place upon them, class by class, their values as directed by clause 13 of the agreement. When this process had been gone through, as prescribed, the diamonds are in terms of the agreement handed over in Kimberley to the syndicate, who thereupon hand over the amount of money arrived at by the valuation made as above stated. It is, however, quite clear, that when the company so part with their diamonds, they have not then received the final pecuniary settlement which they expect, and which their contract exacts in respect of the goods so handed over by them. The agreement distinctly sets forth that the price paid in Kimberley is not the final reckoning in the matter. At that stage the company have parted with the possession, and with the control as to the disposal of the diamonds; but their rights in respect thereof are by no means extinct, and do not expire until the goods are realised and until the annual audit and adjustment of accounts disclose how the syndicate have fared in their dealings therewith and until payments of the amounts so shewn to be due have been made. If a profit is disclosed one half thereof is to be paid over to the company "in addition to the payments" theretofore made in Kimberley. Should there be no profit or one not amounting to 5 per cent. then no additional payments are to be made; and in the unlikely but still conceivable event of a loss in any year then the company is to bear half thereof. The entire contract seems to me indivisible, and in whatever way I view the matter it appears to amount to no more and no less than a contract of purchase and sale. The whole object of the company is to sell their diamonds, and of the syndicate to buy them. In order to effect this as equitably and as profitably as possible a certain element of risk is undertaken by both parties; but when all the risks are past and all the transactions and expenses incidental to realisation are accounted for, the final sum of money which reaches the company's coffers—being the money paid in Kimberley either added to by subsequent profits or diminished by losses—still seems to me to be the price for which the company agree to part with the ownership of their diamonds and which the syndicate agree to pay for obtaining them. The dealings for the year under review in the present case showed a large profit to the Syndicate, and in terms of the agreement £169,709 were paid over to the company in addition to the payments previously made in Kimberley, which amount the company in their annual statement of accounts properly included in the total sum of money received by them on account of their sales of diamonds. Whatever intermediate steps there may have been, such a sum of money when received is clearly a portion of the profits made by the company from mining in this colony, it comes from a source and flows out of a business carried on in this colony, and is assessable as income within the true scope and intendment of Act 36, 1904. I am, therefore, of opinion that the contention of the Commissioner of Taxes should prevail, and that our judgment should be in his favour.

This was an action brought by Abraham Pieter de Villiers, of Richmond, as sole trustee in the insolvent estate of Gilham van Niekerk, against Wm. Sandilands, farmer, late of Rietvlei, in the division of Richmond, to have certain proof of debt amended and declared concurrent.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that in the month of August, 1904, insolvent entered into an agreement with the defendant, whereunder the defendant agreed to receive and to keep upon his farm 300 ewes, the property of the insolvent, on condition that the wool and increase of the same should be divided in equal shares between insolvent and defendant, the agreement to last for three years. There were actually delivered by the insolvent to defendant 291 ewes. Defendant advanced certain sums of money to plaintiff. Insolvent subsequently surrendered his estate, and defendant thereupon set up a preferent claim in respect of the said stock, and claimed for £342 10s. preferently in the insolvent estate, alleging that he held the stock and their increase as security for the said claim. Thereafter the defendant delivered up the said stock without prejudice to his claim to a preference. The trustee moved this Honourable Court to have the defendant's claim, which had been admitted as preferent by the Magistrate, reduced to a concurrent claim, on the ground that defendant had no pledge of the said stock, but this Court refused such application, applicant to proceed by action if so advised. Plaintiff claimed (a) that the defendant's proof of debt be reduced to a sum of £320, and be declared to be a concurrent claim; (b) that the defendant be declared to have no pledge over the said stock, but that the plaintiff be declared entitled to sell the same for the benefit of the general body of creditors; (c) alternative relief; and (d) costs of suit. As an alternative to the foregoing, plaintiff said that the alleged pledge should be set aside, inasmuch as at the date of the pledge the insolvent contemplated insolvency, and by the said pledge intended to prefer defendant over and above his other creditors.

Defendant, in his plea, said that the stock remained in his possession, pledged as security under an agreement, in consideration of the defendant lending to the plaintiff a sum of £300 until March, 1905, defendant further to pay a sum of £22 10s. interest. He also lent insolvent a sum of £22. Alternatively, he denied that at the time of the said pledging of the stock insolvent contemplated insolvency or intended to prefer him, and specially said that the pledge was duly and lawfully effected, and was bona fide and for valuable consideration. He prayed that the claim should be dismissed, with costs.

Plaintiff's replication was general.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) was for the plaintiff; Mr. McGregor was for defendant.

Mr. Close said that the plaintiff's position was that the money was advanced to insolvent as a loan out and out, and that the reason why the sheep came into the possession of the defendant on a sheep lease was that, about the same time, they were negotiating for a loan. Insolvent gave defendant an acknowledgment of indebtedness for £300. The plaintiff was prepared to admit that the amount of indebtedness was £342 10s., as stated by defendant, instead of £322 10s., as set out in the declaration.

Gilham van Niekerk (the insolvent) said that in July, August, and September, 1904, he had transactions with the defendant about sheep, goats, and money. Witness had a farm on lease, and had 900 sheep. He was a speculator. In July, 1904, he had a transaction with one Jacobs, and after that Sandilands came to see him about his sheep, asking him if he would bring him sheep and goats. He let Jacobs have 600 goats on the "halves." He had received £400 from Jacobs on loan. He also gave Jacobs a promissory note for £420 or £450. Witness had paid off £100 of the loan. Sandilands wanted to make a similar arrangement with him, offering to lend him £300, on condition that witness let him have 50 sheep and 250 goats on the "halves." The agreement was made in July or August, 1904. About eight days after the delivery of the sheep he received £100 from Sandilands; about a fortnight later he delivered 250 goats to the defendant, and signed a document (produced). He received £200 from Sandilands between a fortnight and a month afterwards, signing a promissory note subsequently. On the 22nd November, 1904, he drew up his schedules for the surrender of his estate as insolvent, final sequestration being granted on the 10th December, 1904. In his arrangements with Mr. Sandilands he at no time promised to give him the stock as security for the loan. Witness first heard that Sandilands wanted the stock as security about a month after he had surrendered his estate. Sandilands said that he must not allow him to suffer because he had surrendered his estate, and that he must say he handed over the stock to him as security. Witness did not intend Sandilands to suffer. He believed that the actual number of goats and sheep handed over to Sandilands was about 285.

Mr. Close (in answer to His Lordship) said that about 300 head of stock had since been handed back to the trustee and sold.

Maasdorp, J., said that if the document signed by the insolvent was an agreement to let Sandilands have the stock on the "halves," he would be entitled to retain some of the stock. The document produced did not contain all the conditions of an ordinary sheep case.

Witness (in further evidence) said that he never sold the stock to Sandilands. He had some doubt about bringing up the 300 head of stock in his schedules; he went to see Mr. Paul to ask him if he would be allowed to bring up the sheep in his schedules, because he was afraid that he might get into trouble. He had given over the stock on the "halves" for a period of three years, and he was in some doubt whether he could have them back in a shorter time. About March, 1905, Sandilands and his brother came to see witness about the proceedings which were pending. David Sandilands said that he must not allow him to suffer any loss, and he must say that he had pledged the stock with defendant.

[Maasdorp, J.: When was the lease up?]

Mr. Close: It is not up yet.

[Maasdorp, J.: Then what right has plaintiff to take these sheep away?]

Mr. Close: The position is that defendants may claim possession of the sheep in one of two ways. He may claim under the contract possession as lessee. According to his own account, which we deny, he is entitled to claim as pledgee. He elects to claim as pledgee, and that is the case we are now meeting.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that the document (produced) showing his affairs in August and September, 1904, was correct. If he had been sued at the time he made the arrangement with Sandilands he would not have been able to pay.

Abraham P. de Villiers (the plaintiff) said that he knew nothing about any pledge with Sandilands at the time insolvent surrendered his estate. The so-called pledge was first brought under his notice by the proof of debt handed in by Sandilands' attorney at the second meeting. The stock was recovered from the defendant and sold by auction, realising, less expenses, £135.

By the Court: He sold the stock with the consent of the defendant.

Johannes H. Viljoen, clerk in the plaintiff's office, said that in March last defendant stopped him and said that he had taken the goats from the plaintiff, and that they were on the "halves."

Barend Jacobus Burgers, farmer, Richmond, said that Sandilands, after he had brought the goats on the farm, admitted to him that he had got the goats and sheep on the "halves." Sandilands first told him that he had bought the goats, and that he had lent Van Niekerk £300. Sandilands did not mention anything about the stock having been pledged to him.

William Sandilands (the defendant) said that he bought 52 Cape sheep from insolvent, and paid him 25s. each for them, making £65. He gave Van Niekerk £100 about a month after he had bought the stock. Van Niekerk was to bring him goats for the balance of £35; he had to bring witness 300 goats. Insolvent later on brought him 252 goats, for which he agreed to give him prices which came out to close upon £230. Witness gave Van Niekerk £200 for the second lot of goats. When he commenced shearing he noticed that the goats were in bad condition. He called Van Niekerk's attention to the goats, and it was agreed that the sale should be cancelled, and that Van Niekerk should bring him better goats in the month of March, and that the money should be returned in that month. A contract for the sheep and an acknowledgment of debt for £322 10s. were written out by witness's sister-in-law, and signed by Van Niekerk. Witness asked Van Niekerk what about a surety. Van Niekerk said, "Aren't the goats good enough?" Witness said that they were. He denied that he had told the witnesses for the plaintiff that he had not got the stock as a pledge.

Cross-examined: He did not have the security of the sheep set out in writing, because he did not think it was necessary, and he thought he was dealing with a honest man.

Johanna Jacoba Sandilands, wife of David Sandilands (defendant's brother), said that she wrote out the contract at Van Niekerk's dictation. She also wrote out the acknowledgment of debt on the same afternoon.

David Petrus Sandilands (brother of the defendant) said that, after the sale of the animals had been cancelled, it was arranged that the defendant should keep the goats on the "halves" until March, when Van Niekerk was to take back the old goats and replace them with young and better goats that defendant was to retain for a period of three years.

By the Court: Van Niekerk said that he would leave the goats there as security until he got fresh goats for defendant in March.

Carl Lodewicus Paul, attorney, practising at Richmond, also gave evidence.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

Mr. Close (in answer to his lordship) said the insolvent stated that he agreed to pay £22 10s. interest every six months upon the loan of £300, working out at 15 per cent. per annum.

Mr. McGregor having been heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J., said that Sandilands, having set up an express contract under which he claimed a preference for his debt of £342 10s., the burden of proof fell upon him to establish that contract, and if he failed to do so, then the Court would have to hold that the pledge did not exist. He (the learned Judge) must admit that this case was not free from difficulty in respect of the facts which had been brought out in the evidence, and if, in the difficulty created, any doubt existed in his mind as to whether this contract of pledge was ever entered into, then necessarily Sandilands, upon whom the burden of proof fell, must fail. In reviewing the evidence his lordship remarked that the first doubt which crossed his mind in connection with the testimony of Sandilands, was in respect of the alleged payment of £300 as the purchase price of stock not valued at £300. Again, he did not believe that a sale which was said to have been entered into would have been so readily set aside, as it was alleged to have been afterwards when it was found that certain of the goats were old and poor. Under all the circumstances, he was inclined to accept Van Niekerk's evidence that from the very first it was a loan, and that from the first the goats were handed to Sandilands on lease. The whole evidence of a pledge given by Sandilands consisted of some casual remarks which passed between him and Van Niekerk. He had come to the conclusion that a sale had not been proved, and as the evidence of Sandilands was not reliable on the other matters, he could not accept it with respect to the pledge. He had come to the conclusion that this pledge had not been proved. In regard to the alternative claim, it was not necessary really to deal with it now, but in view of any questions which might possibly arise hereafter, he found that there was no contemplation of insolvency on the part of Van Niekerk when the transaction took place. The Court would declare that Sandilands was entitled to prove for the amount of his claim as a concurrent claim, but not as a preferent claim. One must, he added, sympathise with Mr. Sandilands upon the loss of his money, but he entered into a foolish arrangement with Van Niekerk. Defendant must pay costs of the action, and proceedings on motion, the trustee to be allowed his expenses as a necessary witness.

Act 10 of 1895, Sec. 3—Smelting pot.

To be in possession of any implement capable of being used for melting or defacing metals, without permission in writing from the R.M., exposes any person to a conviction under Sec. 3 of Act 10 of 1895, provided there is reasonable evidence that the implement was used for such purposes.

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.A.R.M., of Cape Town, by which the appellant, a second-hand goods dealer, was sentenced, under section 3, of Act 10, of 1895, to three months' imprisonment, with hard labour, for keeping on his premises without a permit from the Magistrate a smelting pot for defacing gold, silver, and other metals. Mr. Alexander was for the appellant, and Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown. The appeal was instituted on the ground that the conviction was not supported by the evidence, and not in accordance with real and substantial justice. Counsel having been heard in argument, Hopley, J.: In this case the appellant is charged with contravening the 3rd section of the Second-Hand Goods Dealers' Act of 1895; in that he kept, or knowingly permitted to be on his premises without a permit in writing from the Magistrate a smelting pot or implement for altering or melting gold, silver, lead, or other metals. Now, it is argued that I must restrict the interpretation of that section to a smelting pot and nothing else, but it does not seem to me that the section is so narrow in its meaning or operation. I think that if a person uses or keeps a smelting pot, or has any other implement for melting or altering or defacing these metals, he would be contravening this section, and that is what the Crown says the appellant was possessed of. He had a thing which is not very uncommon, an old oil drum, ventilated with holes, and so cut as to make it capable of being used as a stove, with a strong draft, and the Crown says that he used it for the purpose of melting lead or other metals. That it was actually used for the purpose of changing metals is amply proved, as he was actually seen to be doing something of the sort. He had a fire, and was holding a tin over it, which he said he was cleaning. There was a fire, and it was not alleged that he was cooking anything, and it is further proved there was metallic wire and molten lead in this stove or implement. Therefore, the Magistrate came to the conclusion that he kept the implement for melting lead or other metals, and I cannot say that the Magistrate was wrong, and the sentence must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed.

Landlord—Agent with power of attorney—Divisional Council—Sanitation—Nuisance—Act 23 of 1897, Sec. 50.

One A. had built some 20 cottages on his property, which was not within a municipal boundary, for none of which he had provided sanitary accommodation. He was not resident within the Colony, but had left his power of attorney with F. F. having been summoned in the R.M. Court at the instance of the Divisional Council of W. under Secs. 50 and 51 of Act 23 of 1897, was ordered to provide the accommodation required.

Held on appeal, that as the Divisional Council, as the local authority, had a locus standi in judicio, and that as the absence of the sanitary accommodation demanded led directly to a common nuisance, the appellant was bound to carry out the order of the Court below.

The appeal was from a decision of the A.R.M., Wynberg, by which the appellant was fined in one shilling for failing to comply with a notice from the Divisional Council to abate a certain nuisance on his property at Diep River.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the appellant, and Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the Crown.

Counsel for the appellant said, although technical objections could be taken to the summons, he would refrain from doing so, as his client wished to have the whole matter thrashed out. His client held a qualified power of attorney over a certain cottage at Diep River, outside the Wynberg Municipality, and had received notice from the Divisional Council to have twenty-four proper sanitary closets with cement floors erected within forty days. The appellant, holding a qualified power of attorney from the owners, in Johannesburg, had no authority to effect the repairs. An exception had been taken that the Divisional Council was not the local authority for the purposes of the section under which the appellant was summoned, and the fine of one shilling was imposed in order that the defendant might appeal. Counsel submitted that Mr. Findlay had no authority to effect repairs. He was not the person who should have been proceeded against.

Sir H. Juta, in reply, said the point was whether the Divisional Council was a local authority, and whether his learned friend was right in saying that the Divisional Council had no right under Act 26 of 1897. He submitted that he was not correct. While, with regard to the other point raised he thought there was no doubt but that Mr. Findlay was liable.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (August 21).

In this case the facts are that the appellant is the agent for the absentee landlord of certain property at Diep River in the Cape Division, situated beyond the boundaries of any municipality or other urban authority. On the land in question there are twenty cottages inhabited by about 130 people. These cottages are let by the appellant for his principals, and he remits the rents to them. By his power of attorney he has the fullest powers of management over the said property, and no point is made in the present case of the fact that he has appointed as his substitute or sub-agent a gentleman in his office, it being admitted that he still has the power to interfere and remedy any evils upon the property in question. For none of these cottages have any closets or sanitary conveniences of any kind been provided, and all the inhabitants use the land surrounding their cottages, especially such parts thereof as are screened by trees or bushes, for their purposes, with the result that such land is extensively littered with human excreta. These excreta are chiefly on the western side of the property, and the slope of the land is such that any drainage from where these deposits are made would find its way into the Diep River, whence the inhabitants of these cottages draw their water supply, and whence other people lower down no doubt also get water to drink. I am satisfied that such a state of things constitutes a danger to public health for the reasons stated in his evidence by Dr. Murray, and that it is a nuisance at common law. I am also satisfied that it is a nuisance for which the appellant is responsible in that by not supplying any conveniences to his tenants he has made it impossible for them to behave in any other way than the one they have adopted, and it must, therefore, be taken to be a nuisance arising or continuing through his default or sufferance. In these circumstances the Cape Divisional Council as the local authority concerned set proceedings in motion under section 50 of Act 23, 1897, requiring appellant to abate the nuisance and to provide a proper closet for every cottage. The appellant having failed to take any steps the Divisional Council proceeded to complain against the appellant before the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg, who thereupon issued a summons in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 51 of the said Act. The Magistrate found the charge proved, and imposed a nominal fine, and issued an order that proper closets should be provided. For the appellant it was argued that the action of the Divisional Council was ultra vires; that they were not the local authority intended to deal with such a matter, which should have been regulated by proper proceedings, as laid down by section 13 of the Act; and that as there had been no proclamation making such acts, or such a state of things as were here complained of, illegal, the Council could not interfere. I am, however, of opinion that no proclamation was necessary to make such a mis-use of proprietary rights illegal wherever it was found to exist. A danger to the public health was thereby set up amounting to a nuisance at common law. As soon as such a nuisance is found to exist the local authority must stop it: and it seems to me quite clear on the proper construction of section 35 of the Act and on the authority of Rex v. Joos (15 C.T.R. 272) that the Divisional Council of the Cape, in whose jurisdiction the land lies, is the only and proper local authority to act in the matter. The part of the case which has given me some trouble is the order that closets should be built for all these cottages. This, in view of the fact that the Divisional Council admittedly has no existing machinery for dealing with sanitary matters of this description, might not have the effect of doing away with the nuisance; for it is obvious that merely building and fitting up the closets will not put a stop to the cause of complaint. It is, however, clear that without such closets no improvement can take place, and it must be left to the Council to see that the closets, when built, are properly and decently used and cleaned. The duty of the appellant, however, is to see that his houses are so constructed that ordinary rules of decency, cleanliness, and health can be observed, and that will be done by his carrying out the order made. The appeal must be dismissed.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Findlay and Tait.]

Ex parte LOUBSER

Mr. Alexander applied as a matter of urgency for the transfer of certain property at Somerset West Strand, in the estate of the petitioner's late mother. The urgency arose from the fact that there were creditors to the extent of £12,000, who were pressing. The Master had reported favourably, and the Registrar of Deeds, who reported as well as the Master, stated that an order of Court was necessary. The property, consisting of an hotel and four cottages, was left to the petitioner and his brothers, and by a notarial document petitioner was taking it over at a valuation of £12,000, and paying the debts of the estate.

The petition was granted, the Registrar of Deeds being authorised to pass transfer.

BENEKE AND OTHERS V.	{	1905.
VAN DER VYVER AND		Aug. 9th.
OTHERS.		" 10th.
		Sept. 1st.
		" 4th.

Will, joint—Massing—Debts due to estate.

By a joint will, V. and his wife bequeathed to their daughter A. a life interest in £1,000, with fidei commissum to their other five children and the legitimate issue of these per stirpes. They also bequeathed to these five children certain land, the survivor of the testators to enjoy a life usufruct thereof. After the death of the survivor, each of these heirs was to mortgage his portion for £200 to the said A., the interest to be paid to her half-yearly. The testator and testatrix instituted each other mutually, together with their children, as heirs of the residue of the joint estate. Mrs. V. predeceased her husband, who adiated under the will, and subsequently made a will confirming the bequest of land to his children, but imposing certain conditions not embodied in the original will. There was a bond on the land bequeathed, and it was contended for the plaintiffs that this represented a debt on the joint estate. The defendants contended that it represented the accumulated debts of the plaintiffs.

Held, that as these debts had been taken over by the testator previous to the death of his wife, the mortgage must be regarded as a burden on the joint estate, and that the legatees were entitled to the farms free of mortgage.

Held further, that a debt incurred in respect of a sum of money paid for stock for one of the sons must be regarded as an asset of the joint estate; and that the executrix must pay costs.

This was an action brought by Johanna Louisa Petronella Beneke, Maria Gertruida van der Vyver, Jan Abraham van der Vyver, and Isaac Johannes van der Vyver, all children of the late Isaac Johannes van der Vyver, of Riversdale and his predeceased spouse, against Josina Frederika Petronella van der Vyver, individually, and in her capacity as executrix testamentary of the estate of the late Isaac Johannes van der Vyver and Jacobus Frederik Badenhorst, in his capacity as executor dativo in the estate of the late Anna Christina van der Vyver, predeceased spouse of the said Isaac Johannes. Plaintiffs claimed an account of the joint estate of Isaac Johannes van der Vyver and his predeceased spouse. The first defendant was second wife of Isaac Johannes van der Vyver.

Plaintiffs declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are children of the late Isaac Johannes van der Vyver, of Riversdale, and his predeceased spouse, Anna Christina van der Vyver, hereinafter called the testators. The defendants are the widow (second wife) of the said testator, in her individual capacity and as executrix testamentary of his estate, and Jacobus Frederik Badenhorst in his capacity as executor dativo of the testatrix' estate.

2. On the 18th of November, 1882, the testators, who were married in community, duly executed a joint will, by which, before appointing heirs, the testators bequeathed to their children, the plaintiffs, and one Marta Barendina van der Vyver, after the death of the first-dying, their landed property, Klein Rivier, Annex Klein Rivier, Wegwyzers Rivier, and Groot, alias Zwartjongens Fontein, situated in the district of Riversdale (and in case of predecease of one or more of them, then their lawful descendants by representation), with this provision that the survivor should remain for life in the full and undisturbed possession and usufruct of the said land, and that transfer was not to be given to the said children until after the death of the survivor. The testator appointed his wife and children by this marriage his heirs, and the testatrix appointed the testator and the said children as her heirs in all the estate movable and immovable (save the aforesaid legacies) left at the death of the first dying. They also declared that it was their wish that their whole joint estate should remain in possession of the survivor until his or her death. The rest of the will is not material to this case.

3. The testatrix died in May, 1884, without having revoked the said will, leaving six children—namely, the plaintiffs, Anna Christina, an imbecile, and Marta Barendina, who was married in community to Isaac Frederik Johannes van der Vyver, and died on the 29th January, 1885, without leaving issue.

4. At the death of the testatrix the joint estate, apart from the prælegated land, consisted of bonds and promissory notes due to the estate of the value approximately of £1,450 (in which are included certain debts due to the estate hereinafter mentioned, in amount £1,125), of movables and live-stock of the value of £1,400, and of an erf, No. 4, Block K, in Riversdale. The liabilities of the said joint estate amounted approximately to £717 10s.

5. In order not to disturb the assets of the joint estate, and for the purpose of paying the said debts, it was agreed between the testator and the plaintiffs that they should consent to the land bequeathed to them being mortgaged for £717 10s., and that the testator would thereafter pay off the said mortgage, and thereupon the testator, with the consent of the plaintiffs, mortgaged the said land for £717 10s. by three bonds of £413, 107 10s., and £197. The two latter bonds have been paid off by the testator, but the bond of £413 has not been paid off, and still remains.

6. The testator adiated under the said will, accepted the benefits thereunder, and remained in possession of the joint estate until his death on the 25th August, 1904.

7. (a) On the 9th of January, 1886, the plaintiff J. A. van der Vyver and one J. A. C. van der Vyver passed a bond in favour of the testator of £500, which was cancelled on the 23rd September, 1903, and on the same day the property hypothecated was transferred to the testator for £500, but no money was paid.

(c) On the 31st December, 1885, the plaintiff Isaac J. van der Vyver passed a bond for £300 in favour of the testator, which was cancelled on the 5th of August, 1899, on payment thereof to the testator.

(d) On the 28th January, 1887, M. L. Saaiman passed a bond for £50 in favour of the testator, which was cancelled on the 16th of October, 1899, on payment thereof to the testator.

8. The amounts of £500, £275, £300, and £50, in the preceding paragraph mentioned, were all debts due to the joint estate, and not to the testator alone, and formed part thereof. The land so transferred or land received in lieu thereof is still registered in the testator's name.

9. With the moneys belonging to the joint estate the testator, after the death of the testatrix, bought certain land called Wegwyzershoek, for part of which he subsequently obtained other land.

10. The testator married the first-named defendant in community of property, and on the 8th of July, 1892, they executed a joint will, and thereafter certain codicils. By the said will and codicils the testator purports to confirm the praelegacy of the joint will of November, 1882, on condition that the legatees pay the mortgage thereon, and the testators purport to bequeath the aforesaid erf No. 4, Block K, and the land transferred as set out in paragraph 7, sub-sections (a) and (b), and the land called Wegwyzershoek and the land obtained for part thereof, to their children by the second marriage and to certain grandchildren, and the testator appointed as his heirs the testatrix and his children by his first and his second marriages, and the testatrix appointed as her heirs the testator and her children by a former and by this marriage. By the codicils also certain interests have been bequeathed to the plaintiffs or some of them.

11. The testator at no time has paid or accounted to the plaintiffs for their shares or any part thereof in the said joint estate as the heirs of their mother.

12. The plaintiffs have elected to abide by the terms of the joint will of November, 1882, and have repudiated and given up and surrendered, as they hereby again do, all right, title, or interest under the joint will and codicils of their father and his second wife of the 8th July, 1892, and of subsequent dates.

13. The plaintiffs contend that by virtue of the joint will of their parents and the adiation and acceptance of benefits thereunder by the testator, the latter could not make another will altering or revoking the provisions of the said joint will so far as the said praelegacies of the landed property are concerned; that the debts of the joint estate—to wit, £717 10s.—were payable out of the assets of the joint estate and were not legally payable by the plaintiffs, and that the bond of £413 should be paid out of the said assets or out of the assets belonging to the testator; that the joint estate of their parents as it existed at the death of the testatrix should be ascertained and valued, and that after payment of the debts due by the joint estate, one-half thereof should be divided between the testator and the children of the testators, that in the valuation of the said joint estate the debt due thereto, as set out in paragraph 7, and the land transferred to the testator in settlement thereof shall be taken into account, and further that the land Wegwyzershoek and the Land Annex Klein Rivier, exchanged for a part thereof, shall also be taken into account, and that the Erf No. 4, Block K, also forms part of the joint estate.

Wherefore the plaintiffs claim:

(a) An account of the joint estate (excluding the landed property praelegated of the testators as it existed at the death of their mother on the 30th of May, 1884, and that in the said account the Erf No. 4, Block K, be included, and that the landed property transferred to the testator on the 23rd September, 1903, and 23rd March, 1887, as aforesaid, and the land received in lieu thereof, and the two sums of £300 and £50 received by the testator, as alleged in paragraph 7 of the declaration, be included therein, and that all property, movable and immovable, and the proceeds thereof, in particular the property Wegwyzershoek and the land obtained by the testator for part of the said property be included in such account.

(b) That the bond of £413 shall be paid off out of the assets of the said joint estate or out of the assets of the testator.

(c) That the amount of the bonds paid off—namely, £197, £107 10s.—shall be taken into account as a debt of the said joint estate.

(d) That after deduction of the debts due by the said estate the balance thereof shall be distributed in terms of the said joint will of November, 1882—namely, one-half to be divided into seven parts, and each of the plaintiffs to be paid one such part.

(e) That the land specially praelegated to the plaintiffs by the said joint will shall be transferred to them in terms of the said joint will and without any encumbrances or burdens other than those imposed by the said will.

(f) Alternative relief.

(g) Costs out of the estate of the late Isaac Johannes van der Vyver, the testator.

To this declaration the plaintiff pleaded in the following terms:

Before pleading to the merits of plaintiffs' claim the first-named defendant pleads in abatement as follows:

1. Certain parties mentioned in paragraph 3 of the declaration, to wit, Anna Christina van der Vyver, an imbecile, and Isaac Frederik Johannes van der Vyver, formerly married to Marta Barendina (now deceased), are interested in this suit and should be before the Court.

2. One Joseph Johannes van der Vyver, minor son of the late Isaac Johannes van der Vyver (the testator) by his second marriage with the first-named defendant, is also interested in this suit, and should be joined in the said action.

Wherefore the defendant prays that the said parties be joined by themselves or by a curator ad litem or guardian, as the case may be, or that the said suit be dismissed with costs.

As for a plea to the declaration in case the above plea be overruled, but not otherwise, the defendants say:

1. She admits paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 thereof, save that she says there was no "massing" of the whole of the joint estate, and save that she craves leave to refer to the will when produced for the terms thereof.

2. As to paragraph 4 thereof, she admits that after the testatrix's death there were in the joint estate bonds and promissory notes due to the said estate, and that there was also movable property, but she does not admit that the values thereof were £1,450 and £1,400, as alleged: The Erf No. 4, Block "B" in Riversdale, was not specially bequeathed by the said will: the amount of £717 10s. represented the liability of certain of the heirs to the testator, on account of the debts of the said heirs taken over by him.

5. As to paragraph 5 thereof the defendant says that in order to pay the said debts, the plaintiffs agreed to the testator mortgaging the land praelegated as aforesaid, for the said sum of £717

10s. by three bonds of £413, £107 10s., and £197: the testator during his lifetime paid out his half-share of the joint estate and child's portion bequeathed to him and out of the usufruct so bequeathed, the sums of £167 10s. and £197: but the said sum of £413 was not paid by him and remains a liability of the legatees.

6. She admits paragraphs 6 and 7 thereof, subject to what was stated above as to there being no "massing" of the whole joint estate: under the said will the testator was entitled to one-half of the joint estate and to a child's portion.

7. As to paragraph 8 thereof, she denies that the sums therein mentioned (save the sum of £275) were debts due to the joint estate or formed part thereof: the land acquired by the testator and referred to in paragraph 7 thereof was acquired by him subsequent to the testatrix's death and not out of any assets belonging to plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs have no claim thereto: she admits that the land is still registered in the testator's name, and says that he was entitled to deal with it as he did by his second will.

8. She denies paragraph 9 thereof, and says that the testator raised the money to pay the purchase price of the said land (Wegwyzershoek) to Government, and thereafter repaid it out of his share of the joint estate.

9. She admits paragraph 10 thereof, save that she craves leave to refer to the will and codicils for the terms thereof.

10. As to paragraph 11 thereof, she says that the testator in or about July 31st, 1885, did frame and file with the Master of this Honourable Court a liquidation account, to which she craves leave to refer:—The said account was never disputed by the heirs or legatees under the will, and in or about February 1st, 1889, the legatees consented to the testator mortgaging the property for the payment of the aforesaid debts, and the defendant submits that the plaintiffs are not now entitled to dispute the said account.

11. As to paragraph 12 thereof, she says that no formal deed of repudiation has to her knowledge been entered into by the plaintiffs, and she has had no notice of the same.

12. As to paragraph 13 thereof, she says that the testator has not by subsequent testamentary disposition altered or revoked the first will, so far as the said praelegacies are concerned. The sum of £717 10s., whereof the amount of £413 mentioned is a part, was and is a debt of the plaintiffs; the said sum of £717 10s. having been reduced by payments of £304 10s. made by the testator for the account of the plaintiffs, leaving a sum of £413 still to be paid by the legatees, as provided in the second will, to which defendant craves leave to refer: Save as above, she denies paragraphs 11, 12, and 13.

Wherefore she prays that plaintiffs' claims may be dismissed with costs.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Roux, for plaintiffs. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Van Zyl), for the first defendant. Mr. Du Toit for the second defendant.

Sir H. Juta applied for leave to amend the declaration.

This was granted.

Mr. Du Toit intimated that, on behalf of the second defendant, his instructions were not to participate in the proceedings, but to abide the judgment of the Court.

Jan Abraham Christiaan van der Vyver (one of the plaintiffs) said that he was married in 1868 to one of the daughters of old Mr. Van der Vyver. His mother-in-law died in 1884. At that time there were seventy cattle in the joint estate. Cattle were then selling at £6 each. There were 600 full-grown sheep and 150 small sheep. Full-grown sheep were making 15s. on the average; the lambs 6s. or 7s. There were also 40 goats, the average price of which would be 10s. Mr. Van der Vyver also had ostriches. Ostriches were then dear, and were "booming." He had 60 ostriches, 20 chicks, and two pairs of breeding birds. Chicks a month old were then fetching £10 or £11. His father-in-law sold chickens to Van Wyks at £10. A plucking of three cock birds at that time made about 105. He estimated the value of the 60 ostriches at that time at £30 each. As to the breeding birds, his father-in-law would not have sold them at £100. He had heard of breeding birds making £300 the pair. Witness would have given £200 for "Old Sol and his wife" and £150 for the other pair. There were six horses—three mares worth £7 10s. each and three horses worth £20. There were also carts and wagons and other movables.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: For seven years after his first wife's death the testator carried on farming operations successfully. In 1899, however, things were not going so well. The testator was a particular man in his business transactions relating to promissory notes and so forth.

Willem van Wyk, examined, stated that until about 10 years ago he lived at Kleyn River. Witness was well acquainted with old Mr. Van der Vyver and his wife, and knew his stock fairly well. Witness agreed with the evidence given by the Van der Vyvers on that point. Witness remembered when Mrs. Van der Vyver died. He owed the estate money for ostriches. He paid the amount due (£100) shortly after the death of Mrs. Van der Vyver. Witness gave eight oxen, four cows and a horse in settlement of the account.

In cross-examination by Mr. Searle, witness said he counted Mr. Van der Vyver's stock, because he used to shear for him. Witness could not give the exact number of stock on the farm for any specific year, but there were generally about 600 sheep. The stock owned by the sons used to run with that owned by the father; but the sons each had separate kraals. The sons had no small stock. There were three sons living on the farm. They all had cattle. The cattle and horses were taken in settlement of the account for the ostriches, because witness had not the ready money.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: The stock belonging to the whole family ran together during the day, but when kraaled each lot was separate.

Isaac Frederick van der Vyver, farmer, stated that he married a daughter of Mr. Van der Vyver in August, 1884. Before witness married he lived at Kleyn River. Witness went to live with his father-in-law after the marriage. Witness agreed with the evidence given by the other Van der Vyvers. When Mrs. Van der Vyver died witness owed the estate nothing. Witness's wife died in January, 1895. The father-in-law paid the doctor's fees. Witness recollected in 1889 his father-in-law wanted to mortgage a portion of the farm, and asked the sanction of the children to such a course. He said he did not want to sell his stock, although there was plenty on the land. The house on the place mortgaged was worth about £100. A farmer named Simon was also indebted to the estate. He knew this because Simon told him so, and gave him money to pay the interest.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The amount Simon gave witness to hand to his father-in-law was £50. Mrs. Van der Vyver was at that time quite well. Mr. Van der Vyver paid a bill of £33 for witness. Witness never paid it back.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

For the defence, Mr. Reitz, of the firm of Reitz and Versfeld, stated he knew old Mr. Van der Vyver. In 1889 Mr. Van der Vyver was unable to meet some bills which he owed himself, and some for which he went security for his family. Witness told him the accounts had to be paid, and advised him to mortgage the property, and pay what was owing to the estate. That was agreed to. The liquidation account of that time appeared to be erroneous. Witness pointed out to Mr. Van der Vyver that there would have to be a settlement with the estate. They did not take up the position that they had settled because of the bond they had passed. Witness made it clear to the parties that by signing the consent they were settling their own debts.

In cross-examination witness said it was difficult to remember a conversation that occurred 21 years ago.

Josina Fredrika Petronella van der Vyver, the principal defendant and the executrix testamentary of the estate of the late Isaac Johannes van der Vyver, stated when she was married there were about 450 sheep, 40 head of mixed cattle, 5 horses, and about 50 ostriches on the farm. There were also cattle belonging to the children on the farm. Witness knew nothing of the liquidation account of Mr. Van der Vyver's first wife. After witness married the farming was continued, but it went back during the following years. Her husband was getting feeble, and his eyesight was beginning to fail him. He was an old man. He never sold any large quantities of stock. Witness remembered her husband making the codicil to his will shortly before he died. The two "Johns" were consulted as to how the estate should be divided. Witness took an inventory of the things in the second estate. The furniture belonged to witness. All the things were sold except 75 sheep, 2 cows and calves, a cart and horses, and the furniture, all of which was bequeathed to witness.

In cross-examination witness said although things went bad on the farm, her husband was able to pay his way by selling wool and ostrich feathers. Some of the stock died of old age. He sold none.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Postea (September 1st). Counsel having been heard in argument:

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (September 4th).

Maasdorp, J.: On the 18th day of November, 1882, Isaac van der Vyver and his wife made a joint will by which they bequeathed to their daughter Anna the sum of £1,000 after the death of the survivor. Of this she was only to enjoy the interest during her lifetime and after her death the said sum of £1,000 was to devolve on their five children or their lawful descendants by representation per stirpes. They bequeathed, after the death of the first dying, to their five children certain land, upon this understanding: that the survivor shall remain in possession and enjoy the usufruct for his or her life, and the said children shall only receive transfer after the death of the survivor. And it was directed that when that time arrived the land should be placed under mortgage. Each of the five heirs was to mortgage his or her share to the said Anna for the sum of £200, to bear interest at 6 per cent., which was to be paid half-yearly to her. Then the testator appoints as his heirs the testatrix together with their children, and the testatrix appoints as her heirs the testator together with the children. The testatrix died and the testator married again. He subsequently made a will confirming the bequest of the land, but imposing certain conditions not appearing in the earlier will. It is admitted that in the case of the £1,000 bequeathed to Anna there is such a massing of the fund that the testator after adiation could not alter the disposition, but it is contended that it is not so in respect of the land bequeathed to the children, mainly on the ground that by the terms of the will the latter bequest takes effect upon the death of the first dying, and not upon the death of the survivor. But, in my opinion, the will must be construed as a whole, and not with regard to any single clause thereof, and if that is done, it seems clear that the intention of the testators with respect to the £1,000 cannot be carried into effect without taking the land as consolidated for the purposes mentioned in the will. It is clear that it was the intention of the testators that the bequest of all the land should take effect after the death of the survivor, when transfer should be given, and the necessary mortgages should be executed. In my opinion, all the conditions exist which are necessary to prevent the testator, after adiation, from altering by subsequent will the bequest of this property. As to the rest of the property, there was no massing of the joint estate, but it was provided that during the lifetime of the testator he was to enjoy the usufruct thereof. Upon his death the heirs of the joint estate became entitled to half the property belonging thereto. The Court has now to ascertain what that half consists of. Upon the death of his first wife, the testator lodged an inventory of the property, which is so obviously and admittedly insufficient and incorrect that it must be set aside at once, as of no assistance in arriving at the condition of the estate at the time it was made. It was argued at the trial that the conduct of the testator in framing this inventory was such that he became liable to the penalties provided under section 15 of Ordinance 104 of 1833, but that issue is not raised in the pleadings, and a question of forfeiture cannot be raised in this incidental manner. For the purpose of making up an account of the joint estate of the testator and his first wife, certain questions on disputed facts have been raised for the decision of the Court in regard to certain specified items. The largest item is that of a bond on the bequeathed land. On the one hand, it is said to be a debt of the joint estate; and on the other, to be the accumulated debts of the plaintiffs in this case. The evidence of Reitz and Versveld upon this point is by no means conclusive. It may be that at some time the debt may have been spoken of as debts of the heirs, because no doubt the heirs did at one time owe certain amounts, but these debts were taken over by the testator before the death of his wife, and there is evidence of settlements made by the heirs from time to time, leaving the debts as a burden on the estate. The settlements by the heirs are matters to be considered when their respective debts are dealt with. The importance of the power of attorney and consent paper for raising the mortgages which were executed by the heirs are very great in deciding the point raised in respect of the bond for £413. They were executed before Mr. Versveld, and in them the debt is described as a debt of the joint estate, and upon the evidence in the case I come to the conclusion that the debt must be paid off out of the funds of the joint estate before a division can take place. It is admitted that the sum of £275 is an asset of the joint estate. The plaintiffs further claim that three amounts of £500, £300, and £50 should be brought up as assets of the estate. It is alleged that the sum of £500 was a debt due to the estate by J. A. and J. A. C. van der Vyver, and that it was settled by land transferred to the testator by them. It is quite clear that the greater portion of the £500 was owing in respect of debts taken over by their father which they owed to others, and formed part of the indebtedness of the heirs spoken of by Reitz and Versveld. Only with regard to £191 is it clear that it was due to the estate for ostriches purchased by J. A. C. van der Vyver. That sum of £191 must be brought up as an asset in the estate. With regard to the debts of J. A. and J. A. C. van der Vyver, I find that they were duly settled, although it appears that some promissory notes of theirs are still amongst the papers of the estate. As to the £300 debt of Isaac, which was also paid, the evidence is not clear whether this was owing to the estate, for consideration received from the estate, or for moneys paid by the testator on behalf of Isaac, and it cannot be declared to be an asset in the joint estate. Coming now to the value of the movables in the estate, it appears that they consisted, at the death of the testator's wife, of stock, vehicles, and furniture. It is quite clear upon the authorities cited at the bar, that the testator as usufructuary was bound to keep up the number of the flocks and herds out of the increase yielded from time to time. It is only in respect of the ostriches that any difficulty arises on this score, as regards the remainder of the stock from which any increase could be expected, I am not satisfied that any great diminution has taken place. And as to the ostriches, no practical benefit can arise from going very narrowly into the matter, considering the condition of the estate. There is no doubt that the value of the articles should be taken at what it stood on the death of the testator, and not at the time when his wife died. The goods sold in the estate of the testator realised about 50, and upon the evidence, I am prepared to take it that such was about the value of the joint estate at the time of his wife's death. And practically it cannot benefit the plaintiffs to place it higher. The evidence on this part of the case is so vague that no precise result can be arrived at. I may mention that two of the three bonds over the bequeathed property were paid off by the testator, but they were paid out of money payable by him to the heirs, as the purchase price of the opstal, and cannot be brought up to the credit of the testator's separate estate. The result is that it is declared that the legatees are entitled to the farms free of all mortgages, and the bond of £413 must be paid out of the joint estate. The sums above mentioned of £275 and £191 must be accounted for by the testator's separate estate to the joint estate. For the purposes of an account, the movables in the joint estate are declared to be of the value of £766. The defendants are ordered in bringing up their accounts to adopt the findings of the Court upon the above points. I may mention that I have found that two bonds were paid off out of the purchase price of the opstal, in the event of the heirs being unable to fulfil their part of the agreement, they would be liable to account to the testator's estate for the amount of the bonds. But while I give that as my opinion, I cannot give a decision upon the point, because the question is not specifically raised. The first defendant, in her capacity as executrix, is ordered to pay the costs of the plaintiffs. No order is made as to the costs of the second defendant.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

STONE V. MCKENZIE. } 1905.
{ Aug. 9th.

Brick-making machinery — Misrepresentation—Article supplied for a special purpose.

S. had supplied certain brick-making machinery to M., guaranteed to be capable of doing certain work. M. tested the machine, but found that it could not do the work guaranteed. Plaintiff now sued for the price of the machinery and cost of its erection.

Held, that he was not entitled to recover.

This was an action brought by William Stone, of Cape Town, against A. R. McKenzie, of Cape Town, to recover £350 in respect of certain brick-making machinery supplied to the defendant, and £20 for erecting it.

The declaration set out that about 19th May, 1904 the plaintiff entered into a contract of sale with the defendant, by which the defendant was to pay to the plaintiff £200 for certain brick-making machinery, and £20 for erecting it on its being tested to work according to the representations of the plaintiff on the defendant's field, and a further £150 after a season's satisfactory work. If the machine was not a success, the plaintiff was to remove it at his own expense. The machinery had been duly erected, tested, and found to work satisfactorily during the season, and plaintiff claimed £350 and £20 for erecting it, with costs.

The plea admitted the erection of the machinery, but denied that the machinery was tested and found to work satisfactorily, or proved itself to be what the plaintiff represented it to be during one season's work. The plaintiff well knew the nature of the clay on the defendant's field, and represented the machine to be capable of turning out from ten to fifteen thousand good bricks per diem, but it was only capable of turning out eight thousand indifferent bricks per diem. The machinery could not properly crush the clay, and the wire-cut bricks were bad. The machinery frequently broke down. Subject to the claim in reconvention, the defendant admitted that the plaintiff was entitled to claim the sum of £20. In reconvention, £96 was claimed for money advanced, and £39 6s. 6d., being expenses incurred in connection with the machinery. Defendant further claimed an order compelling the plaintiff to remove the said machinery at his own expense and risk, and a cancellation of the agreement.

The plaintiff in his replication admitted that the machine was not a crushing machine, and said that the defendant was well aware of this. He tendered certain items for work and labour done claimed by the defendant, to be set off against his claim.

Mr. Upington for plaintiff. Mr. Gutsche for defendant.

Wm. Stone, plaintiff in the case, said he had twelve years' experience of practical brickmaking, which he was carrying on a little before April, 1904. For the purpose of that business, he imported a "Murray's Patent No. 1 Machine," and had purchased from the Harbour Board one of their traction-engines to work the machine. He had to give up the work at Mount Prospect on account of the difficulty in getting coal up, and he was anxious to dispose of the machinery. He paid for the machine £160, it cost him £25 to get it erected, and £200 cash for the engine. The machine worked satisfactorily while he had it—about three months. Witness told McKenzie the machine would turn out from ten to fifteen thousand bricks per diem on his brickfield. The defendant sent a couple of bags of clay up to the machine at Mount Prospect, and the rough bricks which were turned out from the rough clay were not objected to by the defendant. Through the carelessness of the driver, the cog-wheel broke, and the defendant ordered a new one, but there was never any question of the plaintiff paying for it. The defendant paid the foundry for the cog-wheels. Witness erected the machine, and put it in good working order. Complaint was made to him about the roughness of the bricks, but not about the shape. The roughness was the result of the rough clay, and it was pointed out that a crushing pan would obviate that. When 8,000 bricks a day were turned out, it was when the defendant was burning dust; but when the fuel was good, 12,000 were turned out. The machine had often to be stopped on account of a shortage of labour. At the time of the agreement with the defendant, there were other offers for the machine. On several occasions he asked the defendant for the money, and in May he issued summons. Witness had nothing to do with the erection of a Scotch kiln on the defendant's field. The kiln was for burning the bricks that the defendant disposed of.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gutsche: He thoroughly knew the nature of the clay on the defendant's field. The brick turned out by the machine was a good brick; the roughness was due to the clay. The defendant was told if he wanted to have a fine brick he would have to purchase a pan. The cogwheel was ordered by witness for the defendant. He denied that he was told that the bricks were unsatisfactory. He was not stopped in December.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: Mr. McKenzie's men inspected the traction engine.

It would have been futile for him to have used his own clay instead of McKenzie's in the test, as the materials were very different, and easily recognisable.

John Pearson, manager of the Kloof Pottery Works, said, he had a life experience of brickmaking machinery. He knew the machine in question, and in his opinion there was not a better machine as a brickmaking machine on the market. Some eighteen months ago witness was desirous of purchasing the machine, but the plaintiff had already entered into an agreement with the defendant. Witness would have been prepared to give £350 for the machine and engine. There were about 200,000 bricks on the defendants' farm, and as to the quality, he put them down as a first-class second. The rough brick took the plaster better than the smooth brick. Witness had also inspected the machine, and the traction engine, and by putting a cogwheel in the machinery would be in working order.

Cross-examined: The clay on McKenzie's field would make a good brick if well crushed.

Samuel Holt, a brickmaker, of 35 years' experience, said that the Murray machine was the best machine on the market. On March 4 he saw the machine in question working on McKenzie's field. He stayed there 15 minutes, and during that time it made 1,500 bricks. It was then stopped, because there were not enough people to take the bricks away. The bricks made were like the one produced, which was a good "second." He had managed a place where the bricks made had been too smooth, and for that reason had been rejected, as they would not take the plaster. To make a smooth brick in this clay, a crushing appliance was necessary. Any brickmaker would know that such was necessary. There was no machine in existence that could make a smooth brick from the clay to be found at McKenzie's field.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Andrew Ritchie McKenzie, the defendant, said that in March last the plaintiff told him that he was anxious to dispose of the machine. The plaintiff showed him a photo of it, and witness said that he thought the machine would not be suitable for his field. The machine was a perfect one, and the plaintiff said that the rollers of his machine would deal with the rotten stone on witness's field. Witness sent him to his field to get a load of clay through the mill, and then to report to him if the machine worked well, but witness was not satisfied, and told plaintiff to take the mill up to his (witness's) field. Witness said that he would pay plaintiff £20 for erecting the machine, and if it had proved satisfactory, witness would have bought it. The bricks were "filthy, soft seconds," not fit for cottages, and the majority of them were "slop bricks." If witness had 100,000 bricks like the one produced he could sell them. Witness had never expressed satisfaction with the machine. The machine had not come up to the representations made by the plaintiff. Knowing that the plaintiff had no means witness voluntarily gave £20 to the plaintiff in order to erect the machine. The plaintiff had bought the cheap cogwheel on his own responsibility; witness had guaranteed the payment for the wheel. With regard to the payment of 30s. a week to Stone, witness had made that out of kindness, because his foreman had told him that Stone was starving. Witness had also given the plaintiff sums of £3 and £5, for which he had not claimed, to send to his (plaintiff's) wife, who, plaintiff had told him, was starving.

By Hopley, J.: The Scotch kiln was put up at the request of the plaintiff. Warner had brought the matter forward.

Mr. Upington: I object.

By Hopley, J.: Warner had a judgment against the machine, and had written to the effect that he wanted to execute judgment on the field.

Cross-examined: He had been making bricks for 35 years. He was simple enough to believe that the machine could deal with his claim. He could turn out better bricks than the plaintiff had at Mount Prospect. He would not have entertained the idea of buying the machine if he had been told a crushing pan was necessary. He was getting for the £350 the machine, and an old "pet" of his. Early in 1905 witness told the plaintiff he could go and take his machine with him. The plaintiff had never been in his employ.

Mr. Upington: Will you produce your pay-sheets?

[Hopley, J.: He has been using your clay and labour all this time?]

Yes.

[Hopley, J.: Then why did you keep him on after his machine was found to be no good?]

Now you've come to the crux.

[Hopley, J.: I know I have, that's why I'm here.]

Each time I spoke to him about the matter he had some plausible tale about what he could do if he had a Scotch kiln or a pan, and each of these operations took six or more weeks.

Mr. Upington: Whose handwriting is this? It is in pencil, and says "Advanced to Mr. Stone"?—I cannot say; I cannot see it, my eyesight is failing. He had used 15,000 of the bricks made by the plaintiff for building some cottages. With all his experience, he did not know that it was impossible to make a machine-made brick from the class of clay found in his field without rollers. He did not know that machine-made bricks could not be made with the clay on his field without a crusher. The plaintiff never asked for a crusher, which would cost between £500 and £600.

Witness: You have asked me a good many questions, let me ask you one. If you went to a tailor's shop and asked for a suit of clothes, and they gave you the trousers and told you to go to another shop and get a coat, would you be satisfied?

Mr. Upington: He did not contract to supply you with a crusher.

Witness: He contracted to make bricks with the machine.

Mr. Upington: He assumed you were a man of common sense, and knew that bricks could not be made out of your clay without a crusher.

Proceeding, witness said he could prove that the working of the machine cost him between £300 and £400, and the production of the bricks, of which he had now some 200,000 on his field. The machine was to be tested between August, 1904, to the middle of May, 1905. The Scotch kiln was a permanent thing. He had disposed of some of the bricks out of that kiln. When he claimed for that expense, he never intended to take judgment against the plaintiff; it was merely put in to show the amount of expense that defendant went to. The machine had turned out bricks, but it was constantly going wrong. Some time in December the plaintiff was told to take the machine away, and at his request the Scotch kiln was built, to give him another chance.

Re-examined by Mr. Gutsche: The plaintiff was given 30s. a week as an advance, and not as wages. The plaintiff assured him that the rollers would finish what the knives had missed.

Theodore McKay, manager in McKenzie's brickfields, stated that in March or April the plaintiff went to him and said he had a wire-cutting brick-making machine for sale. Witness advised him to see Mr. McKenzie. He did so, and Mr. McKenzie showed him the land he wanted clearing, and Stone replied that his machine would crush anything. By agreement, four or five bags of clay were sent to the machine, but when they got there, the machine would not work, and it was agreed to postpone the trial. Subsequently, Stone told witness the clay would make good bricks. Portion of the machinery was moved down. Mr. McKenzie sent for the traction engine, but the cog-wheel broke. Stone then ordered another cog-wheel. Witness took it up in a cart, and had it fixed on. That also broke. Another wheel was obtained, for the payment of which witness had to go security, and that was fixed on, and the engine was taken down to the field. It was decided to allow the plaintiff 30s. a week for board and lodging, pending the trial of the machine. Witness kept an account of the payments made. In December, witness found that the bricks, after they had been burned, were unsatisfactory. Witness told the plaintiff that the bricks were useless, and he suggested making a Scotch kiln. As this would cost a good deal of money, witness consulted with Mr. McKenzie, and it was erected under the supervision of plaintiff. The bricks thus produced were unsatisfactory.

[Hopley, J.: But the kiln was a permanent building, and would do for other bricks.]

Oh, no. If you do not make bricks with a wire-cutting machine, it is no good.

[Hopley, J.: Why?]

You don't burn hand-made bricks in it.

[Hopley, J.: Is there any scientific reason for it?]

Not that I know of. No tally of the bricks made was kept, but he thought there were about 300,000, of which 150,000 had been sold. There were about 170,000 left. The defendants had a contract with a man named Berger to supply machine-made bricks. They had been unable to complete the contract, because he would not take the bricks made by the machine, but took the balance in hand-made bricks. If all the bricks were like the ones produced by the plaintiff, witness would not grumble. The bricks produced were picked out of the lot made. The bricks produced by the defendant were fair samples of the produce of the machine. Witness handed in the cost incurred in making the bricks by the machine.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The bricks produced by the defendant had been taken from the balance left on the field. The original material used tended to make or not to make a good "red hard." Good mixing was also required, and burning also had something to do with it. The defendant supplied all the labour, etc., for the burning. The bricks used by defendant had been charged for by the defendant against himself at cost price.

Mr. Upington: His (plaintiff's) clay is better than McKenzie's?—Yes; it is clean clay, and has no shale in it.

And he can make better bricks than the defendant with that clay?—I don't know; if he did, I don't know why he could not sell them.

Did you sell any for him?—Yes.

How much did you get for them?—£1 per 1,000

£1 per 1,000! Who did you sell them to—a friend of yours?—No, to Smith and Schultze.

And who carted them?—Smith and Schultze.

Ah! £1 per 1,000 at the brickfields. That's a different thing?—Yes; and they said they were sorry they ever bought them. He had no prior experience of brick-making machinery. There was no entry in the defendant's book showing the price at which the 105,000 bricks used by the defendant for his buildings has been charged.

A. R. McKenzie (recalled) said that he had valued the bricks at 18s. per 1,000 on the field. He would not have given 18s. for them if he had been buying them.

John Denton, a foreman in the employ of the defendant, and Thomas Wilters, an engine-driver in the same employ, also gave evidence of a corroborative nature.

Mr. Gutsche closed his case, and counsel for the plaintiff having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J., said that in this case the plaintiff came into Court on a declaration, stating that he sold to the defendant, under certain conditions, a pug mill and a traction engine for the purposes of brick-making, and he produced a letter which the defendant wrote to him on May 19, as setting forth the terms of the contract. Now, it rested on the plaintiff to show that the terms of the contract as set forth in the letter had been fulfilled by him, and that everything had happened to enable him to make good his claim against the defendant. It appeared that the letter was not the first thing that had passed between the plaintiff and the defendant with regard to this matter. The plaintiff was the owner of a pug mill and a traction engine, and he was anxious to abandon brick-making work, at which he had been engaged. Under these circumstances he approached the defendant, who was a man of means, and also in the brick-making line. The defendant had at that time a large brick-field, in which the best of the clay had apparently been worked out, and what was left was an earthy deposit of a more difficult nature to treat than soft clay. The defendant's wish was to clear that field as much as possible, to turn what he could into bricks, and clear the rest so as to build on it. There was room in the letter for a conflict of evidence, because the question might arise as to the work the plaintiff guaranteed the machine to do, and consequently the defendant has pleaded that the plaintiff misrepresented its capacity. It would appear that the plaintiff did represent that it was capable of doing the work in a satisfactory manner, and it is said by the defendant that the plaintiff specially guaranteed that it could treat the shale on the ground and turn it into bricks of a good class. This is denied by the plaintiff, but whatever the representations may have been, it seems clear that the defendant was not satisfied with them alone. He sent up some of his ground to where the machine was then standing, with a view to a test. Now, this was very significant, because it had been argued throughout by the plaintiff that anybody purchasing such a machine could not get a machine to do this work without a crusher. The mere fact that defendant sent up a quantity of clay to be tried proved that he intended the test to be made without a crusher attached to the machine. After the clay had been operated on the defendant did not seem quite satisfied, because he wrote to the plaintiff, stating that if the machine was satisfactory after a season's trial he would take it, and limited his liability for the time being to £20, the amount charged by the plaintiff for erecting the machine. It did not seem to him that there was any wish on defendant's part to get out of the contract or to import anything into it which the evidence does not justify. It seemed that he was perfectly willing to admit the virtues of the machine, but he said the machine was not capable of doing the necessary work on the clay. Bricks had been produced in Court, and it was admitted that if the quality of all the bricks were the same as the quality of one of those, then the bricks turned out by the machine would be acceptable; but that was not so. The season's working apparently produced some 50,000 good bricks, and 105,000 bricks which were called "seconds"—bricks good enough to build cottages with, and there were left about 170,000 bricks which were either worthless or of very little value. Now, that could not be looked upon as a satisfactory season's working, because it was obvious that that would not pay for the amount of money spent in producing the bricks. It was impossible for the Court to say that the defendant should be satisfied with the way in which the machine had done its work. It had been argued for the plaintiff that the defendant's opinion should have been notified sooner. That was not feasible, because the machine was on a season's trial, and if the defendant had condemned the machine the plaintiff might have contended that the machine was on a season's trial, and that he should get a further chance. All those things made him feel that the defendant had very good grounds for saying that he was not satisfied with the machine, and that the plaintiff had not carried out his portion of the contract, and therefore judgment would be given for the defendant. On the claim in reconvention, judgment would be given for the plaintiff for £40, and against him for £20, the amount due to plaintiff for erecting the machine. Plaintiff would have to pay all costs of the suit.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

JONES V. MITCHELL.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Wynberg for £8.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said he did not see why the defendant should have been brought into this court. He did not think this Court should be turned into an engine of oppression.

The matter was ordered to stand over for a week, his Lordship adding that he was not inclined to go out of his way to assist the plaintiff. If the plaintiff's object was to get a longer term of imprisonment for the defendant, the Court would not help him.

KANNEMEYER V. SHAW.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £23 11s. 10d., with interest.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BAILEY V. DRUMMOND. { 1905.
Aug. 10th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved as a matter of urgency for an interdict restraining the respondent from removing certain furniture from the Villa Marabella, Claremont. It was stated that an action was pending in which applicant was suing respondent for rent.

Interdict granted pending result of action to be instituted by applicant for recovery of rent due.

CAPE ELECTRIC TRAMWAYS V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

This was an application for an interdict restraining the Colonial Government from continuing in possession of certain property known as the Sea Point Railway. Mr. Burton was for the applicants; Mr. Morgan Evans was for respondents.

Mr. Morgan Evans said that this case was one of considerable importance, and the Government were anxious that Mr. Searle should appear in the matter. His learned friend was, however, engaged in another court, and the matter stood so low down in the list that it seemed impossible for it to be reached that day.

T 1

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: I think it is very likely that it will be. Do you wish to apply for a postponement?]

Mr. Evans said that was so.

Mr. Burton said that his clients were prepared to go on with the matter, which was somewhat urgent. However, seeing that the Government wished Mr. Searle to take the case, he did not object to a postponement.

The matter was ordered to stand over until next motion day, the 17th inst.

LEWIS V. REPSTONE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Swift moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order of ejectment in reference to certain property in Jarvis-street, Cape Town.

Order granted, defendant to quit within 24 hours, failing which writ of ejectment to issue.

BILL V. NEW YORK MUTUAL { 1905.
INSURANCE CO. } Aug. 10th.

Inspection of documents—Attorney and client—Privilege.

B. applied for an order to inspect certain letters which had passed between one D. and the New York Mutual Insurance Co. D. was both agent for the Company and also their local attorney.

Held, that as certain of these letters were written by D. as attorney to the Company and contained statements as to evidence to be produced on their behalf in a pending action, the applicant was not entitled to inspect such letters.

This was an application by the plaintiff in action for an order calling upon the manager in South Africa of the respondent company to allow plaintiff or his attorneys inspection of certain papers, documents, and writings enumerated in the schedule (b) of the defendants' affidavit. Mr. Burton was for applicant; Mr. Upington was for respondents.

Mr. Burton said that the matter had previously been before the Court, and had been ordered to stand over. The case was one in which a cessionary of a policy of life insurance claimed payment of the policy. The pleadings had been closed, and plaintiff now asked that he should be allowed to inspect certain documents. The defendant set forth two schedules. He said he would not mind the plaintiff seeing one schedule, but he objected as regarded the other, and said it was of a departmental and confidential nature.

Mr. Upington said that respondent had given discovery and inspection of all documents, except certain documents, which were set out in an affidavit. It was now objected to produce certain letters on the ground that they contained the evidence procured for the purposes of the case, or in view of pending litigation.

Mr. Burton said that the applicant now moved for leave to inspect certain further documents, and also for an order upon respondent to pay costs. Counsel said that the position was somewhat complicated by reason of the fact that Mr. Drake, of East London was both attorney and local insurance agent of the respondent company. He submitted that applicant was entitled to inspect all letters up to the 22nd November, 1904, relating to the health of the assured, and so forth. They did not want to see the papers that passed between the company and their legal advisers, but they claimed the right to see the statements made by Drake, in his capacity of agent to the company, and the statements of persons who had seen the deceased prior to his death. These statements, he contended, were in no wise privileged.

Mr. Upington held that the question as to whether Mr. Drake was an attorney or not did not seem to be very material to this case. It would be contrary to the whole principle which underlies discovery if a person who procured information for the purpose of defending himself in case of a claim being made against him, was to be compelled to allow an inspection of such information. He submitted that the plaintiff was not entitled to inspect these papers, as it would be contrary to the course of justice for him to do so.

Mr. Burton contended that, even if the plaintiff should lose his case, that the defendant should pay the costs of the application.

Mr. Upington (in reply) held that his clients had given all possible assistance to the plaintiff, and therefore they should not be asked to pay the costs.

Mr. Burton said they had to come into court, because they did not know what letters they were to get. This application was rendered necessary only because of the respondent's unjustifiable refusal.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The application was for an order to allow the plaintiff or his attorneys inspection of certain papers and documents in the custody or control of the defendants. In answer to this, the manager or principal officer in the defendant company has filed an affidavit containing two schedules, and with reference to these, he said they were willing to produce the documents specified in schedule (a), but they refuse to allow inspection of the documents in schedule (b), on the ground that they were of a confidential nature. The documents for which the privilege was claimed were letters which had passed between the solicitor and the company and the local manager and the head office in New York. These letters contained statements of evidence which had been collected for the purpose of proving the defence in the case. No doubt, if an attorney acted in several capacities, he could not always claim the privileges of an attorney in every branch of his work. In this case the attorney was the agent at East London for the defendant company, and any communications which passed in that capacity relative to the contract with the plaintiff would probably not be privileged. But the communication that passed between him and the office from witnesses, in view of the pending litigation, he had a right to refuse to disclose. On no principle of justice was a party entitled to force another's hand to disclose what his witnesses had to say. He knew of no case which justified the applicant in this case having authority to see these documents. The only other matter was that of costs. It had been admitted that the affidavit of disclosure did not give sufficient information to the applicant, and he thought justice would be met by making the costs incurred in the case costs in the cause.

Ex parte THE HEX RIVER SCHOOL.

School—Sale of former public school buildings.

This was an application by the committee of the Hex River School for the confirmation of a sale. The school was established in 1865, and from the transfer it seemed that the property, the land and school buildings, were transferred to the committee for the time being. The petitioners were duly elected as members of the School Committee at a meeting of those interested in the school, held on October 17, 1904. The school had ceased to exist as a public school for the past 25 years, the requirements of the public having been met by other schools established in the neighbourhood. Since the school ceased to exist, the buildings and land had been looked after by George William Gee, and there was no prospect of the desirability of establishing a school there. A meeting of the guarantors, etc., of the school was called, whereat the petitioners were elected, and acting on the instructions of the meeting, after realising that it would be impossible to sell the place by public auction, had disposed of it to Mr. George William Gee for £570. They now wished to pass transfer of the property.

Mr. Burton moved.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: What do they propose to do with the proceeds?]

Mr. Burton: To distribute it amongst other educational establishments in the neighbourhood.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: What schools are there in the neighbourhood?]

I cannot give your lordship the list, but there are several schools in the neighbourhood. Continuing, counsel said the application was rendered necessary because the Registrar refused to pass transfer without the order of the Court. It was intended, if there was any trouble with regard to the distribution of the funds, that the decision of the minister of the Dutch Reformed Church should decide the matter.

Mr. Nightingale, who opposed the application on behalf of the Superintendent-General of Education, read the affidavit of Mr. Murray, Acting Superintendent, drawing attention to the fact that, although the Government did not contribute towards the purchase of the school buildings, yet the actual teaching of the school was dependent on the Government grant. He did not oppose the application if the distribution of the proceeds was left to the committee, in consultation with the Superintendent-General of Education.

Mr. Burton said the whole point of the case was that the Superintendent-General of Education claimed the right to veto the wishes of the local committee in regard to the distribution of the money. If the committee wished to devote the money to something other than education, then the action of the Superintendent-General could be understood.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that, as the Government had contributed to the school, they should have something to say as to the distribution of the money. He thought it would be advisable to pay the money into the hands of the registrar of the Court.

Mr. Burton said that what he would suggest was that the sale be sanctioned, and that the committee make its decision with regard to the money, and submit it to the Superintendent-General of Education, and if he approved, the matter need not come into the court.

Mr. Nightingale said this suggestion was quite acceptable to the Superintendent-General of Education. The distribution of this money was already at sixes and sevens, and the Superintendent-General was the best person to consult on the matter.

Mr. Burton said the committee did not recognise the right of the Education Department having anything to say to the disposal of this building.

The Government had no more right in this property than they had in a farmer's private school, to which they contributed.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said the school in question had been established some years ago, but it was no longer required, and the School Committee, which had been elected under Government regulations, decided to dispose of it. The Superintendent-General of Education raised no objection to this, but he wished to see the proceeds of the sale properly applied to the purpose to which it was proposed to devote it. The Court would order the Registrar of Deeds to transfer the property to Mr. Geo. William Gee, on condition that the proceeds of the sale, after the expenses had been paid, should be disposed of in a manner agreed upon between the committee and the Superintendent-General of Education, and, failing that, the Court would determine the matter. He hoped the parties would be reasonable in the matter. He saw no reason why they should not.

Ex parte KEMM.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved on behalf of Mrs. Kemm as a matter of urgency, for an interdict restraining her husband (Robert Kemm, of Wynberg) from disposing of or alienating the moveable and immoveable property in the joint estate, pending an action to be instituted by petitioner for judicial separation and payment of alimony, on the ground of the respondent's gross cruelty towards her.

Rule nisi granted, to operate as a temporary interdict, restraining defendant from alienating or mortgaging the landed property in question, the rule to be returnable on the 11th inst.

Ex parte VAN NIEKERK.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property, further information required by the Court at the first hearing being now supplied.

Order granted.

WALKER V. RECEIVERS GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY.

Mr. Russell moved, under section 50 of the Charter of Justice, for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from an order of this Court refusing to grant a Commission to take the evidence of the applicant in London. Mr. Upington was for the respondents.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the order given by the Court was an interlocutory order.

Mr. Russell submitted that the order, although interlocutory, had the effect of a final or definite sentence, as set out in the section.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the order was given on what was purely a matter of procedure. The question decided was whether a party to a suit should be required to appear at the trial and give evidence in person, or whether he should be examined on commission de bene esse before the trial. The Court was not satisfied there were sufficient grounds for excusing the attendance of the witness. It could not be called a final or definite sentence. The application would be refused, with costs.

Ex parte ESTATE BOTHA.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a temporary interdict restraining the trustee in the insolvent estate of the late J. Nicolaas Botha from passing transfer of certain landed property at Oudtshoorn, pending an action to be brought by the petitioner, executrix in the estate of her late husband. It was alleged that there had been a sale by the trustee, which was not of a bona-fide character.

Rule nisi granted, to operate as an interim interdict, and to be returnable on the 24th inst.

Postea (August 24th). Rule made absolute.

Ex parte VENTER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for registration of transfer of certain property in the division of Britstown, the matter having stood over for further information, which was now furnished.

The petitioner was one of two tutors testamentary to certain minors. The father had advanced money to him on condition of his passing a bond in favour of the minors. There was an endorsement for cancellation on the bond, but no consideration seemed to have passed. The Master recommended that the petitioners be authorised to purchase certain sheep for certain of the minors and to pass a new bond in favour of the others, and that upon their doing this they should be allowed to cancel the original bond.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte CAROLUS.

Mr. Swift moved for leave to raise certain money on mortgage.

Order granted.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

MALCOMESS AND CO. AND
TRUSTEE INSOLVENT ES- } 1905.
TATE H. B. CARY V. T. B. } Aug. 10th.
CARY.

Mr. Burton moved for leave to sign judgment for the plaintiffs in terms of the referee's report. The referee (Mr. Maynard Nash) reported in favour of plaintiffs for the sum of £1,052 4s.; viz., £414 2s. in the first action and £638 2s. in the second action. Counsel added that he was instructed to ask the Court to certify witness's expenses for Mr. Reimers, and also witnesses' expenses to those witnesses examined before the referee.

Mr. Gardiner moved upon notice to applicants for the reopening of the case on the point as to whether a settlement was entered into between the parties in regard to what was known as the Conrad settlement. Counsel read an affidavit by Mr. Watermeyer (Tom Cary's attorney) stating that the applicants disclosed books and documents, but not specifically, and now since the Court had given judgment in relation to the question of the Conrad settlement distinct evidence had come to light of payment of a certain cheque for £20 to T. B. Cary. Counsel argued that there were precedents for the application, because the judgment already delivered by his lordship was in the nature only an interlocutory judgment, and evidence on a material point had since come to light bearing on the question of the Conrad settlement.

Hopley, J., said that he had already decided that there was a Conrad settlement up to a certain point, but that it was afterwards set aside. He did not feel at all inclined to reopen the case upon the point now raised. There was only the slightest ground shown for the application. The Court would give judgment in terms of the referee's report, with costs against defendant and Mr. Reimers be declared a necessary witness, as well as witnesses called before the referee, defendant to pay costs of the present application.

BENYA V. MAGUGWANA.

Mr. Benjamin, on behalf of Magugwana, moved, as a matter of urgency, for the suspension of an order for the restoration forthwith of certain cattle. He said that the cattle had been distributed under an order from the Magistrate at Butterworth. He contended that if the Court had known in the first instance the real facts of the case, the order in question would not have been granted.

Hopley, J., said that, had he known the full facts at the time of the original application, he would probably have made a somewhat different order. An order would now be granted that the applicants, Magugwana and others, who were originally respondents, be directed either to return the said stock or to give security for the safe custody and eventual production of the said stock, pending an action for a declaration of rights as to their proper ownership to be forthwith instituted by the said Magugwana and others who took them away, respondents to abide result of the action, security to be given, should the stock not be returned, to the satisfaction of the R.M. of Butterworth.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

HOPKINS AND CO. V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1905.
Aug. 11th.
" 14th.

Railway Department — Contract
—"Coastwards."

Plaintiffs had contracted with the Cape Government Railways for the carriage of certain stone from Queen's Town to Cape Town. The rate specified by the Department was 1½d. per ton for stone consigned inland, and ½d. per ton for stone consigned coastwards. The Department claimed at the higher rate on carriage from Queen's Town to Stormberg, inasmuch as that portion of the journey was "inland." Held, that the Railway Department were bound under their tariff to carry the said stone through to Cape Town at the lower rate.

This was an action brought by Arthur Hopkins and Co., building contractors, of Cape Town, who tendered successfully for the building in connection with the extension of the S.A. College, to recover the amount of £233 from the Government, which was paid as an over-charge by the plaintiffs to the defendants for the carriage of certain stone from Queen's Town.

The declaration set out that during the months of February to October last the Government agreed with the plaintiffs to carry certain stone which was required by the plaintiffs from Queen's Town to Cape Town. Before entering into the agreement the plaintiffs enquired from the officials as to the carriage rate, and were told it was 32s. 9d. On that information they based their calculations for the tenders to the S.A. College Council, which was accepted. In April the Government claimed that the tariff rate was 38s. 4d. The plaintiffs were in urgent need of the stone, and the sum of £233 was overpaid to the Railway Department under protest. The stone was carried at the lower rate for some months before the Government demanded the overcharge. In April the Government refused to deliver the stone unless the higher rate was paid, and thereafter the higher rate was paid for the later consignments.

The plea set out that the defendants had no knowledge of any tender on the part of the plaintiffs. It was admitted that it was agreed to carry the stone in February and March at the lower rate, but it was denied that the department had any knowledge for what purpose the stone was required. The plaintiffs were charged in error during the months of February and March, and in April the plaintiffs were advised that the legal tariff was 38s. 4d., and the extra charge was paid without protest.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton), was for the plaintiffs, and Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Nightingale) was for the Government.

Mr. Searle said that the questions for the Court to decide would be what the rate was, whether the rate was the proper one according to the tariff book, what was the construction of the tariff book, was it 32s. 9d. or 38s. 4d., and if it be 32s. 9d. then was the payment of the plaintiffs an involuntary one and under such circumstances as to prohibit the plaintiffs from recovering it?

Mr. Benjamin: If it be held to be the lower rate then we contend it is a voluntary payment and cannot be recovered.

[Maasdorp, J.: A rather curious position for the Government to take up. If the Government charged these people more you may have the legal right to it, but it is certainly a curious position for the Government to take up.]

Mr. Benjamin: Your lordship may hold that it is the lower rate, but the Government take up the position that the rate always intended was the higher rate, and the higher rate should always have been charged.

Mr. Searle: After this correspondence the Government sued us in this court to recover at the higher rate, and we defended the action, and the pleadings were closed, whereupon the Government withdrew the case and paid our costs. We claimed it was the proper rate and alternatively for damages. Subsequently the same construction as we put on the tariff book was accepted by the Government, and notices to that effect appeared in the papers.

Mr. Benjamin: I object to my learned friend leading evidence on that point. It took place subsequently, and it is irrelevant to the present issue what the Government subsequently did.

[Maasdorp, J.: That contains the contract with the public. Can any official charge more than that.]

Perhaps not.

[Maasdorp, J.: You almost admit you have taken more than you are entitled to.]

My contention is that the term in the tariff book "coastwards" is not a very definite term.

[Maasdorp, J.: Supposing it is definite, can any official charge more than specified?]

They might possibly enter into a particular arrangement. What we contend for now is the construction that has always been put upon the tariff book by the General Manager, and for that reason the Government resist any refund in this case.

Mr. Searle: There was a little dispute between two departments of the railway—the goods department wanted one rate and the financial department another. The rate was made up from the tariff book, the conditions of which then in force read that when stone in the rough is consigned "coastwards" in truck loads of not less than 5 tons then a particular rate is given, which works out at 4d. per ton, and the whole question is what is the meaning of stone in the rough consigned "coastwards." The Government take up the position that because during a portion of the journey the train was going in a northerly direction, it was not then going "coastwards," that was when it was going from Queen's Town to Stormberg. They did not take up the position that Naauwpoort to De Aar is not "coastwards," and it was only from Queen's Town to Stormberg they charged the higher rate.

Mr. Benjamin: Our contention is that traffic going from Queen's Town to Stormberg was inland. The reason for the higher charge was that traffic to Stormberg required special haulage.

Mr. Searle: My contention is that when the goods are consigned "coastwards" then the higher rate cannot apply.

Arthur Hopkins, managing director of the plaintiff company, stated that about January, 1904, he was engaged making up a tender for the extension of the S.A. College, and it had to be constructed with Queen's Town stone. Before sending in his tender he approached the Railway Department as to the tariff rate of the stone from Queen's Town. He saw an official in the Inland Office in the goods yard, where he had been directed, and there he was told by a clerk that the rate was 32s. 9d. a ton, and upon that information he sent in his tender, which was accepted. About the 15th February he commenced to get the Queen's Town stone from a contractor. All the payments for the first couple of months were at the 32s. 9d. rate. The first intimation he had from the department about the increased rate was in April, when an official came with a long list of undercharges. As the tariff-book said the rate was 32s. 9d., the official in question said he thought the rate was correct, and witness refused to pay. A letter was then sent to the department pointing out that the rate of 32s. 9d., which was tendered to them, seemed to be correct according to the tariff-book. There was a difficulty about getting the goods from the department, and there was a certain amount of delay. A letter was subsequently sent enclosing the cheque for the overcharges, in order to release five trucks, but it was pointed out that the payment was made without prejudice. In June he made an effort to send the consignments by sea, but there were great difficulties in the way, and he had to fall back on the railway.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He was not very well acquainted with the offices of the railway station, but he knew the offices in the Goods Department. He was not told that the Rates Branch Office was the proper place to make inquiries. He could not say who the gentleman was that he saw at the railway office. The trucks were detained in April until the higher rate was paid, but he did not know that of his own knowledge.

Henry Wm. Clark, who, at the time of the dispute, was with Hopkins and Co., stated he had written a good many of the letters in conjunction with Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Wilson, the cartage contractor, reported to him there was some difficulty with the Railway Department between 15th and 19th April, and witness discussed the matter with Mr. Ball, the Goods Superintendent, who said he thought his department was correct in charging 32s. 9d., but that another department had come down on them, and 38s. 4d. would have to be paid. Mr. Ball would not allow witness to unload the trucks on that day until the higher rate was paid. On witness's promise the trucks were released. Mr. Ball took up the position that unless witness paid for the stone he could not have it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Ball gave him to understand the trucks would not be released until the higher rate was paid.

Robert Henry Wilson said he was cartage contractor for plaintiffs last year. On one day in April, witness sent five carts down for stone, and they were sent back empty. Witness saw Mr. Clark, and drove him down to see Mr. Ball. There was a delay of one or two days before he could get the stone.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Herbert S. Ball, Goods Superintendent, said he was the person to authorise the detention of goods. In respect of none of these consignments of plaintiff's did he give any order for detention, until the higher rate was paid. He did not tell Mr. Clark that they would be detained until the higher rate was paid, but as a matter of fact, they would have been detained until the higher rate was paid. By an error made by a clerk, the lower rate was at first charged.

George Anderson said in April of last year he was chief clerk in the Inwards Inquiry Office. The charge he made was 32s. 9d. per ton, and that was the charge made in February and March, but instructions came from the General Manager's office that the rate was 38s. 4d. He would not have given the information as to rates to Mr. Hopkins.

[Maasdorp, J.: The question is, does the consignment note constitute the basis of the tariff?]

Mr. Searle: The consignment note is always made out on the basis of the tariff.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Advice notes would not be made out before the goods arrived. An invoice was always sent with the goods to enable the advice notes to be made out.

Mr. Searle said that in this case they got no advice note.

Continuing, witness said he took up the position that the rate to be charged was 32s. 9d. Witness received instructions to charge 38s. 4d., and did so up to that time. Witness thought 32s. 9d. the proper rate. Witness did not send in the account for back rates. As a fact, witness had nothing to do with the making up of that account. Witness had no recollection of telling Mr. Wilson that he could not take the goods away until the account was settled. When witness endeavoured to collect the account for the trucks which arrived on April 13 then the question of the extra charge was raised. Witness was placed in another office at that time.

[Maasdorp, J.: Do you still stick to your own opinion?]

He was superseded by Mr. Hall. A man named Hill made out some of the returns, but he had since left the Government service.

Mr. Searle: Was it because of this matter he left?—I cannot say that it was.

Re-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Witness denied that he told Wilson that the goods could not be removed until the account was paid.

Harry Aspinall stated the tariff-book was compiled in his office. The rate was fixed at 38s. 4d. in the case under dispute. This was because the stone had to go to Stormberg, which was inland, and charged at 1½d. per ton per mile, and then it had to come to Cape Town, which was coastwards, and the rate was ½d. per ton per mile. The reason the inland rate was so high was because it was against a gradient, and it cost considerably more to do it. The witness was closely examined as to the method of calculating the rates, and explained that it was a matter both of haulage and empty trucks. The advertisement which appeared in the papers with regard to the rates on stone from Queen's Town to Cape Town had nothing to do with this contract, the reason being that the Commissioner wished to put Queen's Town stone and stone from other inland places in a favourable position to compete with imported stone.

Cross-examined: The line between Rosmead and Naauwpoort was in a more northerly direction than that between Queen's Town and Stormberg, but they gave their customers the benefit of that.

Walter Craig Gallen, clerk in the Inwards Inquiry Office of the Goods Yard, said nobody in that department would have given Mr. Hopkins the information he wanted about the rate.

This closed his case, and counsel for plaintiff having been partly heard in argument, the further hearing of the case was adjourned until Monday.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J., said it appeared in this case that in February, 1904, plaintiff commenced to receive consignments of truck-loads of stone in the rough from Queen's Town. The stone was carried by the Railway Department in their trucks, and the charge was made at the rate of ½d. per ton per mile for the whole of the journey. In April it seemed the Railway Department were under the impression that they had discovered a mistake in the charge. They thought that the charge should have been made at a different rate from that which had been made up to that time. They consequently refused to deliver to the plaintiff five trucks of stone which arrived in April. The contention which they then put up was that, instead of 32s. 9d. for the journey from Queen's Town to Cape Town, they were entitled to and bound to charge under the tariff 38s. 4d. per ton. The plaintiff disputed in April the claim made by the defendants, and the plaintiff said that the defendants' servants refused to deliver up the five trucks of stone which had arrived, unless the higher charge of 38s. 4d. was paid. Now before the Court entered into the construction of the contract, he would like to dispose of the question of fact. The legal position of the parties might be different, according as it was decided tioned as prayed, mutual transfers to be passed by the various owners, in the case of the absence of one or more of the said owners, the High Sheriff to pass and receive the necessary transfer for such absentee or absentees; Mr. Julius Robert Jackson, of Nelspoort, to be appointed to effect the said partition, all parties concerned to be ordered at once to do all things necessary to enable the said J. R. Jackson to carry out his said duty; that all parties concerned pay the costs of partition pro rata, and that the defendants pay the costs of this suit, each to bear one-eighth share.

HEYDENRYCH V. STEER.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. De Waal) was for plaintiff; Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Russell) was for defendant.

Mr. Burton said that this case had been settled, and he had to move for judgment in terms of consent paper, which was as follows: Judgment for plaintiff for (a) the sum of £100, with interest at the rate of 2½ per cent. per month from the 1st August, 1903; (b) the sum of £150, with interest a tempore morae; (c) the sum of £360 3s. 2d., as and for damages, and that defendant's claim in reconvention be dismissed, with costs.

Judgment entered in terms of consent paper.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte MCKENZIE. { 1905.
Aug. 11th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, upon notice to the Master, for leave to presume the death of William Ditty Strehorn, and for directions for the appointment of an executor dative in the estate. The deceased was believed to have been drowned at Three Anchor Bay on the 18th November, 1900. He had gone to Three Anchor Bay to bathe, his clothes were found on the beach, and a few days later a body, which it was impossible to identify, was washed ashore. Counsel read the record of evidence given at the inquest. The verdict was "Washed ashore, probably drowned," the Magistrate adding that he was of opinion that the identity of the deceased had not been established. Strehorn left certain shares, a life policy, and other assets.

Leave granted to presume death, and the Master authorised to take steps to appoint an executor dative.

Ex parte SCHOLTZ.

Mr. Bailey moved for an order authorising the Master to pay out to petitioner certain moneys, due to the minor children of petitioner.

The Master reported favourably.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte GREYLING.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent petitioner's wife in an application for an order to declare her of unsound mind, and to appoint a curator bonis of her property. Petitioner's wife was at present confined in the Graham's Town Asylum, but petitioner resided in the Orange River Colony.

Ordered to stand over for further information, a question being raised as to whether this was the proper court in which to proceed.

KEATING V. NANNUCCI.

This was an application, upon notice calling upon the respondent to show cause why a certain sum of £200, now in the hands of the Registrar of the Supreme Court, should not be paid over to the applicant, less £62 14s., which said amount applicant owed, and had only tendered to the respondent on the 20th February, 1905, in settlement of a dispute which existed between the parties, failing acceptance whereof, why the Court should not order the said matter to be tried before an official arbitrator, or, as a further alternative, why respondent should not be ordered forthwith to proceed with an action, and to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay costs of the application. The respondent had given notice of a cross-application, calling upon Keating to show cause why he should be ordered to proceed by action.

The matter, it appeared, arose out of a building contract that Keating entered into with the Mother Superior of the Nazareth House for the erection of a laundry block, Keating being financed by Nannucci, and authorising the Mother Superior to make payments on account of the contract to Nannucci. Disputes took place between Keating and Nannucci, and upon motion for an interdict the Court directed any moneys payable under the contract to be paid into the hands of the Registrar pending a further order of Court. (15 C.T.R., 283.)

Mr. Struben for applicant. Mr. Close for respondent.

Mr. Close contended that it rested upon Keating to bring an action to determine the rights of the parties to the money in court. His client said that Keating owed him considerably more than £62 14s.

Mr. Struben said that his client was in the position of a defendant or a debtor, and it lay upon the respondent to bring an action or go to arbitration.

Hopley, J., asked Mr. Close why he objected to going to arbitration.

Mr. Close said that there were a good many people who preferred a court of law to arbitration.

[Hopley, J.: It depends which way the result goes.]

Mr. Close rejoined that people who had had experience of both preferred to lose at the Court rather than at the hands of an arbitrator.

An order was granted directing the respondent (Nannucci) to forthwith bring an action to establish his right to the sum of £200, or any part thereof, costs of application to stand over.

Hopley, J., remarked that he was sorry that the parties, instead of going to the additional expense of an action, could not have referred the matter to some competent person to decide the disputes between them.

Ex parte VAN DER WESTHUYSEN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to pass transfer of certain land situate in the district of Beaufort West.

The property had been bequeathed to petitioner and the children of her marriage. These were all now majors, and consented to the transfer; but in view of the possibility of her having further issue, the Registrar of Deeds refused to pass transfer without an order of Court.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte LOMBARD.

Mr. Gardiner moved, on behalf of the executrix testamentary in her late husband's estate, for leave to raise a loan of £1,000 on certain property at Craddock, in order to pay for property purchased on behalf of the estate in the Transvaal.

Order granted as prayed.

RANER V. BRADLEY AND CRAVEN.

Mr. Burton moved for a commission to take the evidence of Mr. H. F. Reply in Cape Town and two witnesses in Johannesburg.

Mr. Gutsche (for Bradley and Craven) consented, subject to the inclusion of a witness to be examined on behalf of his clients in Johannesburg or Cape Town.

Commission granted to examine the four witnesses named, Mr. Van Zyl to be commissioner in Cape Town and Mr. Saul Solomon in Johannesburg, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte THE NEW CAPE COLLIERIES, LTD.

Mr. Struben moved for the registration of certain servitude of a railway line in the division of Albert. The farm over which the railway passed had been bequeathed subject to the condition that it was not to be sold until the death of all the testator's children. In violation of this condition a portion had been sold to a railway company.

Order granted, empowering the Registrar of Deeds to register the servitude upon the sum of £700 being deposited with a trust company to the satisfaction of the Registrar, to abide the final distribution of the proceeds of the land in terms of the will.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX V. KINSLEY. { 1905.
{ Aug. 14th.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate at Cape Town in a case in which the appellant was charged with the theft of 10s. by means of embezzlement and of 4s. 6d. from the Table Bay Fish Company, in which he was employed. Appellant was convicted. The appeal was on the ground that the decision was not supported by the weight of evidence.

Mr. Van Zyl appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Nightingale for the Crown.

Mr. Van Zyl said there was very little evidence to support the first charge of theft by embezzlement of 10s. There must be felonious intent, and there was no felonious intent here, the accused rightly or wrongly assuming that it was his own property. If there was a ground for complaint then the proper remedy was a civil action. As to the 4s. 6d., all the evidence showed there was no theft committed. The business of the complainant Steer appeared to have been carried on in a very lax way, and a very ugly feature of the case was Steer's desire to come to a settlement for £18 for stock he said he had lost. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, he submitted there was no ground for conviction.

Maasdorp, J., without calling upon Mr. Nightingale, said the Magistrate came to the conclusion that there was a criminal intention, and he thought there was abundant evidence to support the contention of the Magistrate. As to the charge of theft of 4s. 6d., the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the theft was proved, and the Court would not interfere with that decision.

The appeal was therefore dismissed.

REX V. XELO.

This was an appeal from the Resident Magistrate, Umtata, sentencing the appellant to nine months' imprisonment for contravening Act 35 of 1893, amended by Proclamation 109 of 1900, in that on the 25th June last he wrongfully and unlawfully stole a goat, the property of one Siekete. The appellant pleaded not guilty. The appeal was based on the grounds that the decision was contrary to the weight of evidence.

From the evidence for the prosecution, it seemed that a goat was stolen from Siekete's kraal, and about the same time the appellant sold the skin of a goat to a local dealer. The skin was identified by Siekete. For the defence the relatives of the appellant were examined, and they stated that the goat had been reared by him.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for appellant, and Mr. Nightingale represented the Crown.

Mr. Benjamin contended that as the balance of evidence was in favour of the appellant, he was entitled to succeed in the present case.

Mr. Nightingale contended that the evidence brought forward for the defence at the magisterial investigation was not very reliable, as the appellant and his principal witness had been undergoing imprisonment for theft.

Maasdorp, J.: There was a great conflict of evidence on some material points which the Magistrate seemed to have given against the accused. The whole question was: Could the varacity of the accused be relied upon? The evidence for the defence on two important points was found to be false, and the Magistrate, taking that into consideration, was quite right in finding that the goat belonged to Siekete. The appeal would be dismissed.

REX V. EZDROWSKI.

Act 47 of 1902, Sec. 11—Sec. 3 (c).

E. had falsely represented herself to the Immigration officer as a married woman, whose husband was resident in S. Africa. Three weeks after landing she was married, and then represented herself as a spinster.

Held on appeal, that she had been rightly convicted under Sec. 11 of Act 47 of 1902.

This was an appeal from the decision of the R.M. of Cape Town, sentencing the appellant to pay a fine of £10, or the alternative to undergo two months' imprisonment, with hard labour, for contravening section 11, part 2, of Act 47 of 1902, in making a false declaration under the Immigration Act. She was tried before the Assistant Resident Magistrate, who held a preliminary investigation, and committed appellant for trial, but the case was remitted by the Attorney-General.

The appeal was based on the grounds that the Immigration Act did not apply to her, she being exempted therefrom under section 3 of the Act.

From the evidence it appeared that the appellant gained admission to the Colony by telling the Immigration Officer that she was a married woman, and was proceeding to Johannesburg to join her husband, whereas, three weeks after landing, she was married at the Registry Office, Wynberg.

Dr. Greer, for the appellant, contended that, as she had become domiciled in the Colony by reason of her marriage with a naturalised British subject prior to the prosecution being instituted, that she was entitled to succeed in her appeal.

Mr. Nightingale submitted that the present case was one that the Act in question was intended to meet. By saying she was a married woman, she endeavoured to establish her respectability, and by that means succeeded in gaining admission to the Colony, which she otherwise could not have done.

Maasdorp, J., said that the appellant in this case made a false statement, in order to obtain a certificate for the purposes of the Act. Now it appeared that the certificate which it was necessary for her to obtain was that from the officer appointed to examine into these matters, in order to gain permission to land in this country. In order to obtain such permission, she stated to the officer that she was a married woman, and that her husband resided in Johannesburg. That satisfied the officer that she was a married woman, and upon reference to the Act, it seemed that he was satisfied to proceed no further in his examination into her circumstances, because it appeared that under section 3 of the Act, sub-section D, the wife of a person who was allowed to come into the country should be allowed to enter the country. As soon as the officer found that she was exempted from these disabilities, he allowed her to land. He stated that what satisfied him was the statement made by her, and that it was in consequence of this statement that he gave the necessary permission. Now this statement was a false statement. She made this statement on April 6, and it was only discovered to be false when she applied to the Magistrate for a licence in June, she being then called upon to make a declaration as to her condition, and she described herself as a spinster. Upon that inquiry was made, and it was found that she contravened the Act on the 6th April. It had been argued by Dr. Greer on her behalf that she was exempted from prosecution, because she now came under the description given under section 3, being now the wife of a person exempted in this colony. It was clear that the offence she committed was not excused by any subsequent change of condition. The offence was committed in April, and her subsequent marriage only took place in June. It was quite clear that there was a contravention of the section in April, and under these circumstances the appeal would be dismissed, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

MCKILLOP V. ZUCKERMAN. { 1905.
Aug. 14th.

Sale and purchase—Dominium— Fraud.

One S. had obtained certain goods from K. by means of fraudulent misrepresentations. S. thereafter sold them to Z, from whom K. now claimed them.

Held, that as the dominium of the goods had never vested in S., K. was entitled to vindicate his goods and to recover damages for such of them as had passed out of defendant's control.

This was an action brought by J. R. McKillop, tile and marble merchant, Cape Town, against Joseph Zuckerman, carrying on business in Cape Town as the Colonial Cabinet Factory, for restoration of 100 marble table tops or slabs, or, in default, payment of their value of £59 16s.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that on the 12th May last he had in his possession 124 marble tops, of the value of £73. On that date defendant, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, obtained possession of 100 of the said marble tops, of the value of £56 16s., and wrongfully and unlawfully detained the same, and although called upon to do so, refused to restore the same to plaintiff.

Defendant, in his plea, said that he was not aware that plaintiff was the owner of any marble table tops in his (defendant's) possession, and that he had purchased 100 marble table tops from one G. R. Smith, of Main road, Claremont. The said Smith was the true and lawful owner of and was entitled to sell the same. Defendant prayed that the claim might be dismissed with costs.

Plaintiff, in his replication, denied that Smith was at any time the true and lawful owner of the said table tops, or that he had at any time the right to sell the said table tops. Smith obtained the said table tops on condition that he paid to the plaintiff forthwith a sum of £45. Smith did not then, and had not since, paid the said sum of £45, or any part thereof. Defendant said further that if the said sale did take place it was ineffectual in law, and defendant could not claim any property in the said table tops. As an alternative, plaintiff said that Smith obtained possession of the goods by fraud, representing that a cheque for £45, which he had handed to plaintiff, was good and valid, and that there were funds to meet it. The said cheque was dishonoured by the bank for want of funds.

Defendant, in his rejoinder, said that he had no knowledge of the allegations as to transactions between plaintiff and Smith, and as to the dishonoured cheque.

Mr. M. Bisset (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) was for plaintiff; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for defendant.

Mr. Jones applied for leave to amend the plea, inasmuch as the defendant had bona fide disposed of a number of the marble tops to third parties. Defendant had in his possession 28 large table tops and 56 small ones, and counsel applied to amend the plea accordingly.

Mr. Bisset objected to such an amendment.

Hopley, J., declined to allow the amendment at this stage.

Joseph Robinson McKillop (the plaintiff) said that he carried on business in Hout-street as a tile and marble merchant. He recollected the sale on the 12th May last of the table tops in question to Mr. Smith. Mr. Stevenson acted on behalf of witness. Smith, he understood, bought 124 marble table tops for £73, and gave him a cheque for £45. Witness would not have allowed the goods to go out of his possession had the cheque not been handed over forthwith. He had had small cash transactions with Smith previously. The cheque was drawn on the Standard Bank and was dishonoured. Witness claimed 100 marble slabs from Mr. Zuckerman, 24 having been traced to the possession of another merchant. Criminal proceedings were instituted in regard to Smith, and certain affidavits had been filed, but Smith had not been arrested, having absconded.

Herbert Garland Stevenson, an assistant in plaintiff's employ, said that on the 12th May, Smith said that he had obtained an order for 100 suites of furniture from Garlick's, and that he wanted the marble tops. Smith went away ostensibly to show a sample to Garlick's, and then returned and said that he would take 124 of the slabs, the small ones to be 11s. each, and the large ones at 15s. Witness knew at that time that Smith was a cabinetmaker at Claremont. Smith said that he would let him have £45 on account, and that he would give him the balance on the following Monday. Smith gave him a cheque for £45. Witness then delivered the goods over to Smith, who said that he was taking the goods to his shop. Witness inquired at Garlick's, and found that they had not given Smith an order for furniture, but had bought 24 marble tops from him. Smith had bought table tops previously from plaintiff, but had always paid cash, the transactions being small. The goods were put on two wagons after delivery had been given to Smith. Witness afterwards saw the driver of the wagons (Cohen), who told him that he had taken the marble tops to Zuckerman's store. Witness found that all the table tops sold by Smith to Garlick's were small.

Cross-examined: Witness did not know at the time of the transaction that Smith was in difficulties.

Plaintiff (recalled) said that, as near as he could calculate, the cost of the table tops landed at his shop would be 8s. for small tops and 10s. 6d. for large ones.

Isaac Cohen, a wagon-driver, said that in May last a man came to him and ordered him to load up his wagon at McKillop's store with marble tops. He took a load and a half to Zuckerman's store and a half-load to Garlick's. Smith accompanied witness on the wagon.

Willoughby Seymour, clerk in the Standard Bank, Claremont, said that a man named George Reginald Smith opened an account on the 3rd May last, and deposited £20. On the 12th May last Smith had 5s. to his credit. The cheque for £45 was presented and dishonoured for want of funds.

Joseph Charles Mitchell, manager of the furniture department, Garlick's stores, said that he agreed to purchase 24 slabs from Smith upon a sample that the latter produced. That was the only transaction Garlick's had had with Smith. They had not given an order for 100 suites of furniture.

Cross-examined: They could import similar slabs at 6s. 6d. They bought the slabs from Smith at 6s. They were short of the slabs at the time, and were awaiting delivery of similar goods from Europe at their stores at 6s. 6d.

Mr. Bisset closed his case.

The defendant, Joseph Zuckerman, Colonial Cabinet Manufacturing Company, said that he had had some difficulty about obtaining slabs from England, and had had to borrow from local firms. He was short of slabs when Smith offered him the goods in question. He knew Smith, but he had had no previous dealings with him. He understood that Smith got the goods from the Docks. The goods arrived without crates, and witness commented on this fact, whereupon Smith said that he had unpacked the slabs at the Docks for the purposes of selling in different lots. Witness agreed to pay Smith 6s. each for 60 small slabs, and 8s. 6d. each for 40 larger ones, except four which had been damaged, and upon which Smith made an allowance. Witness agreed to pay £33 6s., less 5 per cent. for cash, his payments being £20 and £11 13s., making a total of £31 13s. Before Mr. McKillop's representative and a detective called at his place on the following Tuesday he had used 12 of the large slabs, and had delivered six back to the Louvre. He had then 84 slabs in his possession. The white slabs were cheaper than the coloured slabs.

Cross-examined by Mr. Bisset: He suggested to take the detective round and show him the slabs. He told McKillop's representative that if he had authority from the Court he would show him the slabs. It did not strike him as strange that the man should go round selling slabs in a large quantity. Witness took it that he was an importer. The explanation given of the slabs being loose was that the goods had been unpacked with a view to their disposal in different quantities. He never had any suspicions with regard to this transaction. The driver told witness that the goods came from a store, but it did not occur to him to ask where the store was. With regard to the price of the goods, he considered that he paid full value for them.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: If I had had any doubt as to the way in which my judgment should go in this case, I should have taken time to formulate the judgment, and to go into all the authorities, in view of the somewhat interesting circumstances of this case, and of the way in which the points have been argued. But it seems to me that, after all, the case may be reduced to very simple limits, and there ought to be no doubt, as our law stands, as to the way in which the judgment in this case should go. On Friday, May 12, Smith went to the plaintiff's shop, and represented that he had obtained a considerable order for furniture from Garlick's, and that he would require about 100 slabs for the purposes of this contract. He got two specimens, and went away, and afterwards returned and ordered 124 of these slabs. They were not given to him on credit, and, in fact, I have no reason to doubt Mr. McKillop and his clerk when they say that the matter was a sale for cash, as all previous transactions had been. But instead of paying in cash, Smith wrote out a cheque, representing that he had the money in a bank at Claremont, and he gave McKillop a cheque for £45 in part payment of the whole amount, which was £73, and he also received a promise from Smith that he would bring the balance of the money on the Monday. Smith took the slabs away, and sold them at prices much under those which he had just contracted to pay for them. All Smith's actions showed that he was committing a fraud. He had never received an order from Garlick's for this contract that he spoke about, and he had no money in the bank at Claremont to meet the cheque. It is a perfectly clear case of swindling McKillop out of his goods by means of false pretences, or what we should call in the Criminal Courts a case of obtaining goods by means of false pretences, a species of fraud which has been constantly dealt with by our Courts in exactly similar circumstances, and treated as a species of theft. It has been argued that, because McKillop took this cheque, and because he agreed to wait until Monday for the balance of £28, the transaction was a sale by credit, or partly for credit and partly for cash, and that accordingly McKillop must be taken to have parted with his dominium in these goods. It is quite possible, if the matter had stood simply there, and there had been no fraud in this matter—if this cheque had not been a fraudulent one, and if there had been no fraudulent representations—I might have held that under the circumstances dominium passed from the plaintiff to Smith. I quite agree that the doctrine of law in this colony, whereby a person can reclaim from a third party who has obtained bona fide and for valuable consideration any goods sold for cash if they have not been paid for is one that should not be extended. That doctrine applies where the sale in the first instance was bona fide. But here is a case in which the goods were practically stolen, and I cannot hold that plaintiff passed dominium in the property to a thief like Smith, who was tricking him out of these goods, and Smith could not pass to the defendant any greater rights in the property than he himself possessed. It is undoubtedly a hard case for the defendant, but we must administer the law as it stands, and judgment must be for the plaintiff in this case. It is said that some few of the slabs had been parted with by the defendant, but I do not think that that can be on the present pleadings any defence. I think that Mr. Bisset was perfectly right in objecting to any amendment of the pleadings. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff for the return of such of the goods belonging to him as defendant still has in his possession, or others of similar quality, to make up the full quantity, and in respect of any that he cannot so return he must pay the plaintiff at the rate of 10s. for each large slab and 7s. 6d. for each small slab. Defendant must pay the costs of suit.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

CARR AND CO. V. LENDERS { 1905.
AND CO. { Aug. 15th.

Contract, verbal—Breach—Measure of damages.

This was an action brought by Carr and Co., tea and coffee merchants, Cape Town, against F. H. Lenders and Co., of Cape Town, and elsewhere, to recover a sum of £66 10s., as and for damages for breach of contract.

The declaration stated that in November, 1903, the plaintiffs entered into a contract to purchase 100 bags of coffee from the defendants, 50 bags to be of the quality known as "regulars," and the rest to be of the quality known as "fourths." The prices were to be 26s. 9d. per 100 lb. for "regulars," and 22s. 6d. per 100 lb. for "fourths," both to be c. and f. Defendants neglected to carry out the contract, and subsequently repudiated it. Plaintiffs had to purchase coffee elsewhere, and they now claimed damages at the rate of 10s. per 100 lb. on both qualities, each bag actually containing about 130 lb. Plaintiffs said that the market for coffee had since the said sale risen greatly, and they prayed for judgment for £66 10s., with costs.

Defendants, in their plea, denied that, as alleged in the declaration, they were registered as a joint stock company in this colony, and said that their head office was in Johannesburg. They admitted that the Cape Town branch took the order from the plaintiffs, but said that it was agreed between the parties that such order should be taken, subject to confirmation by the defendants' head office in Johannesburg. On the day following the taking of the said order the head office of the defendant company refused to confirm the same. They denied that the plaintiffs had suffered any damages.

Mr. Benjamin was for plaintiffs; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan), was for defendants.

Jerome Washington Donovan (a member of the plaintiff firm) said that he had had six or seven transactions with the defendants. He met Mr. Joy (defendants' manager) in Church-square in November, 1903, when Mr. Joy told him they could make him a good offer of coffee. A few days later witness, from his office, rang up the defendants on the telephone in order to speak to one of their employees, Mr. Ericson. Mr. Joy answered the telephone, and told him that he had got the prices of coffee. Witness eventually told him that if he bought he would take fifty bags of each quality, and that he would walk over to defendants' office. The terms were to be c. and f. 26s. 9d. per 100 lb. for "regulars" and 22s. 6d. per 100 lb. for "fourths." He went over, and saw Mr. Ericson, who produced a copy containing the terms that Mr. Joy had given him over the telephone. Ericson pointed out a mistake on the paper, which gave the terms as c.i.f. He said that this would have to be altered, and witness agreed to take 50 bags of each kind of coffee at the prices named, but c. and f. Witness subsequently saw Mr. Joy, who said that he had made a mistake in regard to the c.i.f. terms. Witness rejoined, "That's all right; send the coffee along." The usual weight of a bag of Rio de Janeiro coffee such as they were dealing in was 130 lb. It was usual to allow three months for delivery of Rio coffee. No mention was made during the negotiations about the contract being subject to confirmation from the Johannesburg office. Two or three days after the contract had been entered into Joy rang witness up on the telephone, and said that the coffee would be 3d. per 100 lb. more than he had stated. Witness said that he would not pay any such sum, and that he would keep the defendants to their bargain. About three months later Mr. Joy, when spoken to by witness, denied that he had entered into any contract of sale. Witness had never purchased coffee from defendants subject to confirmation by the Johannesburg office. He had since had to purchase coffee from Brussels and Antwerp in consequence of the failure of the defendants to supply them with the "fourths" ordered. That coffee, he calculated, cost them about 15 per cent. more than the terms arranged with the defendants. They also bought "regulars" from Mr. Van der Byl from 45s. to 48s. per 100 lb. The market was going up all the time.

Cross-examined: At the time of the contract he did not know that the defendants' head office was in Johannesburg. All the communications leading up to the contract were verbal. Witness's firm were coffee roasters and tea blenders, and carried on a wholesale business. Defendants carried on business on quite a different scale from witness's firm. Witness often bought 50 bags of coffee by word of mouth. Witness did not think there was anything unusual about there being no documents embodying the contract between witness and Joy. Witness did not know why no questions concerning the third telephonic communications between witness and Mr. Joy were put to the latter, when he gave his evidence on commission in London. When Joy told him that he must pay 3d. per 100 lb. more witness thought Joy was simply trying to get a little more out of him.

Joseph L. O'Brien (another member of the plaintiff firm) said he gave the telephonic message about the coffee from defendants to Mr. Donovan. In the letter he wrote to defendants in February, the mark c.i.f. was a mistake on his part.

By the Court: He made no entry of the contract in any of the books.

J. W. Donovan (recalled) said he took a note of the prices when they were questioned by Mr. Joy.

James William Bam (manager of Van der Byl and Co.'s grocery department) said the price of coffee in February, 1904, was 45s. to 48s., having risen from 33s. in November. That was the price of "regulars."

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

For the defence, counsel read the evidence taken on commission in London of William Frederick Joy, who was manager of the Cape Town branch of the defendant company at the time of the alleged contract. Witness stated that he told Mr. Donovan that the prices quoted included freight, but not insurance, and he accepted the order, subject to confirmation next morning from the head office at Johannesburg. He was perfectly certain of that. Next morning he rang up Mr. Donovan, and said he could not let him have the coffee at those prices. Witness gave evidence in regard to certain correspondence. He went on to say that Donovan was well aware that he only took orders subject to confirmation. Donovan had previously given him an order on similar terms. In cross-examination, witness said that if Ericson told Donovan that he had left a paper giving the prices, he was mistaken. When witness told Donovan that he must ask an increased price, the latter did not accept, giving as his reason that he had bought on the previous day. Witness never authorised Ericson to confirm a contract with Donovan, and Ericson would have had no authority to confirm a contract in witness's absence.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Hopley, J.: The only question which arises in this case is whether the contract was finally concluded or not. The plaintiff says that there was a firmly-accepted contract, and that there was a perfect consensus on both sides between him and one Joy, who was the authorised representative of the defendant company in this town. Joy does not deny that such a contract was made, but he says that it was made subject to the confirmation of the head office of the defendants, which he (Joy) says was in Johannesburg, but of which there is no evidence to prove that plaintiff knew at that time. It is a question of the evidence of Mr. Joy against that of Mr. Donovan. I have had the advantage of seeing Donovan himself; I have not had the advantage of seeing Joy. Donovan seems to tell a perfectly straightforward story, and when we look at the telegrams which passed between Joy and the company in Johannesburg, they seem to me to support most strongly and almost absolutely the version given by Mr. Donovan. The first telegram that he sent was the telegram of a man who had concluded a final agreement without any stipulation as to any confirmation. The impression made by that telegram is confirmed by the terms of the second telegram sent by him on the same day, both of which point to an out and out sale without stipulation. Joy afterwards discovered that he had made a mistake in regard to the latest prices of coffee at Rio de Janeiro, and it might then have become his policy to get out of this contract as well as he could. I have come to the conclusion that the contract was completed, as alleged by the plaintiff, on the 27th November, 1903. In the first instance, the loss was only of a few pounds, but it was a rising market, and, as time went on, the loss became much greater, and what might have been settled for a few pounds in the first instance grew eventually into a considerable loss; and Joy seems to have thought that as no broker's note had passed he might be able to repudiate the contract: but he did nothing directed to that end until he and Donovan met in the street about 10th February, 1904, when he for the first time definitely repudiated the sale. That date, therefore, must be taken in order to fix the measure of damages. The plaintiffs were then forced to purchase other coffee to take the place of what they had purchased from the defendants; and the difference in the prices is the amount they are entitled to recover in this action. The amount claimed seems to me somewhat less than such difference, and judgment will be for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed by them, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

BALL V. BALL. } 1905.
 } Aug. 16th.

This was an action for divorce brought by Mrs. Ball against her husband by reason of his adultery with one Amy Scott.

The plaintiff's declaration stated that the defendant deserted her and went with Amy Scott to reside at East London. Plaintiff followed him, and lived with him again for a couple of weeks.

Mr. Swift appeared for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

Hopley, J., said that that action practically amounted to a condonation.

Mr. Swift said he had only heard of the condonation too late to bring evidence of subsequent adultery from East London. It was because she found defendant continuing to live with Amy Scott that she brought this action.

The plaintiff, Christina Ball, stated she was married to defendant in 1894, and lived happily with him until 1901, when he became intimate with Amy Scott, and finally went to live with her at Woodstock, and afterwards at Sea Point. Defendant and Scott then went to live at East London, but witness, having heard that it was all right, found her husband at East London, and lived with him for a fortnight, when she saw him arm in arm with Scott. He then broke up the home, and forced witness to leave. There were three children issue of the marriage, which she had since had to support.

The application was granted, with the custody of the children.

ESTATE PLEHN V. BRAUND.

This was an action to have a sale of certain property by an insolvent declared null and void.

The plaintiff's declaration stated that the estate of one Plehn was sequestrated on April 24, 1905, shortly after he had sold his shop and goods to Braund for £700. Plaintiff claimed that the sale was a fraudulent one at the expense of the insolvent's creditors, and that the defendant was privy to the fact that the estate was insolvent at the time.

Defendant's plea contended that the sale was a bona-fide one.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Gutsche) appeared for the plaintiff, and Sir H. Juta (with him Mr. Benjamin) for the defendant.

Samuel J. Lamey Plehn, brother of the insolvent, said that £887 0s. 9d. had been proved against the estate, and there were no assets whatever. The insolvent formerly carried on business at the Paarl. A special order had been made to attach the goods in the shop, but the shop was found to be in the possession of Braund. Witness had not been able to locate the insolvent, who had absconded. There were no means of obtaining the books. The accounts proved showed that they were contracted more than two months before the sale to defendant. Witness had seen the deed of sale, which purported to pass the shop and goods, but nothing was said about the goodwill. The goods were valued at £523, and if they were brought into the estate they would be the only assets that could be claimed at all.

Cross-examined: He did not know that the goods were in defendant's own shop, not in the one purchased from Plehn. No request had been made to have a look at the goods or to have them valued.

Thomas B. Hunter, traveller for Messrs. Webster and Co., said he had business transactions with Plehn and his brother Bernard for about ten months. At length the limit of credit was reached, and as the shop was stocked with goods on all the shelves, witness had a conversation with Bernard Plehn on February 9. Witness had made repeated calls inquiring for Herman Plehn, and because of the evasive replies concluded that he had absconded. On March 8, Bernard Plehn was still in charge, and had a power of attorney to collect debts and conduct other business on his behalf. It was then that witness heard that Braund had purchased the store. By this time there was a marked decrease in the stock. Shelves that had been packed a month before were then empty.

Cross-examined: The deed of sale had been signed on February 27. No questions had been asked about the goods being taken to Braund's shop.

Davis H. Turnbull, a traveller in the employment of Burmeister's, also stated he was anxious with regard to the whereabouts of Plehn, whom he last saw in January. In March witness saw Bernard Plehn, but not a word was said about Braund. It was only after the provisional order that Bernard mentioned the sale to Braund.

C. W. Cousins, of the Immigration Department, stated Herman Plehn landed in Cape Town in April, 1904, his financial position being represented by a cheque signed by S. Vogelmann, of the Paarl, for £20, and a signed agreement to work for him and Braund.

Sydney Archbell, manager of the Paarl branch of the Bank of Africa, said that Vogelmann was Plehn's brother-in-law. Both had accounts with the bank. Plehn's position was always weak, and he did not know who was keeping him going.

Albert Paulse said Plehn had told him that the stock belonged to Vogelmann.

James McDonnell, private inquiry agent, who had had the estate under observation on behalf of the creditors, gave evidence as to the closing of Plehn's and Braund's shops after the provisional order had been issued. Witness had traced Plehn outside the Colony.

This closed the evidence for the plaintiff.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: If it had been proved that there had been a fraud to which the defendant had been privy, the Court would be bound to set aside the sale. But a party alleging fraud should be prepared to prove it conclusively. The most important piece of evidence that has been produced in this case was a deed of sale of the goods in question, being apparently all the goods in the shop of the defendant. That document was drawn up and executed in the office of an attorney of this Court of good repute, and was witnessed by witnesses apparently in that office. All the goods were clearly inventoried, and prices seem to have been fairly placed against them all. Now, it is clear that the man Plehn, who has since been made insolvent, has run away without satisfying his creditors: but it is not proved that defendant was a party to his absconding. The circumstances are undoubtedly suspicious, but it should be borne in mind that the defendant is virtually accused of a crime, and all that is adduced in evidence against him is only sufficient to raise a suspicion. There would not be sufficient evidence to send the defendant for trial before a jury on a criminal charge, and this Court should follow the ordinary principles of law and assume innocence until guilt is prima facie established. That might possibly have been done if the plaintiff had availed himself of the machinery of the Insolvent Laws, and elicited all the facts by means of a commission, where the matter could have been thoroughly sifted by examination of all parties who had anything to do with the impugned transaction. The plaintiff has, however, elected to come to this Court with insufficient evidence, and there must be absolution from the instance with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

THE ABERDEEN MUNICIPALITY V. THE ABERDEEN D.R. CHURCH.	}	1905. Aug. 15th. " 16th. " 17th. " 18th. " 21st.
---	---	---

Village Commonage—Ord. 9 of 1836—Act 45 of 1882.

In 1856 the farm B. was transferred to the Kerkeraad, for the time being, of the D.R. Church of Aberdeen. The Kerkeraad sold various erven under conditions, whereby the vendors reserved their right to sell more erven and to impose such regulations on the purchasers as might from time to time be made either by the Kerkeraad or other local authority which might succeed them for the management of the township. The Municipality subsequently acquired some 5,000 morgen as additional grazing land, and now complained that the Kerkeraad were selling portions of the commonage as erven, and thereby restricting their grazing rights, and claimed a declaration that the defendants should not be entitled to sell further erven. They further asked for a declaration that the Town Commonage was under their exclusive control.

Held, that (1) the grazing rights of the owners of erven extend over the farm subject to any rights which the Kerkeraad may possess. (2) That as the original lands of B. were insufficient to depasture all the cattle, the inhabitants were entitled to place thereon: the defendants were not entitled to sell such portion of the commonage as would appreciably affect the plaintiffs' rights. (3) That Ord. 9 of 1836 and Act 45 of 1882 did not apply to the commonage in this case, inasmuch as the inhabitants had acquired only a common right to the servitude of grazing stock on the commonage, but not to the solum thereof.

This was an action in which the plaintiffs sued for a declaration of rights in respect of the town commonage of Aberdeen and the user thereof.

The plaintiffs' declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are the Municipality of Aberdeen, duly constituted by a proclamation of His Excellency the then Governor, in Council, No. 283 of 1903, dated the 11th day of September, 1903, in terms of the Municipal Act of 1882; and are a Corporation entitled by law to sue. To the said Corporation appertain, and in the same are vested, all rights and privileges that appertained to, or were vested in, the Commissioners of the Municipality of Aberdeen previous to the passing of the said Act.

2. The defendants are the Kerkeraad or Consistory of the Dutch Reformed Church at Aberdeen aforesaid, and are sued in their capacity as such.

3. The town of Aberdeen was established in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, by the then Kerkeraad or Consistory of the said church on certain land belonging to the same, in extent three thousand morgen. "Water-erven," forming part of such town, were sold by them on the 19th day of September, 1856, and "dry-erven," also forming part of such town, were sold by them at the same time or not long thereafter.

4. In the conditions of sale under which the said water-erven were sold the right was reserved to the Kerkeraad or Consistory for the time being of the said church to effect further sales of erven. Clauses 11 and 12 of the said conditions provided that no purchaser or owner of erven should be entitled to keep on the public commonage within the limits of the said land more than a certain number of horned cattle, slaughter sheep and goats, and horses, unless by direction of the Kerkeraad or Consistory aforesaid or some person authorised by them. In the conditions of sale of dry-erven a similar right was reserved, and clauses 10 and 11 thereof make similar provisions relative to grazing rights. The plaintiffs crave leave to refer to the said conditions of sale when produced at the trial.

5. The true intent and meaning of the said clauses are that the purchasers or owners of erven should be entitled to sufficient pasturage on the said commonage for the number of cattle therein mentioned; and the sellers of the said erven were and are not entitled to sell further erven with the grazing rights thereunto attaching to such an extent as to render the said pasturage insufficient for the said number of cattle belonging to the said purchasers and owners respectively.

6. Prior to September, 1904, the Kerkeraad or Consistory aforesaid had effected sales and transfers of erven to such an extent that the said commonage was and is already more than fully stocked with the cattle belonging to purchasers and owners of such erven, and grazed by them in accordance with the said clauses of the conditions of sale; and any further sales of erven, if effected, would be effected to the prejudice and in diminution of the grazing rights of such purchasers and owners, and in curtailment of the extent of ground available for pasturage for their cattle.

7. On or about the 17th day of September, 1904, the Kerkeraad or Consistory aforesaid advertised as for sale by public auction on that date certain erven adjoining those previously sold, and, notwithstanding the written protests of the plaintiffs, duly communicated to them before such projected sale, actually did sell them on that date; and they claim the right to sell as many erven as to them may seem fit. The plaintiffs contend that the sales of the said erven were unlawful, as being to the prejudice of the rights of erf-holders in respect of their grazing rights on the said commonage.

8. The plaintiffs, as representing the inhabitants of the town of Aberdeen generally, and the aforesaid purchasers and owners of erven in particular, are by reason of the premises entitled to an interdict to restrain the defendants from transferring the erven then sold, and from effecting any sales or transfers in future of any more erven.

9. Municipal regulations for the town of Aberdeen were framed in accordance with the Statutes thereto relating, and were confirmed on the 17th day of September, 1857, by His Excellency the then Governor, and have been in force ever since, with such amendments as have from time to time been lawfully made.

10. The plaintiffs have had the control and administration of the said commonage from the time such regulations were framed and for a period of more than thirty years until the time of the occurrences hereinafter complained of; and under the said Act 45 of 1882, and regulations lawfully made thereunder, the said commonage is vested in the plaintiffs for the benefit of the inhabitants of the said Municipality.

11. In the year 1904 the plaintiffs granted to certain auctioneers at Aberdeen the right to erect certain kraals which were necessarily required for sales of cattle, as they lawfully might do.

12. On the 19th day of September, 1904, thereafter the defendants, unwarrantably seeking to interfere with the said lawful control and administration of the said commonage by the plaintiffs, demanded and required the removal of the said kraals, which demand has not been complied with, and claim the right and have threatened to eject the said auctioneers.

13. Some time previous to February, 1904, the plaintiffs gave permission to a certain golf club at Aberdeen to make use of a certain portion of the said commonage as golf links, as they lawfully might do.

14. On the 16th day of February, 1904, the defendants, unwarrantably seeking to interfere as aforesaid, gave notice to the plaintiffs that they required the plaintiffs to apply to them for permission to allow such use of the commonage; which plaintiffs have refused to do, and the defendants claim the right and have threatened to eject the members of the said club.

15. By reason of the premises as in the foregoing paragraphs numbered 9 to 14 in this declaration contained the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration of rights as hereinafter more fully prayed for.

Wherefore the plaintiffs claim:

(a) A declaration of their rights regarding the town commonage or village land of Aberdeen aforesaid.

(b) A declaration that the owners of erven or lots in the said village are entitled to depasture and graze upon the said town commonage or village land such number of cattle, sheep, goats, horses, mules, and other stock as are now or may hereafter from time to time be fixed by regulation or regulations of the plaintiffs.

(c) A declaration that the defendants are not entitled to sell either publicly or privately or to transfer in pursuance of such sales any further portion or portions whatever of the said town commonage or village land; such being to the prejudice of and in diminution of the grazing rights of existing erf-holders.

(d) A declaration that the said town commonage or village land is under the exclusive control and management of the plaintiffs.

(e) A declaration that the defendants are not entitled to interfere with the plaintiffs in the granting of licences or permission to use portions of the said town commonage or village lands, for purposes for the benefit of the inhabitants of the said Municipality generally.

(f) An interdict perpetually restraining the defendants from selling and transferring erven or lots as aforesaid and from interfering with the exercise of the rights of plaintiffs as claimed above.

(g) Alternative relief; and

(h) Costs of suit.

To this declaration the plaintiffs pleaded as follows:

1. The defendants admit paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of the declaration, save that as to paragraph 3 they further say that transfer of the said land had been theretofore passed to the Board of Churchwardens of the said church at the then newly-projected town of Aberdeen, and the defendants are now the registered owners of the whole of such extent of the said land as has not been heretofore transferred by them to others; and they crave leave to refer to their deeds of transfer at the trial. The limits of the Municipality are co-terminous with the boundaries of the land transferred to the said Board of Churchwardens in 1856.

2. As to paragraph 4, the defendants crave leave to refer to the said conditions of sale when produced at the trial. In the conditions of sale under which water erven, and likewise in those under which dry erven were sold, the right was reserved to the Kerkraad or Consistory for the time being to sell further erven whenever they should deem meet. The respective conditions aforesaid were registered with the title deeds of the said erven. Clauses 11 and 12 of the conditions of sale of water erven, and also Clauses 10 and 11 of the conditions of sale of dry erven, provided that the purchaser or owner of any erf should in no case be entitled to graze on the public pasturage more than a span of 10 oxen, 3 cows, or 13 head of horned cattle in all, 25 slaughter sheep and goats, and 2 horses; that all cattle or horses above the said number should be impounded, and that no one should graze or allow any cattle to run, unless by direction of the Kerkeraad or some person thereto authorised. The land referred to as public pasturage in the said conditions (11-12 and 10-11 respectively) and as public commonage in the declaration (and hereinafter termed the pasturage) is included in that portion of the said land registered in the name of the defendants which has not yet been cut up into erven or disposed of as aforesaid. Save as above, they deny paragraph 4.

3. The defendants deny that the true intent and meaning of the said clauses are as set forth in paragraph 5 of the declaration. They admit that the purchasers or owners of erven sold subject to the aforesaid conditions of sale are in no case entitled to graze more than the number of cattle, sheep, goats and horses set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, but they deny that such purchasers or owners are entitled as of right to graze the full number of animals therein set forth, and deny that they (the defendants) were not or are not now entitled to sell further erven. They say that if by reason of the sale of further erven the pasturage has become or in the future may become insufficient for the grazing by each purchaser or owner of the full number of animals set forth above, the number which each purchaser or owner may graze should and can be abated, so as to allow each purchaser or owner of the several erven sold subject to the aforesaid conditions of sale by the defendants an equal share in the grazing for which the pasture may suffice.

4. With further reference to paragraph 5, they say that Clause 18 of the Conditions of Sale of water erven (17 of dry erven) provides that each purchaser or owner of any erf shall obey all such regulations as from time to time may be made by the Kerkeraad or such other local administration as may succeed the Kerkeraad.

5. As to paragraph 6 of the declaration:

(a) They admit that prior to September, 1904, they had effected sales and transfers of erven, as they lawfully might do, but deny that in consequence of such sales or by any act of theirs or in any way the pasturage has become overstocked. If the pasturage has become overstocked, they say that this is due to the acts or defaults of the plaintiffs.

(b) The plaintiffs have unlawfully permitted persons, who are not entitled to graze cattle, sheep, goats or horses on the pasturage, to graze such animals, and permitted persons who are entitled to graze cattle, sheep, goats and horses on the pasturage, under the aforesaid Conditions of Sale to graze such animals in excess of the maximum provided by the said conditions.

(c) Save as above, the defendants deny the allegations in paragraph 6.

6. They admit paragraph 7 of the declaration down to the word "date" in line 5 thereof, and say that they are still entitled to sell erven as they may deem meet. They deny that the sales of the said erven were unlawful, or that they were to the prejudice of any rights which the erf-holders might have in respect of grazing.

7. As to paragraph 8 of the declaration, defendants deny that the plaintiffs are entitled to the interdict claimed or to any other order against them herein.

8. As to paragraph 9, they admit that Municipal Regulations for the town of Aberdeen have been framed and from time to time amended. As to the legality of such regulations, they refer to the terms of the said regulations and of the Statutes under which they purport to have been framed.

9. As to paragraph 10, they deny that the plaintiffs now have or at any time have had the control or administration of the pasturage. They deny that the said pasturage is vested in the plaintiffs.

10. As to paragraph 11, they admit that in 1904 the plaintiffs purported to grant to certain auctioneers the right to erect certain kraals on the pasturage, but they deny that the plaintiffs were entitled to effect such grant, and say that they acted illegally in so purporting to effect such grant. They deny that such kraals were necessarily required.

11. As to paragraph 12, they admit that in September, 1904, they demanded and required the removal of the said kraals, and that the demand has not been complied with, and that they claim the right and have threatened to eject the said auctioneers, but they deny that they have acted or are acting illegally or unwarrantably.

12. They admit that the plaintiffs purported to give the permission set forth in paragraph 13, but they deny that the plaintiffs were entitled to give the said permission.

13. They admit paragraph 14, save that they deny that they acted illegally or unwarrantably.

14. They deny the allegation in paragraph 15.

Wherefore they pray that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

And for a claim in reconvention, the defendants (now plaintiffs) say:

1. They repeat the allegations in the plea set forth.

2. The plaintiffs (now defendants) wrongfully and unlawfully claim:

(a) That they are entitled to dig and carry away clay and sand, to quarry and carry away stones from the pasturage, and to grant permission to other persons so to dig, quarry, or carry away.

(b) That they are entitled to erect lime, brick, and charcoal kilns, and to erect huts, kraals, and other buildings and enclosures on the pasturage, and to grant permission to other persons so to erect.

(c) That they are entitled to grant permission to persons, other than the purchasers or owners of erven aforesaid, to graze cattle, sheep, goats and horses on the pasturage, and to grant permission to persons being such purchasers or owners, to graze cattle, sheep, goats and horses on the pasturage in excess of the number provided for in the aforesaid conditions of sale.

The defendants deny the several claims above in (a), (b), and (c) set forth.

3. In pursuance of their said claims, the plaintiffs have framed regulations, numbered 37, 55, 56, 57, 58, and 59 in the amended regulations for the Municipality of Aberdeen published in 1900, to which the defendants crave leave to refer when produced at the trial.

4. The plaintiffs have at various times wrongfully and unlawfully done the several acts the nature of which is set out and the lawfulness thereof denied in paragraph 2 hereof, and the defendants have been damnified and prejudiced thereby, and have suffered loss in the sum of £100.

5. The plaintiffs further claim that they are entitled to bore for water on the pasturage, which claim the defendants deny.

Wherefore the defendants claim:

(a) A declaration of their rights in respect of the pasturage and other lands within the limits of the plaintiff municipality registered in the name of the defendants.

(b) A declaration that the plaintiffs are not entitled to dig or carry away clay or sand, to quarry or carry away stones, to erect lime, brick, or charcoal kilns, huts, kraals, or other buildings or enclosures in or upon the said pasturage, or to grant permission to other persons to do any of the aforesaid acts.

(c) A declaration that the plaintiffs are not entitled to grant permission to graze cattle, sheep, goats or horses on the pasturage to persons who are not purchasers or owners of the erven aforesaid, or to grant permission to persons, being such purchasers or owners, to graze cattle, sheep, goats or horses in excess of the number provided for in the aforesaid conditions of sale.

(d) A declaration that the Regulations 37, 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59 in the edition of the amended regulations for the Municipality of Aberdeen are invalid.

(e) A declaration that the plaintiffs are not entitled to bore for water on the pasturage.

(f) A declaration that the defendants are entitled to sell and transfer further portions of the pasturage and unsold erven registered in their name.

(g) £100 damages.

(h) Alternative relief.

(i) Costs of suit.

The plaintiffs' replication and plea to claim in re-convention, were as follows:

For a replication to the defendants' plea, the plaintiffs say:

1. They admit the reservation in the conditions of sale to sell further erven, referred to in paragraph 2 thereof, but say that the true meaning and interpretation thereof, and of the said conditions of sale, is that the defendants are only entitled to sell further erven, with grazing and other rights, up to such a number as will not prejudice the existing rights of erfholders who purchased, or whose predecessors in title purchased, under the said conditions. The defendants have at no time exercised any right under the said conditions, as to grazing or otherwise, since the establishment of the Municipality of Aberdeen in 1857, and in terms of and within the meaning of condition No. 18 of water-erven, and No. 17 of dry-erven, the plaintiffs have now succeeded to the control formerly exercised by the predecessors in title of the defendants.

2. As to paragraph 3 thereof, the Municipal Commissioners have for a period far longer than the period of prescription, to wit, since the year 1857 or 1858, lawfully exercised the control over the said commonage, and the defendants and their predecessors in title have therein acquiesced.

3. As to paragraph 5 thereof, the plaintiffs deny that all the sales of erven up to September, 1904, were lawful, inasmuch, as prior to that date, existing erfholders were prejudiced in their grazing rights by such sales; and the plaintiffs say that the present over-stocking of the commonage is due to the unlawful acts of the defendants. The plaintiffs deny that they acted unlawfully as alleged, and say that they have obtained additional ground as town pasturage, in extent 5,159 morgen and 343 square rods.

4. They deny the right of the defendants to sell further erven, as set forth in paragraph 6 thereof.

5. As to paragraph 8 thereof, they say that the said regulations have been duly framed, and from time to time amended, and have been lawfully promulgated and acted upon, and are valid.

6. As to paragraph 9 thereof, they say that ever since the year 1858 they have held and exercised lawfully the exclusive control and administration of the pasturage, and that the same is vested in them, and they crave leave to refer to Section 45 of Ordinance 9, 1836, and Section 159 of Act 45, 1882.

7. They say that the auction kraals are necessary, reasonable and proper for the due administration of the municipality, that the defendants acquiesced in and were parties to their establishment, assisted in fixing the site, and have been receiving payment in respect of the same.

8. As to paragraph 12 thereof, they say that they have acquired the right by prescription to grant the permission referred to, even if the said right be not otherwise vested in them, for the reasons pleaded in this suit.

9. Save as above, and save in so far as the plea admits any of the allegations in the declaration, they deny all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the said plea set forth, and join issue thereupon, and again pray for judgment with costs of suit.

And for a plea to the claim in re-convention the plaintiffs, now the defendants, in re-convention say:

10. They crave leave to refer to the matters pleaded above and in the declaration in this suit.

11. They contend that they are entitled to exercise the rights and perform the acts referred to in a, b and c of paragraph 2 of the said claim: that there is nothing in the conditions of sale referred to which prohibits the exercise of such rights: that in any case they have actually exercised such rights, continuously and uninterruptedly for a period far longer than the period of prescription, during which they have held and exercised the sole and exclusive control and administration of the pasturage or commonage without let or hindrance on the part of the plaintiffs in re-convention or their predecessors in title.

12. As to paragraph 3 thereof the regulations therein referred to and under which the defendants in re-convention have exercised their rights, and claim to be entitled to perform the several acts referred to have been in force and published and have been acted upon since the year 1858.

13. As to paragraph 5 thereof they say that they are entitled to bore for water, for the reasons above set forth and that the same is in the public interests of the inhabitants: that neither the plaintiffs in re-convention nor their predecessors in title ever protested against the said work, but on the contrary were privy thereto and fully acquiesced therein, by their minister acting on their behalf.

14. Save as above they deny all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the said claim and join issue thereupon and again pray that the said claim may be dismissed with costs.

For Plaintiffs: Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Gardiner). For Defendants: Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton).

Mr. McGregor said that it was the intention of his clients not to sell erven in future with grazing rights to the commonage.

Mr. Searle said that such an alteration in the pleadings would make the defendants' plea an inconsistent one. Considerable argument followed, and at length Maasdorp, J., ordered that the plea be amended so as to remove the inconsistency.

A. M. Melville, a Government land surveyor, said that the church acquired certain property in Aberdeen in 1855. He had recently surveyed certain portions of the commonage for the municipality, and there was approximately 2,743 morgen of commonage unused. Cattle could graze on the golf ground. The eastern portion of the original commonage up to a certain road was reserved for the grazing of sheep, and the western portion for larger cattle. To his knowledge the location had been in existence for many years.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: The original farm consisted of 3,000 morgen. He could not say under what grant the municipality got the 5,159 adjoining morgen. Of that 4,000 was a free grant as commonage for the inhabitants of Aberdeen, and the remainder was granted in consideration of the payment of £231 to the Government.

Jacobus Swat, overseer to the Aberdeen Municipality, stated that since 1875 he had been connected with the municipality; his father had been in the employ of the municipality from 1868, and his grandfather had also been in the service of the town. He could remember the town from 1860. When he was twelve years old he assisted his grandfather in getting the stock in from the commonage. That was the work of the municipality, who always had control of the commonage. Permits were required from the municipality to make bricks, quarry, and for grazing rights on the commonage. Until the year 1890 he continued as overseer, and resumed as overseer in 1899. The first question raised by the church was about the recreation ground, which had been set aside by the municipality, and enclosed by the club, but he could not say how long that was ago. Prior to that there was no question as to the municipality's control of the commonage. There had been no interference with the municipality in connection with the location.

The commonage at present was overstocked, and if more erven was sold with grazing rights it would interfere with the rights of the present holders. The municipality had also regulations as to the number of stock to be grazed and the church had never interfered in this connection. The municipality last year endeavoured to bore for water, and the members of the consistory raised no objection. In his opinion, it was necessary that the municipality should make further experiments for water.

Cross-examined: Aberdeen was flourishing. The inhabitants were increasing in number, and the district was a good one. He hoped that one day the railway would reach there. In 1873 and 1882 certain buildings were erected on the commonage by the Municipality, but whether the consent of the Kerkeraad was obtained or not he could not say. In the latter year the Municipality gave permission for a tennis club to have a ground on the commonage, and the Kerkeraad informed the Municipality that the permission of the Kerkeraad had not been sought. Witness could not say if the Municipality withdrew the permission it had granted on receipt of the protest. Witness had seen as many as 13,000 cattle being sold by auction on the commonage. A sale of that kind would last several days.

[Maasdorp, J.: But that would be of great benefit to the town, and there must be a little give and take.]

Cross-examination continued: There were a good many donkeys in Aberdeen. The last time the commonage was cleaned, 606 donkeys and cattle were found grazing there. There were also about 300 head of small stock.

What would be the average number grazing there?—I should say between 600 and 700.

Do you speak of cattle for which people had permits?—No answer.

In 1903, when cattle were being purchased in the O.R.C., there was a great drain on the veld?—That is so.

And it has had no rest since?—No; none.

I must come back to the donkeys again. I believe the majority of the large stock in Aberdeen is composed of donkeys?—Yes. And they are good feeders?—They'll eat almost anything.

And they do it well?—Yes.

In cross-examination with regard to the native location, witness said he remembered it from about 1863. When witness was a boy the natives were not allowed to run cattle on the commonage.

[Maasdorp, J.: Do they now?]

Yes, my lord.

Mr. McGregor: And there has been some trouble over that?—I believe so.

Continuing, witness said that at a Municipal Council meeting during the present year the natives were restricted to a certain area. The Municipal Clerk would know all about that. The brick and stone quarries would not do any harm to the commonage. The donkeys at present grazing were not owned by members of the Kerkeraad, but he did not know all the members. There was no other place for cattle than the commonage unless each party passing through were to make arrangements with private people. The natives were grazing about 20 donkeys at present.

Mr. Searle here pointed out that these natives were not purchasers of erven, and the Municipality had claimed to give grazing rights to purchasers of erven.

Witness said that the natives only had about 30 sheep grazing now. The first permits given to natives were given in 1884. Since the action began there had been a resolution that natives living in the location should have regular permits—the permits previously granted were temporary or monthly. There were 300 to 400 natives in the location. None of the quarries seriously interfered with the pasturage.

Philipus Arnoldus Marais said that he remembered Aberdeen from the earliest times. His father was one of the first Commissioners of the Municipality. He had been living in Aberdeen almost continuously since 1866. During all this time the Municipality had the control of the commonage—witness had been auditor for the Municipality, and knew that fees were regularly collected for permits for brick-making, quarrying, etc. The Kerkeraad first raised a claim after the recreation ground was enclosed, about six years afterwards. The mere selling of an erf would encroach on the grazing rights of the present erf-holders, and in his opinion there was not sufficient grazing now.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Witness's father had brickfields before the Municipality came into existence. Witness did not know that in 1882 the Municipality had withdrawn its permit for the tennis court, nor that the cricket ground was granted subject to the approval of the Kerkeraad. It was really the travellers who had to be provided for who caused the over-stocking.

James Ablett, master builder, said that he had lived in Aberdeen since 1858. He had then been employed as carpenter in the building of the D.R. Church. The permits for wood were given by the Municipality. As far as he knew, all the permits for stone and bricks were given by the Municipality; the first time he heard of any objection by the Consistory of the D.R. Church was in 1893 in reference to the tennis court.

James Philip Daniel, who had resided in Aberdeen since 1861, remembered the building of the D.R. Church, and had had four houses built on his own behalf in addition to houses for other people. All the necessary permits were obtained at the Town Hall. He had been an erf-holder, and always received the permits for grazing from the Town Hall. He first heard of the Kerkeraad's claim in 1893.

By Mr. Gardiner: His signature on the petition produced was given to the man who was carrying it about without any idea of its bearing on the question of rights. Witness did not think that it would be a very serious thing for the Municipality if the Kerkeraad sold more erven without raising the price. The general objection of the ratepayers was to the selling of the land. Witness signed a petition against a racecourse.

In reply to Mr. Searle, witness said he might have also signed one for it.

Gabriel de Vos gave corroborative evidence.

Francis John Nelson Truter, Mayor of Aberdeen, stated he came to Aberdeen in June, 1884. On several occasions he had been a commissioner of the Municipality. Since his residence there the commonage had been controlled and administered by the Municipality, which collected the fees for the several permits. There were no charges made for removing sand or clay or collecting wood, but permission had to be obtained from the Municipality. In August, 1887, the Municipality granted permission, and the lawn tennis ground was enclosed. It was not until 1893 that there was any question as to the use of the ground. The Consistory had not, to witness's knowledge, interfered with the cricket ground. In 1897 witness, who was an auctioneer, sought permission from the Council to establish an auction kraal on the commonage. His request was granted. Even if the Kerkeraad sold no erven in future with grazing rights attached, present holders of erven would be incommoded.

Mr. Searle proceeded to ask the witness what the possibilities of Aberdeen were.

[Maasdorp, J.: Aberdeen will never be a big city, you can rest assured of that. If there were a big river, or a good water supply there, it might, but as there is not, Aberdeen won't be a big city.]

The Witness: But, my lord, we, the Municipality, have sunk some boreholes recently.

Continuing, witness said that the Municipality had expended £226 on the boring works, and the Kerkeraad never offered any objection. The Rev. Mr. Cillie had asked witness to use his influence to get the boreholes sunk. The Municipality had eradicated a considerable amount of prickly pear on the commonage at the cost of the ratepayers.

Mr. McGregor proceeded to cross-examine the witness on the doings of the Municipality in the past, whereupon his lordship pointed out the need of brevity in the case. He was of opinion that the commonage was vested in the municipality. Witness had petitioned the Kerkeraad not to have the recreation ground so near the graveyard. He did that because he thought that the graveyard was not big enough for the purposes it was intended for.

Schalk Johannes Hugo, examined by Mr. Burton, said that he was a Commissioner of the Municipality of Aberdeen. He had lived for many years in Aberdeen, and the Municipality had always issued permits with regard to the commonage. Witness narrated the circumstances surrounding the water boring in 1904. The Rev. Mr. Cillie was interested in the boring. The increased supply had been of material benefit to the inhabitants, but it was still necessary to obtain a further supply.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: When Mr. Cillie went with witness to look at the water, he was very anxious to have an increased supply. He did not hear Mr. Cillie say that permission would have to be had from the Consistory.

P. W. Rubidge, stock farmer in the Aberdeen district and a holder of two water erven, stated his gardens had in the past suffered considerably from want of water. There was no other means of obtaining an adequate supply, except through boring. As a farmer, he would say that the pasturage was substantially overstocked.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: He was guided in his opinion by the appearance of the pasturage.

Andries Kuyter, a commissioner at Aberdeen since 1898, stated he was present with Mr. Cillie at the water finding. He agreed with Mr. Hugo as to what took place.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: He would contradict Mr. Cillie if he stated that it was remarked at the time that permission to bore would have to be granted by the Consistory.

Robert Logie, who had lived at Aberdeen since 1877, and been a member of the Consistory in '93 and '94, stated that about eighteen months ago he was a commissioner of the municipality. As far as he knew the Municipality exercised control all through. From the church books they never claimed any fees in respect of the commonage. He endorsed what the other witnesses said with regard to the water supply.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: The contractor who supplied the stone obtained it from the commonage quarry in the usual way.

Christian Jacobus Rabie, stock farmer, with fifteen years experience of Aberdeen, agreed that the commonage was overstocked at present.

Willem Jura, Town Clerk of the Municipality, said that the first meeting of the Municipality was in 1857. From the earliest times the Municipality had collected revenue from the commonage for permits and licences. Fees were collected for grazing, quarrying, and making bricks. The Church had never at any time interfered with these rights of the Municipality. In the sixties there had been boring for water near the fountain, and not until last year was it resumed, the Municipality had paid over £200 for the water boring and £115 for fencing in the commonage from a private farm adjoining. Nearly £200 was spent on the original commonage. There was no objection raised to these improvements. Temporary permits were issued to people passing through Aberdeen with their stock. The Church never took any exception to the site selected for the location. To pay for grazing would be illegal, but they paid for the permits. That Consistory had never questioned the right of the Municipality to collect the hut tax.

This closed the oral evidence for the plaintiff, and Mr. Searle, having put in certain documentary evidence, closed his case.

Mr. McGregor called.

Leslie Franks, draughtsman, of Cape Town, who produced a plan of the lots sold and unsold, specifying the lots that had been sold since 1885. His plan was a reproduction of the Deeds Office plan.

(Cross-examined: According to the Deeds Office plan there were lots in the centre of the town unsold.

Paulus Jacobus Joubert, born in 1828, said he was living in the district when the town of Aberdeen was formed. His recollection of what took place was very hazy, as he never actually lived in the town.

Cornelius van Heerden, member of the Kerkeraad, said he remembered the time when the Municipality was formed. When the racecourse was established the Kerkeraad objected to it on account of the liquor sold there. On whose authority the first brickfield was selected he could not say. He remembered Mr. Cillie telling the plaintiffs they would have to get the Kerkeraad's consent to water boring. There were a number of donkeys on the commonage, and they were very destructive to grazing.

Cross-examined: He was getting stone at present from the new quarry, and his man might have had a permit from the Municipality. Witness had had a permit from the Municipality for the grazing.

Mr. J. J. van Heerden said he knew nothing of the circumstances under which the church was built. He and his brother, however, had delivered the first load of stones from the quarries. He did not know that one of the conditions of the erven was that liquor was not to be sold, but he knew that there was a condition a few years ago that liquor was not to be sold on the recreation grounds. The commonage was not overstocked. The Kerkeraad, of which he was a member, was not trying to manage the affairs of the town. The conditions of sale were that the buyer had to obey and conform to the rules or regulations of the Kerkeraad, or any body that might succeed it.

Stephanus J. Naude, who lived at Aberdeen since 1868, said at that time there were three quarries in and about the town. Subsequently more quarries were opened.

By Mr. Searle: He had no objection to "Lee's" quarry, for good stone was obtained there.

S. J. de Villiers, a Commissioner of the Municipality and member of the Kerkeraad, stated that in 1898 he had to approach the Kerkeraad for a transfer of 39 erven. He had no objection to the selling of erven around the town.

By Mr. Searle: The owners of dry erven helped themselves to water for domestic purposes out of the furrow.

The Rev. Mr. Cillie, minister of the Dutch Reformed Church, said he had been minister since 1885. He had never had authority to agree to the boring. It was his opinion, and he told Mr. Kuyter, that the Municipality had to apply to the Kerkeraad for permission to bore.

By Mr. Searle: The boring would be an improvement to the town, and he was anxious it should be done.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel having been heard in argument,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (August 21st.)

Maasdorp, J.: In the year 1856 the farm Brakkefontein was transferred to a number of persons mentioned in the deed of transfer of the property, and described therein as comprising the Board of Churchwardens of the Dutch Reformed Church of the newly projected town called "Aberdeen" on the farm Brakkefontein, and to the churchwardens for the time being of the Dutch Reformed Church. The township of Aberdeen was therefore laid out in lots consisting of dry and water erven, a sale of which by public auction took place under conditions attached to the deed of transfer of the erven which were subsequently executed. A question arose at the trial whether these conditions were properly registered against the remaining extent of the farm, but both parties to the suit agreed that the conditions were binding upon them, thus obviating the necessity of carrying the enquiry on that point any further. In the preamble to the conditions the sellers reserve to themselves the right to sell thereafter more erven than those at that time put up for sale in case they shall deem fit. In the conditions provisions are made for the management and good government of the township by the churchwardens, and it is also provided that the purchaser or owner of any erf shall be obliged to submit to all such regulations as shall from time to time be made by the Kerkeraad, or other local authority that may succeed them. Besides the bare ownership of the erven, their owners, while subject to certain obligations, acquired certain rights in the streets, water furrows and dams, and the owners of the water erven acquired a right to share in the water of a stream mentioned in the conditions. No question now arises in respect of those rights and obligations. The main issues in this case are in respect of the rights of the parties over the remaining extent of the farm lying outside the town. The whole extent of the farm is about three thousand morgen, and the town of Aberdeen itself covers about one hundred and fifteen morgen. The conditions of sale which are of importance in this connection are the following: No. 11. The purchaser or owner of any erf shall in no case graze more cattle on the public grazing land than one span of ten oxen, three cows (or thirteen head of horned cattle altogether), twenty-five slaughter sheep and goats, and two horses. No. 12. All the cattle or horses kept above the abovementioned number shall be impounded, and no one shall graze or allow cattle to run except by direction of the Kerkeraden or some one authorised thereto. We have, therefore, the erfholders on the one hand enjoying the full dominium of their erven, while, on the other, the rest of the farm remains the property of the churchwardens, subject to a servitude in favour of the erfholders. Whatever may originally have been the intention of the parties under the condition providing that no erfholder shall graze or allow cattle to run except by direction of the Kerkeraden, it is clear that since 1856 the whole of the farm Brakkefontein outside the town has been regarded by all parties as the public grazing land, and has been so used as of right by the erfholders, the only restriction being with regard to the localities allotted to large and small stock respectively. I am of opinion that the grazing rights of the owners of erven extend over the farm, subject to such right as to the whole of the remaining extent of the churchwardens may possess under the power reserved by them to sell more erven in case they shall deem fit. I am of opinion that upon the correct interpretation of the two clauses of the conditions above-mentioned the erfholders acquired a right to depasture the full number of animals mentioned on the public grazing land without let or hindrance on the part of the churchwardens, and that such right cannot be diminished by any action on the part of the churchwardens, except in so far as the conditions of sale justify such action. In order to ascertain whether the public grazing land on the farm Brakkefontein is capable of carrying more stock than the present erfholders are entitled to put on to it, or do actually put on it, under their servitude, it is necessary to mention that the Municipality has acquired by purchase for the purposes of a commonage additional land to the extent of five thousand morgen. The nature of the country in this neighbourhood is such that the land in the opinion of some of the witnesses cannot carry more than one head of cattle to every twenty morgen and one sheep to every two morgen. Even if it be taken that the land can carry somewhat more than this number of stock it will be seen by a glance at the list of stock actually kept on the commonage during the last few years that the capacity of the ground is taxed to its full extent, and that the three thousand morgen of Brakkefontein is incapable of grazing the full number of stock, which the inhabitants are entitled under the conditions of sale to put on to it. Under the circumstances the plaintiffs complain that the defendants are selling more erven under conditions which seriously injure their rights to pasturage for their stock both by allowing more stock to be brought in, and by reducing the extent of the commonage, and they claim a declaration that the defendants are not entitled to sell more erven. The defendants in their plea claimed the right to sell further erven with grazing rights thereunto attaching without regard to the effect of such sales upon the rights to pasturage in the plaintiffs, but at the trial they abandoned this position and pleaded that they have not recently sold erven with grazing rights, and they do not claim the right to do so in future. This disposes of one of the most important issues in the case and only leaves upon this part of the case the question whether by the sale of erven the area of the commonage is encroached upon to such an extent as materially to affect the rights of the inhabitants. The defendants have reserved to themselves the right to sell more erven, and if that right is exercised with due regard to the concurrent rights of the erfholders the latter would have no ground of complaint. If the defendants under pretence of selling erven were to dispose of large portions of the commonage they would certainly exceed their rights, but hitherto they have not done so, nor do they claim the right to do so. The past sales of additional erven have had no appreciable effect in the extent of the commonage, and if they proceed at the same rate they will not have any appreciable effect for some time to come. If the township were to double in size, and of this there is no prospect, the rights of all the inhabitants jointly will be affected upon the estimate made by the plaintiffs own witnesses, to the extent of about three head of cattle and about thirty sheep. As this will not appreciably affect their rights, and the defendants never contemplated or threatened to go as far as this, no case has arisen for a definite declaration of rights upon this head. The further claims set up by the plaintiffs are met so directly by the counterclaim of the defendants that under the circumstances it will be more convenient to approach them from the point of view of the defendants. The issues raised in this respect are important but present no real difficulty from a legal point of view, and may be briefly dealt with upon principles established in the cases cited at the bar. The defendants complain that the plaintiffs have from time to time dug and carried away sand, quarried stone, erected brick kilns, made huts and kraals upon the public grazing lands, and they claim a declaration that the plaintiffs are not entitled to commit these acts; and they also ask for a declaration that the plaintiffs are not entitled to bore for water on the pasturage. Until recently it seems the Municipality recognised in many respects the rights of the churchwardens as owners of the soil of the commonage, but lately the idea seems to have grown up that under the Municipal Ordinance No. 9 of 1836 and Act No. 45 of 1882 the rights of the Municipality have been enlarged at the expense of the Church, so much so that they have actually advanced a claim that the property in the commonage should be transferred to the Municipality. This right was supposed to be created by Section 45 of the Ordinance and Section 159 of the Act. These sections provide that the property in all lands to which the inhabitants of any Municipality shall at any time have or acquire a common right shall be vested in the Council of such Municipality. Now it is quite clear that these sections do not apply to the commonage in this case, to the property in which the inhabitants have not acquired a common right. The inhabitants or erfowners of Maclear have only acquired a common right in the servitude of grazing stock upon the commonage. Then the plaintiffs fall back upon the provisions of section 39 of the Ordinance and section 109 of the Act, whereby powers are conferred upon the Municipality to regulate in certain respects the enjoyment of certain rights by the inhabitants. Here again it is quite clear that reference is made to the property of the Municipality, or common property of the inhabitants, and subsection 23 of section 109 of the Act expressly guards the rights and property of third persons. Under the conditions of sale the inhabitants have no common right to dig for sand, quarry stone, erect lime kilns, huts or kraals upon the commonage, and it is only in respect of the kilns and quarries that there is any pretence that the right to them has been acquired by prescription. It is quite clear that a servitude may exist in respect of the rights to quarry and to take sand and clay, but in this case there is no grant of such servitude, and I may say at once that although it seems that from time to time the residents of Aberdeen did take sand, clay and stones from the commonage, there is no satisfactory evidence of an adverse, continuous user as of right, such as to constitute a servitude by prescription, nor does the 18th condition of sale confer upon the municipality power to interfere with vested rights. Upon these considerations I come to the conclusion that the only common right the erfholders of Aberdeen have on the commonage is the right of pasturage, and they are not entitled to rights in the soil. It follows from this that they have no right to bore for water on the commonage. It must be taken that the commonage referred to throughout the judgment is that portion of it which is on the farm Brakkefontein, the property of the defendants. And in this connection I may mention that prayer "d" of the claim in reconvention is much too wide seeing that the regulations are not confined to Brakkefontein, but cover the whole commonage, the larger portion of which is the property of the municipality. A declaration on the other issues will fully indicate what the powers of the municipality are as to regulations for the Brakkefontein commonage. Upon the plaintiffs' claim the Court declares upon the pleadings as now amended, that the defendants are not entitled to sell further or even upon conditions conferring grazing rights on the commonage to purchasers. Upon the claim in reconvention the Court makes declarations in terms of prayers "b," "c" and "e." In each case with the addition of the words "without consent of the defendants." It must be understood that I express no opinion with regard to the rights of the parties as to the bore-holes now in existence, which were made with the acquiescence of the defendants and at great expense to the plaintiffs. Both parties seem to have mistaken their rights and claimed too much, and under the circumstances no order will be made as to costs, but each party will be left to pay their own costs.

Arbitration—Interdict.

Where one company attempted to force arbitration proceedings upon another company in a case in which there appeared to be no subject matter for arbitration, the Court interdicted the former company from taking any proceedings in the nature of arbitration.

Sir H. Juta, for plaintiffs, asked for cause to be shown why an order restraining respondent from entering into certain arbitration proceedings should not be granted. Sir Henry said that there was no difference of opinion as to the amount due to the respondent, and, that being the case, there was no need to go to the expense of arbitration proceedings.

Mr. Benjamin proceeded to argue contra at some length, but Hopley, J., said he could not understand why the respondents were trying to force arbitration on the plaintiff. Mr. Benjamin had not given a single good reason why arbitration should be forced upon the insurance company, and he (Mr. Benjamin) had better consult his clients during the adjournment. It was a foolish thing for such a big company to come into court with such a case.

Mr. Benjamin, on the Court resuming, contended that the application was an unwarrantable one. It might be that the respondents' advisers had misconstrued the arbitration clause, but that would not entitle the applicants to come to Court for an interdict.

Hopley, J.: In view of the fact that the parties have agreed that the loss by fire amounts to £1,950, there seems to be nothing to arbitrate upon in terms of the condition of the policy relating to arbitration, and the respondents make that a reason for resisting the present application which they say is wholly unnecessary. That is an argument which comes strangely from the respondents, who have been insisting on forcing on arbitration proceedings in spite of the applicants' clearly expressed position that there was nothing to arbitrate upon. The respondents have gone so far as to appoint their arbitrator and to give notice to applicants that unless they take a similar step on their side the arbitration will be conducted in their absence, as laid down in the contract. In these circumstances the applicants feel themselves to be threatened with something of the ultimate effect of which they are apprehensive. It is now said for the respondents that such proceedings could not bind the applicants, and that the latter might ignore them; but in view of the correspondence it is clear that the respondents intend them to be binding on the applicants, and I think that the latter are entitled to relief at the hands of this Court.

The order of the Court would be that the defendant company be restrained from going into any proceedings in the nature of arbitration, which were intended to bind the applicant company, and he thought the applicants should have their costs in this motion.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. DE WET.

Sir H. Juta moved, on behalf of the defendants, to have this case removed from the list on the 23rd August, on the ground that the defendant was instituting an action against the Government on similar lines as that brought by the latter. The Government were suing for an interdict restraining the defendant from proceeding with certain works at the Hex River, and the defendant would also bring a like action against the Government. It was imperative that both cases should be heard together, and it would take at least one month to work up the case. Counsel moved to have the case set down for next term.

Mr. Nightingale said although there were others joined with the defendants against the Government, there was nothing in the shape of damages or an interdict claimed against them. The work of the defendants caused the floods to flow towards the railway embankment and the whole thing might be carried away. The Railway Department were in a state of trepidation. The engineers on the railway took a most serious view of the case.

[Hopley, J.: All I can say is, if it is so dangerous put a host of watchmen there to stop trains.]

Mr. Nightingale: A host of special watchmen would be washed away.

[Hopley, J.: Put them a little further up.]

Mr. Nightingale: They would not be much use then.

Hopley, J., said the only thing he could do was to give the earliest possible date, as the defendant could not be forced into Court before his defence and counter-claim were ready. However, dangerous it might be, justice would have to be done in the case. The Railway Department, if they anticipated any danger would have to avoid it by extra vigilance. The application to remove the case would be granted, and the case put down for some day next term to be agreed to by the parties, costs to be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

BASSON V. THOMPSON. { 1905.
Aug. 18th.
" 21st.

Principal and agent—Cattle.

This was an action brought by Johannes Petrus Basson, a speculator, of Plaateklip, Paarl, claiming £3,270, the price of a certain number of cattle, purchased on behalf of the defendant Gerrit Peter Jacobus Thompson, also of the Paarl, and £218 commission.

The plaintiff's declaration stated that in March last the defendant, who was at that time making large purchases of oxen, requested plaintiff to proceed to Kenhardt, for the purpose of interviewing one Brussel there, with a view to purchasing 200 oxen or thereabouts for him. It was agreed between the parties that the plaintiff should purchase the said oxen on the defendant's behalf, if Brussel would fix a price acceptable to the defendant, and that defendant would take possession of the cattle at Victoria West-road. The defendant at the same time agreed to pay plaintiff a commission of £1 for every ox which he might purchase. Thereafter the plaintiff proceeded to Kenhardt, where he entered into negotiations with Brussel, in accordance with the agreement, and eventually, upon receipt of information from the defendant to the effect that he would be prepared to give £15 a-head, the plaintiff purchased from Brussel 218 oxen at that price on behalf of defendant. Plaintiff disclosed his principal to Brussel before concluding the purchase, but Brussel declined to accept the defendant as purchaser, and refused to sell the oxen unless the plaintiff held himself personally liable and responsible as the purchaser for the purchase price. Whereupon plaintiff agreed to undertake the responsibility, and the plaintiff had accordingly incurred liability to Brussel in respect of the purchase price which he had already demanded from plaintiff. Plaintiff thereupon took the oxen to Victoria West-road, where the defendant met him on April 2; and on the following day defendant took delivery of the oxen, and after disposing of 26 of them, sent the remainder to his farm Snydam. Defendant refused to pay plaintiff the purchase price, or any portion of it.

The defendant's plea stated that in March last the defendant was under contract with the German Government to supply oxen of a certain condition and weight, the last of which oxen were to be delivered at the Docks, Cape Town, on April 5, all of which plaintiff knew well. It was agreed that if the plaintiff could deliver to the defendant 100 oxen of the weight of 700 lb. when dressed at Wellington Station, on or before April 3, in order that the defendant could fulfil his contract with the German Government, the defendant would buy them at £15 an ox. The defendant denied that he requested plaintiff to proceed to Kenhardt to purchase 200 oxen. The defendant denied that the plaintiff entered into arrangements with Brussel on his (defendant's) behalf. On March 20 plaintiff sent a telegram to defendant stating that he would be at Hutchinson with oxen on April 3. It was impossible for any of the oxen to be delivered from there in accordance with the contract with the German Government, and, therefore, defendant bought other cattle to fulfil his contract. Defendant admitted that he was at Hutchinson on April 2, but denied that it was in connection with the plaintiff's oxen, and he denied that he took delivery of any of the oxen which were not in accordance with the agreement as to condition and weight, and were wholly unfit for fulfilling defendant's contract with the German Government, but that at the request of the defendant he allowed them to graze, and tried to sell them for plaintiff upon plaintiff allowing him a fair and reasonable commission on each ox sold, and the defendant sold oxen for him to the amount of £339 18s. 9d., which sum less £6 10s. commission, the defendant was entitled to, and £11 9s. 3d., being moneys paid by him for railway and auction dues. The defendant tendered this amount to plaintiff before the action was brought.

The plaintiff, in his replication, denied that he knew the conditions of the agreement between defendant and the German Government, and he also denied that the defendant made arrangement for the delivery of the cattle at Wellington. The plaintiff never at any time had any notice of the purchase of other oxen by the defendant. The plaintiff also denied the arrangement about the grazing or selling of the oxen on his behalf, and he denied that the defendant had ever tendered him money in respect of the oxen sold. The sum now offered was altogether inadequate. He denied his liability for railway rates or commission, and he held that the oxen were sold by the defendant for his own account.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Lewis) for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta (with him Mr. Russell) for defendant.

An aged coloured man stated he saw Mr. Thompson selling some oxen to the butcher—Mr. Robus—at Victoria West. They consisted of both old and young oxen, but none of them were in a bad condition.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: But they were in a bad condition.

The witness contended that they were not too poor for the butcher. Witness did not consider them of poor condition, although he had had some experience of cattle.

Ignatius Viljoen, a butcher, residing at Victoria West, stated he saw Thompson in Victoria West in April last. Witness and Robus had given him orders for a couple of oxen. Witness saw Thompson and Robus at the latter's place. They drove two oxen out of the yard. In conversation either Robus or witness asked Thompson to reduce the price from £2 10s. per 100 lb. dead-weight. The oxen were about six miles out from Victoria West, grazing in charge of Basson. Witness selected two of the oxen, and Robus selected ten, and Thompson took sixteen. Basson asked witness to take one of the oxen, which was footsore. Witness was under the impression that Thompson owned the oxen. The condition of the cattle was fairly good.

In cross-examination, witness said the average weight of the oxen he purchased was nearly 600 lb. each. He paid £28 9s. for the two, and purchased them at 50s. per 100 lb. The oxen were full grown, and there were a few young ones.

To the Court: Oxen of 700 lb. dead-weight would be exceptionally fine.

Johannes de Kock, in the employment of plaintiff, stated that in the beginning of April he met Mr. G. Thompson. The latter told witness that there were 200 oxen of his coming along the road. Witness told him the veld was good. The oxen arrived in due course, and ran on the veld for some time. Some of the oxen were in good condition, a few were young, and some of them were poor.

Cross-examined: Mr. Basson had been helping at the farm and looking after the oxen; he had wanted them, and said that they were in good condition. Some of the oxen were old, but there were only about 20 or 30 in poor condition. There were about 50 that were fat and about 20 young.

Sir Henry Juta added these up, and then asked what became of the other 100.

Witness said he should call them fair.

Cornelius Franz Barnard, a farmer, had met Mr. Thompson on the farm Biesjes Dam at the time of the sale in April. Witness spoke to him about the oxen, asking him to send them back to the Kenhardt district. Thompson said that they had only been there a fortnight, and that they would then be brought on to the Paarl. Mr. Thompson spoke about the oxen as "my oxen," and there was no mention of such a man as Basson. Witness allowed the cattle to graze on his farm, but that was because they were Thompson's, and Thompson was his friend.

The plaintiff, Johannes Petrus Basson, a farmer and speculator, said that in March last he received a letter about some oxen at Kenhardt, and he showed the letter to Mr. Thompson, at the Paarl. Thompson asked witness to wire to Brussel asking the price, and on receipt of a reply, witness took it to Thompson. Thompson said that he would require the oxen immediately—that was, after Brussel had sent a further telegram offering the lot at £16 10s. a head. Witness arranged to go at once, on an agreement that Thompson would pay him £1 a head for getting the cattle. Witness was to deliver the oxen by April 3, at Victoria West. Witness arrived at Kenhardt on March 24, and saw Brussel. Witness then sent a telegram to Thompson that Brussel had a buyer at £17. Thompson replied that he could not give more than £15, and witness subsequently bought at that price. A telegram was then sent by Brussel that delivery would be made at Hutchinson, on April 3.

Sir Henry Juta drew attention to the fact that the sending of this telegram was denied in the pleadings by the plaintiff.

Witness (proceeding) said that he went to Victoria West with the cattle, and there met Thompson, at Verster's, on April 2. Defendant remarked that there were a good many heavy oxen. There was some trouble about getting men to take the oxen to his (Thompson's) farm, that being necessary because there were too many oxen at that time at the Paarl. As regarded the sales to Robus and Viljoen, witness had nothing to do with them, except that Mr. Thompson asked witness to point out those that were footsore.

Mr. Burton here read a letter from Thompson to witness giving the result of an attempt to sell some of the oxen, but as two of them had died on the road, it had been found impossible to sell the remainder at a profit. Thompson advised witness to take them to the German Border, to be sold to the Germans.

Witness immediately went to the Paarl to see defendant, and told him that he (witness) could not keep the oxen, because he was a poor man. Thompson gave him a letter to the German Consul, which witness took to Baron Von Nettelbladt. Nothing came of this. Subsequent communications had been through the attorneys.

Cross-examined: When witness went to Thompson at the Paarl, he (Thompson) got angry. Witness denied that he had gone to Baron Nettelbladt about the sale of the oxen. The Baron asked witness where his oxen were, and he replied that he had no oxen.

Sir H. Juta here read the evidence of the German Consul, which witness said was not a correct account of the conversation. Witness had only asked him for the conductorship of certain wagons.

Proceeding under cross-examination, witness said he did not know the contents of the letter Thompson had given him. Witness knew that Thompson had to buy oxen for the German Government. Witness had endeavoured in February last to get Thompson to buy more donkeys for the German Government. Witness did not hear from Thompson that his contract with the German Consul was to supply an average of 700 lb. weight. Thompson had not even told him that it was slaughter oxen that were required, and there were no conditions as to weight.

He knew nothing about the price obtained for the oxen by defendant. He received a letter from the defendant in April with reference to some oxen. There was a bull among the oxen, but witness denied that he exchanged it with Thompson. He had no authority to do so, because they were not his. On May 9 defendant wired that he would not take the oxen back.

But you asked him to do so?—I did not.

Well, why should he wire to you to that effect?—I wrote to him about the oxen after they had been to Cape Town.

Continuing, witness denied that it was an arrangement with Brussel that witness should try and sell the oxen.

What did Brussel mean by writing to you, and asking you what you were paying pound money for?—I don't know.

What did you reply to that?—Nothing.

Didn't the oxen trespass on Piet Claassen's farm at Amsterdam, and hadn't you to pay £1 fine?—Yes.

And you have not claimed for that yet?—I intend to do so.

Witness (continuing) denied that he paid Jan Claassens £1 for water for the cattle. Witness intended to send in his claim for all expenses later on.

I believe you wanted one of the herds discharged?—No.

I put it to you that you asked Willie Thompson to pay the herd off, and you would settle with him afterwards?—No; I did not.

Witness said he refused to go to Puffadder without being hired for that journey.

In re-examination, witness said he had given Brussel a note to the effect that he would be responsible for the money. Witness explained to Brussel that he was buying the cattle for Thompson, and Brussel agreed to sell them if witness went security.

Mr. Burton explained that Brussel had been subpoenaed, but at the last moment he wrote stating that he was too ill to come down. The defendant's point was not that he did not agree to receive the oxen, but that the plaintiff failed in his contract.

Maasdorp, J., said he thought Brussel's evidence was necessary on the question of credibility.

Mr. Burton said that if it was necessary he would apply for a commission to take Brussel's evidence.

Corneilus Neileon, ranger on the municipal ground, Victoria West, said that in April last Thompson went to him and asked him to rent some veldt for the cattle in question. Witness did so, and Thompson then went to Basson and informed him that he had got a place for the cattle to run. Basson paid the amount due, but the receipt was made out in the name of Thompson. Witness had been subpoenaed by the defendant in this case.

Cross-examined: Witness denied that he had asked Thompson 16s. for the night's grazing.

Charles Steen, chief Traffic inspector, Cape Town Station, stated it took from 33 to 48 hours to carry cattle from Hutchinson to Cape Town. It would take the best part of a forenoon to truck 218 cattle. The usual cattle train left Hutchinson at 1.40 a.m., and arrived at 1.5 p.m. the next day.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta,

I suppose that is the ideal time?—It is the time laid down in our working books.

It would be cutting matters short to bring the cattle down in time for April 5?—It could be done.

But are there always 35 trucks available at Hutchinson?—They can easily be got.

I suppose you mean to suggest that the Railway Department is so ideal that nobody is ever delayed?—There is no reason why there should be any long delay. There is seldom any delay to the live-stock train, because it is always expedited.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Gert Peter Jacobus Thompson, the defendant, stated that he was a speculator, and had farms at the Paarl and Carnarvon. Early in the present year witness had a contract to supply the German Government with 200 oxen. He was in partnership with one Malherbe, and they agreed to supply 100 oxen each. They had to supply slaughter oxen, 1,100 lb. live weight, and got £15 5s. each. They were to receive £10 for every 1,000 lb. weight above that amount. It was by the latter clause that the profit was made. The particulars of the contract were conveyed to Basson. The cattle had to be delivered at the Docks at eight o'clock on the morning of April 5. They had to be examined by a veterinary surgeon at Wellington. In March the plaintiff went to defendant and asked him if he was still buying oxen. Witness replied that he had a contract for 100 slaughter oxen, and plaintiff asked witness to allow him to buy them. Witness said that as long as the oxen were good he did not mind whom he bought them from. Plaintiff then said he could get 140 oxen which would be about 700 lb. dressed weight, and witness said he would be glad to give £15 a-head for them. Basson then went away and returned next day, and said he had had a wire from Brussel stating that he had oxen for sale, but that he wanted to receive an offer. Witness then explained to Basson that if he bought cattle he would have to deliver them at Wellington on April 5. Basson then left for Kenhardt. Witness denied that he communicated with plaintiff. From the 14th March there was no communication from the plaintiff till March 20. The next communication was such that it would not enable him to fulfil his contract. So on March 21 witness closed with another offer. Witness did not therefore reply immediately to plaintiff's wire to meet him at Hutchinson. Witness had a sale on at one of his farms, and it was on that account, not because he wished to meet Basson, that he went to Victoria West. Whilst witness was there Basson arrived with the cattle. Basson said: "Here are your oxen," and witness replied: "What do you mean; you know you are too late, and you have too many." Plaintiff said that "the Jew would ruin him," and that he had lost five oxen on the road. Plaintiff asked witness to try and put the oxen through for him, and witness said he would do what he could, but that he would probably lose a lot of money on them. It was agreed that witness would help with the grazing arrangements and the getting of herds. Witness sent some of the oxen to Worcester and the remainder back to Lientek. Had they been his own, witness would have sold some of them at the sale on the farm Besgesdam. Again, if the cattle belonged to witness, witness would have been able to look after them without the assistance of Basson. Witness had nothing to do with Brussel. The sales to the local butchers were with the object of reducing the number of the cattle. Witness made a deal with plaintiff in reference to a young bull among the cattle, and there were four people present. Witness endeavoured to arrange for the disposal of the cattle through the German Consul, but was unsuccessful. When witness found that defendant was taking up his present attitude, witness impounded the cattle; but subsequently an arrangement was made that the cattle be attended to in the meantime, so that neither would suffer unnecessary loss. These cattle were a poor, mixed lot—slaughter and trek, young and old. They would be absolutely no good as far as the German Government was concerned.

Cross-examined: There was not a scrap of writing to confirm the arrangement between witness and the German Consul. A special train could have been arranged for the cattle in question. The rule was that the veterinary surgeon examined the cattle prior to their being trucked. Witness had agreed to give £15 for oxen of 1,300 to 1,400 lb. live weight. Witness had absolutely nothing to do with Brussel. The telegram from plaintiff to "meet me at Victoria West on the third," might have meant that plaintiff wished witness to buy.

Mr. Burton: Do you really mean to ask the Court to believe that?

Witness: I do not to the present day understand the telegram. If it had been 100 oxen, and if it had been at an earlier date, I would have understood that they were for me. Witness (continuing) said that it was that telegram which decided him not to buy plaintiff's cattle; but he had not communicated the fact that he intended to "break" with plaintiff, nor had he endeavoured to hurry him up. It was on March 2 that witness heard of the outbreak of rinderpest and the stoppage of consignments of cattle to German South-West Africa.

Mr. Burton here produced an account from Robus in which certain of the cattle were allowed for, and the private purchases of witness credited. All the accounts for railage were in witness's name, witness explaining that he was at the time acting as agent for the plaintiff.

Proceeding, witness said that on March 20 he had 140 trek oxen at the Paarl and about 220 on delivery to the Germans at Hauptman's Hoff. He was in treaty only with Basson and Boltman. Witness had a contract for 107 trek oxen, which expired on March 27. Witness's partner was in treaty for 100 oxen with a Mr. Lamplough, at £15, delivered at Wellington, and they weighed over 1,200 lb. These came from Bloemfontein.

Nettelblat had no share in witness's profits. Nettelblat got the contract from the Government and passed it on to witness.

To the Court: The entries in the book (produced) were entered immediately witness returned to the Paarl. Witness made these entries before he wrote to Basson.

William Boltman, dealer in live-stock, stated that in March last he was in the Paarl. He had a conversation with Thompson with regard to the oxen Basson was after. Witness was to get an option on 100 oxen and deliver them at Wellington Station, on April 3. The agreement between witness and defendant was fixed about March 20. Witness sent down the oxen, and Mr. Malherbe, the defendant's partner, received them.

In cross-examination, witness denied having had any conversation with a Mr. Barnard about the cattle in question. He did not remember travelling with him at all.

Did you travel with him from Paarl to Hutchinson on April 9?—I did.

Did you tell Barnard that Thompson had sent Basson to get a couple of hundred cattle for him, and that Thompson was going to burn his fingers over it?—I do not remember it.

Would you contradict such a statement?—I would not.

John A. Robus, butcher, of Victoria West, stated that he recollected a lot of oxen arriving in the village on April 2. Witness offered to buy some, and made a certain offer. Witness believed he was buying the cattle from Basson. The general condition of about 40 or 50 of the oxen was good, but the others were poor. Some of the oxen were very old, and others very young. Witness considered he had the pick of the oxen in what he got.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness did not know why Viljoen should think the oxen belonged to Thompson. Witness wrote to Thompson in May, sending the weights of the cattle, in reply to a request from Thompson.

Mr. Verster, in examination, detailed the conversation that took place between Thompson and Basson when they met at Victoria West. Thompson informed Basson that as he had not delivered the cattle in time he could not take them but as he was sorry for him he would do his best to help him to dispose of them, and offered to let them go to his farm. The condition of the cattle was only very poor.

In cross-examination, witness said he was standing close to Basson and Thompson when they were speaking. Witness signed the receipt produced. He received the money for the oxen on Thompson's behalf. Basson and Thompson went to the "Veldwachter." Witness was the bosom friend of Thompson; in fact, he was the friend of all people.

To His Lordship: Witness never saw Basson before the Sunday in question.

Johannes Moller, a farmer, stated that in April last he was on Thompson's farm. Basson was there. Thompson and Basson changed an ox for a bull.

In cross-examination, witness said the exchange occurred on April 8.

William Thompson, son of the defendant, stated he was on the farm Leeuwkalk when the cattle were taken there by Basson. They had some trouble with the herds, and Basson wanted to dismiss one, but he declined to do so as he would want him to take the cattle to Cape Town, as he intended selling them to Von Nettleblat. Witness paid the herd for him as he was short of cash.

In cross-examination, witness said the veld on the farm was not very good just at that time.

To the Court: The cattle had been taken back to Brussell's farm by consent.

The evidence of Baron Von Nettleblat, which was taken on commission, was read. He stated that he believed the cattle belonged to Basson.

Sir. H. Juta closed his case, and counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff's case was that he was employed by the defendant to proceed to Kenhardt and purchase for him about 200 oxen at a price to be agreed upon after he arrived at Kenhardt, through correspondence by wire, and that he was to receive remuneration at the rate of £1 per ox. On the other hand the defendant said that in negotiations with the plaintiff he informed him fully that he had entered into a contract with the German Government to supply them with oxen at the price of £15 5s. each, and that he would be prepared to pay the plaintiff £15 each for the same quality of ox as he was to deliver to the German Government. If the Court had to depend merely on the evidence in the case, it would have a very difficult task, but fortunately there was a good deal of documentary evidence, which threw a good deal of light on the circumstances. In the first place he would turn to the telegram that was sent on March 14 by plaintiff to defendant, and see whether it supported plaintiff's or defendant's statement. The plaintiff wired that Brussel had an offer of £17, and would he take as many good oxen as he could get at £16 10s. Now, that telegram proved conclusively that there was no such contract as that alleged by the defendant, because how could Basson expect Thompson to pay £16 10s. for cattle for which he would only receive £15 5s. Such a telegram could not have been sent unless the question of price of the oxen was still open. Defendant wired back that he could not pay more than £15. Defendant told the Court that very soon after he got the telegram from plaintiff he considered that his negotiations with Basson were concluded, and that he set about purchasing elsewhere. He may have done so, but all the time he was under contract with Basson. On March 20 plaintiff sent defendant a telegram to the effect that he would arrive at Victoria West at a certain time, and asked him to be there. He did so, and seemed satisfied with the cattle. The defendant said he was not. The Court was expected to believe that the plaintiff quietly subsided, and said: "What is to become of me?" The Court did not believe the plaintiff would have been so easily satisfied. In the face of all the evidence it was impossible to arrive at any other conclusion than that the defendant told several persons that the oxen were his, and how did he deal with them? He sent them to his farm to stop there, and also sold them without consulting the plaintiff. Under all the circumstances the claim of the plaintiff for the price of the cattle would have to be allowed, and also the commission, and judgment would be given as prayed, with costs.

GENERAL MOTION.

SMELLERKAMP V. RICHTER. { 1905.
Aug. 18th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order compelling the respondent, Ernest Richter, against whom an interdict and an order of ejectment had been granted in the Magistrate's Court, to transfer the licence of the International Hotel, Durbanville, of which he was the lessee and failed to pay the rent to the lessor of the premises, Mr. Smellekamp, who had nominated another lessee.

A similar order to that in the case of Ohlsson's Breweries v. Kerr's Trustee was granted.

TRIAL CAUSES.

ESTATE VORSTER V. PRETORIUS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment for plaintiff for £361, with taxed costs, in terms of consent paper.

Sale and purchase—Conditional sale.

This was an action to recover certain instalments due on the purchase price of certain land.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was the owner of a farm called Bonnievale in the district of Swellendam. About April, 1903, the plaintiff, through his agent, sold to the defendant, and the defendant purchased, certain eight lots on the farm at a price of £34 10s. per acre, which was to be paid in two instalments of £146 9s. on May 1, 1903, and May 1, 1904. The defendant failed to pay the instalments, and plaintiff claimed £292 18s., with costs.

The defendant in his plea set out that after inspecting the lots he told the agent that it was too late for him to satisfy himself as to the efficiency of the furrow, and said that he would look at the furrow at another time. The agent got him to sign a paper in case he was satisfied as to which lots he would pick, but on that paper there were no conditions of sale. He also told the agent that he was a poor man, and unless he got some money from the military authorities he could not purchase.

Mr. Sutton was for the plaintiff, and Mr. J. E. K. de Villiers was for the defendant.

Piet Johannes Laurens, who acted as agent for the plaintiff, in 1903, said the plaintiff had built a water furrow from Breede River. When the defendant came to the farm the conditions of sale were discussed, and witness told him he would have to pay the purchase price in seven instalments. The defendant read the conditions of sale before he signed.

Witness had the right of letting certain rooms on the property, and of these defendant hired four. The defendant signed the "keep brief" on the spot in lead pencil. Witness took the defendant to the house of the plaintiff. Some time afterwards Messrs. Schoeman, Swartz, and Meyer, who had purchased plots, visited the property, and Mr. Meyer said that he could foresee a difficulty with regard to a wooden aqueduct running round a kraantz. Meyer went on to plead poverty, and that he had been told by Mr. Calitz that £1,000 would have to be expended in buying iron pipes. Such being the case, he thought that the sale should be considered to have fallen through. Later in the day the defendant told witness that his brother Franz could not advance him the money, and that he (Gericke) like Meyer, could foresee difficulties. Defendant went on to ask witness to cancel the sale, but this witness said that he was not in a position to do.

Defendant subsequently wrote a letter to the effect that the agreement had not been kept, inasmuch as the furrow was eighteen and not seven miles long. Furthermore, he had not been paid out by the military, and, being a poor man, he could not possibly purchase the plots. Witness had not misrepresented the advantages and disadvantages of the land to defendant. Witness in reply to the letter pointed out that other people had wanted to buy the land, but witness was not given to selling one piece of land twice. A hesitating purchaser by the name of De Jager had thought better of his diffident attitude, and had bought the plots assigned him, but would have to pay £100 as costs for the manner in which he had dallied. As witness would be grieved to see a poor man like Gericke in a similar plight to that of De Jager, he (witness) counselled Gericke to pay up. There was no conditional purchase about the matter.

Cross-examined: Witness was paid for his efforts by what he could make. A certain price was fixed, and if witness could get a bid beyond that amount witness pocketed the difference. If defendant sold eight of the plots, witness would give him one as a present. Witness did not tell other witnesses that if the defendant approved of the furrow he would purchase the lots. The defendant told him about camping a farm for the military, but while the defendant spoke of getting money either from his brother or the military he did not say unless he got that money he could not purchase the lots, furrow or no furrow. The defendant protested very strongly against the declaration being sent to him. The day after the first visit of the defendant witness showed Mr. Honeyball, who picked certain lots, over the ground. Witness did not say that the lots would not be purchased unless the defendant approved of the furrow and got compensation from the military.

Mr. De Villiers: You have a great capacity for denying, Mr. Lawrence?

Continuing, witness, in explanation of the conversation with Honeyball, said that the latter was only in position to buy a small lot. The defendant did not say in the presence of witnesses that he would not buy any lots near such a rotten furrow, nor did he repeat that he refused to purchase anything on the same evening in the presence of the same witnesses.

The plaintiff in the course of his evidence produced a diary in support of his contention, despite the protest of Mr. De Villiers, who said that the book had not been "discovered."

Hopley, J., in glancing through the volume, said to the witness: "What's this thing occurring every day?"

Witness: That means no water in the sluit, my lord.

Mr. Sutton (to witness): But that means the water was there, but not running.

Witness: Yes, my lord.

Carl Petrus van Wyk stated that he heard the defendant say that he had bought the ground.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: Witness did not start to write out conditions of sale instead of a guarantee about the water.

Mr. Sutton closed his case.

Jan Gericke, defendant in the case, stated that he fenced in his brother's farm as a protection camp for the military. In April, 1903, he visited Bonnievale, and put up at Mr. Lourens' house. Lourens said he had purchased the farm from Rigg to sell out in erven in order to give the poor people a chance. After witness had inquired about the distance of the furrow, Lourens said the terms were so reasonable that almost any man could pay the instalments out of the ground. Lourens on that occasion said it was too late to see the furrow. Witness denied having said in the presence of Van Wyk that he had bought ground, and was going to live there. Witness admired the ground, but regretted that he could not see the position of the furrow. The paper that witness signed did not contain any conditions of sale. The plaintiff said if he did not get sufficient purchasers there would be no sale. It was only a conditional paper that witness signed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Sutton: He knew that Oudtshoorn ground was the best in the country, and he thought the ground in question was like that of Oudtshoorn. Mr. Lourens was not a reliable man. He said he bought the ground from Mr. Rigg for £17,000. If he (witness) might drop down dead, Lourens never showed him the conditions of sale.

[Hopley, J.: Never mind telling us about dropping down dead here.]

Continuing, witness said that Lourens always had his son-in-law present to hear evidence.

[Hopley, J.: Does he keep a son-in-law on the premises for that purpose?]

Witness: Yes.

Continuing, witness, in reply to Mr. Sutton, said he never had the Koep brief in his hand. When he signed the paper there was nothing on it but the names.

[Hopley, J.: He was trying to induce people to purchase under false representations from the first?]

Witness: Yes.

[Hopley, J.: Was it part of his swindle to keep you from going to the suit?]

Yes.

Susannah Gericke, who was with her husband at Lourens' house, said that in her presence no conditions of sale were read out. Her husband said nothing about purchasing the land. Witness corroborated her husband as to what took place at the farm and in other material facts.

Cross-examined by Mr. Sutton: She assisted her husband, who had a lot to do. She did the writing part of the business.

Piet Lourens, recalled, said that it was the intention of the plaintiff to make a dorp out of the farm. There were many people on the ground now with many ostriches and a considerable amount of land under lucerne.

Mr. Honiball said Rigg did not speak to the defendant in witness's presence. When witness was looking for a small plot Lourens said there was still a chance for him as Gericke had not actually purchased.

Philip Rudolph Schoeman said on the 1st June, 1903, he, in company with others, visited the spot at the request of Mr. Lourens. He heard the defendant say to Lourens that he (Lourens) had not adhered to his agreement. Gericke told Lourens that the demand for the instalment was contrary to the agreement which was if the military paid and the furrow suited him he could have paid £50. Lourens then said the demand was a mistake on the part of Teubos. Witness had sold plots provisionally.

Antonio Meyer, who was in the company of the plaintiff and defendant, testified to the defendant repudiating the agreement of sale to the plaintiff. Lourens attributed the letter of demand to a misunderstanding on the part of Teubos. Next morning he heard the defendant say to Lourens that he would not purchase ground near such a rotten furrow.

Cross-examined by Mr. Sutton: Witness became secretary of the committee established for the sale of the land.

Mr. De Villiers closed his case.

Postea (August 28th). Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J.: The plaintiff alleges in his declaration that in the month of April, 1903, he sold, through his agent, one Louwrens, certain eight lots of ground on his farm, Bonnie Vale, in the district of Swellendam, for the sum of £1,009, payable in seven instalments, falling due on the 1st of May in each year, together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and in the present suit he claims payment of the first two instalments. He alleges that the defendant signed a written contract of sale, and in the course of the hearing a document of a peculiar nature in more respects than one was produced, bearing among other names of alleged purchasers that of the defendant written in lead-pencil, together with the numbers of certain of the allotments. Such name is admitted by the defendant to be his genuine signature, and the numbers were also written by him, but he pleads that he was induced to sign his name on the representation of Louwrens that he was entering into a merely provisional agreement, which would become final and binding only if, after inspection of a certain aqueduct or furrow, he was satisfied therewith, and if he were paid certain moneys which were owed to him. And he says that on a subsequent inspection he was dissatisfied with the aqueduct, and that he then at once declared that he would not conclude the bargain. These are the issues raised by the pleadings, and the matter has proved to be one of some difficulty and of a painful nature, since it is clear that some, if not all, of the witnesses on one side or other—all apparently respectable and decent people—must be committing deliberate perjury. The facts, which are beyond doubt, are that the plaintiff, in the year 1901, purchased the farm Bonnie Vale, which seems to have considerable agricultural possibilities, and to which his predecessor had made an aqueduct and water furrow from the Breede River from an intake about nine or ten miles away. A portion of this farm plaintiff caused to be cut up into agricultural allotments irrigable by means of this water-leading, and he advertised what he called his colonisation scheme, offering such allotments to the public. Nothing much seems to have come of his original offer, and it appears that by 1903 he had put the whole matter into the hands of Louwrens—who lives upon the property—with whom he agreed that Louwrens might sell all the allotments for about £16,500, and that any surplus above that amount which he could obtain would belong to Louwrens himself. Whether this was the exact contract between plaintiff and Louwrens or not, it is clear that something of the sort had been agreed upon, and that Louwrens in subsequent transactions with third parties took the active part in concluding or attempting to conclude contracts, and it is also clear that he had a direct and substantial interest in getting rid of the land as expeditiously and advantageously as possible. Early in 1903 Louwrens seems to have drawn up and the plaintiff to have typewritten the document which I have described as peculiar in some respects. It is written in type on a single leaf of foolscap paper, and there are certain uninitialled interlineations. It is to the following effect (the original being in somewhat illiterate Dutch): "We, the undersigned, have hereby agreed and bind ourselves to have purchased a certain share or portion, according to what is set after each name (in extent), in the farm Bonnie Vale, for the price of £34 10s. per acre, of the ground below the water-furrow, together with an undivided free right in the outlying veld and an equal right to the half of the water furrow. Each purchaser will be bound to pay the sum of £5 for each acre which he has purchased before or on the 1st of May (1903), and so paid yearly on the 1st of May, until the entire sum is paid with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. (on payment of the first instalment transfer will be given pari passu to the purchasers). If any person wishes to obtain transfer he is bound to pay two-thirds of his (individual) purchase price, and the balance which he still owes may remain on first mortgage at 5 per cent. Finally, this agreement is of force only in case M. J. Louwrens procures enough purchasers for all the ground below the furrow. Seller (signed) M. J. Louwrens, q.q.; (signed) M. J. Louwrens. Date; purchasers; extent of ground." Such was the document the parts included by me in rectangular brackets being the uninitialled manuscript interlineations referred to across the margin is the following manuscript addition in Louwrens's writing. (Each purchaser is entitled to one unirrigated allotment for each lot which he takes. (Signed) M. J. Louwrens.) By the 25th March eleven people had signed on the leaf on which the agreement was written, and the signatures then go on on a second leaf under similar three headings of Date, Purchasers, and Extent. This leaf was affixed by an ordinary pin to the first one, and it is plain from the numerous pin-holes in the two sheets that they have been very frequently detached and again united by this method. Nearly half way down this second leaf is the defendant's signature in pencil. Now, the defendant, who is a resident of Mossel Bay, had been told of the Bonnie Vale scheme in that town by one Schoeman, a relative and sub-agent of Louwrens's, and he had intended to visit the place specially with a view to purchasing some of these lots if he approved of the proposition after inspection; but having occasion towards the end of April, 1903, to go to Montagu for another reason, he on April 29 hired a cart in that town, and drove to the place accompanied by his wife, the driver being an intelligent coloured man named Stoffel Abrahams. They reached Louwrens's house, and it is said by Louwrens that defendant, after some talk on the subject, there and then practically agreed to purchase the lots in question, and this before he had inspected the ground, in corroboration of which he produces his stepson, Van Wyk, who says that defendant told him before he had been on the ground, that he had purchased 14 morgen there. This I am unable to believe, as the defendant is a poor man with a large family, and the amount of over £1,000 was a very large liability for him to undertake. Moreover, even if he had been a rich man, I cannot believe that he would purchase ground without going to examine the nature, and exact position of it, and in the case of irrigable arable land, which this was, satisfying himself as to its slopes and other facilities. So that, setting apart the fact that there was admittedly no water running in the furrow owing to a breakdown of the wooden aqueduct somewhere higher up in its course, and the unlikelihood that a man would buy without seeing the run of the water, I find the greatest difficulty in believing that any man like the defendant could so readily commit himself to a concluded bargain about a thing he had not seen, although it was lying only a short distance off, ready for inspection. Here, then, is the first doubt raised in my mind as to the trustworthiness of the plaintiff's witnesses. However, it is clear that after some conversation, Louwrens and defendant walked to the ground and inspected the lots in question. They were followed by the hired cart, in which Mrs. Gericke and a Miss Van Wyk (Louwren's stepdaughter, since married to one Esterhuizen) were driving. It is clear that Louwrens took with him a diagram showing the subdivision and position of the lots, and he also had with him the document on which defendant signed his name, but whether he had both leaves or only the second leaf thereof is a matter about which there is a considerable conflict of evidence, which, however, I do not think to be of very great importance, save as a test of accuracy of testimony, as it seems to me that the present controversy might in either case have arisen. There in the veld, and with a lead pencil produced by Louwrens, defendant signed the document or placed his name on the second leaf thereof; and it is sought to hold him to the purchase chiefly by reason of that fact; but Louwrens is alone in swearing that this was an unconditional and final acceptance of the contract of sale. He is directly contradicted by the defendant, by Mr. Gericke, and by the driver, who says that he had a special reason for paying close attention to the conversation, as he, and some of his friends in Montague of the well-to-do coloured class, had an idea of purchasing some of these lots, and were anxious to know the conditions. These three witnesses all swear positively and circumstantially that Louwrens induced defendant to sign by assuring him that the whole matter was provisional, and that defendant would not be bound, unless after inspection of the furrow he were satisfied therewith, and unless further he found that he could make the necessary financial arrangements to meet the first instalments by being paid some money which he said was owing to him. It is admitted that another matter was also spoken about, viz., a block of about 55 morgen of this ground, of which just then one Scheepers had the refusal, but of which it was suggested that Gericke might have the disposal, in case Scheepers threw up his option, and it was pointed out by Louwrens that he would be willing to pay a commission of £10 per morgen to Gericke, who might thus pay off the greater portion of the £1,000 he would have to pay for his own lots. After the defendant had signed his name, his party drove to Montagu, and Louwrens and Miss Van Wyk walked back to their house. It is alleged by the plaintiff himself that he met the defendant's cart at the farm boundary, and that defendant then told him he had taken up 14 morgen of the ground. On this point, however, Rigg is contradicted by four witnesses, viz., Mr. and Mrs. Gericke, Stoffel Abrahams, and the witness Honiball, who all swear that the two men did not speak at all, and that they were on different roads, and only close enough to wave a salute to each other. The entry in his diary, on which Rigg relies to corroborate him, does not really do so. It is simply to the effect that Mr. and Mrs. Gericke had come and taken 14 morgen. It does not say "spoke to Gericke, who told me he had bought, etc.," and it is clear that, as the entry stands, it might have been made on Louwren's report, while at this distance of time its presence in his diary may have misled Rigg into thinking that he remembers a conversation to the effect he has recorded. On May 1, or two days after his departure, the defendant again visited the place, and this expedition is utilised by the plaintiff and his witnesses to prove further that he, at that time, considered himself finally bound by the contract; for they swear that he came out for the conditions of sale, which he said he had been twitted by his brother-in-law in Montagu with not having obtained. But it is odd, to say the least of it, that, if that was the sole object of his journey, he went away without obtaining a copy of the document, though, according to the evidence, Van Wyk was actually engaged in writing him a copy; nor does the reason given by Rigg and Louwrens for his going back without the only thing he had come for (viz., that it was a joint and not a separate agreement of sale) seem to me at all satisfactory. The defendant, however, gives a totally different version. He says that he went out partly to inspect the furrow, but that it was said by Louwrens that no horses were that day available for the purpose, and partly to get some written guarantee as to the capacity of the furrow and the water-supply, which he might exhibit to people to whom he might try to sell the 55 morgen, in case they should be abandoned by Scheepers. This is, at all events, a plausible explanation of this visit—at least, as likely to be true, it seems to me, as the one given by the plaintiff's witnesses. Defendant says that Louwrens refused to give him any guarantee in writing about the water-supply, but that he spoke most enthusiastically about its abundance, and that he stated that defendant and all purchasers would have an opportunity of inspecting the furrow before the contract was finally concluded. In view of the provisional nature of the clause with which the document concludes, which states clearly that the sales would be binding only if Louwrens could get enough purchasers for the whole of the irrigable land, I think it not at all unlikely that, at the stage at which matters stood on the 1st of May, Louwrens would then say that matters were provisional, and that all parties could satisfy themselves at a later date. Early on May 2 defendant left by train, and returned to Mossel Bay, and shortly after that date, on May 7, a telegram was sent to him telling him that he might have Scheepers's land for disposal. This, however, has come to nothing, and we are only concerned with the lots defendant is said to have personally bought. On May 18, a letter was sent by plaintiff's agent, Teubes, to defendant, demanding the first instalment, and enclosing what he called a declaration of purchaser, for signature before a J.P. This declaration is in reality so drawn that it would amount to a written contract of sale, and if defendant had signed it, as requested, he would undoubtedly have destroyed any chance of defending such an action as the present; but he did not sign it, and he swears that he posted a reply to Louwrens pointing out that the matter was not concluded, as he had not inspected the furrow yet, and moreover, that he had been asked for the whole of the first instalment, whereas Louwrens had agreed, in case of a sale, to take £50 in cash and a promissory note for the balance. Very shortly after this Schoeman seems to have got up a party of buyers or possible buyers to proceed to an inspection of the place, and defendant joined them. They all arrived at the farm on June 2, and defendant says that he almost at once accused Louwrens of a breach of faith in trying to fix him as a purchaser before he had approved of the furrow, and in asking for the full amount of the first instalment, and he swears that all Louwrens had to say was that it was a mistake of Teubes's. Louwrens admits a complaint by defendant, but states that it was only about the demand for the whole of the first instalment, and he admits that he said that that was a mistake of Teubes's. But here again defendant is directly corroborated by independent witnesses, who swear that he impressed upon Louwrens that the contract was conditional on his inspection of the furrow. The party inspected the furrow, which was not in a satisfactory state. There was no river water in it, a considerable length of the wooden aqueduct along the face of a krantz had fallen down, and it was clear that a large sum of money would have to be spent in putting it into working order. Of these defects and troubles Louwrens spoke in an optimistic spirit, pointing out that by co-operation a satisfactory state of things could be brought about without very heavy expense to any individual; but the defendant swears that on his return he said plainly, and more than once, in the hearing of all the party, that he would not buy with such a defective furrow. Louwrens says that defendant said nothing at all publicly, but that privately he asked him to rescind the contract, as he could not afford to carry it out. The other witnesses, however, again corroborate defendant, and contradict Louwrens on the point, and it is difficult to see what interest they can have in giving false evidence in this particular. It is clear that the defendant has never done any act in any way showing or tending to show that he considered himself the owner of the land. He did not go upon it or try to dispose of it, and for some time he seems to have been left in peace; but in August, 1903, another demand was made upon him, and he wrote repudiating liability. Subsequent attempts in October, 1903, and in 1904, all failed to get any acknowledgment or settlement from him, though he was threatened by Louwrens with law suits, bankruptcy, and imprisonment. Taking the evidence as a whole, I am not satisfied that the plaintiff's case has been established; the possibilities seem to me to be on the side of the defendant, as also does the preponderance of the evidence, and I am of opinion that there should be judgment for the defendant, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

INSOLVENT ESTATE VINK { 1905.
V. NEW ZEALAND INSUR- { Aug. 21st
ANCE CO.

Fire insurance—Conditions of policy.

V. had insured against fire with the N.Z. Co., and subsequently his premises were burned. By the conditions of his policy he was bound (1) to give notice to the company of the fire forthwith; and (2) within 15 days to furnish them with an accurate and particular account of his losses. (3) It was further provided that no action should be sustainable against the company unless brought within six months after the loss or damage. V. had not complied with the second condition, and more than 18 months after his fire his trustee in insolvency brought an action to recover the insurance from the company.

Held, that as these conditions were fair and reasonable and had been duly brought to V.'s notice, judgment must be given for the defendants with costs.

This was an action brought by Edward Ridge Syfret in his capacity as sole trustee in the insolvent estate of Johannes Albertus Vink against the New Zealand Insurance Company to recover certain sums of money upon two policies of fire insurance.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he was the trustee duly appointed in the insolvent estate of J. H. Vink, whose estate was finally adjudicated on the 12th March, 1904. On the 18th December, 1903, Vink, who was then carrying on business as a general dealer at Philadelphia, Koeberg, Cape Division, effected a policy of insurance for £1,800, for which the premium was duly paid, on his merchandise, shop, stock, and furniture, there situated, with the defendant company, through their agent, duly appointed, at Koeberg. On the 22nd December, 1903, he effected a further policy of insurance against fire with the defendant company to the extent of £1,800, made up thus: £650 on a certain iron shed, £1,000 on certain oathay, and £150 on certain timber and two reaping machines. On the 25th December, 1903, a fire occurred on his premises whereby the buildings, furniture, and stock were destroyed. Notice of the occurrence of the fire was duly given to the defendant company on the following day. The defendant company refused to satisfy the claim under the policy. Thereafter, on the 13th January, 1904, an inquest was held into the circumstances of the said fire. On or about the 18th January criminal proceedings for arson were instituted and prosecuted against the said Vink, and one Charles Albert Haupt and others. The said Vink and Haupt were duly tried and acquitted of the said charge. Plaintiff prayed for judgment for the said sums of £1,800, £650, £600, and £150.

The defendant's plea was:

1. Defendant admits paragraphs 1 and 2 of plaintiff's declaration.

2. The said Vink made two proposals to the defendant company's agent for insurance by the defendant company against fire. One on the 18th December, 1903, for £1,800 on merchandise, shop, stock, and furniture, and one on the 22nd December, 1903, for £1,800, on iron store (£650), oathay (£1,000), timber and two reaping machines, all situated at Philadelphia, and, having paid respectively the sums of £18 9s. and £13 19s. on account of the respective premiums receipts, in form similar to that here unto annexed marked "A" were issued by the said agent to the said Vink and accepted by him. The said receipts constitute the contracts of insurance between the said Vink and the defendant company, and they were in force as such on the 25th December when a fire took place which destroyed certain of the goods and buildings insured, of which fire due notice was given.

3. By the said receipts it is agreed that the said buildings and goods are insured subject to the terms and conditions of the defendant company's policy. By the 13th and 21st conditions of the defendant company's said policies incorporated as aforesaid as conditions of the said contracts between the said Vink and the defendant company, of which both the said Vink and the plaintiff had notice and knowledge, it is provided respectively, viz., by the 13th condition: "That the insured sustaining any loss or damage by fire shall forthwith give notice in writing to the directors or manager or other nearest agent of the company, and shall within fifteen days after such fire shall have happened, deliver to the said directors, their manager, or agent, as accurate and particular account, in detail, of their loss or damage respectively, as the nature and circumstance of the case will admit, with full particulars of any other insurance upon the property, and shall verify the same by solemn declaration or affirmation before a Justice of the Peace, and shall produce at the office of the company his books of account, vouchers, and such other evidence as the directors, their manager, or agent may reasonably require; and no claim whatever under this policy shall be payable or recoverable unless the terms of this condition have been complied with. No profit of any kind is to be included in such claim, and if there appear to be any fraud, overcharge, imposition, or any misrepresentation, or if the fire shall have happened by the procurement or wilful act, means, or connivance of the insured, claimant, or claimants, they shall be excluded from all benefit under this policy." And by the 21st condition it is expressly provided: "That no suit or action of any kind against the said company for the recovery of any claim upon, under, or by virtue of this policy, shall be sustainable in any court of law or equity unless such suit or action shall be commenced within the term of six months next after any loss or damage shall occur, and in case any such suit or action shall be commenced against the said company after the expiration of six months next after such loss or damage shall have occurred, the lapse of time shall be taken and deemed as conclusive evidence against the validity of the claim thereby so attempted to be enforced." The said Vink and also the plaintiff have wholly failed and neglected to comply with and fulfil the said conditions, and did not within the aforesaid fifteen days, or at any time, deliver to the said directors, their manager, or agent, any account at all in accordance with the above condition. Furthermore, the defendant states that the action was only instituted on March 11, 1905, whereas the fire occurred on December 25, 1903.

4. The defendant company admits that the said Vink was at the date of the said fire interested in the buildings and goods insured, but it does not admit the alleged extent of such interest or the amount of damage alleged, and defendant puts plaintiff to the proof of his claim.

5. As regards paragraph 7, the defendant company states that the prosecution was a public prosecution at the suit of the Crown, and not a private prosecution, and that it only admits that Haupt and Vink were acquitted.

6. Save as aforesaid, defendant denies paragraphs 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 9, save that it refuses to pay the sums claimed, and says that by virtue of the premises it is not liable to pay any sum to the plaintiff.

Wherefore defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

The annexure to the plea was headed, South African Branch, New Zealand Insurance Co., and read as follows: Koeberg Agency, December 18, 1903. Mr. Johannes Albertus Vink having this day made a proposal to the above company, for the insurance of £1,800 (eighteen hundred pounds sterling) on merchandise, shop stock, and furniture, situated Philadelphia, and having paid the sum of £18 9s. as a deposit on account of the premium, the same is hereby held insured, subject to the terms and conditions of the company's policies for thirty days from date hereof, unless the manager in Cape Town previously determines to decline the risk, of which due notice will be given. (Signed) J. van Renen, agent. Note.—The assured is particularly requested to take notice that this receipt will only remain in force thirty days from the date hereof, and in the event of a policy not being delivered within that time, the fact should be reported to the manager in Cape Town.

Plaintiff, in his replication, denied that the alleged conditions set forth in paragraph 3 of the plea were material conditions or were incorporated as conditions of the terms of insurance, sued upon in this action, or that he or the said Vink had due or legal notice thereof. He denied that the said company were entitled to rely on the said conditions as a defence to the claim.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Alexander) for plaintiff, Mr. D. Buchanan for defendant.

Cornelius J. Muller, clerk in the Master's Office, produced the records in the insolvent estate.

Alfred Newton Foot said he was a partner of Mr. Syfret, who was the trustee of the insolvent estate. Witness had had control of the whole matter. He had received four books from the insolvent—two day-books, and two sundry debtors' books. There was not a complete set of books, in fact, there was nothing from which he could make up an account of the material destroyed. Witness was only able to make up a very approximate account from the proofs of debts and so forth. Witness applied to the defendants for payment of the policies, and in reply was referred to the defendants' attorneys. On the 12th August, witness's firm wrote to the company, setting out the circumstances of the fire and insolvency, and claiming payment of the insurance. They did not file a claim at that time, because they had not satisfactory details, and also in view of the fact that criminal proceedings for arson were pending against the insolvent. Further correspondence ensued, in which the defendants said that they were under the impression that any intention to claim the insurance had been abandoned, and that under all the circumstances they could not comply with the demand of the trustee. Amongst the claims proved against the estate were claims for merchandise to the amount of £1,510.

Mr. Buchanan submitted that this was not good evidence as to the stock in the insolvent's premises.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that if the question of the amount was to be gone into, it would be referred to a referee. The evidence at present being led in regard to the value of the stock was inadmissible.

Mr. Upington said that in that case Mr. Foot would be unable to assist the Court any further.

Witness, in answer to the Court, said that he could not, from the books, give a statement as to the actual position of the estate at the time of the fire. He thought that Vink was just about solvent at the time. The debts proved were £2,070. The assets realised £570, £500 was received from the Guardian Insurance Co., the movables realised £5 odd, and the outstanding debts were £193 6s. 8d.

The Court: But for the land, which would not burn everything in the estate was destroyed?

Witness: All except some horses and carts, which were pledged.

Johannes Albertus Vink, now of Achter Paarl, said that he was at present travelling for life insurance. In November, 1903, a man named Van Renen, who was agent of the defendant company, came to him. Witness was then carrying on a general dealer's business at Philadelphia. He agreed with Van Renen to insure his merchandise, shop, and furniture for the sum of £1,800. Witness paid the premium. He was not made acquainted with the conditions of the company's policy. Witness asked Van Renen what the conditions were, and the latter said that he did not know. Witness was not aware at that time of the 13th and 21st conditions. On the 22nd December he made a further proposal on the oathway, the iron shed, and two reaping machines. Witness was given a receipt for the premium. Van Renen inspected the buildings and stock which had been insured. Witness did not read through the proposal form. Van Renen asked him questions, and wrote down the answers he gave, after which witness signed the form. Witness was unable, after the fire, to make up a particular account of his stock. He had lost his books, stock lists, and papers by the fire. The day after the fire witness telegraphed to the company saying that his place had been destroyed by fire. The fire took place on the evening of the 25th December, 1903. On the 6th January, Mr. Wilson, the company's manager, came out, and, after looking over the premises, gave witness a certain form, and told him that he must specify his losses in regard to the merchandise. Mr. Wilson also gave him a copy of the company's policy. Witness told him that he could not make up the list, and Wilson then said he must consult his solicitor.

Cross-examined: He had a conversation with the agent about the conditions. Within ten days of the fire Mr. Wilson showed him the form of the conditions. At the time the fire took place witness, Van Renen, and others were trying to get a contract for forage, and the forage in the store would have gone to the Harbour Board.

John Fredrick van Renen stated that at the latter end of 1903 he was agent at Philadelphia for the New Zealand Company. In December of that year he was agent for the company. Witness approached Vink about insuring the stock. At first Vink was not anxious to insure, but witness subsequently got him to sign the proposal forms. Witness filled in the text of the proposal, and also the valuation. The iron shed was practically destroyed after the fire.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Witness was a partner with Vink in the farming line, and he had an interest with him and others in the contract with the Harbour Board. He knew Vink wanted to insure, but he did not know that he wanted to insure with the New Zealand Company.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Mr. Buchanan read the evidence—taken on commission—of Frank William Wilson, manager of the defendant company, which set out that the first he heard of the matter was a telegram from Vink on the 26th December, 1903. He sent a Mr. Harley to Philadelphia on the 29th December. Subsequently witness went to the farm and said that no policy had been issued, and that Vink had better take the form with the conditions to his solicitor, who would tell him what to do. Deponent remarked that the circumstances of the fire appeared to be rather extraordinary, and advised an inquiry, which was declined. In his opinion, he certainly did not think there had been a large stock on the premises. Vink never sent in a claim to the company; the first they heard of it was when the trustee's solicitors sent a letter of demand.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Mr. Upington: The case of conditions inscribed on a railway ticket is very different from that of conditions embodied in a life policy. No doubt there are cases in which a person who takes a ticket is bound by the conditions printed thereon. But this is quite a different case. Here neither the agent nor the client knows what the conditions are.

[Hopley, F.: The agent says he knows that there are conditions.]

But for a binding contract the agent and the insurer must both know what the conditions are. See Porter on Insurance (3rd edit. p. 27). My client had no opportunity of knowing what the conditions were. In the case of Queen Insurance Company v. Parsons (7 Ap. Ca. 96, 125) the question of reference to the conditions was not raised. Here the Company say that they will not issue a policy until they are satisfied as to certain particulars, but they will insure. I would urge (1) that the conditions of this policy were not understood by both parties to the contract. (2) That even assuming they were there is no proof of this. (3) That no further statement of account was produced; and (4) that the criminal trial took place as long ago as August last, when Vink was acquitted.

Mr. D. Buchanan: The word "Insurance" of itself means little or nothing. I refer to Queen v. Rymell (10 Q.B. 178). This is not a simple contract. See also Woodgate v. S.W. Railway Company (51 L.T., 826), Burtse v. G.W. Railway Company (5 C.P., 1). The case of Queen Insurance Co. v. Parsons shows that a man is bound by the conditions of proposal forms and receipts as to the notice within 15 days, there is nothing to show that that was a condition precedent. See Stewart v. Sichel and Others (4 Juta 436). Here there is no question of waiver.

[Hopley, J.: His case is that there was no contract.]

Then they have no case at all. Our conditions are only the ordinary conditions and we never attempted to obscure them.

[Hopley, J.: Then you say that there is no contract before the Court?]

Yes, and the plaintiff is estopped from leading evidence as to waiver. The conditions on the proposal form are conditions precedent.

Mr. Upington in reply.

Buchanan, J.: I think the first question is whether the conditions of the policy are binding upon Vink. They were brought to his notice when he proposed the insurance. They were agreed to by him in the written proposal which he signed, and they were specially referred to in the receipts which he obtained. I think, under these circumstances, there is no ground justifying the Court in coming to the conclusion that Vink can be exempted from these conditions. The next question is, have the conditions on the contract been complied with? The first condition, No. 13, requires that after a fire takes place the insured shall give notice of the fire forthwith, and within fifteen days deliver to the company an accurate and particular account in detail of his loss or damage, as the nature and circumstance of the case will admit. This condition in substance is a common condition in all policies of fire insurance. It is clear from the case of Hollander v. Royal Insurance Company that we must hold that it is a condition precedent which must be complied with before action can be brought. Up to the present time that condition has not been complied with. It is not a question of the sufficiency of the information given, but that no information whatever was supplied. Then there is the further condition, No. 21, which says "that no suit of any kind against the said company for the recovery of any claim upon, under, or by virtue of this policy shall be sustainable in any court of law or equity, unless such action or suit shall be commenced within the term of six months next after any loss or damage shall occur." The loss or damage occurred in December, 1903, and yet no action was instituted until March, 1905. Even if that Court should say that the prosecution for arson suspended the operation of this condition until after the other action had been decided, then the prosecution took place in August last, and more than six months elapsed after the conclusion of this prosecution before any proceedings took place in this case. Both conditions are reasonable conditions, in my opinion, especially in fire insurance. Vink was bound by these conditions and the trustee of his insolvent estate has no greater rights than he had against the insurance company. On both these grounds, the plaintiff cannot succeed in this action. There is no use in giving absolution from the instance. Seeing that the 21st condition has not been complied with, which makes no action sustainable after a period of six months. I think the proper judgment in this case ought to be judgment for the defendants, with costs. Judgment will be entered accordingly.

Hopley, J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

SMITH V. INSOLVENT ESTATE (1905.
GROSS AND SMITH BROS. (Aug. 22nd.

This was an action brought by David Smith, of Cape Town, against the insolvent estate of D. Gross and Smith Bros. to recover certain property alleged to have been unlawfully attached, or the value thereof (£120), and £50 damages.

From the declaration, it appeared that the plaintiff in the latter part of 1904 resided on a farm at Malagas, district of Swellendam, and along with his wife and child occupied two rooms. He said that he had certain wearing apparel, crockery, and furniture of the value of £65; a cart which he had purchased from one of the Smiths, of the value of £15, and two mares which he had also purchased from one of the Smiths, of the value of £40. After the compulsory sequestration of the estate of Gross and Smith Bros., the foregoing goods and property were attached, and the defendants refused or neglected to release the same from attachment. He claimed the release of the goods and property, or in default payment of their value (£120), and damages in the sum of £50.

Defendants, in their plea, put the plaintiff to proof that the goods belonged to him, and, as to the alleged purchases of the cart and mares in October last, said that at that time the liabilities of the firm, fairly calculated, exceeded their assets, fairly valued, and that the alleged transaction was an alienation in fraud of the firm's creditors, and was not for just and valuable consideration. They said that plaintiff had furnished no satisfactory proof of ownership of the other goods. They also denied that plaintiff had sustained any damage by reason of their acts, and prayed that the claim might be dismissed, with costs.

Plaintiff, in his replication, denied the alleged alienation in fraud of the firm's creditors, and said that the purchases made were bona-fide, and were for just and valuable consideration.

Mr. Roux was for plaintiff; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Swift) was for defendants.

Mr. Roux submitted that the onus was upon the defendants to prove that the property was not plaintiff's.

Buchanan, A. C. J., ruled that plaintiff must open his case.

David Smith (the plaintiff) said that he had worked in Cape Town as a bricklayer. He went to Malagas once before last Passover, that was in April, 1904. He asked if he could be allowed to stay there, as times were bad in Cape Town. He was given permission, and he sent his goods to the farm. He had about £220 or £225 when he went to Malagas. He was working about four years as a bricklayer in Cape Town, and had been paid at the rate of £4 for five days' work. Witness went on to testify as to his ownership of the property in question, and was subjected to a lengthy cross-examination by Mr. Upington. He denied that the receipts which he held from the Smiths were made out considerably after the dates that they bore.

Joseph Smith, partner in the firm of D. Gross and Smith Bros., said he remembered when his brother came to South Africa. Work was very plentiful then, and the building trade was brisk. Witness's brother earned £4 a week, and saved some money. He sold two horses to his brother David for £40, which was paid in cash. The money was put in the safe. Witness dealt in horses. That constituted a portion of the business of the firm. At the time witness sold the two mares he had seven horses besides. The mares were sent away because they were in foal.

In cross-examination by Mr. Upington, witness admitted that a judgment was given against his firm, and a meeting of creditors was called, and an endeavour was made to assign their estate. Barnett Smith was at present in Johannesburg. Witness sold the cart and horses on behalf of the firm, and received the money. Witness told Gross that he had sold them, but he did not know whether the sale was entered in the books, as he could not write. Witness could not recollect the date of the sale. Witness did not remember having claimed a number of things in the house as belonging to the firm. The firm had a bar in addition to the shop.

By the Court: They did not touch any of the attached property.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: But your property was all attached.]

Mr. Upington: These things had never been given up to the messenger.

Cross-examination continued: Witness knew of nothing being hidden on the farm.

Pierre F. de Villiers (called for the defence) said he had formerly been in the employ of the insolvent firm as bookkeeper. On Saturday mornings it was necessary for witness to pass through the house, and he then saw a large mirror, a sofa, dining-room, table, etc. Witness had since seen the mirror at Mr. Du Preez's house. The place was fairly well furnished. Witness did not know whether the cart and horses were sold or not. The cart was there when witness entered the employment of the firm. Witness saw the horses grazing on the farm on the afternoon of the messenger's arrival, but they were gone next day. The messenger arrived at 6 o'clock that evening, but did not attach the property until next morning. The entry on the cash-book of £40 was made by witness at Mr. Gross's request on the evening the messenger arrived. The receipts for the purchase price of the horses were made out the same evening, and antedated at the instruction of Joseph Smith.

In cross-examination, witness said that when D. Smith arrived with his wife and child they did not bring any furniture with them. Subsequently some parcels arrived. The house was well furnished after Gross left.

Mr. Roux having been heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said he found that the receipts held by the plaintiff for the carts and mares were not given when they purported to have been, but some time afterwards. The plaintiff's case rested solely upon his evidence and the documents, and, having regard to the suspicion that attached to the documents, and the conduct of the plaintiff, he (the learned Judge) could not find that the plaintiff ever bought the mares and cart from the insolvents, and paid for them. With regard to the wearing apparel, crockery, and furniture, he thought it possible that one or two things placed upon the list by the Sheriff's officer did belong to the plaintiff, but when a person acted in the way plaintiff did, and attempted to defraud the creditors of the estate by removing a quantity of property belong to the estate, and mixed up his own things with them, he must take the consequences of this amalgamation, and if he lost things thereby it must be taken as one of the consequences. Plaintiff attempted to remove things belonging to the firm, and in so doing he attempted to defraud the creditors. He might have lost a few things, but the plaintiff had not proved that any of the things belonging to him were attached. The judgment of the Court would be absolute from the instance, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

CHANNING V. CHANNING. { 1905.
Aug. 22nd.

This was an action for an order of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with the custody of the children. The parties were married in community of property in Cape Town, on August 3, 1896, and there was one child as issue of the marriage. In February, 1900, the defendant maliciously deserted the plaintiff, and had failed to contribute to her support.

Mr. D. Buchanan was for the plaintiff and the defendant was in default.

The plaintiff identified her marriage certificate with the defendant, who had been a ship's carpenter at the Docks. The defendant went to Durban when the war broke out, and witness followed him. Witness returned to her mother, and since February, 1900, she had heard nothing about him. She had information that the defendant had joined one of the corps during the war, and had gone to the front.

[Maasdorp, J.: Why do you think he deserted you?]

Because he has never sent a line since.

[Maasdorp, J.: He may be dead?]

Yes.

[Maasdorp, J.: Was there any unpleasantness at the time?]-Yes, he sent me back to my mother after some unpleasantness.

Decree of restitution granted, to be complied with on 12th September, or cause to be shown by the 16th October why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and why the plaintiff should not have custody of the child.

Postea (August 24).

Maasdorp, J.: In the case of Channing v. Channing, I notice that the defendant is not resident in this country, and there will have to be service according to the process by edictal citation, and more time consequently is allowed. In the judgment yesterday the time given is too short, but the circumstances were not brought to my notice. A decree of restitution will be granted, to be complied with by the 30th October, and not 12th September, and cause to be shown on the 14th November, personal service to be effected, or in default a substituted service as before.

Postea (November 14)

Rule made absolute.

MCGREGOR V. MCGREGOR.

This was an action for a decree of divorce brought by Jessie McGregor against her husband on the ground of his cruelty and misconduct, and for custody of six minor children, and payment of £5 per month maintenance for each child. Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

Evidence having been given,

[Maasdorp, J.: The only question is about the maintenance. How is a man to contribute so many hundreds a year when he is out of employment?]

Dr. Greer: I feel I am entirely in the hands of the Court in that matter. Perhaps your lordship would make an order for a smaller amount, and give us leave to apply again.

Maasdorp, J., said he would grant a decree of divorce, the plaintiff to have custody of the minor children, maintenance of £4 per month to be paid for each child until such child attains the age of sixteen years, with leave to the plaintiff to move again in respect of increased maintenance.

Will, mutual—Massing—Sale by survivor.

K. and his wife made a mutual will, instituting as heirs the survivor and their daughter (the first plaintiff) and her children: the survivor to enjoy a life usufruct of the whole estate. K. survived his wife and adiated. Thereafter K. sold three erven, part of the joint estate. Plaintiffs now claimed that the sale be declared invalid as to half of the three erven and that defendant be ordered to pay the price of the other half, which they said he had not paid. Or in the alternative that he be ordered to pay the full price of the erven, if the sale could not be set aside, either wholly or in part. The fact of the sale having taken place was disputed, but the Court found, as a fact, that it had gone through. The Court also found that no part of the purchase price had been paid.

The defendant was ordered to pay the full amount of the purchase price (£600): or in the alternative to pay £200, with interest, for half the erven and to re-transfer the remaining half free and unencumbered.

This was an action brought by Mrs. Du Plessis, who was a daughter of the late Mr. Kotze, of Pearston, and her husband, who was executor in the estate to recover transfer of certain erven which the defendant, it was alleged, got transfer of from the testator under undue influence. In May, 1889, the late Mr. Kotze and his wife made a mutual will, by which they effected a massing of the joint estates. In the joint estate there was seven erven in Pearston, and in respect of these erven the action was brought. The testator's wife died in 1889, and the survivor adiated and remained in possession of the joint estate. In 1903 the testator was over eighty-four years of age, was nearly blind and infirm in body and mind. The defendant was his legal adviser. In May 1903, the defendant, knowing the tenor of the will, wrongfully and fraudulently exercised undue influence and persuaded the testator to agree to sell to him the erven, which were worth £1,000, for £600, promising to pay off certain bonds on another farm belonging to the testator. The defendant wrongfully obtained transfer of the erven on the 16th June, 1903, and there after mortgaged the same in sums of £350 and £400. The testator died in July, 1903, and plaintiff now urged that the sale and transfer was null and void, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the sale and transfer set aside, and that the defendant, having paid no money for the erven or paid off the bonds as promised, was obliged to pay off the bonds of £350 and £400 to release the erven. In the alternative, it was claimed that the second plaintiff, in his capacity as executor dative, was entitled to judgment against the defendant for the sum of £1,000, being the value of the erven, and, failing that, that the second plaintiff was entitled to obtain the purchase price of £600, which had not been paid.

The plea admitted the age of Mr. Kotze at the time of the sale, but denied the other allegations as to his infirmity. The sale, it set out, was a perfectly bona-fide one. At the time of the sale the defendant was not aware of the mutual will; he only knew of two wills, in which the testator excluded the erven from the operation thereof. The defendant denied that he acted fraudulently, or that he exercised any undue influence, or that he made any agreement to pay off the bonds on the other farm. The sum of £600 was duly paid, and the testator or his estate had the benefit of it. The defendant admitted that under the provisions of the mutual will the testator was not entitled to dispose of more than one-half of the erven, and as to one-half, he admitted that the transfer was null and void, but as to the other half he contended that the sale was good. He was willing to transfer the one-half of the erven to the plaintiff, free of any burden, on compensation for improvements being paid to him in the sum of £350, and in the alternative if the transfer was considered unnecessary he offered to pay to the plaintiff £300, the value of one half of the erven, and to pay the taxed costs of the plaintiff to date. For a claim in reconvention he stated that he paid to the testator £300 in ignorance of any mutual will, and that the testator or his estate had the full benefit of the money, and he claimed from the separate estate of the testator the sum of £300.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Gardiner) was for the defendant.

Samuel John Annear, estate agent, of Somerset East, who knew the late Mr. Kotze, and was administering agent in the estate, said that the assets in the separate estate of Kotze were hardly worth speaking of. Witness was well acquainted with the testator's signature, which was peculiar for the accent over the "e" in "Kotze." Witness, examining the alleged declaration of sale purporting to be signed by the testator, said that he would never take the signature produced for that of Mr. Kotze. Quite apart from the spelling of the name "Coetsee," he would not accept the writing for that of Mr. Kotze. In 1902 the testator was almost blind. If anyone had offered him the document with the signature produced over the alleged sale, witness would not have accepted it. Mr. Kotze could not have written so clearly in May, 1903.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The commission on movables disposed of by auction was 5 per cent., and generally 2½ on valuation. When witness knew Mr. Kotze in 1902, his sight was very bad; one eye in particular. He did not recognise the signature on the receipt or declaration of sale. Witness would never have taken the signature to be that of Mr. Kotze. A man of the years of the deceased would never have signed his name as Coetsee when for years and years he had signed it as Kotze.

Carel Froelich, Mayor of Pearston, said that the defendant was the Town Clerk. In 1903 the deceased had to be led about, and he could not distinguish between half a sovereign and a sixpence. The signatures put in were not those of the deceased. In the year, 1903, the defendant did not appear to be a man of means; he was living with his father-in-law, looking after the sheep.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He thought £600 was about the value of the erven in 1903. The defendant had built a house on one of the erven, and made some other little improvements. Witness could not say whether Mr. Kotze, looking through his glass, could distinguish half a sovereign from a sixpence. There was nothing "mixed" about the old man's intellect. For his age Mr. Kotze was a hale, hearty old man. Witness was not used to the testator signing his name as "Coetsee." The defendant had a counter account against witness.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness would not give more than £850 for the property, as it stood now.

By Maasdorp, J.: The property would have been worth more in 1903 when times were better than they were now. Without the house £600 would be a fair price for the erven now.

Walter Hancock Humphrey stated that he was a law agent in Pearston until June, 1903. A few months before he left the defendant settled down in Pearston. The late Mr. Kotze he knew very well, having transacted a good deal of his business. In May and June Mr. Kotze was getting very weak, and his eyesight was very bad. Witness should almost call him nearly blind, as Mr. Kotze had to feel with a stick to get to the office door. Mr. Kotze never could write with ease; he had very great difficulty in writing at all. "Kotzé," with the accent over the "e," was the usual signature. The defendant asked witness to go with him as a J.P. to witness some business with Mr. Kotze, and witness said he had not the time, but said that he had heard that the old man had sold the property to the defendant, and if the defendant got the signature, which witness knew very well, and swore that Mr. Kotze knew what he was doing, he (witness) would attest it. In the beginning of May the deceased was not in a fit condition to write like the signatures produced. At times Kotze could not see at all, and it was necessary to guide his hand, and to tell him when and where to leave off when signing his name. Witness did not recollect having seen old Kotze in Van Os's office regarding these papers.

Johannes Kotze will say that you went with old Kotze to Van Os's office, and there was some discussion as to whether he should sign Kotze or Coetsee. Is that so?—No. I deny that the old man was there at all.

Did a conversation between you and Kotze take place?—I won't deny that it did.

Johannes Stephanus Lombard, a foster child of the testator, said that when Kotze died he was surprised to hear that there was a bond on some of the testator's land. In May and June the old man was very sickly, and his eyesight was very poor. He was 84 years of age, and was very shaky.

In cross-examination, witness said there was a bond on the farm, and one on an erf in the village.

Albertus Petrus Myburg, law agent at Somerset East, stated he knew old Mr. Kotze. Prior to his death Mr. Du Plessis consulted witness about him, and witness went to see him. He was very weak. Witness took him a power of attorney to sign, but he was not in a fit state to do it. If a subject was brought to his memory he might be able to speak about it, but if it was dropped for a few minutes he would not remember it. Witness and Du Plessis went to Van Os to ascertain if he could trace what amount of money he had paid to Kotze. Witness informed Van Os that the money could not be traced, and inquired if he had paid him in cash or by cheque, and he replied that he had paid him in notes and gold. Witness asked him if he had the numbers of the notes, and he replied in the negative. Witness then suggested that it might be possible to get them from the bank, and he gave an affirmative answer. Mr. Du Plessis then asked him how he could buy property from a man in such a weak mental condition, and he replied that Kotze was all right. Van Os jocularly asked Du Plessis if he suspected him. Du Plessis made some answer, but witness could not remember it. Witness informed Van Os that search had been made for the money, but that it could not be found, and he said he gave it to Kotze. Such an amount had not been drawn from Van Os's banking account. Van Os said no witnesses were present when he paid Kotze. On the same occasion witness asked him if he had any documents of Kotze's, and he replied in the negative. Witness asked him where the will was, and he said it had been sent to Cape Town. Witness asked him if he had receipts for the money, and he replied that he had. In reply to a request to show them Van Os said he had not got them in his office. He never showed witness the receipts during Kotze's lifetime. Witness made inquiries in Cape Town about the will, but could hear nothing about it. Witness again mentioned the will, and Van Os said he had forgotten it, but that it was then in Cape Town.

Was that after Kotze's death?—I would not be sure.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton,

Do you wish the Court to understand that after you first spoke to Van Os about the will that you wrote to Cape Town?—Yes.

You went to get the will before Mr. Kotze's death?—Yes.

Because you were anxious to destroy it?—No.

What did you want with it? Remember. Kotze was still alive.—Mr. Du Plessis wanted to inquire into his circumstances.

Was Du Plessis quite sober on that occasion?—Yes.

Is he habitually sober?—I would not say that he was habitually drunk.

Witness concluded that Van Os got the notes and gold from the bank.

Kotzes have their shop on the same premises as Van Os? Yes.

When you asked him for the receipts didn't he say I have not got them, but I can get them?—I would not deny that.

And you left Pearston the next day?—Yes.

The power of attorney which you say Kotze was too ill to sign was subsequently signed?—Yes.

In re-examination, witness said he heard nothing about an accident to Mr. Kotze. Witness asked Van Os how he paid the money to Kotze, because there were rumours afloat to the effect that he had not done so. Witness administered the estate, but could find no trace of the £600, nor did he find that the money had been spent in any way.

To the Court: There was a bank at Pearston at that time. Witness made inquiries about the money from the bank manager.

David Jacobus du Plessis stated that he was a son-in-law of Mr. Kotze. He knew of the mutual will. Mr. Kotze lived in the town of Pearston, and was looked after by Miss Victor. Witness lived in the district of Somerset. In June he went to see Mr. Kotze. He was accompanied by Myburgh. They had a conversation with Mr. Kotze. He was very weak. Witness gave corroborative evidence of the interview between Myburgh and Van Os. After Van Os was seen the house was searched for the money.

Elsie Jacoba Katrina du Plessis, daughter of the testator, said that she was married out of community of property to the plaintiff. In 1903 her father was in a very weak condition, and could only see with one eye. About that time he told her some ludicrous stories, such as he was to share in the sale of a bottle for £1,000,000, and that she was to take care of his mother's cat, which had been in the possession of the family since 1838. When the testator died witness could only find sixpence in the house.

Cornelia Victor, a spinster, said that from 1901 she looked after the testator. She corroborated the evidence of the previous witness. She never saw a large amount of money in the house.

Cross-examined: On one occasion the testator strayed away from the house and fell exhausted on the veldt.

Andrew Stegman, an attorney, of Somerset East, said that the matter was handed to him in October, 1903. He then found that the case had been stated in the previous August.

David du Plessis, examined by the Court, said that he did not know where the testator kept his money.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Robert Broom, a medical practitioner, and professor at the Victoria College, Stellenbosch, said that he was district surgeon at Pearston in 1903. He saw Kotze professionally every month up to the time of his death. When witness first met Kotze he was blind in one eye, and in 1902 the other became affected with cataract. Shortly afterwards he became practically blind. On the ad-contended that this was not a case where the burden of proof rested on the defendant, because the matter was gone through, and some time had elapsed since the transfer of the property, but it remained in the position of a sale, of which there were doubts as to the payment of the price, and the burden of proof still rested on the person alleging such payment. It was said that the burden was removed by reason of two receipts having been put in. The value of those receipts the Court would refer to later on, only remarking that if these receipts were proved to have been given by the old man, it would largely dispose of this case. He would rather approach these receipts from another point of view. The defendant alleged payment of a large sum of money at a time when he was in a very small way of business, and the question at once arose, "where did he get that money?" It was sometimes difficult for a man to trace the source of small sums of money that had accumulated, but here it was given as evidence that it had accumulated in a very short space of time. He said he sold his stock of furniture. The defendant went into details, but it was painfully evident that he could not lay his finger on anything of great value that he had sold. The impression left on the mind of the Court was that although he might have some property, it was not of very great value. Then he said that although he had a banking account, he carried all this money about in his pocket. That was not an extraordinary thing, but it certainly was unusual. The usual course for a man was to pay when he got his title deeds, but here the money was paid before he obtained anything, and it was paid without any witnesses being present, which any man paying such a large amount would have taken care were there to substantiate and secure him. Then, again, there was no arrangement made that the money should be paid, but the defendant walked down the street to his office with this £600 in his pocket, and, meeting Kotze, paid him. It was said that the money was paid, and could not be traced. If the money was in the house it must have been found when the place was renovated. Regarding the receipts, his lordship said that a man of business like the defendant would be expected to see that he got all his papers, and receipts before handing over such a large amount, and have had witnesses. Considering the condition of the old man, he was mentally and physically feeble, and he required advice and protection, and any man who had a dealing of this kind with him should have seen that he had this advice, and not have done things secretly. The Court was of opinion that the signature on the receipt was not that of the old man. The Court came to the conclusion that the sale did take place, and that the purchase amount, £600, was expected to be paid in settlement of the bond, and was not paid, and consequently remained. He thought it would be to the advantage of those interested if £600, which was a fair value of the property, could be paid into court. The order of the Court would be for the plaintiff for £600, to be paid by September 15. Upon failure to do this, to re-transfer half the undivided property free of mortgage to the plaintiff, and to pay the sum of £200, with interest on £600, from the 25th July, 1903. The defendant to pay costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

VOGEL V. VOGEL.

1905.
} Aug. 23rd.

This was an action brought by Henriette Charlotte Mathilde Vogel, of Cape Town, against her husband, Rudolf Albert Vogel, of Paris, France, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

The action had been brought by edictal citation, the citation having been served on defendant in Paris and on his father in Holland.

Plaintiff, in her declaration, said that she was married to defendant in Holland in August, 1901. They came to Cape Town in May, 1903. In April, 1904, defendant maliciously deserted the plaintiff, and refused and still neglected to support her.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Plaintiff, in her evidence, said that after their marriage they lived for a while in Paris. Her husband subsequently became the representative of a certain firm in South Africa, but he returned about five months later. They then lived for about three months in Antwerp. They both left Antwerp about May, 1903, and came to live in South Africa. He entered into partnership with one Deckers as importers and general agents. Witness and his husband lived at Three Anchor Bay. Deckers went to Antwerp, and her husband next entered into partnership with one Stegman, and remained with him until April, 1904. Her husband then went back to Holland for the purpose of floating the company, telling her before he left that he intended to return in about two and a half or three months. He had not returned. She had received letters from defendant since he had left the Cape. He said he was unable to return owing to financial difficulties. Witness had since supported herself by taking a position as a lady demonstrator.

Mr. Jones read a letter from defendant, in which he said that it was impossible, for financial reasons, for him to return to South Africa, and that he was willing that a divorce should be pronounced against him. That would, he added, make two lives possible again.

[Buchanan, A. C. J. (to witness): Had you any quarrel before he left?]

Witness: We certainly were not very happy.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Owing to what?—Owing to his fierce character. He was certainly very ill tempered.

Degree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before the 31st October, failing which to show cause on the 14th November why a decree of divorce should not be granted; service, as on the previous occasion, on defendant and his father.

JACOBS V. SHAW.

This was an action brought by Barney Jacobs, general dealer, Cape Town, against William Bunting Shaw, law agent, also of Cape Town, for damages for breach of lease. Mr. Alexander was for plaintiff; Dr. Rainsford was for defendant.

Dr. Rainsford, at the outset, said he understood that a petition for the compulsory sequestration of the defendant's estate had come before the Court. If that petition were granted it would put a stop to the present proceedings.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that such a petition had not yet come before him, although he was Judge of the week. If the petition came before him, and it were granted, then these proceedings would have to stop.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that on the 20th May, 1904, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement for the letting and hiring of a certain house, No. 26, Plein-street, Woodstock, at a rental of £7 3s. per month, including sanitary charges, for a period of twelve months, to be used as a boarding-house, rent to be paid monthly in advance. Thereafter defendant entered into occupation of the said premises, and continued in occupation by himself and his tenants until the month of September. He gave notice on the 9th September of his intention at the end of the said month to vacate the premises in breach of the agreement. Plaintiff claimed damages in the sum of £30, being loss of three months' rent, 10s. a month difference between the rental received and the rental specified in the agreement, broken windows, advertising charges, etc.

Defendant, in his plea, said that he entered into the agreement subject to the conditions that the said premises were to be sublet by defendant as a boarding-house, and that the plaintiff would execute certain repairs thereto, more especially to the yard and bath-room, and that plaintiff would give him beneficial occupation thereof. Plaintiff had refused to execute the said repairs in breach of the said lease. Defendant denied that he broke the lease, or that plaintiff had suffered any damages for which he (defendant) was liable. In recollection he claimed an order declaring that he was entitled to cancellation of the said lease.

Plaintiff, in his replication, said that the alleged conditions set out in the defendant's plea were bad in law, and irrelevant, and he prayed that the same should be expunged.

Mr. Alexander said that he did not know whether this was a point that should first be dealt with.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: It is a trumpery case altogether; you might as well go through with it at once.]

Plaintiff gave evidence. He denied that Mr. Shaw said anything to him about having the back yard and w.c. fixed up.

By the Court: He entered into no conditions with defendant except those that appeared in the lease.

In cross-examination, he said that Mr. Shaw did not, just before he signed the lease, say anything about certain repairs being carried out to the property. During the tenancy he did not frequently receive complaints about the condition of the house. The first mention that he had of any complaints was in September. Witness knew very little about the house, the matter being in the hands of his brother.

Abraham M. Jacobs (plaintiff's brother) said that he had had a number of alterations and repairs carried out at the house in June at the request of Mrs. Seed (the tenant). He did everything to the house that she asked should be done. Certain alterations were carried out at the request of the Municipality in September. Mrs. Seed said that she was leaving the house, because it was too far from the Mission Hall. An action was brought by plaintiff in the Magistrate's Court for rent, and an exception was taken on the ground that there was an action pending in the Supreme Court. That exception was upheld. Witness let the house again as from the 1st January of this year at a rental of £6 13s. per month. This rental continued for January, February, and March. Damages had been sustained through the windows being broken. Certain deductions had to be made from the claim, bringing the amount down to £24 13s.

Cross-examined: He did not know that one of the bedrooms had been condemned as unfit for occupation. The bath-room was always used during the time of the tenancy. It was absolutely false to say that the bathroom could not be used. Witness had to look after 21 houses, and he agreed that if the bath-room door could not be closed it was impossible to use the bath for the purposes of a boarding-house.

Alfred Raphael, inspector of the Woodstock Municipality, and Wm. Mathew Dawson, a former tenant of the house, also gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiff.

Mr. Alexander closed his case.

Dr. Rainsford called.

Elizabeth Mary Seed (who hired the house from the defendant), who said that the bathroom and yard required putting in order, while in one of the rooms there was no ventilation. She complained, as the boarders threatened to leave if the bathroom was not put in order, and, the landlord refusing to make the necessary repairs, she gave up the house.

Joseph Hall and John Rutter, two boarders of the last witness, also testified to the dilapidated condition of the bathroom and the need for other repairs.

Francis Lily Fuller and Joseph Robson corroborated.

The defendant, W. B. Shaw, said that when he took the house for a client the plaintiff promised to put the house in order. Witness would never have attempted to take the house with the bathroom in that condition.

Dr. Rainsford also read the evidence taken on commission of Henry Hyman, importer, Cape Town, who was a witness of the signatures to the lease; and Alexander Robert Smith, formerly a cashier and bookkeeper in defendant's employ, who testified that on more than one occasion Mrs. Seed complained about the bathroom and other places when she called with the rent.

Dr. Rainsford, having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the onus was upon the defendant to prove that the conditions were agreed to when he entered into the lease. In the face of the written documents, he was inclined to think that the defendant had not discharged that onus. He also believed that plaintiff had done everything that was required of him in the matter of repairs. Defendant had given up the place because, he said, the sub-tenant could not close the bathroom door, and dirty water ran from the kitchen into the yard. The repairs were of so trivial a nature that they should not have been brought forward as a reason for breaking the lease. Defendant had broken his contract, and he must pay damages. Plaintiff had shown that he had suffered at least £25 damages, and judgment would be given for plaintiff for that amount, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDOEP.]

Ex parte FRENCH. { 1905.
Aug. 23rd.

Mr. Struben moved, as a matter of urgency, for an interdict to restrain the Bank of Africa from paying over to the applicant's wife the sum of £105, lodged by him to her credit pending an action for the recovery of the same.

The applicant's affidavit stated that he had been married over 14 years, and during that time he had lodged the amount mentioned to the credit of his wife. She had informed him that as she had got all she could out of him she intended leaving him, and he wanted to restrain her from drawing the money.

An order was made as prayed, pending an action being brought for the recovery of the amounts, with leave to the respondent to move to set aside the order.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

GENERAL MOTIONS.Ex parte FINKELSTEIN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order restraining Philip Finkelstein, A. son, of Oudtshoorn, from disposing of or alienating certain bills and books of account in the partnership business lately carried on by the parties as dealers in ostrich feathers.

Rule nisi granted calling upon the respondent to show cause why an interdict should not be granted restraining respondent from dealing with or negotiating the bills in question, and why he should not deliver up the books to applicant, rule to be returnable at the ensuing Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn, costs to abide the result, and rule to operate as a temporary interdict.

ANNENBERG V. FOURIE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, in terms of consent paper, for the removal of trial to the ensuing Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn.

Mr. Upington (for respondent) acquiesced.

Order granted in terms of consent paper, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte HERMAN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to register a certain ante-nuptial contract entered into in the Transvaal.

Order granted, saving all just rights of creditors.

HEYDENRYCH V. FITZGERALD.

Mr. Van Zyl moved, as a matter of urgency, for the removal of trial to the next Circuit Court at Aliwal North.

Removal of trial ordered, costs to abide result.

Ex parte ESTATE MIDDLETON.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on behalf of the executrix testamentary, for leave to pass bond on certain landed property at Port Elizabeth.

Order granted.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. MCKENZIE AND CO.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for certain award of arbitrator to be made a Rule of Court. He said that the arbitrator had found in favour of the Government for £341, and had directed respondents to pay costs.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte DU PLESSIS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Molteno moved for leave to sell certain property in the district of Colesberg. Counsel said that the matter had stood over pending a report of the Master, such report being now read. The Master said that the proposal of the petition was in direct conflict with the will. The testatrix had directed that the farm should not be sold or let to anyone except the three branches of the family named up to the third generation. The farm would not support the three families, and two had gone away. The parties could buy out the property. The parties concerned were really poor whites, and unless they were allowed to sell as now prayed the property would simply remain a "white elephant." Counsel cited the case of ex parte Groenwald (12, "Cape Times" Law Reports, 849).

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that he did not see how it would be possible for the Court to step in and alter the will of the testatrix. No order would be granted.

Ex parte SCHELTEMA.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for confirmation of sale of certain property in an estate of which petitioner is executor, and payment of certain moneys standing to the credit of minors.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

KLEIN V. STEYN.

Mr. Lewis moved for the return day in this action, which was for the sequestration of the defendant's estate, to be extended from August 10 to the present date. By a mistake the case was not set down on the right date.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that possibly the defendant was present in Court on the old return day, and that he had no notice of this application, and might want to oppose it.

Mr. Lewis said the defendant had signified his intention of not defending.

The application was granted. The return day was fixed for August 31.

Later in the day Mr. Lewis said he understood that the defendant had left the Colony, the allegation being that he had gone to German South-west Africa. He applied, therefore, for leave to effect substituted service.

Leave was given to effect substituted service by one publication in the "Cape Times."

SWEENEY V. SWEENEY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones, who appeared for the applicant, asked to have the case postponed, as allegations were made in the respondent's affidavit, which the applicant, who was very ill, was not yet able to answer.

Mr. Lewis, who appeared for respondent, consented, but asked to have the costs of the day allowed.

The application was postponed until next Thursday. The question of costs to stand over until then.

Ex parte HLIKIHLA.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to transfer certain property.

The application was granted.

LEPERSEN V. BRUNT.

Mr. Alexander moved on behalf of applicant to have a certain interdict set aside.

Mr. Van Zyl opposed the application. The property concerned was a billiard table, which the applicant bought from one Davies, who purchased it from one Goldstein on July 15, and whose property shortly after the sale was placed under interdict. The billiard table was removed on July 31 from Goldstein's premises to Lepersen's. The applicant was not told until August 3 that an interdict was granted giving the sub-Sheriff power to follow up the property of the estate, and the billiard table was then placed under the interdict.

The respondent's affidavit stated that the interdict was served on the applicant about 9.30 a.m. on July 31. On August 1 respondent was informed that two loads of furniture had been removed from the house, and he obtained another order from the Court. On August 5 he went to 4, Sir Lowry-road, to remove the furniture, and he was informed that there was no furniture there belonging to Goldstein.

A considerable number of affidavits was read on both sides.

Mr. Alexander having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, A. C. J.: An application was made by the respondent Brunt to a Judge in Chambers on an affidavit setting forth the fact that one Goldstein was a tenant of his and that he was under an agreement to pay rent for the premises monthly in advance. The rent, he alleged, had been paid up to the end of June; the rent for July, which was payable in advance on or before the 1st July, had not been paid, though frequently demanded, and there was rent due for the month of August. These facts were disclosed to the Judge, who granted a provisional order. The respondent Brunt said he saw that all the movable property in the premises was advertised for sale on the 31st, and he applied for an order restraining the sale until the rent (£44) had been paid. The learned Judge who had the application before him made the provisional order and restrained the sale. After service of this order, on the morning of the 31st July, Goldstein allowed certain property, which had been restrained from removal, and which had been attached by the order, to be taken away from the premises. Thereupon Brunt naturally applied to the Court, and got an order authorising the Sheriff to follow up any property which had been removed in disobedience to the order of the Court, and restore it to the premises. Now, one Lepersen applies to set aside the order on the ground that a certain billiard table which he had removed after the service upon Goldstein of the order attaching the same for the rent, was his property. From the affidavits, as far as they disclose the facts, it is clear that this billiard table was removed after the service of the order of Court. When the billiard table was followed up by the Sheriff, it was found to be concealed in a suspicious manner. But whether or not the billiard table belonged to Lepersen, it was on the premises and was attached for unpaid rent. The applicant, Lepersen, has shown no ground for removing that attachment and the application will be refused, with costs.

CAMP'S BAY EXTENSION ESTATES CO.
V. SAMSON.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, upon notice of motion, for an amendment of the order given by the Court in the recent trial so as to avoid future disputes. A consent paper had now been filed for an amendment of the order.

Order granted in terms of consent paper, applicant to pay costs.

Ex parte ESTATE CAMPBELL.

Mr. Molteno moved, on behalf of the executrix testamentary, widow of the deceased, for leave to pass a bond for £200 on certain property in the district of Cradock. Counsel stated that the matter had caused a good deal of correspondence, and that he was now prepared to accept an order in terms of the Master's report.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte ESTATE McGRATH.

Mr. Sutton moved for an order authorising the Master to pay out from the guardians' fund to the tutor dative certain money for the maintenance and upkeep of the minor children.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE VILLET.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on behalf of the trustee, for leave to sue by edictal citation one James Collins, said to be of Cannon-street, London, England, for a debt of £2,349 ls., alleged to be owing to the estate, and for the attachment of certain property ad fundandam jurisdictionem. The affidavit of Mr. Hazell (the trustee) said that he had reason to believe that Collins was a bogus person, and that the property registered in his name was for insolvents' account, jointly with Kaiser Bros.

Buchanan, A. C. J., remarked that it was a very extraordinary proceeding to sue a defendant who was believed to be a bogus person.

Mr. Buchanan said he thought this was the only way of reaching the property.

Order granted attaching the property, and giving leave to applicant to sue by edictal citation, citation to be returnable on November 30, personal service, failing which one publication in the "Government Gazette" and one publication in the "Daily Telegraph," London.

MYERS BROS. V. MORGAN AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Lewis moved, on behalf of Myers Bros., jewellers, Cape Town, for an order authorising the gaoler to pay over certain moneys. The respondents had been convicted of a charge of stealing a diamond bracelet, the property of the applicants, and had been sent to gaol. Certain sums of money had been found in their possession by the prison authorities, and applicants applied for the same to be attached, pending an action which they proposed to bring against respondents to recover the value of the missing bracelet.

Order granted as prayed.

BABOOLALLAND V. BABOOLALLAND.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of Mrs. Baboolalland, for an order requiring respondent to pay costs of application, which he had brought for custody of the child of the marriage, in default of his proceeding with the action.

Order granted, with leave to respondent to recover costs in any action which may be instituted.

Ex parte THE INSOLVENT ESTATE
STEPHAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the appointment of a curator of the property and effects of one Ashley Cooper Partridge, more particularly in respect of a certain property at Rosebank. The property, it was stated, had been sold by public auction to Ashley Cooper Partridge for £3,165, and it was desired to complete the transaction. An affidavit by a member of the firm of Silberbauer, Wahl, and Fuller stated that no reason could be assigned for Partridge's disappearance.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that he had never heard of such an application in that Court before. He did not see how they could deprive Partridge of his estate; he was not before the Court. It was not proposed to presume his death, nor was it proposed to sequester his estate. The only suggestion that he (the learned Judge) could make was that the estate should be sequestered on the ground that Partridge was absent from the Colony and was delaying his creditors. There would be no order at present.

HENDRIKS V. CAPE TOWN TRAMWAYS AND CAPE DIVISIONAL COUNCIL.

Dr. Greer moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis.

The petition was referred to Dr. Greer for report.

Dr. Greer certified forthwith in favour of the application.

Rule nisi granted, to be returnable on the 12th September.

Dr. Greer added that the plaintiff was no longer proceeding against the Divisional Council.

Ex parte THE INSOLVENT ESTATE LATE PRINCE.

Mr. Close moved on behalf of Mr. J. E. P. Close, as sole trustee in the insolvent estate, for an amendment of transfer deed of a mission hall, erected by insolvent at Claremont for the African Methodist Episcopal Church and other purposes.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon the persons in whose name the property is registered to show cause why the transfer deed should not be amended as prayed, with costs, and the pastor of the Claremont branch of the A.M.E. Church to disclose the names of trustees of the branch, and restraining Mr. Attorney Peters from disposing of the property, rules to be returnable on the 12th December.

PLOTTEL V. BERMAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for an order removing the respondent from executorship of the estate of petitioner's brother, Hyman Plottel, late of Philip's Town.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon the respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted as prayed, rule to be returnable on the 16th October.

DE JAGER V. DE JAGER.

Mr. Roux (for plaintiff) moved for the removal of trial to the ensuing Circuit Court, at Uniondale.

Order granted, costs to be costs in the cause.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. LASENBY.

Mr. Nightingale moved, on behalf of the Assistant Treasurer, for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation for £142 17s. 6d., quitrent and stamp duty due in respect of a farm in the Vryburg district. Lasenby was now said to be in Johannesburg, but his exact address was unknown.

Order granted, attaching the property and granting leave to sue, citation to be returnable on the 16th October, personal service, failing which one publication in the "Government Gazette" and one in the "Star."

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. CONRADIE.

This was a similar application to the previous one, defendant being at Germiston, Transvaal.

A similar order was granted to that in the previous case.

Ex parte LOUW AND MARAIS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order empowering petitioners to sell certain shares.

His Lordship said that he did not see any need to make an order at present. The trustees should first make an attempt to sell the shares.

Ex parte WEIDEMAN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising the transfer to petitioner of certain property at Britstown. Petitioner who was a trustee in the estate had bought the property at public auction.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE LOXTON.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the appointment of a curator dative, etc.

His Lordship said he did not think that the application should have come before the Court. There would be no order. The matter was one that might properly come before a judge in Chambers.

Ex parte ESTATE MOSTERT.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to transfer certain property at Observatory. Counsel now furnished certain additional information as required by the Court.

The matter was ordered to stand over pending notice to the trustee and certain further information.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN) and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

BEIRA COLD STORAGE V. } 1905.
RHODESIA COLD STORAGE. { Aug. 25th.

Mr. Scarle, K.C., moved as a matter of urgency for an extension of time in order to prosecute an appeal from the High Court of Rhodesia, in the matter between the Beira Cold Storage Co. and the Rhodesia Cold Storage, in which £11,000 damages had been given against the defendant company, and an order for the delivery of certain shares to the value of £22,000. The respondent, counsel said, consented to the application. According to the rules of Court, the appeal should have been prosecuted this term, but the record was a most voluminous one, and the difficulty was to have the record printed within the time.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: I suppose it is a genuine appeal.]

Mr. Burton: My learned friend says it is.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that under the circumstances the case would be set down for October 23.

TABLE BAY HARBOUR BOARD { 1905.
v. THE CITY LINE. { Aug. 25th.
{ Sept. 4th.

Harbour Board Regulations—

Compulsory pilotage—Acts 8 of 1879 and 36 of 1896—English Act 17 and 18 Vict., C. 104.

One of the defendants' vessels, while leaving Cape Town Docks under the pilotage of a pilot selected by the Harbour Board, whom the Company were under the Board's regulations compelled to employ, struck and damaged one of the dock quays. It was admitted that this damage was not due to any negligence on the part of the Company's servants, but to an error of judgment on the part of the pilot.

Held, that so far as the Harbour Board regulations gave the Board a right of action for damage resulting from the misfeasances of their own servants, they were inconsistent with the provisions of British Merchant Shipping law as set forth in Act 17 and 18 Vict., C. 104. which is by Sec. 1 of Act 8 of 1879 also the law of this Colony, and were ultra vires.

Table Bay Harbour Board v. Bucknall Co. (14 C.T.R. 351) distinguished.

This was an action brought by the Table Bay Harbour Board against the City Line, who were sued through their Cape Town agents, Messrs. Mitchell Cotts and Co., to recover £2,590 damages.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Bisset) was for the plaintiffs and Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), was for the defendants.

Mr. Searle said that although that amount was claimed in the original declaration on account of certain admissions between the parties, the question would now be chiefly one of law for the Court. It was agreed between the parties if the Court gave judgment on the admission between the parties the matter might be referred to Mr. Stewart, the Engineer, to assess the damages. The question was mainly one of law. It arose through damages done to one of the quays of the Docks by the screw steamer City of Perth, belonging to the defendant company, which occurred on March 18 last. The vessel was leaving the Docks for the purpose of proceeding on her voyage, when she struck a portion of the quay at the South Arm, and did a large amount of damage, which the plaintiffs set out at £2,590. The vessel at the time was in charge of a pilot, duly licensed and appointed under the terms of and subject to the regulations of the Board. The plea did not admit that a large amount of damage was done, and set out that when she struck the vessel was in charge of a pilot supplied by the plaintiffs. The defendants had no voice in appointing him, and had no control over the pilot, and the defendants did not admit that the pilot was competent. After the accident the plaintiffs suspended the pilot. The accident was caused by an omission on the part of the pilot. The replication set out that the Board exercised all due care and control in the licensing of pilots. The vessel could not have left the Docks without such pilot being employed. Counsel said the point would be whether the defendant company was liable under the Harbour Board regulations, after the Board had exercised due caution in the appointment when they had a compulsory pilot on board. He would call evidence as to the pilot's character.

William Stephen, Port Captain at Cape Town, stated as regards the licensing of pilots, the Harbour Board granted them a licence. The pilots were examined by two competent men, and witness and Captain Spence gave this pilot in question a certificate of efficiency. Up to the time of this accident the pilot had taken over 200 vessels in and out of the Docks. He was perfectly sober and trustworthy, and he held the highest certificate the Board of Trade could grant. In the case of a new pilot he served on probation for three months. The master of a ship very often selected his own particular pilot.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Pending the inquiry into the circumstances, witness suspended the pilot. It was chiefly on account of that accident that witness wrote that the pilot seemed to lack sufficient judgment in handling vessels in narrow water, such as a dock. The pilot did not turn out so "brilliant" as witness expected.

This was all the evidence, and counsel having been heard in argument,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (September 4).

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The plaintiffs in this action claim that the sum of £2,500 is payable to them for damages done by the defendant company's steamer City of Perth, on the 18th March last, to one of the quays of the Table Bay Docks, which are under the management and control of the plaintiff Board. If the defendant company is found to be liable at all, the parties have agreed that the actual amount to be paid by them shall be assessed by Mr. Stewart. The Court is further relieved of the necessity of itself finding the actual facts by the admissions made by the plaintiffs. It is common cause that the City of Perth, while leaving the Docks for the purpose of proceeding on her voyage, struck one of the quays, and did considerable damage thereto. The plaintiffs admit that this damage was not in any way due to any act of negligence on the part of the defendant company's employees, but that it was due to an error of judgment on the part of the pilot in charge of the vessel, and that the vessel was, at the time, under the absolute control of the pilot, who had been licensed as such by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs themselves plead that, by the Harbour Board Regulation No. 5, section 10, the employment of a licensed pilot is compulsory on all vessels entering or leaving the Docks, or shifting berth therein, and counsel on both sides are in accord on the point that, as this is a question relating to maritime and shipping law, by the General Law Amendment Act of 1879, the law governing this case is that of England, so far as the same is not inconsistent with any Colonial Statute. Counsel also agree that the law of England is correctly set forth in the 388th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 17 and 18 Vic., c. 104, viz., that no owner or master of any ship shall be answerable to any person whatever for any loss or damage occasioned by the fault or incapacity of any qualified pilot acting in charge of such ship within any district where the employment of such pilot is compulsory by law. But the plaintiffs contend that this case is taken out of the operation of this general rule of law by the provisions of the Board's Regulation No. 4, section 6, which makes the masters and owners of vessels liable to pay for all damage done to any quays or other property belonging to the Board, "whether such damage shall be done directly or indirectly by their vessel or by themselves or any of them, or by the sailors, or servants, or other persons whatsoever belonging to such vessels, or engaged or assisting in bringing them into or taking them out of dock or basins, or in executing repairs or other works thereon, or in putting on board or discharging their cargoes, or connected therewith in any other way whatever." The defendants contend that if this regulation was intended to give the Harbour Board a right of action for damages caused by the default of their pilot, then it is not only unreasonable, but it is also ultra vires, as altering the general law relating to compulsory pilotage without legislative enactment. The regulations in question were framed under the powers conferred on the Harbour Board by the 31st section of Act No 36, 1896. That Act assimilated and amended the law relating to the control and management of the three harbours of Table Bay, Port Elizabeth, and East London. Of these three harbours the 87th section of the Act declared only East London to be a compulsory pilotage harbour. It is, however, not disputed that the Table Bay Harbour Board had authority to make pilotage compulsory within this port. It may be noticed that this 87th section, while making pilotage compulsory at East London, at the same time provides that the Harbour Board of that port "shall not be responsible for any loss, damage, or accident that may occur through the act, omission, or default of any pilot though such pilot may be for the sake of convenience a servant of the Harbour Board." In like manner the Table Bay Harbour Board regulation No. 5, section 10, while making pilotage compulsory within the Docks, disclaims any liability on the part of the Harbour Board for the acts of the pilot. It might well follow that under these provisions no action would lie against either Board for any damage resulting from the default of the pilot. That view is supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Table Bay Harbour Board v. Bucknall Steamship Lines (21, S.C. Rep., 220), where similar provisions in another regulation exempt the Board from liability for damage done by their tugs employed in towing a vessel out of harbour were held valid. This decision was in argument greatly relied upon for the plaintiffs. In that case, however, the use of the tugs was neither compulsory nor necessary, and the by-law there in question expressly provided that while so employed the master and crew of the tugs were to be deemed to be the servants of the owner or master or pilot of the vessel, and were to act under their instructions. The terms of the regulation being known to the master of the ship when he hired the tug, the conditions of the regulation were held to be part of the contract, and in such a contract these conditions were not, on the face of them, so unreasonable that the Court could declare them ultra vires. But all through the argument in that case a distinction was drawn between a voluntary contract, by which the tug was placed under the orders of the master of the vessel, and a case of compulsory pilotage, where the pilot was not under the control of the master, but himself directed the management of the vessel, of which, by the Board's regulations, he was placed in charge. Here not only was pilotage compulsory, but the only pilot whom the Harbour Board allowed the master to take, was one examined and licensed by the Board itself. The pilot in question had been examined and licensed in 1904, and had had considerable experience since then in taking vessels in and out of dock. When this accident happened, the pilot was suspended by the Harbour Board authorities, and the Harbourmaster stated he was glad the pilot had thereupon resigned, as though not incompetent, he was not so skilful as were the other pilots. The defendant company had no special knowledge of the relative skill of the Harbour Board pilots, and as a matter of fact, had no opportunity of selecting any particular pilot, as the practice was for all the pilots to take their turns in taking charge of vessels going into dock. It will be noticed that this Regulation No. 4 is not, in terms at all events, an abrogation of the rule of law as to compulsory pilotage. It makes no express reference to the compulsory pilot, and if it is read as rendering a ship liable for damage done by any person over whom the master has any control, it will be in accord with the decision in Bucknall's case. Putting such a construction on it, on the face of it, it will not be ultra vires of the Act. But though the Harbour Board has protected itself from liability for the default of the pilot, different considerations come into force, when the Harbour Board seek to found a right of action on such default. The principle ordinarily underlying liability for such damage as is here sued for is, that there has been culpa on the part of the person sought to be made liable, or on the part of his servants or other persons under his control. Here we have the Harbour Board decreeing that there shall be compulsory pilotage within the area of their docks, and they examine and licence the only persons who may engage in such pilotage. The damage was caused through the default of the person whom the Harbour Board put in absolute control of the vessel. There is no default of any kind on the part of the master or of the crew or other persons under his orders. Where there is no negligence or fault on the part of the employees of the owners, the law of England exempts them from liability for the default of the pilot where pilotage is compulsory. As regards the Table Bay Docks, there has been no direct legislative limitation of the exemption conferred by the law; and, in my opinion, the Board's regulation does not contain any such alteration of the general rule which the parties agree would otherwise bar this action. Under such circumstances, it cannot be said that there is any statutory enactment or any express or implied contract taking the vessel out of the protection afforded by the law governing compulsory pilotage. Considering the area covered by the regulation, the position of the pilot would seem very similar to that of the Harbour Master or other officials to whom is entrusted the control of vessels whilst within the Docks. If by any bye-law the Harbour Board should attempt to give themselves a right of action founded on the default of their own servants, an important question would arise whether such a bye-law would ever be sanctioned, and if it should be, whether it would not be held to be unreasonable and ultra vires of the Harbour Board Act. The construction I put on the existing bye-law renders it unnecessary now to discuss that question. As the case stands, I fail to find in any principle of law or equity firm ground for holding the vessel liable for the damage now sued for. Judgment must, therefore, in my opinion, be given for the defendants, with costs.

Mr. Justice Hopley, in concurring, said: In this case the plaintiffs claim damages for injury done to one of the quays of the Docks by the defendants' steamer City of Perth on March 18, 1905. The facts of the case on which the claim is founded are admitted, and may be briefly stated as follows: The City of Perth was on the said date leaving the Docks to proceed on her voyage, and she was at the time in charge of a pilot duly licensed by the plaintiffs, in pursuance of their statutory powers. By an "error of judgment" on the part of the pilot, the ship was brought into collision with the quay, and damage to a considerable extent was done. The pilotage was, by virtue of one of the plaintiffs' bye-laws, compulsory; and there was no negligence of any kind on the part of the master or any of the crew. The steamer was left entirely in charge of the pilot, and the collision and resulting damage were due entirely to his mismanagement of her. The plaintiffs do not found their claim on any allegation of negligence on the part of the defendants, but they claim to be reimbursed for the damage done, by virtue of one of their bye-laws, to which I shall at a later stage more fully refer; and the defendants reply that, as there was no negligence on their part, they are not liable for what has occurred. The plaintiffs exercise jurisdiction and control over the Harbour and Docks by virtue of Act 36 of 1896, and by section 31 of that Act, they have the power to make reasonable regulations inter alia for the proper management of the harbour and for the preservation from injury of any of their works, and also for the proper control of all vessels entering any docks and coming alongside any jetties or wharves (see sub-sections 3 and 6). By virtue of the powers vested in them, they have made certain bye-laws, which have been promulgated, and two of these, upon which the plaintiffs rely, are annexed to the declaration, their material portions being as follows: Section VI., Regulation 4—"The master and owners of vessels shall be liable, conjointly and severally, for the payment of all damage done to any of the quays, piers, bridges, or other harbour works. . . . whether such damage shall be done directly or indirectly by their vessel or by themselves or any of them, or by the sailors or servants or other persons whatsoever belonging to such vessels or engaged or assisting in bringing them into or taking them out of Docks or Basins or in executing repairs or other works thereon or in putting on board or discharging their cargoes or connected therewith in any way whatsoever" Section X, regulation 5: "The employment of a licensed pilot is compulsory on all vessels entering or leaving the Docks or Basins or shifting therein . . . but the Harbour Board shall not be responsible for any loss, damage, or accident that may occur through the act, omission, or default of any such pilot." It is clear that under the letter of these bye-laws it has been made compulsory for vessels in the docks to employ one of the pilots licensed by the plaintiffs, and the question that arises in this case is as to the liability of a ship for damage done by it when so in charge of a pilot, when the pilot alone is to blame therefor. By Act 8 of 1879, section 1, it was enacted that in all questions relating to Maritime Shipping Law in respect of which the Supreme Court has concurrent jurisdiction with the Vice-Admiralty Court, the law of this Colony shall hereafter be the same as the Law of England in so far as the Law of England shall not be repugnant to or inconsistent with any Ordinance, Act of Parliament, or other Statute having force of law in this Colony." Now by the Law of England it is clear that when a compulsory pilot is in charge of a vessel the owner is not liable for damage done by his ship entirely through the negligence or default of such pilot. That seems to be part of the Common Law of England; but it is placed beyond doubt by section 388 of the Statute 17 and 18 Vict., c. 104, which enacts that "No owner or master of any ship shall be answerable to any person whatever for any loss or damage occasioned by the fault or incapacity of any qualified pilot acting in charge of such ship within any district where the employment of such pilot is compulsory by law." That was the English law in force when our Act of 1879 was passed, and consequently by virtue of its provisions which I have quoted a ship, while under compulsory pilotage within the jurisdiction of this Court would be similarly exempt from liability unless there be some Statute in force at the place when the damage is done to deprive the owners of such ship of the benefits of such exemption. The plaintiffs claim that by virtue of their bye-law above quoted such a change in the law has been effected in the Docks and harbour of Table Bay in the case of any damage done to any property belonging to themselves. It is a somewhat startling proposition that a bye-law can change the general principles of the law of the land, and the question is distinctly raised in the pleadings as to whether, if such be the meaning of the bye-law in so far as the liability of a ship under compulsory pilotage is concerned it is, quoad hoc, intra or ultra vires. It is a well-known principle, settled by many cases, that bye-laws, to be valid, must not exceed the statutory powers by which they are authorised, and that they must not be in conflict with the general principles of law. The statute under which the plaintiffs have framed their bye-laws gives them the right to make reasonable regulations for the proper management of their Docks, and for the preservation of their works from injury, and also for the proper control of vessels using their Docks; but it nowhere gives them the express or implied power to alter the law of the land, and it is quite clear that they might frame such regulations to attain such objects without in any way infringing upon or changing the general principles of our maritime shipping law. The bye-law in question seems to me more or less declaratory of the common law, and perfectly reasonable if intended to apply to the ordinary persons in charge of and employed upon any vessel. It is right that if damage is occasioned by any of them to the plaintiffs' property, the ship and its owners should be liable therefor. But the plaintiffs contend that the bye-law goes further, and renders the ship and owners liable for the negligence or default of a compulsory pilot. For such an interpretation of the bye-law, one must read into it something subversive of the existing law, which is not necessarily contained in its terms. But bye-laws should be read, if possible, as being in accordance with, and not repugnant to the law, and I am consequently clear that this bye-law was not intended to embrace the case of damage occasioned by the act or default of a compulsory pilot, and I am also clearly of opinion that if it could be read to bear such an interpretation, it would, in such respect, be ultra vires and invalid. Such interpretation as I have given to this bye-law seems to have the authority of a decided case to support it—a case to which I have not had access, but which I find quoted in Marsden on Collisions at Sea (p. 232, 3rd Edition), where the author says: "By the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857, it is enacted that owners of vessels navigating the Thames shall be liable for damage to property of the Conservators caused by persons belonging to or employed in their vessels. It has been held that this Act does not affect section 388 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and that the owners of a vessel in the Thames in charge of a compulsory pilot are not liable for damage done by the fault of the pilot to a vessel or other property belonging to the Conservators. (Conservators of the River Thames v. Hall—3 Mar. Law, Cas. O.S., p. 73.)." If this be a correct summary of the case, as I have no doubt that it is, it appears that not even a Statute containing a provision in favour of the Conservators could in the opinion of the Court receive the interpretation or have the force which the plaintiffs claim for their bye-law, which is practically to the same effect, and in pari materia. For these reasons I am of opinion that the plaintiffs' case must fail, and that there should be judgment for the defendants, with costs. Since writing the above, I have found the case of the Conservators of the Thames v. Hall reported in L.R., 3, C.P., 415, and though I have not time to refer more fully to it, I find that it entirely covers the present case, and bears out the decision to which this Court has come.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GIBBS V. HOGGARD.

{ 1905.
(Aug. 25th.

This was an action in which John Gibbs sued Charles Wm. Hoggard of Observatory, for payment of £144 1s.

3d., with interest a tempore morae, for a pumping apparatus supplied. The defendant in his plea alleged that the apparatus was totally defective, and the sum of £37 claimed was expended by the plaintiff in repairing the machinery. In reconvention defendant claimed £60.

Mr. McGregor, with him Mr Lewis, was for the plaintiff, whilst the defendant was in default.

John Henry Gibbs produced his books, showing the defendants receipts for the goods supplied.

Judgment as prayed, with costs, was granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SCHKEPERS V. FOSTER.

Attorney—Lien on documents entrusted to him.

An attorney has no lien for costs on documents entrusted to him, unless he has drafted, or done work on those documents.

This was an application for an order compelling the respondent to hand over certain papers, title deeds, etc.

The applicant's affidavit stated that she was widow of the late Johannes Scheepers, of Oudtshoorn, on the 19th October, 1900. Upon the death of her husband she placed some of the documents, papers, and title deeds connected with the immovable estate of the deceased in the hands of the respondent, who was an attorney, and resided at Oudtshoorn, as it was incumbent on her to do under the will of the deceased to enable her to take out letters of administration. She had applied to him for the return of the papers, but he refused to give them up.

The affidavit of James Alexander Foster stated that at the time of the death of the husband of applicant most of the title deeds, etc., were in his hands. There were considerable liabilities due by the estate, and it was with great difficulty that the estate was realised. The applicant owed him £379 13s. 4d. in all, and he submitted that he was quite right in retaining the papers in question.

Mr. Benjamin moved.

Mr. Close for respondent.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the respondent was not an executor, and therefore could lay no claim to the documents, and held no pledge for them.

Mr. Close argued on behalf of the respondent that an attorney was entitled to his out-of-pocket expenses in transferring deeds, etc., besides receiving his 6s. 8d. for writing each one.

Maasdorp, J., said it seemed that the respondent in this case rendered certain professional services to the applicant in respect of the administration of an estate in which she was executrix. He had now in his possession certain documents which came into his possession in his professional capacity, these appeared to be the deeds of transfer of property belonging to this estate. He claimed to retain these documents by virtue of a right of retention existing in respect of the debt due for the work done by him. A large number of items of indebtedness had been referred to which clearly had nothing to do with the administration of the estate. Then there were items which were for work done in respect of the general administration of the estate, but there was not a single item for the drafting or execution of the documents in question. Now, no authority had been cited for the doctrine that such documents could be retained for work specially done in respect of these documents. He was of opinion that the respondent was not entitled to retain these title deeds for the work he did for the applicant in the administration of the estate. There had been a statement that in respect of one item there was an expressed arrangement that the documents could be retained. In considering the whole of the case, and the fact that this alleged pledge was in respect of only one item, and in respect of that item such an expressed pledge was denied, the Court arrived at the conclusion that it had not been proved, and under the circumstances the Court ordered the respondent to deliver up the title deeds of the property in his possession and to pay the costs of the application.

Ex parte THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY.

Mr. Russell moved for leave to file a certain affidavit.

Mr. Upington opposed the motion on behalf of the Receiver (Mr. E. R. Syfret).

Mr. Russell read the affidavit of John Walker, managing partner in the joint venture, and who in that capacity was being sued. He stated on the 12th December, 1904, the respondents presented to the Court a list of claims, and on the 27th January the petitioner made an affidavit setting forth his objection to certain claims. Before the report of the respondents was confirmed the affidavit was sent to Cape Town to be filed, but owing to the applicant finding it necessary to change his attorneys in Cape Town, some time was lost, and in the interim the report was confirmed by the Court. Petitioner had been awaiting an action to be taken on the report, and consequently had delayed in bringing this motion.

The affidavit of E. R. Syfret, one of the Receivers in the estate, stated that ample time was allowed by the Court for the filing of the affidavit before the report was confirmed. The report was presented on the 23rd December, when an order was made for it to be allowed to remain open for inspection until February 14. Copies of it were also published, amongst other papers, in the London "Times" and the Cape Town papers. The affidavit which the applicant wished to file contained many misleading statements, which might prejudice the Court in other cases now proceeding.

Maasdorp, J., said the applicant in this matter moved to have an affidavit filed in a matter which had already been disposed of by order of the Court. It seemed that the Receivers for the Grand Junction Railway had brought up their report after making full inquiry, in so far as it lay in their power. The applicant now stated he was in possession of certain information, which he could have put before the Court, but was prevented from doing so owing to certain circumstances that arose. If the applicant wished to reopen the report of the Receivers, he could do so, and put the necessary evidence before the Court for so doing, but the application in its present form would have to be refused, and the applicant would have to pay the costs.

CHRIST V. CHRIST.

This was an application for an order for the personal attachment of the respondent, John Christ, for contempt of Court, by reason of his failing and refusing to comply with the terms of an order of Court of the 19th April last, ordering the respondent to deliver up to the applicant all her jewellery and personal effects.

The affidavit of Margarita Elizabeth Christ, the applicant, stated that on the 19th April last she obtained a decree of judicial separation against the respondent. In terms of the order of Court, the respondent should have delivered to her her jewellery and personal belongings. The latter consisted of, amongst other things, three dress-lengths, three pairs of shoes, one opera cloak, one dress-stand, stockings and handkerchiefs, a trinket set, the jewellery consisted of a gold watch and chain, bracelet, brooch, diamond ring, and pair of ear-rings. At the time she left home all of these articles were in good condition. The respondent delivered up all the jewellery through her attorneys, but they were in a much damaged state, and she had to have them repaired, at a cost of £3 or £4, and she believed that her husband intentionally and maliciously damaged same, so as to make them useless. Of her personal belongings, she only received the dress-stand and a few old handkerchiefs, and she believed that the respondent maliciously withheld the other articles.

A supporting affidavit was made by Bertha Christ, daughter of the applicant.

The affidavit of Herman Wolters, watchmaker, stated that he examined the watch referred to by applicant, and he came to the conclusion that it had been broken in such a manner as could only be done by somebody deliberately forcing up the works.

The affidavit of John Christ (the respondent) stated that he had handed over to the applicant all the personal belongings for which she had applied that he was aware of. The dress lengths, shoes, opera cloak, stockings, handkerchiefs, and trinket set he had absolutely no knowledge of. They were not in his possession, nor had he any use for them. With regard to the jewellery: when it was handed over, it was carefully examined by applicant's attorney, but no remark whatever was made as to its state. He emphatically denied that he had tampered with or injured in any way same.

A supporting affidavit was filed by Charles Christ, son of the respondent.

The replying affidavit of the applicant denied that the respondent had handed up to her all personal belongings. When she left home, the respondent took possession of all her jewellery, and when she received the watch, it was in a most damaged condition.

Dr. Greer for the applicant. Mr. Benjamin for the respondent.

Maasdorp, J., said that the parties in this case seemed to be persons of some considerable means. A judicial separation was obtained by the wife against the husband in April last, and the division of the property was proceeding. At the time that the order was made for such division, the Court also ordered the husband to give up to the wife certain jewellery and clothing which remained in the house after the wife left. She now applied for personal attachment against him for failing to comply with that order of Court. She stated that the jewellery was handed up, but that it had been wilfully damaged, and that some articles of clothing had been retained altogether. It seemed that when she left the house, she must have taken away the bulk of her possessions, and what she left behind seemed to have been a few small pieces of jewellery and a few trifling articles of clothing, apparently of little value compared with the means of these people. She stated that the jewellery had been delivered up, but in a condition showing that it had been wilfully damaged. Now, he was not satisfied that it was wilfully damaged. There had been a statement put in by a jeweller that the works of the watch seemed to have been forced. That was only the opinion of the jeweller, and the Court could not take the mere opinion of the watchmaker as conclusive on that point, especially when they had the denial of the respondent that he did do so. Then they had the statement of the respondent that the articles of clothing were not in the house at all. These articles appeared to be of very trifling value, and her mere statement that she left these articles behind had not proved that the respondent had these articles in his possession, and wilfully withheld them. In the opinion of the Court, this was an unnecessary application. It was quite clear that when the Court made the order for the delivery of the jewels and clothing the impression was that they were articles of great value. They appeared to be trifles, and there was no proof, to his satisfaction, that anything was done by the respondent to justify the application being brought into court. The application would be refused, with costs. It was a very strong measure for a wife to take, to make an attempt to put her husband in gaol.

APPEAL.

FOWLER V. JOUBERT.

Magistrate's jurisdiction—Judgment to pay debt by instalments.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate of Montagu, ordering that the offer of 5s. in the £ made by the defendant, Frederick Jacobus Joubert, be paid at once, and the balance within one year from date, to carry interest at 6 per cent.

The reasons given by the Magistrate for his decision were as follows: "I deemed the offer of an immediate payment of 5s. in the £ and the balance in a year's time to be a fair offer, in view of the circumstances of the defendant, which were those of a struggling farmer, who has been only two years on the farm, which he works on shares, and that about six of his creditors being business firms and others in this village, had agreed to these terms, the plaintiff alone holding out. The defendant, if judgment had been given for the full amount, would have been forced to surrender, and the plaintiff, besides having to wait for the distribution, would finally not get as much as the present judgment has secured him. The defendant has considerable liabilities, approaching £400, and depends on his brandy crop to assist in meeting them, and he is thus only able to promise payment of the balance in a year's time. The Court deems the judgment to be in the interests of all parties, and accepted the voluntary statements made, not deeming it necessary to call for evidence."

Mr. Russell appeared for appellant, who was plaintiff in the Court below. The respondent was not represented.

Mr. Russell contended that the Magistrate should have called evidence before making the order.

His Lordship said the Magistrate seemed to have tried to do what he considered equitable and fair, but he had no power to do so. The appeal would be allowed, and the judgment would be altered into judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed with costs.

SUPREME COURT FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

SMUTS V. ACKERMAN. } 1995.
Aug. 28th.

It appeared from the pleadings that this was an action for damages for wrongful impounding arising out of an action for slander brought by the plaintiff in the Supreme Court for £500 damage, against the defendant, who claimed in reconvention £20 damages for seizing and impounding certain cattle. The plaintiff withdrew his summons in the Supreme Court, and sued in the Magistrate's Court for £20 damages for slander, and the Magistrate refused to go into the case, while his case was still pending in the Supreme Court.

Mr. Burton for plaintiff; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for defendant.

Nicholaas Smuts, dairyman, at Maitland, stated in December last year his cows were impounded by the defendant. In a conversation a Mr. Blankenberg said that the defendant's cows had been impounded. Witness said it was a very good thing, and then the defendant went away, and impounded those belonging to witness. The defendant treated the cows very badly, beating them with a horse-whip.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: The poundmaster was wrong in saying that the cows had only a few dust marks. He had only paid 8s. 9d. for the impounding of the cattle; there was no doctoring of the cows.

Harry Sherer, dairyman, at Maitland, said he heard the defendant say he would send the plaintiff's cows to the pound, because Smuts said it was a good thing the defendant's cows had been impounded.

Christoffel van Dyk also gave evidence as to the impounding.

The defendant said the plaintiff's cows had frequently troubled him, as the boys did not look after them. He chased them away three times that morning from his property. He only gave two or three cuts to one cow. Witness had no spite against the plaintiff, and did not drive his cows in to get his own back.

By Mr. Burton: Witness was fined by the Court for assaulting one of the inspectors. Blankenberg sent him a challenge to come and have a fight—

All the witnesses for the plaintiff were lying. The poundmaster, whose son was married to witness's sister, would tell the truth to the Court.

The Poundmaster of Maitland said the cows were not being whipped when he saw them approaching the pound. The cows were in good condition, only one of the cattle having a couple of whip marks. The cattle were not violently treated. Witness had occasionally to use a whip to get other people's cattle into the pound.

Other witnesses gave evidence of the trespass, and denied any unnecessary cruelty to the plaintiff's cows.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The plaintiff, Ackerman, sued the defendant Smuts in this court for defamation of character, and £20 damages. His declaration was pleaded to by the defendants, who filed a claim in reconvention for alleged maltreating and illegal impounding of certain cattle belonging to defendant. When the case had gone so far as this the plaintiff's attorney agreed to pay the whole of the defendant's costs, and he wished to withdraw the case in the Supreme Court. Unfortunately for his client, he did not withdraw the case, he only withdrew the summons, and took out a fresh summons in the Magistrate's Court, and he was non-suited in the Magistrate's Court, on the ground that the same cause of action was pending in the Supreme Court. The defendant Smuts, who is plaintiff in reconvention, says he would not have instituted any action at all but for the action brought by the plaintiff, and I must say he was very badly advised when the other party withdrew his case and paid the costs in full in insisting upon going on in this Court. His lordship, after reviewing the evidence as to the impounding and the maltreating of the cattle, held that there was no damage suffered by the defendant as to the maltreatment, but as to the impounding, according to the Pound Act, the plaintiff was liable to pay to the owner all damages, costs and charges arising out of such proceedings, together with two shillings for every animal impounded. The plaintiff has paid 8s. 9d. to release her cattle and he is entitled to judgment in that sum, together with 2s. per head for the cattle, making in all 18s. 9d. Judgment will be for the plaintiff in reconvention for 18s. 9d., with Magistrate's Court costs.

CAPE ELECTRIC TRAM CO. V. } 1905.
COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. } Aug. 28th.

This was an application by the Cape Electric Tramway Co. to restrain the Colonial Government from trespassing on the Sea Point line. A consent paper recognising the rights of the applicants was made a Rule of Court.

Sir H. Juta said he had submitted the following paper to Mr. Searle: "That the applicants, without prejudice to their rights, consent to the Government taking immediate possession of the line of railway, known as the Sea Point Railway, and that the compensation to be paid to the applicants therefor be settled by arbitration in terms of the Lands and Arbitration Clauses Act of 1882, such arbitration to be held over pending an action to be brought for a declaration that the applicants were the purchasers of the said railway as a going concern, and are entitled to compensation upon the basis of the value of the said railway as a going concern." Counsel said his learned friend (Mr. Searle) had suggested the insertion of the words: "Under the Act 44 of 1905" after "and that compensation to be paid." Counsel had asked his learned friend not to insist upon these words, because that would really be determined by the action.

Mr. Searle said the Act of 1905 was really the only Act under which these proceedings could be taken. It must be clearly understood that this arbitration is taking place under this particular Act.

[Hopley, J.: You could not be in court only for that Act. There is no necessity for inserting it in this paper. Everyone will understand that this is the basis of the whole thing.]

Sir H. Juta, on the question of costs, urged that his clients were entitled to costs, as they were forced into court by the untenable position taken up by the Government, who took up a different position in court from the original one of refusing any compensation.

Mr. Searle said that the proper procedure for the other side was to go to arbitration under the deed and not to apply for an interdict restraining the Government from taking possession.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The Act 44 of 1905 authorises the Government to take over a line of railway known as the "Metropolitan and Suburban Railway" at a cost to be settled failing agreement by arbitration. Under the Arbitration Act of 1882 the Government, without giving any specific notice to the applicants, who were the owners of the line and were in possession, entered upon the property and took possession thereof, and the Government, under the letters which were written by their attorneys and the affidavit filed by the Commissioner, distinctly repudiated and denied the title of the applicants to the property. They were forced into court, as the Government ignored them entirely. Counsel for the Government admits that this position was not tenable, but wishes to raise the question whether or not the applicants, though owners of the railway line, could exercise running powers over it. This and the other points raised will have to be considered when the amount to be paid as compensation for expropriation is under consideration. As the matter stood when the application was brought into Court, the Government denied that the applicants were owners of the line or had any right thereto. The applicants have shown that they are the concessionaires of the previous owners, and are in possession, and this possession is most material to the claim of the applicants. I think the Court would have granted an interdict restraining the Government if they had not admitted the rights of the owners. Fortunately, however, the parties have come to an agreement, the Government to take possession of this property in terms of a consent paper put in, and in this consent paper the question of the extent of ownership will have to be decided in an action to be tried hereafter. In making this consent paper an order of Court, the Court will do so, with costs, as it is clear but for the action of the Government this application never would have been made.

Hopley, J., concurred.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

WEST AND ELCOATE V. LON- } 1905.
DON ASSURANCE CO. } Aug. 28th.

This was an action by the assignee in the assigned estate of West and Elcoate to recover the amount of an insurance policy.

The amount involved was £1,579, the value of certain merchandise and stock in a store occupied by West and Elcoate at Salt River, destroyed by fire in January last.

The plaintiff, Carl Friedrich W. Becker, in his declaration, stated he was the duly appointed assignee of the assigned estate of Robert Turnbull West and Bertram Weatherly Elcoate, trading as the firm of West and Elcoate. On the 30th December last the firm entered into a contract of insurance against fire with the defendant, by which the defendant agreed that in consideration of the payment of the sum of £10 8s., which the firm duly paid to the defendant, the latter would, if a fire occurred and the stock was destroyed, have to pay £1,500. At that date the goods insured were the property of the firm. On or about 13th January the premises were burnt, and the goods were totally destroyed by fire, save as to certain goods of the value of £21, and at that date the contract was of full force and effect. The defendant firm had refused to pay the amount, wherefore the plaintiff claimed £1,579, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

The defendant company, in their plea, admitted insuring the property, but stated that in the proposal form for the policy of insurance, which was written out by the agent of the defendant company at the request and dictation of West, the said West and Elcoate represented that the risk had never been declined by any office of insurance. This statement was wholly incorrect and untrue, inasmuch as the said West and Elcoate had made proposals for insurance to several other companies with regard to the stock and fixtures, but the companies had declined to accept the same or to insure the stock or fixtures. By reason of the said misrepresentation the policy of insurance effected with the defendant company and sued upon was null and void. The defendant company would not have accepted the risk had not the material facts been concealed. The defendant prayed that the case be dismissed with costs.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), was for the plaintiffs, and Mr. W. M. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Swift), was for the defendant company.

Robert Turnbull West, a partner in the assigned estate of West and Elcoate, said that the estate had been assigned to a Mr. Carl Becker since a fire had occurred at the premises in January last. An agent of the defendant company visited the premises in December last, and was shown all over the place. Witness told him that he had tried to get the place insured, and showed him letters from other companies that had declined the risk owing to lack of fire brigades. One company had refused witness's proposal because the billiard room was kept open late, and went on to say that some other company less critically disposed might accept the risk, and if witness desired any assistance in the matter he was to let the company know. Some of the proposals were made verbally and others in writing. Witness could not have shown them to the agent, because they were not in the possession of the firm. Witness asked the agent what he thought of the letters he had seen, and the agent replied that the companies were apparently afraid to accept because of the number of fires there had been in the suburbs. Witness told the agent that he (witness) considered the letters to be refusals, and told him that it was due to the bondholders, Messrs. J. H. Sturk and Co., pressing the firm, that it was so anxious to insure. The agent said that he would fix the firm up, and, producing a proposal form, proceeded to fill it up. Witness dictated nothing to the agent, but gave him a balance-sheet for perusal. Witness was serving several customers whilst the agent filled in the form. The agent had wanted to make the policy £2,000, and witness thought that £1,200 would be sufficient, but after a while they split the difference and made it £1,600.

Cross-examined: Witness did not read the proposal form before he signed it. He had filled in no forms before, neither had he signed any. His partner had. The day previously Elcoate made a proposal to the Commercial Company. Witness never satisfied himself that the particulars stated in the proposal form were correct. Witness had not the time to read it. Witness called at the "Union." He did not see the proposal form.

I put it to you that you urged Mr. Shawe to take up this insurance?—I asked him to do so.

All the proposal forms state that you had never been declined by any other company?—I didn't know it, but I do now.

Elcoate says that this was inadvertent, put in?—I know nothing about it.

There was considerable difficulty about getting this insurance?—Yes.

Can you explain why in all the proposal forms put in it is stated that you were not refused by any other company?—I didn't fill them in; Elcoate did.

You had a conversation with Mr. Mowitt after the fire, and told him that Elcoate had not tried other companies and been declined?—I did not.

Mr. Searle explained that the fire took place a few days after the insurance was effected. In further cross-examination, witness admitted telling Mr. Jowitt that he had insured in another company before he took Elcoate in as partner.

You told him that you allowed the policy to lapse?—I don't remember doing so.

He also says you told him that the company would not renew?—I may have done so.

Did you mention anything about making a proposal to the Commercial?—I believe I told him that Mr. Elcoate had been there.

In re-examination, witness said the actual refusal from the Commercial did not come until the day before the fire.

Bertram W. Elcoate was next examined. He stated he was in partnership with the last witness. They were anxious to effect an insurance on their property. He remembered the agent from the defendant company waiting on him with regard to an insurance. The agent was shown over the place by Mr. West. West asked witness for the correspondence from the other insurance companies. Witness got it for him, and handed it to the agent. Witness took no further part in the insurance of the property.

Cross-examined: Witness knew Mr. Wilson, the manager of the "New Zealand." They were both Australians. In September, witness applied to Mr. Wilson for an increase to £2,000 on his property. Wilson gave what he called a "cover," and went out to inspect the place. The policy was cancelled by Mr. Wilson in October. They remained uninsured. Witness did not remember Mr. Wilson telling him that if he tried to insure again he would be asked if he was declined or refused by another company, and he would have to explain what had been done.

Didn't he tell you to refer them to him, and he would tell them the reasons for cancelling, and that it was not because he had anything against you?—No.

Mr. Wilson goes on to say that you met him and told him that the defendant company refused to pay, and that you had inadvertently stated that you had not been refused by another company?—No.

Didn't he tell you that you had done exactly what he told you not to?—No.

You signed several of these proposal forms?—Yes.

But you state in them that you had not been refused by any other company?—Neither had I.

But the New Zealand refused you?—I didn't take it as a refusal.

But Mr. Wilson wrote to you cancelling the insurance. Do you mean to say that was not a refusal. Do you contend that you were justified in your answer to the inquiries?—Yes.

Surely, you knew it was an important thing to state that you had been refused?—No.

But you are acquainted with the general tenor of a proposal form?—Yes.

So that you know one of the questions would be as to whether you were declined or refused?—I don't know that.

It is a question sometimes put?—Yes.

And knowing that do you tell us that you did not read this proposal through?—Yes.

Mr. Bird, of the Commercial, says he asked you every question carefully?—I don't remember.

And you may have said that you were not previously refused?—Yes.

Is your position that you attach no importance to the question?—Yes. I think it did not matter much.

You saw Mr. Mowitt after the fire?—Yes.

Did West tell him in your presence that he had never been declined?—No.

James Block stated that in December last he was in the employment of the plaintiffs. He remembered the agent being shown round the shop by West. Witness heard West telling Elcoate to bring the correspondence from the other companies. He did so.

Cross-examined: Witness took no part in the insurance business. A good many agents went out to the business about that time.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

John Harold Glover, examined for the defence, stated he had been about 3½ years in the employment of the defendant company. In consequence of what a friend of his told him, witness went out to see West and Elcoate. They went over the premises together. West put a value on the articles. After they had been over the premises, witness brought out the proposal form, and began to fill it up. West was called away, and witness filled up some of the questions in his absence, and left others which he could not fill until he returned. Amongst the questions witness asked him were if he had been declined or refused by any other company, and he replied, "No." It was erroneous to state that West asked Elcoate to hand witness the correspondence from other offices. Witness made the usual inquiries for references, and as they were satisfactory the risk was taken. Witness did not recollect having seen Elcoate on that occasion.

Cross-examined: The references must have been good, because you quoted lower than other offices? I quoted the usual rates—12s. 6d. per cent.

How are you paid?—By salary and commission.

Did you discuss nothing with West as to other companies being afraid to take on insurance because of suburban fires?—No.

West has assigned his estate, and has no interest in this case, and can you say why he should perjure himself? You know you will suffer?—No.

[Maasdorp, J.: Do you know how you will suffer?]

The company I work for would not give me the "sack" for an insurance like this. If I took the risk, knowing that other companies had refused them, I would deserve to be dismissed on the spot.

Sir H. Juta: Then there is no truth in West's statement about this conversation?—As far as I am concerned, it is all fabrication.

[Maasdorp, J.: The policy has not been put in yet?]

Mr. Searle: The fire occurred before the policy was issued, but in the meantime was covered.

Vernon G. Mowitt, fire assessor, stated that at the instance of the defendant company he went out to see the premises. On January 14 witness saw West and Elcoate in his office. Witness took a note of what was said. West said they had not received the policy, but they had a receipt, which they had sent to their solicitors. They proposed to the London Insurance Company on the 30th December, and they paid the premium on that insurance. West said that up to February, 1904, he owned the business, but then took Elcoate into partnership. He was then insured in some company, but the policy lapsed in April. He was not sure whether he or the company cancelled the policy. West said he had never been declined by a company. Elcoate said he had called at the Central Company, but did not fill up a proposal form, as that company informed him they were not taking suburban risks. In consequence of that and what witness saw in the cash-books, he made certain inquiries.

In that examination witness said it was the usual thing to ask a person who was claiming insurance if they had been refused by any other company. Witness knew the plaintiffs had been refused. His object was to find out how many companies they had been to.

Harry Benson, in the employ of Bullen Bros., the agent of the defendant company, said that in 1904 he was in entire charge of the fire department. He went through West and Elcoate's proposal with the agent, and if he had known that they had been declined by other companies he would have refused their application. Witness issued a protection receipt.

William W. Bird, of the Commercial Union Company, said that West and Elcoate had made a proposal to his company prior to the date of the interview between West and the insurance agent.

Francis Ailsop, of Searight and Co., agents for the Northern Assurance Company, said that in December last a proposal was made to the Northern Company by the firm, and witness went to Salt River and saw the place. On December 15 witness wrote that the Northern could not consider the risk unless the firm guaranteed to close by 11 p.m. The firm replied that they would close at that hour, but the Northern verbally refused to entertain the proposal.

Thomas Shaw, of the Union Company, told how West and Elcoate had made a proposal to his company, and had been refused.

Bernard Walshe, insurance broker, stated he filled up one of the proposals—the one to the Union Company for Elcoate, and took down his replies.

Alfred George McLeod, branch manager of the Central Company, stated a proposal to insure the premises in question was taken to his office. Witness went out and saw them, but he did not think a policy on it would be available.

[Maasdorp, J.: I don't see what that has to do with the case.]

Mr. Searle: I wish to show that a number of managers, and others went out to see the place, and declined the risk.

Robert Ruston, acting branch manager of the Commercial Union Company, said West and Elcoate made a proposal for insurance, but his firm declined to accept it.

Sir H. Juta: That is quite irrelevant to this case, as the letter was written after the insurance was accepted by the defendant company.

The evidence of Frank W. Wilson, manager of the New Zealand Company, taken on commission, was read. He stated his company had the place insured. On an application from West and Elcoate to increase the amount of the insurance, witness refused to do so, as some of the goods were under bonds, and it was not the custom of his company to insure such goods. The insurance was cancelled.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Counsel for the plaintiff having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J., said that there was no need for him to hear Mr. Searle, and in giving judgment said that the plaintiff had sued the defendant for the recovery of a sum of money due under what was described in the declaration as a contract of insurance against fire, and in which contract it was stated that the defendant agreed to pay a sum of £1,600 in the case of any injury to the plaintiff's stock-in-trade by fire, in consideration of the payment of a premium of £10 8s. He was convinced that the question as to whether proposals by West and Elcoate had been refused by other companies was a material point, and he believed Mr. Glover when he said that had he known that the plaintiffs had been refused, he would not have accepted their proposal. It was a material point upon which the defendant should have been informed, and the non-disclosure of it rendered the action one of misrepresentation. With regard to the point raised that the question as to the refusal of the risk by any other office did not strike them as material. If the Court believed Mr. Wilson, then West and Elcoate were wrong in saying so, because Mr. Wilson, in his evidence, stated that at the time when he cancelled the policy, he told them that they should state the circumstances, because if they did not it might put them in an awkward position. It was clearly brought to their knowledge that their position would be a difficult one to get out of, because it was a matter of great importance to give the correct information. However, a number of other proposals had been put before the Court, and it was found that after the cancellation by the New Zealand Company, they made proposals in which it was clearly their duty to state that this risk had previously been refused, and on three or four occasions they made the positive statement that that risk had not been refused. Now these statements were false, and they were false to the knowledge of West and Elcoate, and there was no evidence that they were misled by any agent of the company. They made these statements after they had been warned that the statement would be a matter of some importance. It seemed that after the New Zealand Company had cancelled their policy the partners were very anxious to get another insurance of the place, and Elcoate must have been aware of what West did, and West must have been aware of what Elcoate did. In that case the Court was not willing to accept their statements. Both of the partners must have been aware that on several occasions the risk was refused by other companies, and if the Court accepted that view in the present case they must arrive at the conclusion that the partners made false statements on several occasions. The Court was driven to the conclusion that in other respects the partners had stated what was not true. Mr. Mowitt stated that when he spoke to them they deliberately made the statement that their offer had never been declined. If this statement stood alone, it might not be of much importance, but Mr. Wilson gave his statement, and here again the Court was prepared to accept his statement; and then, again, they had the written evidence of documents signed by either West or Elcoate. The conclusion arrived at was that they had made statements that were not correct. Then, if their statements were brought face to face with that of Mr. Glover, the Court was forced to the same conclusion. If Mr. Glover had had before him that correspondence, he must have come to the conclusion that there had been a refusal. It was impossible to construe that correspondence otherwise than as a refusal. The partners could not conceal themselves behind that correspondence, because there was a good deal more. However, if Mr. Glover had seen that correspondence, he must have come to the conclusion that there had been a refusal, and it was impossible for the Court to understand why, under these circumstances, he should have put a false statement into the mouth of West with regard to this material inquiry. It very often happened that an agent got a small commission in these matters, and it might be said that he got a small inducement, but the question was, would Glover consider this? One had to inquire into the partners' previous transactions in matters of this kind. The Court was forced to the conclusion that their evidence could not be accepted. He found that the representation was made, and it was material that it voided the contract. Judgment would be given for the defendants with costs.

REX V. HEYNES, MATHEW & CO. 1905.
(Aug. 28th.)

Chemist and druggist—General dealer—Licence—Acts 15 of 1877 and 38 of 1887.

A licence to deal as a chemist and druggist does not under Act 38 of 1887 include the right to deal in any articles not directly connected with the business "as such."

Semble: A chemist and druggist may under his licence sell photographic "films" or other articles to the preparation of which a chemical process is essential.

This was an appeal brought by John Alfred Mathew, Alfred Harfield Mathew and Frank Carleton Mathew, trading as Messrs. Heynes, Mathew and Co., of Cape Town, against a conviction of the Acting Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, for trading in a general dealer's business without taking out the necessary licence as required by the Act 38 of 1887. Mr. Russell was for the applicants, and Mr. Nightingale appeared for the Crown. The appellants had sold a photographic film in contravention of the Act, and were fined 1s.

Mr. Russell contended that the appellants were entitled to sell any article included in a retail shopkeeper's licence under the Act of 1877, and that the subsequent Act of 1887 did not repeal that power, and the fact that retail shopkeepers' licences did not now exist did not prevent the chemists from selling such goods.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that if Mr. Russell's contention was sound, it meant that a chemist could sell anything that a retail shopkeeper could sell before 1887, such as tea, sugar, coffee, ironmongery, etc.

Mr. Russell said the chemist paid nearly double the licence of a general dealer.

Buchanan, A.C.J., pointed out that the chemists could hardly claim a prescriptive right to sell these goods.

Mr. Russell: Unfortunately not, my lord. Counsel, proceeding, said it was quite evident that for eighteen years the construction now attempted had never been put upon this Act.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: I could see a great deal of force in your argument if you limit yourself to the film, which is a chemical production, but in the case of playing cards and tobacco there is a very great distinction, and you want to go as far as that.]

Mr. Russell: Oh, yes; we want to go further than the film.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: He had a chemist's and druggist's licence, and before 1887 he had all the privileges of a retail shopkeeper's licence, but that retail licence has now been taken away from him.]

Mr. Russell contended that a chemist never required the retail licence. Section 4 gave him all the powers without taking out a general dealer's licence—it gave him all the powers he had under the Act of 1877, and he submitted the defence set up was a perfectly good one, and that the conviction was wrong.

Mr. Nightingale, quoting other licences, contended if a chemist was not confined to his business "as such" a butcher could trade as a baker and a baker as an ostrich feather dealer. It was perfectly clear that the legitimate business of the chemist and druggist was connected either intimately with the science of chemistry or with the science of healing as in historic times.

Mr. Russell, replying to the historic meaning relied on by his learned friend, said if that interpretation was to be put on the trade, then a chemist might practise as a medical man, and he would also be entitled to practise as a "barber."

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: He can practise as a barber at present if he likes.]

Mr. Russell having been heard further in argument,

Buchanan, A.C.J.: By Act 15 of 1877, Section 4, the licence of a chemist or druggist covered as well all dealings of a retail shop dealer; so that a chemist or druggist could sell anything which a retail shopkeeper could sell. In 1887 the Legislature altered the law by abolishing the retail shopkeeper's licence and substituting therefor a licence called a general dealer's licence. Act 38 of 1887, Section 4, exempts persons licensed to carry on certain trades and occupations from the necessity of taking out a general dealer's licence for the purpose of such trades or occupations. This section enacts, inter alia, that no one licensed as an apothecary, chemist or druggist, as such, shall be bound or required to take out a licence as a general dealer." It is contended, however, that the privilege of retail trading is still continued to chemists or druggists. I do not think that was the intention of the Legislature. No doubt this matter has been complicated by the fact that the Act of 1877 has not been specifically repealed. But this Act of 1887 repeals in law anything inconsistent therewith. The retail shopkeeper's licence is no longer in existence, and I fail to see how a chemist or druggist can claim to carry on such a business and to have the privileges of a licence which no longer can be granted. Under the Act of 1887 the chemist is allowed to deal as such without having taken out a general dealer's licence. I think, therefore, that the provisions of the Act were intended to mean that a chemist does not require a general dealer's licence to sell goods connected with his business as a chemist or druggist. In this case, had the contention been confined to the selling of films for photographic apparatus, they might fairly have been held to come within the scope of a chemist's business. But the claim set up is to sell anything which retail shopkeepers could sell under the old Act. If the case had been confined to the film, I think the conviction might probably have been quashed, but as the claim is to sell goods not connected with a chemist's business the conviction must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

APPEALS.

REX V. MARTIN AND OTHERS. { 1905.
Aug. 29th.

Native reserve — Ejectment —
Criminal proceedings — Act
37 of 1884.

The appellants, Europeans, had been ejected from a certain native reserve on a Magistrate's order granted against them after criminal proceedings had been taken. There was no evidence that any natives were living on these lands.

Held, that as the place was not a native location in terms of Act 37 of 1884, the appellants were not liable, either civilly or criminally, and that the proceedings taken against them were irregular and must be quashed.

This was an appeal by Hendrik Martin, Wynand Martin, Gert Martin, Albert Lyons, and Gert Vermaak, from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Mafeking on the 29th June last, ordering them to remove from the Molopo native reserve or location.

The appeal was based on the following grounds: (1) That the native reserves in Bechuanaland are not Crown lands in terms of the Native Location Act 37 of 1884; (2) that the appellants were wrongfully and unlawfully ordered to remove from the reserve under section 20 of Act 37 of 1884; and (3) that the conviction was contrary to law.

The Court below held that proclamation 62 B.B., which dealt with the control of the native reserves in Bechuanaland, having been repealed by proclamation 220 B.B., and on the promulgation of the Annexation Act of 1895, under section 2, the Native Location Act of 37 of 1884 came into force, and that the accused, being not such persons as were described in section 7 of that Act, were unlawfully on the Crown reserve or location, and must remove therefrom on receipt of written instructions from the Magistrate to that effect.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J., said it seemed to him that the procedure in this case was absolutely the wrong procedure adopted for the purpose intended by the Act. This proceeding was in the form of a criminal prosecution, and it was attempted to exclude certain people from what was called the native location under terms of section 20 of Act 37 of 1884. These proceedings were quite irregular, but no exception was taken to that, because the parties wished to have a certain point which was raised decided by that Court, and as the appeal was before the Court, the mere form of the proceedings might perhaps not have prevented the Court from deciding the point which was raised, which was whether the accused in this case were found on a native location on Crown lands as described by the Act. A native location was described as a number of huts or dwellings occupied by native races, the names of which were set forth. Now, there was no evidence in this case of the existence of any native location at the place where these people resided, and consequently they could not be said to have been in a native location such as that in respect of which provision was made for the purposes of ejectment, consequently there was no evidence to prove that they became liable to these proceedings, whether civil or criminal. If it had been a criminal proceeding, the conviction would have had to be quashed, but there was no conviction to quash, and the only thing the Court could do would be to quash the proceedings, which were irregular in form, and in respect of which there was nothing to prove that any offence had been committed. The Court would hold that these people were not liable to proceedings, either civil or criminal, under this section, because they were not living in a native location such as was described under section 7. It was stated, however, that that was not the point which the parties wished the Court to decide, but that there was a larger question opened, upon which they wished for the ruling of the Court, and that larger question was whether the native reserve was Crown land for the purpose of making a location of such reserve. The parties in this case could not raise such a point, because they were not interested in the decision. The decision in this case must proceed on the facts which were directly before the Court. The accused appeared to be European farmers living on a native reserve, and the Court did not see what interest they could possibly have in having a decision of the Court as to whether a native reserve was Crown land or not, and the Court did not decide mere hypothetical matters in which the parties appearing before the Court were not interested. This was a criminal procedure, and the Court could only say the proceedings must be quashed.

REX V. FERREIRA.

This was an appeal brought by Mamiel Ferreira against a sentence of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town sentencing him to fourteen days' imprisonment for the theft of four bottles of whiskey.

The appeal was on the grounds that the evidence given for the prosecution did not disclose any criminal intent or conduct on the part of accused, that the conviction was not supported by the evidence, and that seeing there existed a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of accused, he should have been given the benefit thereof, that the evidence adduced by the defence preponderated in clearness, precision, and probability over the evidence given by the prosecution, and that illegal or incompetent evidence was admitted.

From the evidence given in the Court below, it appeared that accused was engaged by one D'Abreu as a handyman and bottle-washer at his hotel. D'Abreu and accused quarrelled on July 21, when the former turned him out without wages or notice. Accused then went to his agent to take proceedings to recover his wages, and after this he was arrested. The only bottle found on the premises owned by accused was one which was there when he took the premises over from D'Abreu.

Dr. Greer appeared for appellant, and Mr. Nightingale for the Crown.

Counsel having been heard.

Maasdorp, J., said the evidence given by the prosecution in this case was to the effect that four bottles of whiskey bearing a special mark disappeared from the place of business of the plaintiff, and that one of them was subsequently found at a place which was in the occupation of the accused including this particular bottle. The evidence showed that certain bottles were brought by the accused to this place, and that at the time that he delivered it he said he had taken it away from his master without his master's knowledge. Now this master appeared to be the complainant, and when prisoner was taxed with the theft he was said to have admitted that he had taken the whiskey without actually admitting that he had stolen it. If this evidence was believed by the Magistrate, then there was no reason why the Court should interfere. There were no circumstances in the case upon which the Court could come to the conclusion that the Magistrate was wrong in his finding, and under the circumstances the appeal would be dismissed.

DAVIDSON V. SIVERTSEN. { 1905.
Aug. 29th.

Joinder of parties—Magistrate's jurisdiction—Married woman—Public trader.

D., while under the age of majority and unmarried, leased certain premises for the purpose of her business. She afterwards married in community and was sued for rent amounting to £30. Exception was taken (1) that the amount was beyond the Magistrate's jurisdiction, (2) that D.'s husband and not D. should have been sued.

Held, (1) That the lease being a liquid document, the sum claimed thereon was within the jurisdiction. (2) That D. was rightly sued for a debt contracted while she was a public trader.

This was an appeal against a judgment of the R.M. of the Cape, who had found for the respondent (plaintiff in the Court below), in an action for debt, £30, representing rent due, against Mrs. Davidson and Miss Robertson. Mr. Alexander was for the appellant, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for the respondent.

Mr. Alexander urged that Mrs. Davidson, when he signed the lease of a shop, belonging to the respondent, was a minor. On March 15, she and her friend, by mutual agreement, gave up the drapery business they were running; and, in September, 1904, she married one Davidson in community of property. Not till after she was married was she summoned, and he (counsel) would submit that her husband, and not she, ought to have been summoned, as she was not a public trader; and that, if the action in the Court below had been for damages to the extent of £30, the R.M. had had no right to deal with it. The wife had no control over the property held in community; and he submitted that the Court would never give judgment against her to take effect on property with which she had nothing to do. Counsel quoted extensively from previous decisions of the Court, in support of his argument. Proceeding, he said that on page 247 of Van Zyl (enlarged edition) it was laid down that, where judgment for debt had been given against a woman, and she subsequently married, in default of satisfaction of the judgment, an order for imprisonment could be made against the husband, in respect of this antenuptial liability, without his being called upon to show cause against the imprisonment. He (Mr. Alexander) took it, of course, that this applied to marriage in community of property only, and should be read as such. His Lordship would see that the Magistrate, in his decision, did not deal at all with the legal aspects of the case. There was no attempt in Voet, nor any of the other authorities, to hold a woman liable for an antenuptial liability, when she was subsequently married in community, and had, therefore, no control over the administration of the property, except where the woman had been a public trader. In these circumstances, he submitted that the Magistrate's judgment was not a correct one.

Mr. De Villiers contended that a wife married in community of property could be sued. It was recognised that one could sue, on the wife's torts, the wife, assisted by the husband; and the question for the Court to decide in this case was if the point involved was to be regarded as analagous to a post-nuptial tort or post-nuptial contract.

Mr. Alexander, in reply, said that the contentions set up by his learned friend did not affect his argument.

Maasdorp, J.: The matter is now before the Court on appeal against the ruling of the Resident Magistrate of the Cape, upon exceptions taken in the Court below. The first is, that the amount claimed was beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. The amount claimed is £48, and it is claimed upon a written lease, which clearly expresses the amounts payable and the times when they are to be paid. I am of opinion that it is a claim for rent, and is upon a liquid document, and clearly falls within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate. Then, there is a further exception taken: that the wife should not have been sued assisted by the husband as she has been, but that the husband himself should have been sued. This, in its nature, is a technical exception; but, if it is a good exception, and borne out by the practice of the Court, the Court would now have to hold that the present form of procedure is erroneous. I cannot say that any of the authorities that have been cited are directly in point in this case, and I do not find that this matter, as it now stands, has been clearly and distinctly dealt with. It appears that, under certain circumstances, for the debts of a wife before marriage the husband only can be sued, because, after marriage, all debts and assets come into community. But there is something special in the nature of this case. Exception is made to the rule in cases where a married woman is a trader, and, in her case, she is allowed to be sued personally for debts contracted by herself in respect of her trade; and in a suit against her, it is only necessary that she should be assisted by her husband. Now, it seems to me that in such a case, if the wife had ceased to be a public trader, she could still be sued in respect of transactions which she had entered into whilst a trader, notwithstanding the fact that she could no longer be described as a public trader. In this case, the defendant was a public trader before she married, and, in my opinion, in respect of debts contracted for that business, she would stand in the same position as a married woman who had dealt as a public trader after marriage. She could, consequently, be sued for matters which related to her trade by those who had given her credit in respect of that business. It appears that, in this case, the house was hired by herself and partner to carry on business in, and the debt was contracted by her in respect of rent due for the premises so hired. On the whole, I am inclined to think that, in such a case, she must be treated as a married woman, who is sued by those who dealt with her as a public trader in matters of such trade, and that the form was rightly adopted of suing her personally, duly assisted by her husband. And, under, the circumstances, I think the Magistrate was right in over-ruling that exception. It has been mentioned that she was a minor, but the Court cannot go into that question now, because minority, in itself, is not an excuse for the payment of debts due, but it may be taken advantage of as an exception. In this case the defendant did not set up the question of minority in the Magistrate's Court. With respect to the fixtures, the Magistrate seemed to have overlooked the fact that they should be dealt with, but the Court will not deal with the matter. If judgment were given, the respondent would be able to seize them in execution. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

REX V. CARN AND OTHERS { 1905.
Aug. 29th.

Act 36 of 1902, Sec. 16.

Under Sec. 16 of Act 36 of 1902, any persons who use any house or place for the purpose of betting may be convicted.

This was an appeal on behalf of Israel Carn, Alexander Jacobs, George Wolstenholme Smith, and Hyman Kruyer ("Trilby"), local bookmakers, from a sentence of the Resident Magistrate, Cape Town, fining them £40 each, or the alternative of one month's imprisonment, with hard labour, for contravening section 16 of Act 36 of 1902.

The evidence taken before the Magistrate was read, after which counsel were heard in argument.

Mr. J. T. Molteno appeared for the appellants, and Mr. Nightingale for the Crown.

Mr. Molteno said he believed this was the first time that an interpretation came up for the decision of the Supreme Court of the clause under which these men were charged—the 16th clause of the Act of 1902. There was a decision in the middle of the year dealing with section 6 of the same Act, which dealt with gaming houses, whilst part 3 of the Act dealt entirely with betting-houses. To put the matter shortly, a great number of books were put in before the magistrate, consisting of the constitution of the club, the articles and lists of the committee, and the rules, and it was clearly recognised there that there was no need to further define what Tattersall's Club was. It had a liquor licence, and also a club licence. Now, in this case the contention of the appellants was that under this section they should not have been sued, and that the proper parties to be sued were the owners or the tenants of these premises. Under the section the proper persons to be sued were not individual persons who were members of the club, but those who governed Tattersall's Club. All through the Act it would be seen that a distinction was made between the people who owned or kept or ran either a betting or a gaming house, and the frequenters of such houses. If the Court would look at part 2, section 4, it would be seen that it was said that it shall be unlawful to keep or frequent any gaming house in the Colony or on territorial waters, and under section 12 it was laid down that it was unlawful to keep or frequent any house or place for betting within the Colony or territorial waters. Now, under part 2 of the Act, there had been a case in which three persons were charged under the sixth section with gaming, and they were all convicted and fined £100 by the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town. Their case came up for appeal, and was heard in the Supreme Court on the 3rd July. It was the case of Rex v. Ah Foo (15 C.T.R., 520). The Acting Chief Justice, in giving judgment, was reported in the "Cape Times" as saying that the two appellants based their appeal upon the ground that they were not the owners or keepers of the house, but were merely frequenters. The question turned upon the construction to be placed upon section 3 of what was commonly called the Morality Act. This section made the owner or keeper of a gambling house or brothel include the owner of a house, who was cognisant of the uses to which the property was put, and the tenant, or landlord, or lodger, or any person employed in any capacity other than that of a menial or domestic servant. Now the two appellants were neither owners, lodgers, nor tenants of this house. They were there playing a certain game, and on the evidence before the Court, he (the Acting Chief Justice) thought it would be difficult to hold that they were anything more than players frequenting the house. He thought the section must be taken to mean that persons so convicted must be either owners or persons who assisted in running the house for the benefit of the owner. There was no proof that these two were more than frequenters, or that they could be included under the title of owner or keeper. It was quite consistent with the evidence to say that they were only frequenters, and he thought the Magistrate had erred in convicting them as owners or keepers, especially where it was so conclusively proved who was the keeper and owner of the house—the tenant, who had been punished. The appeal should therefore be allowed, and the conviction against the two appellants quashed. The sixteenth section of the Act stated that whosoever opened, kept, or used any house or place for any of the purposes mentioned in the fifteenth section, or knowingly and wilfully being the owner, tenant, occupier, or lodger, permitted the same to be opened, kept, or used for such purposes, or had the care or management of any such place was liable to a fine not exceeding £200. An owner or occupier was defined in the interpretation clause as a person who was cognisant of the purposes for which or uses to which his property was being used or put, and also a tenant, occupier, lodger, manager, banker, dealer, croupier, secretary, clerk, messenger, or any person employed in any house or a person employed in a place other than a menial or domestic capacity. His contention was that these bookmakers, who were members of Tattersall's Club, were like every member of a club, only frequenting a club. These men were there frequenting the club, and it was not denied that bets were made, and it was contended that the proper persons to be sued were not the individual members of the club, but the persons who governed or controlled the club—the committee. If the Crown had wished to get at this Tattersall's Club the proper persons to be sued were the owners of 78, Longmarket-street, or if the owners had sub-let the premises to anybody else, who had let them to Tattersall's, then the sub-lessee. He contended that the appellants should not have been convicted, and he did not think the Legislature intended that a fine of £200 should be imposed under these circumstances. The only betting that was legal was provided for under section 21, which held that the only betting that was legal by bookmakers was betting on a racecourse on the races on which were run in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Jockey Club of South Africa. Under that section they could only bet upon races which were being run on the particular day they were there. For instance, it would be illegal for a bookmaker to stand up at Kenilworth Racecourse and bet on a race that was being run in England or Kimberley, or elsewhere. He was only protected if betting on a race run at the meeting at which he was present, and then only if he had the consent of the authorities to stand up. Counsel did not for a moment contend that these persons were acting legally, but under this section the proper persons to be sued were not the individual members of the club, but the body that governed the club. It was put in at the Magistrate's Court as evidence that there were 400 members of this club. The police, if they had wished, could have taken their choice. They could have run in the committee of the club by means of the president and executive, or the owners of the premises, but the section of the Act never intended that the individual members of the club should be brought up. For those reasons he submitted that the conviction was wrong, just as it was wrong in the case where they were dealing with gaming-houses in the case of Re v. Ah Foo, and for a like reason he submitted that the conviction should be quashed. Of course, it remained open to the Crown if any illegal practices were carried on at Tattersall's to prevent the breaking of the law by taking proceedings against the governing body, and not coming down on private members, who were not responsible for the management of the club.

Mr. Nightingale said he thought his learned friend was not quite correct in his information about the case of Ah Foo. He thought it was necessary to see how the charge against these men differed from the charge in the present case. In that case the circumstances were that the police made a raid on a gaming-house and arrested everybody there. It was found that only the owners and keepers could be charged under the particular section on which they were charged, and the frequenters under another section. Now, in the section under which the men in the present case were charged, the wording was different. The charge-sheet said nothing about opening or keeping a betting place. The charge against the accused was that they did wrongfully and unlawfully use a certain place, viz., Tattersall's Club, for purposes which were illegal. His learned friend might be correct in saying that the committee of Tattersall's Club might be prosecuted, but the Court were not entering into that point.

[Maasdorp, J.: But this club is not supposed to be kept as a gaming-house.]

Mr. Nightingale: Oh, no; but if the committee allow this place to be used for betting they can be prosecuted.

Continuing, counsel contended that this particular prosecution was exactly such a case as the English Act was intended to meet, but there was a slight difference between the English and Colonial Acts in that they had not taken over the preamble of the English Act, which read: "Whereas a kind of gaming has of late sprung up tending to the injury and demoralisation of improvident persons by the opening of places called betting-houses or offices, and the receiving of money in advance by the owners or occupiers of such houses or offices, or by other persons acting on their behalf on their promises to pay money on events of horse races and the like contingencies." It was quite clear that the English Act specified charges. For instance, under the English Act, if betting took place in a public-house it was not the publican who was charged, but the bookmakers who made the bet. The point with which the Court was dealing was this. A number of bookmakers were members of Tattersall's Club, and apparently one of the objects of that membership was contravention of this Act. Instead of standing about the streets for a similar purpose, they had their desks and their notice boards, and carried out betting transactions with outsiders inside the club. That was the sort of betting that this Act was passed to put a stop to. Undoubtedly, if one read the preamble of the English Act, they would find that it was to prevent outside betting. The betting complained of in the present case was really outside betting, because none of the men who risked their money on the occasion of the prosecution had anything to do with Tattersall's Club. The bookmakers did not deny that they habitually bet with outsiders. Under these circumstances the case of Ah Foo had nothing to do with this case.

Maasdorp, J., said section 15 was rather an awkward section. Supposing two people bet in a room, they, under that section, clearly used that place for betting. That was rather a long jump.

Mr. Nightingale said he thought that arose from the transcript of the English Act, which had not been transcribed verbatim. The English Act held that every house, room, office, or place open for the purpose of betting shall be taken to be a gaming house within the meaning of another Act. The Act of 1902 really incorporated two English Acts. It incorporated the English Act of 17 and 18 Victoria and 15 and 16 Victoria, and apparently the Act of 1902 followed the wording of the English Act, which really only defined what a betting house was. If the preamble of the English Act was adopted, it would be made quite clear that this outside betting was the sort that should be put a stop to. His learned friend had assumed that the people were charged with keeping and opening a house, whereas they were only charged with wrongfully using the place for betting.

Mr. Molteno: The whole thing hangs on the interpretation of the word place.

Mr. Nightingale: A place is almost anything.

His Lordship: It was held in the House of Lords that a racecourse is not a place after the Court of Appeal had decided that it was.

Mr. Nightingale: An umbrella can be considered a place. Continuing, he contended that the members of this club did not confine their operations of betting to one another, but did so with anybody that came along. If the point raised by his learned friend to the effect that these people were not to be prosecuted for contravening the section, but only as frequenters, then they would have them going into the premises of some friend and starting bookmaking there. It was difficult to see what the Act was intended to do if it was not intended to meet cases of this kind.

Mr. Molteno mentioned that in the case of Ah Foo 36 men were charged, 33 of whom were convicted as frequenters.

The fact of the matter was that Tattersall's Club was purely a betting club.

Mr. Nightingale: Are you a member?

Mr. Molteno replied that he was not. This club was purely a betting club, and they had a licence for liquor. That was why the rules were put in. If Mr. Nightingale was correct, then there would not be a house in the Peninsula of which the occupiers would not be liable to prosecution. In fact, one could not have a small game of bridge without laying himself open to prosecution. He felt sure the Legislature, when they passed that Act, never had that intention. He concluded by again contending that the committee of the club should have been prosecuted, and not the individual members.

Maasdorp, J.: The accused are charged in this case with contravening section 16 of Act 36 of 1902, in that they used certain rooms and a passage at 78, Long-market-street, as a betting-house. They pleaded "Not Guilty," but were found "Guilty," and each of them was fined £40, or, in default, one month's imprisonment, with hard labour. It is argued that in accordance with the finding of the Court in the case of Rex v. Ah Foo the Court should now hold that only the owner or occupier of the betting-house could be charged with contravention of section 16, and not those who are merely frequenters of the place. It seems to me that there is a distinction between this case and that of Ah Foo. There is a provision made under section 6 for the punishment of persons who own or keep gaming-houses, and then there is a further provision for the punishment of those who frequent or use such places. In that case certain persons who were found upon the premises as frequenters were charged with keeping and owning a gaming-house. Upon appeal the Court held that there was no evidence that they were the occupiers or owners, and, consequently, they were charged under the wrong section, which provides for a much more severe penalty than the subsequent section, but in that case it was quite clear that the accused could have been charged as frequenters of the gaming-house, and would have been liable to a less penalty. What the Court held was that they were not owners or occupiers of the gaming-house, and that they were charged under the wrong section. Under section 16 of the Act provision is made for a penalty to be inflicted on those who own or keep betting-houses, but under the same section there is also provision in respect of those who use places for the purpose of betting, and there is no other section making provision as to how persons using places for the purpose of betting are to be dealt with. The accused are charged with using these rooms as a betting-house, and it appears that a place is to be regarded as being used as a betting-house when betting takes place in it or money is kept in it as stakes for the purpose of betting. The rooms they used in this case appear to be the rooms of a club called Tattersall's Club, and it is argued that those who keep a club as the managing committee, are really the guilty persons, and that members who are found betting in it cannot be charged under this section. It seems to me that these sections have a very wide scope, and they include those who merely use any house or place for the purpose of betting. I think it is clearly proved in this case that it was not merely an odd case—an odd instance of a bet between one or two persons that took place in these rooms, for the rooms were fully furnished for the purpose of betting. They were frequented by the accused, and it was found that they kept their books and their materials for the purpose of betting in these rooms, in fact, they were actually detected engaged in the act of betting in these rooms, and under the circumstances of this case I think it has been abundantly proved that they themselves used these rooms for the purposes of betting. I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

DREWITT V. STEER. } 1905.
Aug. 29th.

Mr. Burton moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not hand over to the applicant £800. with interest at 6 per cent., from 3rd inst., and costs. Counsel said the applicant had known the respondent some years ago, and in July last he called on the respondent and mentioned that he had some money to invest, and asked him if he could offer a good mortgage on first bond. Eight hundred pounds were handed to the respondent in respect of certain property, which was to be hypothecated. The respondent was instructed that the money was to be invested in the name of his minor daughter Gladys Stella Drewitt. After calling on the respondent several times without avail, the applicant discovered that the bond was not a first mortgage, there being two others, one of £750 and another for £50, and it further appeared that the property had been attached. Only one-half share of the property had been hypothecated, and the bond was not passed in favour of the daughter as a minor.

Mr. Russell, who appeared for the respondent, put in an answering affidavit, in which the respondent set out that he explained to the applicant that the farm in question was the property of two brothers, and the farm had been divided by order of the Supreme Court, one of the brothers having surrendered his estate. It was explained to the applicant that the loan of £800 was to satisfy the judgment of the Court, and the whole nature of the investment was discussed with the applicant, who was cognisant of all the circumstances. The respondent was confident that the minor daughter was fully secured.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J.: It is perfectly clear that the Court cannot make an order on the present affidavits. There is a serious conflict of evidence, and it is impossible to say whether there has been anything in the way of a breach of trust or a dereliction of duty on the part of the respondent. On the facts disclosed to the Court, it seems to me that the applicant has adopted a wrong procedure in coming to the Court in this manner for a summary order. He must have known that if he had any remedies in the premises, he would have to institute an action in the ordinary way. There will be no order, and as the applicant has adopted a wrong course of procedure and so incurred unnecessary and avoidable expense, I am of opinion that he should pay the costs of the application, but the notice of motion may stand as a summons in the action to be instituted, and the costs of such notice will be costs in the cause.

VAN DER HOOF AND FISHER { 1905.
V BECHUANALAND ESTATE { Aug. 29th.
SYNDICATE. { Sept. 4th.

Principal and agent—Private instructions — Knowledge of third persons.

This was an action for an order of transfer of certain property at Vryburg, where the plaintiffs carried on business, the defendants being the trustees of the Bechuanaland Estate Syndicate. On the 15th May, 1905, the plaintiff (Van der Hoff) bought from the syndicate certain three farms for £900, the terms being cash against transfer. The claim was for an order directing the defendant to pass transfer on the plaintiff tendering £900, or, in the alternative, to pay the sum of £1,000. The defendants, in their plea, set out that no such sale had taken place. No sale had been made on behalf of the syndicate. It was admitted that one Rosenblatt in 1903 was authorised to deal with the properties on certain conditions, but the authority had never been exercised, nor the said conditions fulfilled. When Rosenblatt purported to sell the farms, he did so without authority, and it was denied that Rosenblatt was the duly authorised agent of the syndicate for the purpose of a sale.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Dr. Rainsford) was for the plaintiffs, and Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) was for the defendant.

Reginald de Beer, partner in the firm of Rosenblatt and De Beer, solicitors, of Vryburg, said that before witness entered into partnership Rosenblatt had all the title deeds of these farms in his possession, and the firm held the power of attorney to sell the farms which power had never been revoked. As the result of proceedings by the Government for arrears of quitrent, the farms were put up to auction, and three were sold. Plaintiff was making inquiries, and subsequently purchased the farms in question. Witness, who had charge of the matter, advised the defendants' attorneys, who cabled that the farms had been already sold. Witness had received no intimation of this, nor had his power of attorney ever been revoked.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: From August, 1904, to the best of his recollection all the properties were under attachment. On behalf of Mr. Cullinan, witness bought another farm at the sale in execution. In less than five minutes Van der Hoff bought the farms, and the reason of the hurry was that he (witness) was afraid Wessels would go behind his back. The sale to Wessels was a better business for the syndicate than that of witness to Van der Hoff. Witness thought Van der Hoff very foolish to buy the farms. Witness had never joined the plaintiff in land speculation.

By Hopley, J.: When Rosenblatt knew of witness's action in disposing of the farm he approved of it.

Herman Rosenblatt, who acted for the defendant syndicate for some fifteen years before the last witness joined him, said that what De Beer did was with his approval.

Peter Van der Hoff, partner in the plaintiff firm, stated that before the execution sale, he approached the solicitors with a view to a purchase, and at the sale, and afterwards in May he negotiated for the farms. In consequence of what Wessels said as to being able to purchase the farms, witness asked De Beer to show his power of attorney.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He told Wessels that he "thought" he had made an offer of £300 each for the farms through Rosenblatt. When witness mentioned Rosenblatt having the authority to sell, Wessels said: "For God's sake don't tell De Beer anything about it."

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Daniel Wessels, attorney, at Vryburg, who at present represents the defendant syndicate, stated that he conducted the sale on the 25th March. After the auction, witness made an offer for certain of the farms by cable, which was accepted on the 3rd May. That offer was made on behalf of principals. On the 15th May the defendants cabled him with regard to two other farms, and he spoke to the plaintiff, who he thought was a likely buyer. The plaintiff could not understand it, as he said Rosenblatt and De Beer had a power. The plaintiff promised to see witness again, and witness did not see him again on the matter. The farms were attached, and transfer had not yet been given to witness's principals.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness did not know that Rosenblatt and De Beer had power to sell. He did not communicate with Rosenblatt and De Beer's principals in London.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (September 4).

Hopley, J.: The defendant syndicate, which is domiciled in and managed from London, had been before 1903, and then still was, the owner of a considerable extent of landed property in British Bechuanaland. In that year the Colonial Government took proceedings against the defendants for the recovery of arrear quitrents, which had accumulated to a considerable amount, and the defendants then became anxious to get rid of their properties on the best terms possible. With that object in view, they sent, in December, 1903, a power of attorney to Mr. Rosenblatt, an attorney-at-law practising at Vryburg, constituting him, with power of substitution, their agent to sell the said properties, or any of them, for such price or prices, and upon such terms and conditions, and generally in such manner as he should think fit, and authorising him to do all acts necessary for such purposes as fully as his principals, if present, could themselves do. This power was sent in a letter, which, to a certain extent, and for his private instruction, modified these ample powers; but in the view I take of the facts of the case, I do not think it necessary to enter upon the nature or extent of such limitations. It appears that Rosenblatt passed over the active control and management of this matter to his partner, Mr. De Beer, that the latter made some attempts to dispose of the land, but unsuccessfully, and that eventually in the course of 1904 the Government attached the properties to found jurisdiction, sued for their quitrents, obtained judgment, and sold two of the farms at prices which covered their claim, and left a surplus in their hands for the benefit of the defendants. These proceedings were concluded in March, 1905; and at about that date Mr. Wessels, who is an attorney-at-law, also practising at Vryburg, and Deputy Sheriff of that district, wrote to the defendants, making them an offer on behalf of a certain principal for one of these farms, and making suggestions as to the disposal of others through his firm. Mr. Wessels says that he was entirely ignorant of the fact that Mr. Rosenblatt held a power to deal with them, and that he wrote to the defendants at the address which he had ascertained to be theirs, in consequence of the services of the various legal processes in the proceedings which had passed through his hands in his capacity as sheriff. The plaintiffs were at about that time desirous of buying some of the properties, and approached De Beer in the matter, who, however, thought, when first approached, that the defendants' letter in 1903 debarred him from selling the farms at the prices then procurable by him, and he accordingly wrote for instructions. This letter went by the same mail as Wessels's letter, making his offer, and the defendants on receiving the two letters decided to accept Wessels's offer, and telegraphed to him on May 3 that they had done so, but they sent no telegraphic communication to Rosenblatt, to whom they wrote on May 6, acquainting him of the fact that they had sold their farm "Southey" through Wessels, and that they had authorised him to sell other of the properties at prices suggested by him. Before this letter had reached Rosenblatt, and about May 15, Wessels offered one of the defendant's farms to the plaintiffs, and then went to De Beer and told him that they were being approached by Wessels. This caused De Beer to examine more carefully than he had previously done the defendant's letter of December, 1903, and finding then that he had misread his private instructions, and that in his opinion he could carry out the wishes of the defendants by concluding a sale with the plaintiffs, he sent for Van der Hoff, one of the plaintiffs, and informed him that he was ready to conclude a contract of sale with him for such of the properties as he might require. Van der Hoff, in view of what had taken place between himself and Wessels, then inquired whether De Beer had power to dispose of the land, and De Beer produced and exhibited to him the power of attorney of December, 1903. This satisfied Van der Hoff, who thereupon purchased from him the farm "Southey" for £400, the one-half of "Tlaping," owned by the defendants, for £200, and their one-half of "Vyflingspan," for £300, the terms being cash against transfer. Of these properties, Southey had been previously sold by the defendants through Wessels, and he had also, acting on his instructions received by telegram, disposed of the half of Tlaping before

Now, I am in this action not concerned with questions that may arise between the defendants and Rosenblatt, and have only to deal with the matter as it rests between the plaintiffs and the defendants. I have carefully considered the evidence to ascertain whether the plaintiffs were in any way aware of any limitations to Rosenblatt's powers, or whether they were put upon inquiry as to whether the ostensible powers with which he was clothed had been curtailed. The only argument that has been used against the plaintiffs on this point is that they were aware that De Beer had in April written for special instructions and that such instructions had not been received; but then the effect of that is nullified by De Beer's statement to Van der Hoff on 15th May when he sent for him and explained that the writing for instructions had been done under a misapprehension of his position which no longer existed, and that he was empowered to act in terms of the ample powers which he exhibited. I find that there was no knowledge on the part of the plaintiffs of any limitations to such full powers, and the legal consequence is that the defendants must be held bound by the contract of their agent. It should be observed that Rosenblatt himself was not in Vryburg on 15th May, or at all events not during the business hours of the day; but he was told of the sale to plaintiffs on the next day and entirely approved of what had been done; and moreover it appears to me, in view of the power of substitution contained in the power of attorney and of the manner in which, in consequence thereof, Rosenblatt had actually substituted De Beer for himself in the management of this business, that the act of De Beer must be taken to be the act of Rosenblatt and consequently of the defendants. The defendants are still the registered owners of all the properties, and it may be possible for them to give transfer of them all to the plaintiffs, but seeing that two of the farms have been sold twice over there will as to them be an alternative order. The judgment of the Court is that the defendants do give transfer to the plaintiffs of their one-half share of the farm Vyflingspan upon payment of the sum of £300; that they do give transfer of the farm Southey upon payment of the sum of £400, or in the alternative that they pay £100 as damages for breach of their contract of sale of the said farm; that they do give transfer of their half-share of Tlaping upon

3. By agreement bearing date the 30th day of April, 1903, the said Vafidis retired from the firm of Nicholas and Co., and for the consideration therein appearing sold to his co-partners (the plaintiff) his share and interest in the said hotel. Notice of the dissolution of the said partnership was duly published in the "Government Gazette" of the 30th day of June, 1905.

4. In or about April, 1905, plaintiffs had reduced their indebtedness to the defendants in respect of the advance of £1,000 sterling, made in terms of agreement "A," to the sum of £500 sterling, for which amount on the 1st day of April, 1905, plaintiffs gave defendants a promissory note payable on the 31st day of July, 1905, and plaintiffs further paid to defendants the sum of £13 9s. 8d. sterling, as interest, in advance, for 4 months, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum.

5. In or about April, 1905, plaintiffs entered into negotiations with one Dinah Myers for the sale of the Britannia Hotel, and by a verbal agreement made in the same month between plaintiffs and defendants, defendants consented to the sale of the said hotel by the plaintiffs to the said Dinah Myers, and the transfer to her of the plaintiffs' indebtedness to them and the release of the plaintiffs therefrom on condition that security to the satisfaction of the defendants was provided by the said Dinah Myers. The defendants accepted one Abraham Muller, who signed as surety, and the condition was thereby satisfied.

6. In consequence of the agreement in the last paragraph set out, plaintiffs sold the said hotel to the said Dinah Myers in terms of an agreement bearing date the 4th day of May, 1905, the terms of the said agreement were well-known to the defendants.

7. By agreement bearing date the 5th day of May, 1905, in pursuance of the said agreement in paragraph 5 set out, the defendants agreed to advance to the said Dinah Myers the sum of £500 sterling to enable her to purchase the said hotel. Such bills were actually given by the said Dinah Myers to the defendants, as were arranged in terms of an agreement by the defendants in satisfaction of the sum of £500 due from the plaintiffs to the defendants as in paragraph 4 hereof mentioned.

8. All things have happened, all times elapsed and all conditions been fulfilled to enable the plaintiffs to recover the possession of the said promissory note for £500 sterling, the same having been discharged by the agreement set forth in paragraph 5, but the defendants have refused or neglected, and still refuse or neglect, to return the said promissory note, though frequently requested so to do.

9. Plaintiffs further say that in the premises herein set forth, they became entitled to the refund from the defendants of the interest paid in advance from the 5th day of May till the 31st day of July, 1905, to wit, the sum of £9 17s. 6d. sterling, but this sum the defendants have refused or neglected, and still refuse or neglect to refund, though often requested so to do.

Wherefore plaintiffs claim: (a) An order for the delivery of the said promissory note for the sum of £500 by the defendants to the plaintiffs. (b) Judgment for the said sum of £9 17s. 6d. against the defendants as and by way of refund for interest paid by plaintiffs in advance. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

The defendants plea was as follows:

1. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration are admitted but the defendants say Vafidis is and was a partner.

2. The defendants have no knowledge of paragraph 3, and do not admit it. They had no notice or knowledge of the alleged retirement of Vafidis, and dealt with the firm of Nicholas and Co., as consisting of the plaintiffs' and Vafidis.

3. The defendants admit paragraph 4, save that for the plaintiffs must be read the firm of Nichollas and Co., consisting as aforesaid, and they say that the said promissory note was signed only by George Drossiades, but they admit that it was given for and on behalf of the said firm, and that the said firm had reduced their liability from £1,000 to £500.

4. The defendants admit the negotiations between the same firm and themselves.

5. Save as aforesaid, the defendants refused to release the said firm from its said liability, and thereupon it was agreed between the defendants and the said George Drossiades, acting for and on behalf of the said firm, that the defendants' would agree to the sale to the said Dinah Meyers, who should become liable for the said debt of the firm, upon the express condition and provided that the said firm became liable in due form as sureties and co-principal debtors for the due payment of the said sum by the said Dinah Meyers, the defendants deny that there was any novation or release of the said firm or the plaintiffs, and they deny that they agreed to accept any security for the said debt other than that of the said firm, and they say that the said A. Muller became surety for the said Dinah Meyers, not at the instigation of or to the satisfaction of the defendants, but at the instigation and for the benefit of the said firm, who were still to remain liable for the said debt. Relying upon the said agreement, the defendants signed the agreement C, and took the promissory notes of the said Dinah Meyers, not in satisfaction of the said debt, but in pursuance of the premises, and they at the time submitted a document of suretyship as aforesaid to the said George Drossiades for signature by the said firm, which was accepted and taken away by him for the said purpose, and the defendants refused to deliver up meanwhile the said promissory note, signed by the said Drossiades, as afore-

6. Save as aforesaid, the defendants' deny the allegations in paragraphs 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9, and they say that they are still ready and willing to deliver up the said promissory note, upon the undertaking of suretyship, as aforesaid, being given, but they say that the plaintiffs refuse to give any such suretyship, and refuse to carry out their said contract and claim to be released from all liability in breach of the terms thereof, and that, therefore, they are not entitled to claim back the said promissory note.

Wherefore the defendants pray that the plaintiffs claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Mr Close (with him Dr. Greer) for the plaintiffs; Sir H. Juta (with him Mr. Gardiner) for the defendants.

Geo. Drossiades, one of the plaintiffs, stated that in 1902 when his firm entered into the agreement with the defendants they were carrying on different kinds of business. Witness himself went to Messrs. White Ryan and Co., and after that he took on the Britannia Hotel section of the business alone for the benefit of the partnership. A number of promissory notes were made from time to time, always being renewed before the date due and gradually reducing the amount. Finally on April 1, 1905, the amount stood at £500, and witness signed a renewal note that day. On April 1 he paid a cheque for £63 11s. 7d. That represented the last payment of £50 in the reduction of the promissory notes, and £13 11s. 7d. interest on the debt, which he always paid in advance. Witness soon afterwards was anxious to go to England, but his partners did not want to carry on the Britannia Hotel. Witness tried to arrange for someone taking over the business. Witness went and saw Mr. Mann, of Messrs. White, Ryan and Co. Witness told him that he wanted to sell the business, and to see if White, Ryan and Co. would consent to the transfer of witness's liability to the purchaser. The following day Mr. Mann told witness that Mr. Ryan had consented to the suggested arrangement, provided witness got a good purchaser. Subsequently, about the beginning or middle of April of this year, witness saw Mr. Ryan, who said that he was willing to accept Mrs. Dinah Myers as the purchaser of the hotel business, provided a good surety could be obtained. Witness then pointed to Muller, who was present, suggesting him as surety. Mr. Ryan said, "All right," and added that he would have the agreement drawn up. Witness did not agree or offer, or ever heard it suggested that he should remain as a surety for Mrs.

Myers, who agreed to take over witness's liability to White, Ryan and Co. Mrs. Myers signed the agreement produced on May 15. Nothing was said then about witness standing security for Mrs. Myers. On May 22 or 23 witness got a message from White, Ryan and Co. He went to the firm's offices and saw Mr. White, who complained that Muller had gone bankrupt. Mr. White said that witness should give him £100 under clause 4 of the agreement. Witness declined to pay this money, as he had lost by the transaction. After some conversation, Mr. White turned to Mr. Mann, the manager, and said, "You must draw up a proper legal agreement and make Drossiades sign." Two days later, witness was summoned to White, Ryan and Co.'s office. Mr. Mann, the manager, presented him with a draft agreement, bringing in witness as a surety for Mrs. Muller. Mann urged that witness was under a moral obligation to sign the paper, as he had introduced an insolvent man, Muller, to the firm. Witness did not sign the paper.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He did not promise to White, Ryan and Co. that his partners would sign the suretyship. On the 6th June he received a letter to the effect that as he had not returned the security they would hold him to the clauses thereof. Witness did not know that Muller's estate was assigned.

Re-examined by Mr. Close: It was not until he saw his attorneys that he attached any importance to the promissory note. An advance was always made on the goodwill; not to the individual. It was in the agreement if Dinah Myers did not get the transfer the business was to fall through, and White, Ryan and Co. must have known of this.

Nicholas Contelis, partner in the plaintiff firm, said the matter of the Britannia Hotel had been managed by the last witness. It was only on the letter of the 6th June that he knew that White, Ryan and Co. wanted the firm to go as security.

Mr. Close closed his case.

Pieroe Ryan stated he had transactions with the plaintiff firm for years. In April last Drossiades came to see him with a view to a transfer of the liability to a new purchaser. At the time witness thought that Muller, whom Drossiades brought in, was the purchaser. It was not true that he accepted Muller as surety. The property did not belong to witness; it was merely a trading house to the firm. Witness was very explicit in explaining to Drossiades that his firm would have to remain as surety.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Mr. Muller was a perfect stranger to him; he made no inquiries whatsoever about him.

Mrs. Myers's name might have been mentioned that same day. Witness understood that Mr. Muller was the principal party.

Alfred Mann, confidential clerk to the defendant firm, gave confirmatory evidence as to the arrangement between the parties.

Reginald Simpson, of the firm of Syfret, Godlonton and Low, stated Mr. Mann called on his firm a few days prior to May 10, and, in consequence of what he said, the agreement (produced) was drawn up.

Edwin George White, partner in the defendant firm, stated he was acquainted with the agreements. Witness had been the person who conducted these matters. When the transaction took place between Mr. Ryan and the plaintiffs witness was away from home, but on his return he was acquainted with the facts. Witness first took part in the matter early in May. Drossiades was in the office. Witness tried to speak to him, but he left the office somewhat hurriedly. On his second visit witness spoke a few words to him. After that witness sent for Mr. Drossiades, as witness had heard he was ill, and wanted the agreement signed.

[Hopley, J.: But there was no agreement then.]

Witness: I thought Mr. Mann had had it drawn up. Continuing, witness said that he understood that Drossiades was leaving the country, and wished to put other people in his place, and the defendant firm wished the plaintiff firm to sign as security. The defendant firm wanted them to sign for Dinah Myers.

[Hopley, J.: But she was taking it as a purchaser.]

Witness: But we would not release Drossiades.

Sir H. Juta: You mean they were to remain liable for the due performance of the contract.

Witness: Just so. Continuing, witness said he sent for Drossiades, who saw Mr. Mann. Witness left instructions for him to sign the agreement. He did not do so. Witness sent for him, and told him that he wanted him to pay the £100, and to see that Mrs. Myers paid £50 before she settled anything. Drossiades asked witness to take the promissory notes and give £1,000 for them. Witness declined, as he considered it was a banker's business. Drossiades had three businesses, and he was always making excuses for not giving witness's firm the business. Drossiades said there was no profit in the business. Mr. Mann submitted the deed of suretyship to him, and he took it away. He was wrong if he said Mr. Mann was excited. He brought the deed back, and said his partners would not sign it.

[Hopley, J.: Were they his words?]

Witness: He was speaking to Mr. Mann, and I went away, and Mr. Mann said, "He's going down to get his partners to sign it." He took it away, and did not return.

It was not the business of the firm to give up a security without knowing what the standing of the other person was. This was not an isolated case.

[Hopley, J.: But Mr. Mann said it was.]

Witness: Mr. Mann was very excited, and made many remarks—

[Hopley, J.: Do you mean to say that Mr. Mann's evidence was incorrect?]

Witness: He was very excited. In the liability book I can show many such instances.

[Hopley, J.: What are they?—Parkes, Freeman, and Hoffman.]

[Hopley, J.: Will it show that in the ledger?]

Witness: I think not; we generally had a separate agreement.

[Hopley, J.: Do you say that Mr. Mann is wrong in his statement, and that in many instances you have kept the old security in the case of taking over a new?]

Witness: I would not think of doing otherwise.

Witness (continuing) denied that he said to Drossiades that he had no business to take them such a transaction as Muller was insolvent. If that had been so, witness would have found it out before the transaction was entered into.

[Hopley, J.: Did you find out after the 5th May anything about Muller's position?]

Witness: We all knew that he had been dabbling in property, and that we would have to be very careful.

Witness further stated that he knew Muller's position before the end of April.

The examination of George Edwin White, one of the partners in the defendant firm, was resumed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close, witness stated that the question of the payment of £100 profit arose when Drossiades went to the shop for the third time. Mr. Ryan knew nothing about it. Witness, considering the circumstances, felt justified in claiming it. Witness could not say anything about the demand for £613 19s. 10d. Drossiades had always dealt fairly with the defendant firm.

To the Court: Witness was under the impression that Drossiades took the agreement away twice. He took it away on the first occasion, and must have brought it back to Mr. Mann. Witness did not know what he said when he brought it back.

Sir H. Juta closed his case, and counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (September 6).

Hopley, J.: The plaintiffs carry on business in Cape Town, and in August, 1902, they borrowed from the defendants, who are merchants in a large way of business, the sum of £1,000, for the purpose of acquiring the goodwill of a certain hotel business in Cape Town, known as the Britannia Hotel. An agreement was at that time entered into whereby the plaintiffs covenanted inter alia to purchase certain classes of goods from the defendants, and to give them promissory notes, bearing interest at 8 per cent., for the sum of £1,000, or for such lesser sum as from time to time might be due, according as at the stipulated periods they reduced the amount of the indebtedness, which they contracted to do at each renewal; and they further agreed that, in the event of their wishing to dispose of the said hotel business, they would, before transferring it, pay to the defendants the whole of their indebtedness. Amicable business relations thereafter subsisted between the parties, and by April, 1905, the debt had been, by successive payments on account, reduced to £500, for which amount the plaintiffs, on 1st April gave a promissory note, payable on 1st August, 1905, and they further paid a sum of £13 9s. 8d., being the interest in advance upon the said sum of £500 from the period of the currency of the note. The plaintiffs had throughout managed this hotel business, through one of their partners, Mr. Drossiades, and in the defendants' books the goods supplied for such business, and the general account of such business, were entered to the name of Drossiades, who seems to have made the promissory note, and signed the cheques which from time to time passed in connection with the said business between himself and the defendants. In April, 1905, Drossiades was anxious to get rid of the hotel, in order that he might be free to make a trip to Turkey, and he entered into negotiations with one Muller, with a view to selling the goodwill and other rights in the hotel to which he was entitled. Muller professed to be acting for his mother-in-law, Mrs. Dinah Myers, and though he was willing to buy out the plaintiffs for £4,000, he was not able to pay the whole of that sum in cash, so that, to carry the transaction through, it became necessary to get the defendants to consent to the substitution of the new tenants for the plaintiffs in the indebtedness of £500, such portion of the purchase price to be satisfied in that manner in case the defendants should agree. At this time Mr. White, who manages such matters for the defendants, happened to be on a visit to Natal, and a meeting was arranged between Muller and Drossiades and Mr. Ryan, with the object of obtaining the defendant firm's consent to the proposed arrangement. Such meeting took place on 8th April, and Drossiades deposes that it was then arranged that Mrs. Myers should step into his place, that she should be accepted as the debtor for the £500 still owing, and that nothing was said as to any continuing liability of himself or of his firm, nor about any undertaking by them to remain liable as sureties for the incoming tenant. He contends therefore that there was a complete novation of the contract, and that on that date the plaintiff firm was completely freed from any further liability or claim; and it is upon such contention that the plaintiffs claim the relief sought for by them in the present action. Before stating the defendants' version of the new agreement, it is convenient here to set forth the subsequent course of events. Mr. White returned from Natal towards the end of April, and was informed of what had taken place by Mr. Ryan, and Mr. Mann, an employee of the defendants in charge of the financial branch of their business, who had arranged and been present at the interview of 8th April, and thereafter Mr. Ryan took no further share or part in the matter, except that what happened was reported to him. On May 4 the plaintiffs sold their rights in the hotel to Mrs. Myers for £4,000, of which sum £500 was satisfied by her taking over the liability to the defendants—the wording of the agreement on that point being in the following terms: "Purchaser assumes present liability of vendor to Messrs. White, Ryan and Co., Cape Town, and indemnifies them in respect thereof in the sum of £500." Another clause in the agreement stipulates that the contract should be null and void, and as if not entered into if the licensing authorities or the police should refuse to transfer the licences of the said hotel to the purchaser. It is clear, therefore, that this agreement could not be considered as finally settled until the authorities had consented to the transfer of the licence, which consent as a matter of fact was in due course given on May 23. Apparently in anticipation that no difficulty would be raised, Mrs. Myers and her son-in-law were taken by Drossiades to defendants' office on May 5, and an agreement was there entered into and signed by her, acknowledging an advance of £500 by defendants to her to enable her to purchase the licence, goodwill, etc., of the Britannia Hotel, undertaking to purchase certain supplies entirely from defendants while she remained owner of the said business, and undertaking to sign promissory notes for the amount of £500, and to pay interest at 8 per cent. thereon, the notes to be renewed at due dates, but to be reduced at each renewal by £50 at least. She did on that date sign a promissory note in favour of the defendants payable on September 1, 1905, for £513 19s. 10d., being for the said sum of £500, taken over from Drossiades with interest to September 1 added. This note was signed by both Mrs. Myers and Muller, and the defendants, after getting Muller also to endorse it as surety and co-principal debtor, negotiated it in the ordinary way of business with their bank. They, moreover, at that date, transferred the Britannia Hotel account in their ledger from Drossiades to Dinah Myers, the former being credited with the £500, proceeding from the promissory note of the latter. A line was then drawn below his account, which was apparently closed, and a credit was started in the name of Dinah Myers, for the Britannia Hotel, on the same folio of the ledger. Drossiades's note for £500 was not, however, retired, nor was any return of interest made to him, though the defendants now admit that they could not claim to receive double interest on their money, and that they should have returned, and must account to the plaintiffs for a pro rata share of the £13 9s. 8d. for the period between May 5 and August 1. In the defendants' journal, moreover, appears an entry in the month of June in reference to this account in the handwriting of one of their bookkeepers to the effect that the liability had been transferred from Drossiades to Myers. Now, if the matter rested upon the documents, and the books alone, the facts, as above stated, would certainly seem to point to a novation completely exonerating the plaintiffs from all further liability in the matter: but the defendants say that all that was a mere matter of book-keeping, so entered for convenience sake, and that there was co-existing with their written agreement with Mrs. Myers and with this state of the entries in their books, an express verbal undertaking by Drossiades that the defendants were still to retain the security of his firm for the due fulfilment of her obligations by Dinah Myers. It is clear that neither Mann nor Mr. Ryan knew anything of the financial standing of either Muller or Mrs. Myers, and Mr. Ryan is very positive that he told Drossiades at the interview on 8th April that he had, of course, no objection to his selling to Muller or Myers, but that his firm was to have the security of the plaintiffs as theretofore, until the liability was extinguished by repayment in full of their loan. He states that Drossiades agreed to this, and that all the subsequent transactions were carried through on the basis of such understanding. Mann, though he was not a clear witness, was equally emphatic on this point; and I believe that both he and Mr. Ryan are absolutely honest in their evidence as to that being the way in which they understood the arrangement. Mr. Ryan is corroborated by a pencil memorandum copied by him into the "Supported Accounts Book," on the folio devoted to Drossiades and the Britannia Hotel, from a note taken on a loose piece of paper, since destroyed, of the propositions made to him by Muller and Drossiades at the interview of 8th April. The genuineness of this entry is, to my mind, beyond doubt, and it is in the following terms: "Mr. Muller pays £4,000 for goodwill; own cash, £1,700; Bosman-Powis, £500; W.R. and Co., £500; Drossiades, £1,300; pay Drossiades £15 per month off remaining capital; Muller undertakes to carry out the agreement of Drossiades—the latter to be surety for fulfilment of same.—April 8, 1905, as per interview of Drossiades and Muller." It is true that the above terms of payment were not eventually literally adhered to; but that was a matter between Muller and Drossiades, and there was ample time for a modification of them between 8th April and 4th May; but Mr. Ryan can hardly have made any mistake as to the undertaking to remain surety on the part of Drossiades. Mr. White, too, to whom the matter was reported on his return, swears that it never entered his mind that the plaintiffs, whose financial position was satisfactory, should be released, and that their obligations should be replaced by the unsecured liability of Mrs. Myers and Mr. Muller, of whose position nothing was known, save that Muller was somewhat involved in speculations in immovable property and rather "shaky" in consequence; and Mr. White also is a witness on whose veracity I feel satisfied that I can safely rely. As to him, as well as Messrs. Ryan and Mann, I think the utmost that can with effect be said, is that they misunderstood what Drossiades considered to be the contract; but as to what they themselves understood, I do not think that they could have been under any misapprehension. It is clear that after 5th May neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants took any immediate steps, the one side to get back their promissory note and pro rata interest, or the other to get a deed of security signed; and each explains that the delay was partly due to their trust in the other; but the defendants also say that they were waiting to see what the action of the Licensing Board would be; and it is clear that shortly after the transfer to Mrs. Myers was sanctioned, the defendants sent for Mr. Drossiades, and asked him to sign a deed of suretyship, and to get his partners to sign it also. It has been suggested that this step was taken by them because of knowledge as to Muller's position, which may have reached them about that date; but there is no evidence of anything of the kind, and I accept Mr. White's statement that he practically knew Muller's position immediately after his return from Natal, or about April 25. When the deed of suretyship was drawn and presented to Drossiades (and this was about May 26), he took it away with him, and White and Mann say that he took it to procure his partners' signatures, and they also say that he returned in a few days, saying that his partners refused to sign any deed of the kind. Drossiades denies this, and says that he took the deed away accidentally, and inadvertently being at the time agitated by a somewhat stormy scene with White, who insisted that he was morally bound to sign such document, and he swears that he never presented the deed to his partners, who corroborate him on this point. Here it appears to me that the balance of probabilities is against Drossiades. He does not seem to be a man who would lose his head, or be flustered, and I am inclined to believe that when he took the deed he intended to present it to his partners for signature. What happened between them it is, of course, difficult to conjecture, and it may even be that Drossiades had promised more than he was authorised to, and that he shirked the task of laying the document before his partners; but the probabilities are rather that, on consideration of what had happened, and of what they knew to be the state of the books and documents, they considered that they would no longer be held to be in any way bound, and that they might safely refuse to sign such a document. Whatever reasons may have actuated him, it is clear that Drossiades did refuse to sign the deed, and about a week later defendants wrote telling him that they would hold his firm to their original agreement as to their immediate indebtedness for their unpaid liability. The defendants replied on June 9, though their attorney setting up the novation, repudiating liability to become sureties and demanding (then for the first time) the return of their promissory note for £500, and the pro rata return of the interest. It will thus be seen that the direct contradiction between Drossiades and the defendants is on the point whether or no there was any verbal undertaking by him that in spite of the introduction of Dinah Myers, and the sale of the hotel to her, he and his firm could remain answerable as sureties to the plaintiffs. For the uncertainty and possibility of doubt and contradiction which exists, both parties are blameable. They are all business men, and whichever side is right it would have been so simple to have placed the matter beyond all doubt by a business-like record of the agreement. As matters stand, it is possible that the parties may not have understood one another, on April 8, upon this point, and in that case there would never have been a consensus to a novation; or it may be that though the parties then quite understood each other, one or other is now endeavouring to obtain an advantage for which he did not then bargain. The plaintiffs in this action seek to get their promissory note returned in such a manner as would amount to a declaration by the Court that there was a complete novation, and that they are freed from all further liability to the defendants, whatever the future conduct or default of Mrs. Myers or Muller may be. I cannot say that their evidence convinces me that such was the real contract between them, and I do not feel safe in giving a final judgment which would have that effect, or be capable of bearing that interpretation. On the other hand, the defendants resist the claim by a plea that, before handing over the note, they are entitled to obtain from the plaintiffs an undertaking of suretyship for the due fulfilment of her obligations by Mrs. Myers; but they make no claim in reconvention asking for an order to that effect upon the plaintiffs; and it is possible that had they done so, and had the burden of proof been upon them, they might have failed in convincing the Court that they were entitled, in the face of the state of their books and of the documentary evidence, to any such order. As the burden of proof in the present case rests upon the plaintiffs, and as they have failed to satisfy me that there was a complete novation entirely freeing them from all obligations, upon which fact their whole claim rests, there will be absolution from the instance on the claim in convention, in so far as a return of the note is claimed. The effect of this will be that the defendants will not be ordered to give up the plaintiffs' promissory note, which is now overdue; but the Court is not called upon to pronounce, and will not declare what remedies they still have upon the note, or how such remedies are to be exercised. With regard to the plaintiffs' claim for £9 17s. 6d., which is admitted by the defendants to be valid, there will be judgment in favour of the plaintiffs. As both parties seem to me to be equally responsible for the imbroglio which exists, and for the state of uncertainty in which their respective rights are involved, there will be no order as to costs. The order which the Court makes is that there be judgment for the plaintiffs for £9 17s. 6d., and no order as to costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the
Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN]

REX V. BOYD. { 1905.
Aug. 31st.

Stock theft—Act 7 of 1905—
Hard labour — Magistrate's jurisdiction.

In cases of stock theft where a fine has been imposed with the alternative of imprisonment, the Magistrate may not sentence to such term of imprisonment with hard labour.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the case of Frederick Boyd, of Calvinia, and a number of other cases, had come before him in Chambers, and these cases raised the question whether the Magistrate, in default of a fine being paid, in cases of theft of stock, could, under the Act of 1905, with the alternative imprisonment, add the imposition of hard labour. In the Eastern Districts the sentences of Magistrates who had imposed hard labour in default of payment of the fine, had been confirmed, probably without attention being called to the wording of the Act, and His Lordship believed several cases had also been passed here. The attention of the Attorney-General had been called to the wording of the Act, and he was not prepared to support the imposition of hard labour in cases of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine. There was nothing in the section of the Act as to hard labour, and in the cases which had come before him the sentences would be confirmed, but the portion referring to hard labour must be omitted.

ADMISSIONS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied for the admission of Benjamin Godlieb Heydenrich as an attorney, notary, and conveyancer.

Granted.

Oaths administered.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied for the admission of Mortimer Jooste as an attorney. He asked that permission be granted to take the oaths before the Commissioner of Oaths in Johannesburg.

The Acting Chief Justice said that it had been pointed out before, that it was only reasonable that, when persons wished to be admitted, they should take the oaths either in Cape Town or before some officer of the Supreme Court. He would suggest that the applicant might take the oaths at Kimberley or at the Eastern Districts Court.

Mr. De Villiers said that he thought the Eastern Districts Court would suit the applicant.

Granted, applicant to take the oaths before the Eastern Districts Court.

Mr. H. S. van Zyl applied for the admission of Archibald Henderson as a notary. He asked that the applicant be allowed to take the oaths before the Resident Magistrate of Griquatown.

Granted, the applicant to take the oath before the Resident Magistrate of Griquatown.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ESTATE OF HUTT V. PAYNE. { 1905.
Aug. 31st.

Dr. Greer applied for provisional sentence on an I.O.U. The matter had previously been before the Court, when leave was granted to sue by edictal citation; and publication had been duly made, as ordered.

Provisional sentence, as prayed.

BRUSSEL AND CO. V. SNYMAN.

Dr. Greer asked that the provisional order of sequestration granted by the Court in October be discharged. (14 C.T.R., 820.)

Order granted.

BARTHOLOMEW V. DELMORE.

Mr. P. Jones asked for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £100, with interest at 6 per cent., and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

GARLAND V. DELMORE.

Mr. Gutsche produced an affidavit to show that the respondent had been duly summoned to appear. He now asked for provisional sentence for £1,100, with interest from December, 1902, at 6 per cent., less £158 15s., paid on account, due by reason of non-payment of interest, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

GRIQUALAND WEST LOAN, TRUST AND AGENCY CO. V. FORSYTH.

Mr. Benjamin applied for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £750 and £500, with interest at 10 per cent. from April 1, 1905, due by reason of non-payment of instalments, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

TREGIDGA V. SPENGLER.

Mr. Payne applied for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £1,800 and £250, with interest from July 21, 1904, and September 18, 1903, respectively due by reason of non-payment of interest; and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

FAURE V. GIBBONS.

Mr. Benjamin applied for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, with interest at 6 per cent., less £10 paid on account, due by reason of non-payment of interest; and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

BERRANGE V. SHAW.

Mr. D. Buchanan applied for the final adjudication of the respondent's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

KLEIN V. STEIN.

Mr. Lewis applied for the final adjudication of the respondent's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

TURKINGTON V. HUMPHREYS.

Mr. Long applied for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £25, with interest from June 1, 1905, at 10 per cent.

Order granted.

INGLESBY V. JACKMAN.

Mr. D. Buchanan applied for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,100, with interest from January 1, 1905, due by reason of non-payment of interest, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

HAMMERSCHLAG V. ESTERHUISEN.

Mr. De Waal applied for provisional sentence on two notarial bonds, one for £133 18s., dated August 2, 1904, and bearing interest at 6 per cent. from August 1, and one for £100, dated February 25, 1905, and bearing interest at 8 per cent. from February 1. Payment became due by reason of the bonds having been called in. He also asked for judgment under Rule 329d there appeared to be no default with regard to the second application. Provisional sentence would therefore be for £58 16s. 4d., for goods sold and delivered, and interest a tempore morae.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that there appeared to be no default with regard to the second application. Provisional sentence would therefore be given on the two notarial bonds.

ROWLAND HILL AND CO. V. SCHAPERA.

Mr. Payne applied for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £100, less £10 paid on account, and judgment under Rule 329d for interest on the sum of £90, balance due, and costs.

Order granted.

BENDHEIM V. GOLDSTEIN.

Application was made for the final adjudication of the respondent's estate as insolvent. The provisional order of sequestration was granted by the Court on August 8.

Order granted.

FICK V. TANNER.

Mr. Roux moved for the final adjudication of the respondent's estate as insolvent. Mr. Benjamin opposed the application.

The plaintiff's affidavit set forth that a judgment had been obtained against the respondent for £700. The plaintiff sold certain land to the respondent, on condition that £100 be paid down, and that transfer should be passed at the end of four months, on payment of the balance of the purchase price (£700). When the four months expired plaintiff, owing to certain legal difficulties, was not able to pass transfer. Since then the respondent had disposed of certain plots of the ground.

Mr. Benjamin read the affidavit of the Rev. W. C. Collins, which stated that he was present when payment of the balance of the purchase money was tendered. It was entirely owing to the reports spread by Fick that the sale of plots of the ground were interfered with. The affidavit of Mr. McLeod stated that the present state of the respondent's affairs was due to the action of the plaintiff. Counsel stated that the affidavits showed that Fick had told the persons who had purchased lots from the respondent that he (Fick) was going to take possession, and so interfered with the payment of the purchase prices by these people to Tanner. Had the respondent been able to sell the plots and receive payment, he would have been in a position to pay off the £700. He urged that the respondent should be allowed time. When the matter was before the Court on a previous occasion, the respondent had tendered payment.

Buchanan, A. C. J., suggested that the parties should try to come to some arrangement. The Court would direct that the provisional order stand over to allow time, in consequence of the number of small holders interested. The matter would stand over until November 10.

THE MASTER V. BUYSKES.

Mr. Nightingale moved for an order calling on the defendant to file a distribution account.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

[MOHLAN AND SOLME V. STEVENS. { 1905.
Aug. 31st.

Mr. Searle, who appeared for the plaintiffs, said that this was originally an action for an interdict and damages for the infringement of a patent. An arrangement had, however, been come to by the parties, and he asked for judgment in terms of the consent paper put in, which provided for the payment of £5 damages.

Judgment in terms of the consent paper.

EDWARDS V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied for judgment in terms of the consent paper put in, declaring the plaintiff entitled to remain in free and undisturbed possession of certain property and providing for the payment of £30 by the plaintiff to the defendant.

Order granted in terms of the consent paper.

ALLIE V. BENNET.

Mr. Le Roux applied for an order, directing the respondent to transfer certain property within fourteen days, failing which the sale be cancelled.

Order granted.

VAN NIEKERK AND CO. V. FABER

Mr. Benjamin applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £115 14s. 10d., in respect of goods sold and delivered. He stated that the respondent's property had been attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and he was now instructed to ask for an order declaring the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Granted.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. LATEGAN.

Mr. Nightingale applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £145 17s. 6d., for convict labour supplied, and for £10 5s. 6d., for goods sold and delivered.

Granted.

RIPLEY V. DUFFUS.

Mr. M. Bisset applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, for debt due, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit, in respect of goods sold and delivered.

Granted.

SHIELDS V. FLETCHER.

Mr. Lewis applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £113 11s. 7d., balance of account for salary due, and interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Granted.

VOS V. TURNER.

Mr. Le Roux applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £54 19s. 3d., being moneys disbursed, with interest, and costs of suit.

Granted.

NICOLL V. HENDRICKS AND CO.

Mr. M. Bisset applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £75 4s.

Granted.

WEIMAR V DAVIES. ANDERSON AND CO.

Mr. M. Bisset applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £32 17s. 6d., with interest and costs of suit.

Granted.

GOODYEAR V. NEWTON.

Mr. Le Roux applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £25, money lent.

Granted.

NATIONAL DRILL CO. V. BRADBURY.

Mr. Sutton applied for judgment, under Rule 329d, calling upon the respondent to give delivery of a certain "National" drill, failing which he be ordered to pay the sum of £60, with interest, and costs of suit.

Granted, delivery to be made within 14 days.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte GREEFF AND } 1905.
BOUWER. } Aug. 31st.

Mr. Searle moved to make absolute the rule nisi, under the Derelict Lands Act. Mr. Benjamin opposed the application.

Counsel for the petitioners explained that this application was made under the Derelict Lands Act, and that day was the return day of the rule nisi. This matter had been before the Court before, when it was suggested that the present petitioners should divide the erf in question between them, and then a rule nisi was made by the Court to have the erf registered in both their names. Now another party stepped in and opposed the application.

Mr. Benjamin asked for a postponement, in order to allow the opposing party to file an affidavit.

Buchanan, A. C. J., directed that the matter be postponed until October 16, affidavits to be filed by the opposing party within three weeks.

Ex parte VAN NIEKERK.

Mr. Le Roux moved to make absolute a rule nisi, under the Derelict Lands Act.

Granted.

Ex parte KOEKEMOER.

Mr. Gutsche moved to make absolute the rule nisi, under the Derelict Lands Act.

Granted.

Ex parte CARELSE.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for leave to sell certain property in terms of the petition. There were no minors in the estate concerned, and all the majors had given their consent to the sale.

Granted.

Ex parte SAMSON.

Mr. Swift moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property.

Granted.

Ex parte ESTATE OF BOTHA.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an interdict restraining the Registrar of Deeds from passing transfer of certain property, pending an action to be instituted. Mr. Searle opposed the application.

Mr. Benjamin read affidavits in support of the application.

Mr. Searle read answering affidavits, and pointed out that the estate would not have been insolvent but for the low value put on the property by Mrs. Botha.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said he would like to have some explanation of the trustee's extraordinary conduct in disposing of the property the day after the meeting of creditors, without advertising it in the "Gazette."

The matter was ordered to stand over for trial at the Circuit Court, the notice to stand as summons, costs to be left to the discretion of the Circuit Court.

Ex parte VUSO.

Mr. Lewis moved for an order as to service on the defendant, whom the applicant was suing for divorce.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said service of notice at the defendant's last-named place of residence—namely, the defendant's father's house—would be sufficient.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY V. O'BRIEN.

Mr. Benjamin moved to make absolute an order calling on the respondent to show cause why his name should not be removed from the roll of attorneys, on the ground of his having misappropriated certain moneys handed to him for the purpose of conducting certain cases.

Order as prayed, with costs.

Ex parte LADAM.

Mr. M. Bisset moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling on all persons concerned to show cause why certain property should not be transferred to the applicant.

Granted.

Ex parte KILILI.

Mr. Roux moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to transfer certain land to the petitioner.

A rule nisi was granted, calling on all concerned to show cause why transfer should not be passed, to be published once in "Imvo" and the "Kokstad Advertiser."

CAPE MARINE SUBURBS V. RECREATION SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. Roux moved for an order for the winding up of the Recreation Syndicate, and for the appointment of an official liquidator.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable on the 12th September, calling on all concerned to show cause why the prayer should not be granted, one publication in the "Cape Times."

Ex parte ALLEN AND CO.

Dr. Rainsford moved for an order authorising the enregisterment of certain letters patent.

Order as prayed, without prejudice to any rights to set aside the registration.

CAROLESEN V. PAULSE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved to have an award of the arbitrator made a rule of Court, with costs against the defendant.

Award made a rule of Court, with costs, the respondent being ordered to pay the costs of suit.

Ex parte VAN WYK.

Mr. Bailey moved for leave to mortgage certain property in the estate of the petitioner's late father, in order to pay the debts due by the estate.

Granted.

GOURLAY V. BAUMGARTEN AND GATES.

Dr. Rainsford moved for an order calling on the respondents to show cause why a certain partnership should not be liquidated, and for the appointment of a receiver in the defendants' estate, the order to act as an interdict to restrain the respondents from alienating any of the assets of the partnership.

A rule nisi was granted calling on all concerned to show cause why the partnership should not be placed in liquidation, the order to act as an interim interdict, and further cause to be shown whereby Mr. Close should not be appointed as receiver, personal service if possible, failing which one publication in the "Daily Telegraph," London, and one in the "Umtata Herald."

On the application of Dr. Rainsford, the order was made returnable on November 2.

Ex parte VENTER.

Mr. Roux moved for an order, authorising the payment of certain moneys. Counsel explained that there were eight minor heirs in the estate, three of whom wanted certain sums, held for them under a certain bond, paid over to them, in order that they might buy sheep to stock their farm. One of the minors was dead. The report of the Master of the Supreme Court was most favourable. It recommended that the three minors in question be allowed to purchase sheep, as desired; that the money due to the deceased minor under the bond be paid into the Guardian Fund; that £100 each be paid to the four remaining children; and that the original bond, fixing £100 each on the eight children be cancelled. The petitioner now asked that £100 be paid into the Guardian Fund, in respect of the deceased child's share; that £100 each be paid to four of the minors; that to himself and the remaining two £100 each be paid, in order that they might buy stock; and that the original bond be cancelled.

Order granted, in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte VAN RENSBURG.

Mr. Bailey moved for the confirmation of the sale of certain property, sold in terms of the will of the late Johannes Frederick van Rensburg. The petitioner and another were appointed executors testamentary in the deceased's estate. Counsel read affidavits to show that the property was sold at a fair price, and that the sale was bona fide.

The Acting Chief Justice: The Court will not confirm the sale, but will authorise the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer.

Ex parte HAZELL.

Mr. P. Jones moved for an order releasing the petitioner from his curatorship of one Edward Everton, on the ground that Everton was restored to his sound mind again. The applicant had rendered a full account of his administration of the estate. On November 6 Everton was placed under the curatorship of the petitioner; but, in August of the present year, he was certified by Dr. Black, of Valkenberg, as being of sound mind.

Buchanan, A. C. J., asked if Everton had been released from the asylum, because the notice of motion appeared to have been served on him at the institution.

Mr. Jones replied that he understood that the man had been released since the notice was served.

It was ordered that the matter should stand over, pending the production of an affidavit to show that Everton had been released from the asylum.

Ex parte HOLMES.

Mr. Swift applied for a certain award to be made a Rule of Court. Counsel stated that the petitioner and another, named Schumar, had a dispute regarding certain water rights. An umpire was appointed by mutual consent, and he had made the award, which it was now sought to make a Rule of Court.

The matter was allowed to stand over, for the production of an affidavit, showing that the other party, Schumar, offered no objection.

WHITE, RYAN AND CO. V. FLORIDA.

Mr. Lewis applied for an extension of the return day of a rule nisi granted by the Court in this matter. When the case was before the Court on a previous occasion, leave was granted to sue the defendant by edictal citation, he having left Cape Town and gone to Ontario, Canada. It was believed, however, that since then Florida had left Ontario and gone to Manila, in the Phillipine Islands. An extension of time was, therefore, asked for, and direction as to service.

The return day was extended to February 1, personal service to be effected, if possible, failing which application in one issue of the "Gazette," and in a newspaper circulating in Manila.

Ex parte KRIGE.

Mr. De Waal made application for an order, authorising the transfer of certain property.

Order granted.

Ex parte MCKILLOP.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the confirmation of the sale of certain property. Counsel read the petition of A. K. Wolfe, setting forth that the petitioner had been appointed curator of James Henry McKillop, who had been declared a prodigal. There were at present debts against the estate to the amount of £435. The assets consisted of immovable property, which was sold to meet the liabilities, and petitioner now prayed for an order confirming the sale of the property and the authorisation of transfer.

Granted.

ROSEN V. EARLS AND SCHMITZ.

This was an application for an order directing the restoration of certain property. Mr. P. Jones appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Le Roux for the second respondent, Schmitz.

Mr. Jones read the affidavit of Morris Rosen, a furniture dealer, which set forth that certain property was sold by him, on the hire purchase system, to Earls, and delivered at the Mount Pleasant Hotel. The purchase price was £49. Up to March 10, Earls paid £5 in respect of the furniture. On March 10 Earls left the hotel, and handed it over, with furniture and fittings, to Schmitz. The amount now owing in respect of the furniture was £29 9s. 2d. Counsel stated that the matter had come before the Court on a previous occasion, when Schmitz appeared, and put in an agreement which had been entered into between him and Earls. On that occasion Mr. Justice Maasdorp granted an order, restraining Schmitz from parting with the furniture, and suggested that the parties might try to come to some arrangement. The matter now came before the Court again.

The Court ordered that the respondent Schmitz, unless he pay the sum of £20 on or before the 4th September, should deliver up to the applicant all the furniture, the property of the applicant, and pay the costs of this action, and costs of the previous motion granted against both respondents.

MORRISON V. MUNNICK.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to attach certain property, and sue the defendant by edictal citation for £70 due to the plaintiff.

Granted, personal service, if possible, the edict returnable on the 30th September, with leave to serve the intendit with notice of trial.

SUPREME COURTFIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

TRIAL CAUSE.

WALKER V. BARSDORF. { 1915.
Sept. 1st.

This was an action brought by John Lumsden Walker, an attorney, formerly practising at Claremont, and now at Cape Town, against Edward Barsdorf, a broker and general dealer, of Cape Town, for the recovery of £50, money lent, and £6 0s. 9d., for professional services.

The plaintiff's declaration set forth that he was entitled to £50, money advanced to the defendant, and £6 0s. 9d., in respect of professional services. The defendant admitted that £50 was advanced to him, but stated that the plaintiff purchased from him in July, 1903, two plots of ground on the Heathfield Estate, Diep River, for £230. The conditions of the sale provided that in the event of the plaintiff failing to pay any of the instalments, which should be at least £1 per month per plot, the property should be put up for sale, the plaintiff being held liable for all expenses and any loss which might arise in connection with the re-sale. Plaintiff paid £10 on account of the purchase, but failed to pay the other instalments, and, according to the conditions of sale, the property was re-sold by public auction for £92, leaving in all a balance due by the plaintiff of £88. This sum defendant claimed in reconvention. The plaintiff, in his rejoinder, alleged that subsequent to the payment of the £10 on account of the land, the sale was cancelled by mutual consent, and in satisfaction of the £10 paid out, he accepted from the defendant a certain safe. Further, in contravention of the agreement, the property was sold, in the re-sale, privately, and not by public auction. Liability for £5 5s. for goods sold and £1 money advanced was admitted. Defendant admitted the cancellation of the original sale, but denied that it released the plaintiff from his liability for the loss sustained in the re-sale.

After the pleadings had been read, the Acting Chief Justice held that the onus of proof lay with the defendant.

Mr. M. Bisset appeared for the plaintiff, and Dr. Greer for the defendant.

Edward Barsdorf, the defendant in the claim in convention, and the plaintiff in the claim in reconvention, stated that he was the owner of certain lots of ground on the Heathfield Estate, two plots of which he sold through Mr. Marous, an auctioneer, to Mr. Walker. About seven or eight months after the sale, Mr. Walker asked witness if he might re-sell the land for him, as he thought he had paid too high a price for it. Witness asked what price Walker would want, and Walker replied that any sum in reason would do. It was then arranged that Messrs. I. and J. Hermann should sell the plots, with certain others. Walker clearly understood that the re-sale would be at his profit or loss. Messrs. Hermann sold the plots for £92. The sale was a public one, and advertised in the papers. Witness asked Walker several times for the balance of the original purchase price. He saw Mr. Walker daily, and made repeated application for the balance due. About September, 1904, witness asked Walker if he could spare him some money, as he was hard pressed. Walker gave witness £50. Witness intended that this money should be a set-off to the balance owing by Walker. He never intended to repay the money; he never gave any I.O.U. or acknowledgment for it, and he gave Walker credit for it in his books. Subsequently Walker spoke to him about the £50, and witness then said that he had set off the amount against the land purchased. Walker then remarked that though he had not intended the £50 to go against the land, it was all right. Two other persons were present on that occasion.

Cross-examined by Mr. Bisset: Witness thought that while Walker lent him £50, he would not have paid £50 on account of the land purchased. Witness made the entry of the £50 in the Heathfield books some months ago, when he parted with Mr. Porter. Prior to that Mr. Porter used to keep the books, as agent for the seller. It was not correct to state that when the sale was cancelled witness was short of money and wanted to sell the land to someone who would pay ready cash. In the cancellation paper put in there was no reservation whatever. He denied that the safe in question was his, and he did not believe that he had received any consideration in respect of it.

Re-examined by Dr. Greer: Witness's sole reason for signing the cancellation was that he was informed that he could not re-sell the property without his doing so. He did not think it was an out and out cancellation.

George Hunter stated that he was a clerk in the employ of the defendant. On one occasion he heard Mr. Walker say to Barsdorf, in his office, "By the way, I'm deuced hard up; what about that loan of £50." Barsdorf replied, "I put that against the land at Diep River." Walker said, "If that is so, it's all right."

William Ellis stated that he was present at the conversation mentioned by the witness Hunter, and gave corroborative evidence.

John Marcus, who was auctioneer on the occasion of the first sale, stated that about four or five months after the purchase Mr. Walker said to him that he thought that he had paid too much for the ground, and would like to sell it.

Thomas Herbert Hazell, administering trustee in the insolvent estate of Philip Porter, gave evidence as to certain entries in the Heathfield books.

Dr. Greer closed his case.

John Hamilton Walker, the plaintiff, said that he purchased the two lots for £230, and paid £10 down. He did part of the conveyancing work of the Heathfield Estate. He had never been asked to pay any instalments on account of the purchase of the land, after the cancellation of the sale. Witness had a running account with Porter, and his account could easily have been debited with the instalments alleged to have been due. Barsdorf came to him and said that he was anxious to sell the land for cash, and asked that the sale should be cancelled to enable him to do so. Witness did not remember anything of the conversation spoken of by Barsdorf, Hunter, and Ellis. He frequently asked for the return of the £50. With regard to the safe, he asked Barsdorf for a refund of the £10 paid, after the cancellation of the sale, Barsdorp pleaded that he was short of money at the moment, adding that there was, however, a safe which witness might take in satisfaction of the £10. Witness agreed to do this.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: He was willing to accept the safe in satisfaction of the £10 paid on account of the purchase of the ground. Witness always looked upon Mr. Porter as the person with whom he dealt; Barsdorp was only Porter's clerk. He did not even know that Barsdorp was the owner of the Heathfield Estate until transfer was being passed. That was some months after the sale. Barsdorp told him that he had a cash purchaser for the ground, and witness believed that the land was sold for cash. That was why his plea said that the re-sale had been private. Witness would say that the conversation spoken of as having taken place in Barsdorp's office in connection with the £50 did not take place. Philip John Porter stated that he had recently been carrying on business as broker and general agent at Claremont. He acted as agent for the seller in the sale of Heathfield Estate. He had an arrangement with Barsdorp at that time giving him a half-share in the profits of any business he brought to witness's office. When the declaration of the cancellation of the sale of the two plots to Walker was made before witness, no mention of any reservation was made. Witness understood that the cancellation was out and out. Mr. Walker was never debited with the loss on the re-sale, although, in the ordinary cases of loss on re-sale, this was done to other persons.

By Dr. Greer: There were other losses on re-sales which were not debited to the original buyers in the books. Witness thought that the agreement as to the cancellation was come to in Walker's private office.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the plaintiff sued the defendant for the sum of £50, money lent, and for professional work done. His claim as it now stood was for £49 15s. 9d. The defendant set up a counter claim, an reconvention. He claimed that he had lost on the sale of certain property purchased by the plaintiff. It appeared that the plaintiff bought two plots of ground, in respect of which he paid £10, the balance to be paid in instalments of not less than £1 per month, within four years. The conditions of sale were made out by an auctioneer, "instructed thereto by Mr. Philip Porter, of Claremont." Walker alleged that shortly afterwards, the defendant came to him and said that he (Barsdorp) was short of money, and would he (Walker) cancel the sale? It was not unreasonable that Barsdorp should do this, because, on the one hand, he would be able to sell the ground for cash, if the sale were cancelled; whereas, on the other hand, he would receive only £1 per month from Walker. With regard to the cancellation, they had Barsdorp making a solemn declaration to this effect: "I declare that I have not received any money, or other valuable consideration, for this purchase, and I agree to cancel the sale; and I have not received, nor am I to receive, any consideration for the cancellation." There was no default by the plaintiff under the conditions of sale, and there was no re-sale under the conditions of sale. There was a re-sale; but that was by virtue of an agreement between the defendant and plaintiff. After the re-sale, until the present action no claim was made on Walker. With regard to the loan of £50, Barsdorp candidly acknowledged that he did not think that Walker intended the money to be a payment on account of the ground; he even said that he did not think that Walker would have given it to him, had he asked for it as a payment in respect of the land. Then, there was no entry made in Barsdorp's books, in support of his statement that he took the money as a payment on account, until a few months ago. Here Barsdorp's conduct was totally inconsistent with the idea that he thought that the sale was not cancelled out-and-out. In June, Barsdorp, in a letter to the plaintiff, mentioned that he had a counter-claim; and, in reply, Walker wrote asking to be supplied with particulars of the counter-claim, but received no reply. In the face of the declaration of cancellation, and looking at the conduct of Barsdorp in the matter, the Court could not hold with the defendant. As far as the claim in reconvention was concerned, there had been no re-sale on the conditions of sale, but on a contract between Walker and Barsdorp. The re-sale was effected for Barsdorp's benefit. There was another allegation, that Walker had agreed with Barsdorp to share his fees on work brought to him by the defendant. He (the Acting Chief Justice) did not like that attorneys of the Court should enter into such an arrangement; but here again Barsdorp had failed to establish a contract, entitling him to a half share of the fees. In these circumstances, judgment would be for the plaintiff for £49 15s. 9d., with costs, on the claim in convention, and for the defendant in the claim in reconvention.

REX V. ARENS AND } 1905.
ANOTHER. } Sept. 1st.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the case had come before him from Bredasdorp of Rex. v. Arens and Kuroko, two coloured men, convicted of stock theft. The men were each sentenced to one year's imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 30s., or, in default, two months' imprisonment. In the case of one of the men there was an addition to the two months' imprisonment of "with hard labour," and in the case of the other there was no such addition. This was one of the cases which came under the Act to which he had referred on the previous day (15 C.T.R. p. 733); and the sentence of the second man, including hard labour, would have to be amended, as far as the hard labour was concerned. The words "with hard labour," would be struck out; otherwise the sentence would be confirmed.

NDANGANDA V. NOTI.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Middle Drift in a case in which the plaintiff in the Court below claimed £20 damages for the detention of a heifer. The respondent denied liability.

The Magistrate found for the plaintiff, and awarded damages at £12. From the evidence, it appeared that the plaintiff and defendant used to freely exchange cattle. Noti lent a certain heifer to the defendant, which, it was alleged, was heavy in calf. It was further stated that the plaintiff gave instructions that the animal should not be used for ploughing. The heifer was worked at the plough, and died the day after it was borrowed. That was the first occasion during the present year on which the heifer in question was put to plough. For the defence, it was alleged in the Magistrate's Court that the heifer was suffering from lung and gall sickness, and had not died as a consequence of being put to plough while in calf, as another animal in the same condition, which was ploughing at the same time, was unaffected.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for the respondent.

Mr. Gardiner urged that when the heifer was borrowed Noti must have known that it was being taken, as he was at home at the time, and he must have known that the appellant could not want it for any other purpose than ploughing. The condition of the calf found in the heifer after death showed that the animal would not have calved for a few days more, and there was the further point to show that the heifer did not die as a consequence of being put to plough, that another animal in the same condition was unaffected, though it, too, was ploughing at the same time.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that it was admitted that the appeal was on a question of fact, and it was also admitted that the heifer was in calf. The plaintiff in the Court below said that it was heavy in calf; the defendant, on the other hand, maintained that it was less so. It was clear that the heifer was used to plough against the express instructions of the plaintiff, and that it had died while being so worked. He thought that the evidence did not show that the animal was suffering from sickness. In these circumstances, the Magistrate found for the plaintiff. On a question of fact of this kind, he did not think that the Court could alter the decision of the Magistrate, and the amount allowed by the Magistrate as damages appeared to be a fair one. The appeal would be dismissed, with costs.

MORGAN V. KING ELECTRIC LIGHT CO.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate of King William's Town, awarding the respondent £8 17s. 6d. in respect of damages caused to an electric lighting pole by the collision therewith of a pair of runaway horses and wagon belonging to W. S. Morgan, the appellant.

From the evidence in the Court below, it appeared that the defendant's wagon was being loaded with barrels in the street, when one of the barrels, either rolling off or being blown off by the wind, fell on one of the horses. The animal bolted, other barrels falling off as it ran, and further frightening it, and came into collision with the Light Company's pole.

Mr. Upington appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Gardiner for the respondent.

Mr. Upington urged that the Magistrate should have allowed the application made in the Court below, on behalf of the defendant, at the end of the plaintiff's case, for absolution from the instance, without compelling the defendant to go into his case, because there was no evidence of any kind to show negligence. Counsel went on to argue that there had been no negligence on the part of the driver, as alleged in the summons, and that the falling off of the barrel, as a consequence of which the collision took place, was a pure accident.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the Magistrate having decided the case on the evidence as a whole, he felt bound to take the evidence as laid before him. Looking upon the whole evidence, then, the Magistrate had found that there was negligence on the part of the defendant. He (the Acting Chief Justice) was of opinion that the Magistrate was justified in saying that what had happened was just what might have been expected to happen under the circumstances. He thought that all the facts justified the Magistrate in saying that there was negligence, and the appeal would therefore be dismissed, with costs.

BOTHAS V. ESTATE PHILLIPS.

This was an appeal from a decision of the R.M. of Mount Fletcher, in an action brought by James Phillips against Andries Botha, for £77 11s., money lent and goods sold. The Magistrate gave judgment for the sum claimed, less £8 8s., an amount of compound interest which he deducted.

When the case came on in the Court below Mr. Hargreaves, the agent for plaintiff, applied to substitute his name as assignee in place of that of Phillips and the Magistrate allowed the amendment.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said the plaintiff sued the defendant for £77 11s. 8d., which included interest for goods sold and money lent. The amendment was allowed, the Court holding that the substitution of the name did not prejudice the defendant. Hargreaves, as assignee of the estate, swore the account is correct, and the defendant never disputed it. The item of £8 8s. interest was deducted, as it was not included in the last account rendered. The Court considered the evidence of the bookkeeper, and the extracts from the books sufficient proof and judgment would be given for £69 3s. 8d.

Mr. Gutche was for the appellant and Mr. Close for the respondent.

Counsel, having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A.C.J.: In the Magistrate's Court a summons was taken out by one Phillips against Botha. When the case came on, Mr. Hargreaves, the agent, applied to substitute his name as assignee in the place of that of Phillips. The defendant's agent objected and the Magistrate allowed the amendment. In the course of the evidence it was proved that Mr. Hargreaves was not the assignee, at all, but held the power of attorney of Mr. Myers. The objection against Hargreaves suing is a good one. If this technical objection be sustained, it would be ground for allowing the appeal; but the Court has very extensive powers in appeals from the Magistrates' Courts to render speedy justice. The order will be that the record be amended by substituting Mr. Myers's name as assignee, in place of Hargreaves. There is another objection to the charges made for interest, £17 in all. The Magistrate might have been justified in allowing interest up to January 31, 1901, when, on Botha's own evidence, the account was correct. Since that date, £12 15s. 10d. has been allowed, being interest on an account, for goods sold and delivered. Now, this could not be chargeable without an express agreement; and there is no evidence given by the plaintiff that there ever was any such agreement. On the contrary, he knows nothing about the account. Under the circumstances, therefore, this £12 15s. 10d. must be deducted from the account, which will make the correct judgment £56 7s. 10d.; and that will be entered with costs in the Magistrate's Court. But as the defendant has come to this court with a very substantial objection, he will have his costs of appeal.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAAS'ORP, and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

LAWMON V. ALLNUTT. { 1905.
Sept. 4th.

Mr. Rowson moved as a matter of urgency for a temporary interdict restraining the respondent from removing any materials from the applicant's blacksmith shop, at No. 2, Lesar-street, pending an action for a declaration of rights.

Rule nisi, to operate as an interim interdict granted, the action to be instituted forthwith, with leave to the respondent to move to have the rule set aside.

MILLS V. BIDLI. { 1905.
Sept. 4th
Nov. 6th.

Native — Marriage — Lobola — Interpleader.

D. W. M. had obtained a judgment in a Transkeian R.M. Court against A. M. D. W. M. took out a writ of execution, and thereunder attached certain cattle in possession of B. B. asserted that these cattle had been paid to him as "Lobola" by A. M. The marriage, however, between A. M. and B.'s daughter not having taken place, the Magistrate decided that the dominium of the cattle was in A. M., and that they were therefore attachable for his debts. On appeal, the Circuit Court reversed this decision of the R.M.

Held on further appeal to the Supreme Court, that the judgment of the Circuit Court must be affirmed.

Peacock v. Ben Rango (12 C.T.R., 545) distinguished.

This was an appeal brought against a decision of Mr. Justice Kotze in the Circuit Court at Butterworth. The matter was first heard before the Resident Magistrate of Butterworth, when the appellant Mills, a European trader, obtained judgment against a native for £18 10s. A writ of execution was issued, and certain cattle that were in the possession of Bidli were attached, and thereupon an interpleader action was instituted, and Bidli claimed that these cattle could not be attached under the judgment which the plaintiff obtained against the native Myataza. It was admitted that the cattle was given by Myataza to Bidli as a dowry, and that the marriage had not taken place. The Magistrate held that the cattle were still the property of Myataza. The matter came up on appeal to the Circuit Court, sitting at Butterworth.

Kotze, J., allowed the appeal, and gave his reasons as follows:—This matter comes before me by way of appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate of Idutywa. The facts were as follows:—One D. W. Mills, a European trader, had obtained a judgment for the sum of £18 10s. 6d. against a native called Andries Myataza. A writ of execution was issued for the recovery of this amount, together with the sum of £2 10s. 4d. for costs. Under this writ certain cattle were attached which were in the possession of the appellant, Mfuleni Bidli, who maintained that the cattle, having been given to him as lobola by Andries Myataza, in view of a contemplated marriage with the appellant's daughter, were not liable to attachment. In the interpleader suit brought by Mfuleni Bidli the Magistrate decided against him, on the ground that, as the marriage had not yet taken place, the property in the cattle was still in Andries Myataza. The parties, by their counsel appeared before me, and it was mutually understood that the argument should proceed on the case as stated by Mr. Henley in the Court below, viz.: Mr. Henley wishes to place on record that these cattle were seized from Mfuleni Bidli, that these cattle had been paid to him by Andries Myataza as dowry eighteen months ago, that the marriage has not yet been consummated, and that the parties desire a ruling of the Court whether these cattle are executable or not." The case was argued by Mr. Gane for the appellant, and Mr. Currey for the respondent. Upon the statement of the case as submitted to me I had to presume that the parties to the intended marriage were able and willing in due time to carry out and perform the contract. There was nothing to show that such was not their intention, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the presumption is that the parties intend to carry out and complete their contract or engagement. This material fact distinguishes the case from Peacock v. Ben Rango (12 C.T. 545), upon which the respondent relied in support of the seizure of the cattle under the writ of attachment. Without in least questioning the propriety of the decision in that case, by which I consider myself bound, I do not think the judgment of the Supreme Court should be extended beyond the circumstances of the case then before it. In Peacock v. Ben Rango the respondent had delivered certain cattle as dowry to the father of the intended bride, but she subsequently refused to marry him, and he thereupon claimed back the dowry cattle from her father, who had meanwhile sold some of the cattle to the appellant. The Supreme Court, following the view taken by the Chief Magistrate of the Transkei, laid down that the ownership in the dowry cattle did not pass until the marriage had taken place, and that consequently the respondent was entitled to claim back the cattle. That the respondent was entitled to claim back the cattle because the girl had refused to enter into marriage seems a sound and reasonable custom. While the general rule may be that the property in lobola cattle does not pass until the intended marriage takes place, it does not follow that under all circumstances, where the marriage is not completed, the dowry cattle can be recovered. Thus, in the case of William Nojira v. Samuel Vuba, decided by the Court of Appeal in the Transkei on the 4th March, 1903, where the intended bridegroom had broken off the contemplated marriage and his father, who had paid six head of dowry cattle for him to the father of the girl, claimed back the cattle with the increase amounting to ten head, the Court held that the plaintiff was not under the circumstances entitled to recover the cattle, and gave judgment in favour of the defendant with costs. This was decided a year after Peacock v. Ben Rango, and is duly entered and recorded in the official record book of the Court of Appeal for the Transkei. In the present instance, as already pointed out, there is apparently nothing to prevent the contemplated marriage from taking place. By native law and custom the payment of lobola or dowry cattle is a very important and serious transaction. According to the report of the South African Native Affairs Commission of 1905, Art. 302, "Ukulobola may be taken to be a contract between the father and the intending husband of his daughter, by which the father promises his consent to the marriage of his daughter, and to protect her in case of necessity, either during or after such marriage, and by which in return he obtains from the husband valuable consideration, partly for such consent and partly as a guarantee by the husband of his good conduct towards his daughter and wife. Such a contract does not imply the compulsory marriage of the woman." Such being the view of lobola, according to native law and custom, it seems to me that if the parties are willing to enter into the intended marriage, and the present case falls under this description, then the dowry cattle given in pursuance of, and in consideration for such intended marriage, are not attachable at the instance of a third party who has obtained a judgment against the intended bridegroom or the person who has handed over the dowry cattle to the father of the intended bride. Such a rule seems to me to be a sound and reasonable one, and, I am assured by many an experienced Magistrate in the Transkei, is strictly in accordance with native law and custom. It does not follow then that because the ownership remains in the giver of dowry cattle until the intended marriage takes place, such cattle are seizable in execution at the instance of a third party. They would not have been so seizable in the case of William Nojira v. Samuel Fuba already mentioned by me, and I need but refer to a similar and well-known rule of our own law that a pledge of moveables accompanied by delivery cannot be attached in execution by a judgment creditor of the pledgor, although the property in the moveables remain in the pledgor.

But, be this as it may, it was contended by Mr. Gane, for the appellant, that as the respondent Mills is a European, and the question is one between him and a native, the 23rd section of Proclamation 110 of 1879 applies, under which the law of the Colony must regulate and determine the dispute between them. Such is also my own view. As the appellant, as father of the future bride, had received delivery of the dowry cattle and held them as consideration for the intended marriage, which could at any time be consummated, and which the parties presumably wished to be completed, I am of opinion that he cannot be disturbed in his possession of the cattle. In other words, that the cattle are not under the circumstances liable to attachment at the suit of a third party. My judgment is therefore in favour of the appellant, Mfuleni Bidli, with costs.

Sir H. Juta: Marriage is a valuable consideration. If a man settles property in view of marriage, that marriage must take place or else the dowry is attachable. A father cannot be the trustee for a wife. A man cannot give a portion of his property to a prospective spouse and thereby deprive his creditors of their rights. Goods can be attached under a judgment; but in the case of a pledge there is a jus in rem. In this case there was no contract between the father-in-law and the son-in-law. If there was a contract between them it is immaterial where the property was. When the Court has had occasion to analyse this contract of lobola, it held that the girl's father held the cattle in trust for the bridegroom. In Pearock v. Rango (12. C.T.R. 545) the Court held that the father had no interest in the dowry cattle beyond keeping them in security. There the principle mobilis non habet sequelam was relied upon, and the Court held that the contract was neither a security nor a pledge. In the case of lobola, the father-in-law is merely a trustee, and he has no rights against a creditor.

Mr. Benjamin: As to Lobola, see p. 16 of the judgment. That is quite consistent with the judgment in Pearock v. Rango. Lobola is either a pledge or it is in the nature of a contract.

[Hopley, J.: The father has to hand over his daughter in consideration of the cattle. Until he has handed over his daughter he has no right to the cattle.]

The father in law, it is true, has not dominium of the cattle, but he has certain rights which may ripen into dominium. Suppose the son-in-law unreasonably refuses to marry?

[Hopley J.: Possibly the forfeiture of the cattle may be intended as a penalty for breach of promise.]

If my view is correct the judgment in Nombombo v. Stofle (12. C.T.R. 596) is perfectly reconcilable with the cases cited on the other side. A pledgor cannot convey greater rights than he himself possesses (3. Burge. 578). This case is not on all fours with Rango's case. The creditor of a creditor cannot attach the property of the original debtor in satisfaction for a debt. (See Brown v. Messenger (Buch. 1876, p. 49).)

[Hopley, J.: You cannot put this on the ground of pledge for he can be made to marry the girl.]

After further argument,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 6th).

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The issue in this appeal is, whether or not certain cattle which had been paid by one Andries Myatasa to respondent, Mfuleni Bidli, as so-called "dowry" under a contract for a marriage in accordance with native customs, and which cattle are in the possession of respondent (Bidli), are liable to attachment in execution of a writ taken out by appellant (Mills) upon a judgment obtained by him against Andries Myatasa. The Magistrate of Idutywa, in an interpleader just heard by him, decided in favour of appellant, but on appeal to the Circuit Court at Butterworth the Magistrate's decision was reversed. After many conflicting expressions of opinion the validity of the custom of lobola prevailing among the natives of the Transkei may be taken to have been finally settled by the decision of the full Court in the case of Nggabela v. Sibebe (10 Juta, 346), and the agreement to give "dowry" has since been recognised as lawful contract among natives. The definition of the contract of "ukulobola" cited in the Circuit Court judgment, taken from the report of the South African Native Affairs Commission of 1905, agrees with the finding of the Cape Native Affairs Commission of 1883, and may be accepted as now generally received. The validity of the contract in this case was recognised in both the other Courts, and is not raised on appeal. It is the question of the incidents or consequences of the contract which is involved in the present dispute. It may, I think, be taken to have been settled by the numerous decisions which have been given on the subject of lobola, and by the opinions authoritatively expressed by experts on native law, that where property—usually cattle, as in this case—has been given as dowry, and the marriage has been consummated, the dominium in the property passes to the father; but until the marriage has been consummated it remains in the intended husband. After the consummation of the marriage, on the wife's desertion, or for other good cause, the father may in certain cases be compelled to restore the property received by him under the contract. On the other hand, if there is a failure to complete the marriage due to the fault of the intended husband, he loses his property, and the father is not compellable to restore the dowry paid. The Magistrate decided that the cattle given for dowry in this case were exigible on the ground that as the marriage had not yet taken place the property therein was still in Myatasa. He relied on the decision of this Court in Peacock v. Ben Rango (19, S.C.R., 323). But as the learned Circuit Judge pointed out, the facts of that case differed very materially from those in the present action. In Peacock v. Ben Rango, the contract to marry had been broken through default of the father, or of the intended wife, and a judgment of the Magistrate's Court had already been obtained declaring the contract to be at an end, and the cattle ordered to be restored. De Villiers, C.J., in concurring in the view of the native custom taken by the Court of the Chief Magistrate, said that three very experienced magistrates had held, "that when cattle were paid as dowry on account of a marriage to be contracted, until that marriage had been contracted the ownership did not pass, and that if any died before marriage, the intended husband bore the loss, and if any of them had progeny he was entitled to the increase. That would clearly show that it was not the intention of the intended bridegroom to pass any property at all, but that the father of the bride was merely to hold these cattle in trust for the bridegroom until the marriage took place. Until the marriage took place the father had no interest in the cattle beyond keeping them as security until the marriage took place." Accepting this to be a correct statement of native law on the question dealt with in that case, it does not dispose of the case under appeal. The Magistrate here omitted entirely to consider the position of the parties, where the contract to marry was still existent. It was taken for granted in this case that the parties were able and willing, and intended to complete and carry out their contract. As the case stands, therefore, though the dominium in the cattle was still vested in Myatasa, they were in the possession of Bidli, under a valid contract, which gave Bidli certain rights over the cattle. In the view I take of native law, until there was some default on the part of the other parties to the contract, Myatasa himself could not reclaim the cattle, which, under his contract he had handed over to Bidli. Myatasa was not entitled to break his contract, and then to take advantage of his wrongful act in so doing. If that is so, I fail to see good ground for holding that a creditor could claim greater rights than the owner of the cattle himself possessed. By the writ obtained by appellant the messenger of the Court was directed to make a levy on the property of the debtor. Where such property is in the possession of the debtor there would be no difficulty. But where possession has been parted with under a valid contract to a third person, who has thereby acquired a right over the property, the judgment creditor cannot ignore the rights of such third person. The fact that the dominium remains in the debtor is not sufficient to render the property liable to seizure under the writ, at any rate, not until the claim of the possessor is first discharged. The illustrations of the pledge of movables, which in pursuance of the contract of pledge, had been delivered to the pledgor, used by the learned Circuit Judge, seems to me directly in point. There is no suggestion of fraud in this case, and the payment of the dowry took place eighteen months before the case was heard by the Magistrate. In my opinion the judgment of the Circuit Court was correct, and this appeal therefrom should be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp: I concur.

Mr. Justice Hopley: The facts in this case are that one Myatasa handed over certain cattle to Bidli, the present respondent, as part of the ikazi, to be paid to him under a contract of ukulobola, in consideration of receiving his daughter in marriage from Bidli at some future time—presumably when he was able to earn and pay the rest of the ikazi or lobola—and about eighteen months after such handing over of these cattle the present appellant, who had obtained a judgment against Myatasa for a debt, caused the cattle to be attached by virtue of a writ of execution issued in connection with such judgment. Bidli thereupon set up his claim that these cattle were not liable to attachment, as they had been handed to him under the said contract, which, as to their portion thereof, he and his daughter were ready and willing to perform. It was admitted that the actual marriage had not yet taken place, but that Myatasa was likewise still intending to carry out his contract.

In an interpleader suit, the Resident Magistrate decided that the cattle were liable to attachment, on the ground that, as the marriage had not taken place, the dominium of the animals had not passed from Myatasa. This judgment was reversed by appeal to the Circuit Judge, the learned Judge President of the Eastern Districts Court, against whose decision the present appeal is brought. The matter involved is one of considerable importance, owing to the fact that it is not uncommon for young Kafirs to engage themselves to marry in similar manner. They obtain the promise of the girl and her guardian and pay as much of the ikazi as they can afford. They then go away to earn enough to pay the balance of what has been agreed upon, and only when they have fully performed their share of the contract, by paying the full number of the cattle, can they claim that the marriage should take place. But upon the first payment the young man obtained an immediate hold upon the girl and her guardian, and the latter reciprocally has something in the nature of a security that the aspirant will fulfil his promise and carry out his contract. Should he fail to do so through his own fault or change of mind, he is punished for his inconsistency by being unable to reclaim any of the property which may have been handed over from the father or guardian, if the latter can reply that he and his daughter, or ward, are ready and willing to perform their share of the agreement. This was the decision in the case of Nojiwa v. Vuba, cited by the Judge-President in his judgment. That decision, based on Kafir law and custom, seems to me to be in accordance with our own ideas of law and equity, and it certainly establishes the position that a guardian, to whom instalments of cattle have been given by way of lobola, has a right of retention which may be converted into absolute dominium in certain cases. That he has not absolute dominium in such animals as soon as they are handed over to him, has been clearly laid down in the case of Peacock v. Ben Rango (19 S.C., 323), which case defines his rights as those of a trustee for his prospective son-in-law: but in the same case it is pointed out by His Lordship the Chief Justice that the father has an interest in such cattle, which would enable him to hold them as security for the completion of the contract. He is the trustee (with such personal interest) as long as the contractual relations subsist unbroken on either side, and as long as he and the real owner are in the position of prospective father-in-law and future son-in-law. His trusteeship, however, is changed into absolute ownership in his own behalf upon completion of the marriage or upon refusal on the part of the young man to fulfil his contract. The trusteeship likewise comes to an end, and the absolute unrestricted ownership of the young man revives, should the father or his daughter commit a breach of the contract by refusing to complete the marriage, or in case the latter should be rendered unfit for the position implied by the contract. These are the main incidents of the contract of Ukulobola, before the completion of the marriage; and though it may be urged, as indeed it was urged in argument, that to hold that the rights acquired by the prospective father-in-law over such instalments of lobola cattle should prevail over those of a judgment creditor, who seeks to attach them, opens the door to frauds, it may, in reply, be pointed out that to deprive a father of the security by reason of which he has been reserving his daughter for the man with whom he has contracted to do so would certainly entail hardship; and that as to the perpetration of frauds each case would have to be inquired into on its own merits, and in case collusion were proved, the fraudulent arrangements would be set aside, just as, in similar circumstances, they would be set aside in the case of dishonest marriage settlements or other contracts among more civilised people. In the present case, the parties concerned seem to have acted in good faith, and I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed, with costs.

Excise duty—Acts 36 of 1904,
Sec. 18, and 26 of 1905,
Sec. 4.

This was an appeal against the decision of the Acting Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, by which the appellants were convicted on a charge of having contravened section 18 of Act 36 of 1904 and section 4 of Act 26 of 1905, in that, on or about June 15, 1905, they both, each, one, or other of them, fraudulently made a false return to the Excise Receiver of the quantity of spirits in their possession, or under their control, by omitting to include a certain quantity of whisky; or, otherwise, with fraudulently failing to make a return of spirits. The accused were each fined £250, or in default one month's imprisonment. Mr. Burton appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Burton said that the appeal was made, on notice to the Attorney-General, on the grounds that the conviction was not supported by the evidence, and was contrary to law. The charge was substantially based on the Act of 1904, which dealt with the Excise proper; and in section 18 the maximum penalty was laid down as £500 fine or one year's imprisonment. The only reason why the Act of 1905 was referred to in the charge was that, by that Act, the provisions of the Act of 1904 were made to apply to imported spirits. In reviewing the evidence given in the case in the Court below, counsel said that he might explain that, before the Act of 1905 came into force, there was an idea amongst the spirit merchants of the Peninsula that the payment of the extra duty on imported spirits, under that Act, might be avoided by the removal of the spirits from bond, before the Act was promulgated. Acting on this idea, the appellants had something like 4,000 cases of spirits removed from bond. They found, however, that they could not accommodate all that quantity at their stores, so some of it was sent to be stored in a store in the grounds of the private residence of Mr. Cavanagh, one of the partners, at Green Point. Some of the cases of spirit sent to Green Point were brought into town again, but 149 cases were left there, and were overlooked when the Excise return was made out. This was the cause of the whole trouble. The 149 cases represented an extra duty of about £90, and it was said that the appellants fraudulently made a false return in order to evade payment of that small amount. The omission to draw attention to the 149 cases lying at Green Point was made by Simpson, the man in charge of the appellants' store in town. Gourlay, Cavanagh and Co. returned 6,000 gallons of spirits, to the Excise Department, on which they paid over £1000; yet it was now said that they tried to evade the payment of such a small amount as £90.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: I cannot understand how a firm keeping books like this should not have noticed the shortage.]

The man who sent the cases out to Green Point failed to make a return to his employers.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: But the books show it.]

No. The books and the return were checked by the Excise officers, and a difference of 10 gallons was found. Of course, that frequently occurs; a firm is a few gallons over or a few gallons short.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: The books should show the total quantity, wherever the spirits might be.]

That was the storeman's fault.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: But the books should show the total amount correctly.]

That would not be shown until they received their returns from the Customs. That is one of the elements in the case.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: I could understand a mistake being made as to where the spirits were, but not as to the amount.]

Mr. Burton (proceeding) said that it was shown in the evidence that the Customs return agreed with the firm's stock book, an examination by the Excise officers showing that there were ten gallons out in both. It appeared that subsequently two gallons out of the ten were accounted for, bringing the amount down to eight gallons. Patrick Duffy, the firm's manager, stated in his evidence that he made out the return on which the prosecution was based, and signed it on behalf of the firm; he thought that it included the 149 gallons of whisky which were at Green Point. When the spirit was sent to Green Point the appellants were under no liability, accumulating or otherwise, for extra duty on whisky, so that it could not have been sent out in order to evade the Excise. The Magistrate found both the accused guilty, without saying on which charge; and said that he was satisfied that the spirit was taken to Green Point in order to evade the duty, and not that it was overlooked by mistake. The substantial point of the appeal was to have this stigma on the appellants, of having committed fraud, removed. From the very beginning the charge was extraordinary. The summons said that the omission was fraudulent and intentional. Now, all this was very improper, and not in accordance with the terms of the Act, which said that a man might be prosecuted for failing to make a return—not fraudulently omitting to do so, as the summons was worded. He (counsel) submitted that the appellants had a right to come to Court to have this stigma on their character removed. It would have been reasonable had the accused been found guilty of not having made a return without a reasonable excuse, because one felt that the employees were negligent in not informing their principals of the fact that there was spirit at Green Point.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: As the summons is worded, they would be found guilty of fraud in either case?]

Yes.

His Lordship inquired which count of the indictment the Magistrate convicted the appellants on. He would like before going further to have the Magistrate's reasons.

Mr. Nightingale: It is possible that the evidence in this case might support the prosecution on both counts.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: There is no charge on both counts.]

They were charged in the alternative.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: I think it would be advisable to know before this case is argued which count they were convicted on. The Magistrate can, of course, only convict on one. I should like to know the count the Magistrate convicted on.]

Mr. Burton: That should certainly be made clear.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: I think it is rather important in this case.]

It would appear from the newspaper report, which my learned friend had allowed me to refer to, that they were found guilty on the charge of making the false report.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: I think it would be as well to get the Magistrate to decide the point. The Court will continue to hear appeals this week, and the Magistrate can send in his reasons.]

Mr. Burton: It is a matter of some importance.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: If the Magistrate gives his reasons at once the hearing of the case can be continued during the coming week.]

Postea.

Mr. Burton said the Magistrate had now stated that he found the accused guilty on the alternative charge, of failing to send in a return. After hearing the evidence, he (the Magistrate) was satisfied that the accused had the liquor sent to Chantilly, Green Point, and had failed intentionally to make a return, with the object of evading the duty. Proceeding, Counsel said that the charge under the Act was one of failing to send in a return without reasonable excuse. Therefore, it was clear that the rest of the charges on the summons were mere trimming and unjustifiable verbiage. The Magistrate had been influenced by the form in which the charge was made out. The charge should have been worded in the terms of the Act, which merely laid down that one could be charged with omitting to make a return, without reasonable excuse—not with fraudulent omission to make a return—and the conviction should have been confined to that. It was clear that the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the spirit was sent to Chantilly, and no return was made, because the accused desired to evade payment of the duty, and it was equally clear that he based the conviction on that finding. The finding of criminal intent should not be allowed to remain on the record; all the circumstances pointed to the absence of criminal intent. Because the appellants had omitted to include 149 cases in the large quantity returned, they were now held guilty of fraudulent intent. He would point out that the returns in question were compiled by employees, and only one of them was seen by one of the principals, who formally signed it on behalf of the firm. The spirit was sent to Green Point before it was liable to pay the extra duty; yet the Magistrate said that it was sent out with the object of evading the duty. The evidence showed that between 250 and 300 cases were sent out to Chantilly, Green Point, in the first instance. It was said that this was done to evade the duty, but what happened?—a large number of the cases was returned to town, leaving only the 149 cases, which were overlooked, at Green Point. One of the points to which he would draw attention was that it was practically impossible to evade the excise, except by collusion between the wholesale merchant and retailer. It would have been reasonable had the Magistrate found the appellants guilty of failing to send in a return, without reasonable excuse. Then would arise the question whether the overlooking of the spirit at Chantilly in the present case was a reasonable excuse. As to that, he was not prepared to argue; he was disposed to admit that the principal was responsible for the action of his employees. He (counsel) would then ask the Court to mark its disapprobation of the finding of the Magistrate, that there was fraudulent intent, by a reduction in the amount of the fine.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Has the Court power to do that. In the High Court of Griqualand West, it can be done, but I do not think it is so here.]

Mr. Burton: I think it has been done here.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Not in this Court; the conviction has been struck out altogether, but not the fine reduced. The Act of 1886 lays down that this Court cannot reduce the fine, but it can recommend to the Government mitigation of sentence.]

In that case, I would ask the Court to express an opinion as to the conviction, and to make a suggestion to the Executive as to the fine.

Mr. Nightingale said that he would draw particular attention to the fact that the returns on which the prosecution was based formed the basis of the Excise revenue. The dealers were bound by the Act to make full disclosures of the quantity of spirits in their possession. As to the difficulty of evading the Excise, it was quite possible for a dealer, who had not disclosed certain stock, to dispose of it without the knowledge of the Excise Department. He would point out that in this case the elements were, that there was no declaration of the presence of the spirit at Chantilly; that it was the partner Cavanagh who arranged with his father for the storage of the spirit at Green Point, and that the partner, Gourlay, was the person who instructed the men to have it taken out to Chantilly. And then there was one significant point. Simpson, in his evidence for the defence, said that when some of the cases originally sent to Green Point were brought in they were returned to bond, and subsequently removed to Sir Lowry-road. The inference was that the appellants wished it to be thought that these cases were coming from bond and not from the undeclared stock at Chantilly. There was ample evidence to show that though the return was compiled by an employee, it was signed by one of the partners, and it was perfectly clear that the partners had a knowledge of the omission, and that the Magistrate was justified in coming to the conclusion that there was an element of fraud in the omission to make a return of the spirit at Chantilly.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the appellants in this case were large wholesale dealers in liquor; and, when it was being discussed in Parliament, whether or not any additional duty should be imposed on foreign spirits, they cleared from bond some 3,000 cases of spirit, on the supposition, that, once the spirit had been removed from bond, it would not be liable to pay the extra duty. However, Parliament decided to impose not an additional Customs duty but an excise on stocks in hand. At the time of the removal of the spirit from bond, it was immaterial to the Government where the spirit was stored. When the Act of last session was passed foreign spirits were rendered liable to the Excise, and dealers were required to send in a return of stocks in hand. The appellants sent in a return, showing the stock in their Short-street and Sir Lowry-road stores; but no return was sent in, in respect to that at Chantilly. When it was found that there was a stock of spirit at Chantilly, the appellants were prosecuted. They were charged, under the 18th section of Act 36 of 1904, with making a false return; or, alternatively, with failing to make a return, without reasonable excuse. The Magistrate did not convict on the charge of making a false return, but he did on the charge of omitting to make a return. The alternative charge, of omitting to make a return, without reasonable excuse, was laid as having been done, that they did "wrongfully, intentionally, and fraudulently, etc." It was unnecessary to say that the omission was made with intent to defraud, except in so far as it might influence the Magistrate as to the punishment should there be a conviction. It was clear that the appellants did actually omit to make a return of the spirit at Chantilly. The excuse they gave was, that then Clerk Duffy, who made out the return, did so on information received from the bonding store manager, whom, he thought, included the cases at Chantilly. That excuse, the Magistrate held, was not a reasonable excuse for the conduct of the parties. When the case was before the Court in the first instance, he (Sir J. Buchanan) remarked, that, if the returns had been checked with the book, the omission to include the 149 cases at Green Point could not have been noticed; and he thought that the neglect to check the returns was such as to justify the Magistrate in saying that there was no reasonable excuse for the omission to make a return of the 149 cases. As to whether there had been fraudulent intent, it was very difficult to deal with that point. The Magistrate held that there had been fraudulent intent. The fine which was inflicted by the Magistrate had been imposed was one within his jurisdiction and under the 49th section of Act 20 of 1856, it was directed that on appeal or review no sentence of a Magistrate should be reversed or altered by reason merely that the degree of punishment awarded may appear to the Court to have been usually or unnecessarily severe. This Court therefore cannot now reduce the fine, though it is open to represent to the Governor its opinion that the sentence be mitigated. In a case such as this, one Magistrate would take one point of view, and another Magistrate another point of view; and it was probable that this Court would not have imposed the maximum fine. But the question now before the Court: Was the conviction justified by the evidence?—he thought that it was. Was the fine imposed within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate? It is clear that it was. In these circumstances, the Court would have to dismiss the appeal. If it were desired that he should give a personal opinion on the question of fraud, he would say that, under the circumstances, considering the position of the parties, he did not think that he would have come to the same conclusion as the Magistrate had done on that question of fraud. The appeal would be dismissed, with costs.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Harsant and Harsant.]

REX V. PERKAAR.

This was an appeal by Bawa S. Peakaar from the decision of the A.R.M., Wynberg, sentencing him to a month's imprisonment with hard labour for receiving goods, knowing them to have been stolen. Mr. Burton appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Nightingale for the Crown.

The appeal was brought on the grounds that the conviction was not supported by evidence.

Mr. Burton, for the appellant, was heard in argument on the facts.

Without calling upon Mr. Nightingale Buchanan, A.C.J., said that in this case two persons were charged with the crime of theft or receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen. Of the two persons, one was a boy, who accompanied the driver of the prosecutor's bread cart, and the other was a shopkeeper, to whom bread was delivered. The boy pleaded guilty. The evidence showed that after the driver temporarily left the cart the boy gave the man a certain amount of bread. The bread, on the return of the cart was found to be short, and the evidence went on to show that a certain amount of bread was found in the man's shop, hidden away under the counter. The man stated that he had bought the bread from the driver, but the bread so bought was left on the counter, and the driver contradicted the prisoner as to the quantity bought. The man's conduct was not that of a bona-fide purchaser. The evidence was sufficient to justify the Magistrate, and the appeal would be dismissed.

GENERAL MOTION.

Ex parte NEWARK.

Mr. Russell moved for a rule nisi to attach certain property, in the estate of Thomas George Denbigh, to found jurisdiction, and for leave to sue by edictal citation for damages incurred by a breach of contract.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: What goods is it desired to attach; in whose possession are they?]

Mr. Russell: They are at 70, Loopstreet, in the possession of Mr. Barforth. I do not know what is the nature of the goods.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: What is the value of the goods in his possession?]
About £75.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: What are the damages likely to be—£30 or £40?]
I am instructed £150.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Oh, no! That is out of the question altogether. The Court will grant a rule nisi to attach the goods in the possession of Barforth, to found jurisdiction, leave being allowed to the respondent to move to have the rule set aside, action to be commenced forthwith.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

HALVERSON V. ANDERSON. } 1905.
} Sept. 5th.

Contract—Breach—Measure of damages.

This was an action in which Mrs. Gertrude E. Halverson, local manageress of the Viava Treatment Company, sued the South African proprietor, William Thomas Anderson, to recover £500 as damages for breach of contract.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a widow, residing and carrying on business at Cape Town. The defendant resides at Johannesburg, and carries on business there under the style of the South African Viavi Company.

2. By order of this Honourable Court, dated the 22nd June, 1905, certain property of the defendant has been attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

3. On or about the 3rd January, 1905, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a certain written contract.

4. Thereafter, the plaintiff hired and paid for rooms for the carrying on of the business set forth in the contract, engaged workers for the same, and did all things necessary to be done by her under the said contract.

5. On or about the 16th May, 1905, the plaintiff requested and required the defendant to replenish and supply her with a stock of the preparations and goods referred to in the contract. Particulars of the preparations and goods so required were furnished to the defendant.

6. The defendant, in breach of the said contract, refused and has wholly failed to supply the plaintiff with any of the stock so required.

7. The plaintiff has been and is unable to obtain the said preparations and goods elsewhere, and by reason of the defendant's failure has lost profits which she would otherwise have obtained from the sale of the said preparations and goods, and has otherwise sustained damage.

8. The plaintiff estimates the damage sustained as in paragraph 7 set forth in the sum of £250.

9. The defendant still refuses to supply her with any preparation or goods, and has repudiated the said contract, though the plaintiff has always been ready and willing to perform her part of the said contract.

10. The plaintiff has been put to expense in hiring rooms, in engaging workers, and in other ways for carrying out the contract, and by reason of the defendant's repudiation will lose profits which she would have obtained during the unexpired portion of the contract.

11. The plaintiff estimates the damages caused to her, as in paragraph 10 set forth, by the defendant's repudiation in the sum of £250.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) £250 damages, as in paragraphs 7 and 8 set forth; (b) an order declaring that the said contract is cancelled by reason of the defendant's repudiation thereof; (c) £250 damages, as in paragraphs 10 and 11 set forth; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraph 1 of the declaration, save that he says that the business of the South African Viavi Co. is not carried on by him alone, but by him and his brother Alexander Anderson in partnership, trading together under the said style.

2. As to paragraph 2, the defendant says that the property attached belongs, not to him, but to the partnership aforesaid.

3. The defendant admits paragraph 3.

4. Save as hereunder, the defendant denies paragraphs 4 and 10. The plaintiff was allowed to continue the use of the office provided by defendant, and to use the furniture therein as in the contract provided. Half of the monthly rental has each month since the date of the said contract been paid out of defendant's moneys.

5. The plaintiff's position under the contract aforesaid was that of manager at Cape Town for the defendant, and it was her duty, not only to carry out the contract, but to obey all lawful directions given by the defendant, and to supply all information lawfully required by defendant in connection with the business.

6. The defendant failed and neglected to carry out the terms of the contract aforesaid; more particularly she failed and neglected to hire and train the necessary workers, as under the contract provided, and refused to give to the defendant proper particulars of what she was doing in this regard, though repeatedly requested by the defendant prior to May 15 last, and subsequently so to do.

7. The plaintiff further failed to give defendant proper financial statements, though called upon by him so to do.

8. The defendant is not under the contract bound to supply any fixed or definite quantities of the Viavi preparations; but is, and always has been, ready to forward reasonable quantities thereof to plaintiff. The plaintiff made no requisition for such preparations in May, 1905; but failed and refused till June 9, 1905, to furnish to defendant proper returns of the supplies of such preparations furnished by defendant, and still in her possession, though repeatedly requested so to do in April, 1905, and subsequently.

9. On the said 9th June, 1905, the said return of supplies was forwarded by plaintiff, with a financial statement, from which it appeared that plaintiff was retaining in her possession £46 15s. 3d. of defendant's moneys, which should under the agreement have been paid into defendant's bank.

10. Defendant denies that plaintiff was in need of Viavi supplies as set forth in her declaration; and says that he forwarded to plaintiff all such Viavi supplies as were reasonable under all the circumstances. He is, and has been, prepared to forward further supplies conditionally, on duly receiving the reports, information, and returns aforesaid, which he is lawfully entitled to, and on plaintiff duly carrying out her part of the contract; but the defendant says he was justified, by reason of the premises, in refusing to send further supplies, save upon such conditions being carried out.

11. Subject to the above, defendant denies paragraphs 5, 6, and 9.

12. As to paragraphs 7, 8, and 11, the defendant denies that plaintiff has suffered any damages as alleged in her declaration, and denies that he is in law liable for the same, even if she has suffered such damages.

Wherefore defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

For a claim in reconvention, the defendant (now plaintiff) says:

14. The defendant wrongfully and unlawfully detains in her possession the sum of £46 15s. 3d., being amounts due to plaintiff under the agreement aforesaid, as part proceeds of sales effected by defendant.

15. The defendant by her negligence and breaches of contract aforesaid has greatly retarded the development of plaintiff's business, and has caused great loss of profits to plaintiff.

16. The plaintiff has suffered damages which he estimates at £500, by reason of the premises.

Wherefore plaintiff in reconvention claims: (a) Repayment by defendant of the sum of £46 15s. 3d., being moneys due to plaintiff, and wrongfully and unlawfully detained by defendant as aforesaid; (b) the sum of £500 as and for damages as aforesaid; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs.

The plaintiff's replication was as follows:

1. As to her position and duties, the plaintiff refers to the terms of the contract annexed to the intendit.

2. She says that she has hired and trained the necessary workers, has forwarded proper statements and reports, and has done all things which she is liable to do in respect of her contract.

3. She admits that from the amount shown in the financial statement forwarded in June, 1905, as due to the defendant she has deducted the sum of £29 13s. 9d., being an amount due to her by the defendant for passage money and travelling expenses from New Zealand to South Africa, but not paid to her or credited to her in the said statement or any previous statement. She admits that she retains the balance for the purpose of satisfying, to the extent of such balance, rent and other expenses incurred since the said statement in connection with the Viavi business in Cape Town, for which expenses the defendant is liable.

4. Save as above, and save in so far as the plea contains admissions, she denies all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law therein contained and joins issue thereon, and again prays for judgment with costs.

For a rejoinder to the plaintiff's replication, the defendant says that he denies specially that plaintiff is or was entitled to deduct the sums referred to in paragraph 3 of the replication, as she alleges that she has done, or that defendant is liable as therein set forth. Otherwise, save for admissions, the defendant denies the allegations and conclusions in the replication contained, joins issue thereon, and again, as before, prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Gardiner for plaintiff; Mr. Close (with him Mr. Sutton) for defendant.

Mrs. Gertrude E. Halvorsen, the plaintiff, stated she came to South Africa in May, 1904, under contract with the American Viavi Company, which was eventually taken over by Anderson, who was the local agent. In the letter appointing witness, which was written in the previous January, the company enclosed the contracts to be signed. No mention was made in that contract of witness's passage money. Witness was brought to South Africa to assist Mr. Anderson in organising the country, as she had had vast experience in other countries. Witness arrived in South Africa, and travelled about the country. Viavi was a proprietary medicine, chiefly used by ladies. It was necessary to train ladies in different parts of the country to sell the medicine. Witness arrived in Cape Town in January last, when the contract was entered into with Anderson. When witness arrived in Cape Town, the contract was changed, as she then became manageress.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: How did you train the workers?]

We taught them how to call on ladies, and to teach them what the remedy is.

Witness (continuing) said she travelled around the country giving lessons to workers, and also lecturing. Witness furnished weekly statements. Up to May she made on an average about £50 a month for herself. At first she had no reasons for complaint, but on May 1 she had to complain of the insufficiency of the stock. She had no reply, and she therefore sent an urgent wire, as she was refusing money daily because of the lack of supplies. On May 15 she received a letter from defendant containing a number of complaints, and making particular reference to her "disloyal attitude" and "sailing under false colours." Further correspondence passed between the parties, from which it appeared the defendant's main complaint against the plaintiff was because her notepaper was headed as if she were manageress of the South African business. By defendant's action, plaintiff had to refuse many orders.

In cross-examination, witness said she came to South Africa under a traveller's contract. Under the system, South Africa was divided into territories, each under a manager. The manager was not supposed to act as saleswoman. There was no question of security when witness took over Cape Town district; on the contrary, Mr. Anderson was very anxious for her to do so. Witness never had a letter complaining of her lack of energy. It was almost impossible to get ladies to work Viavi in Cape Town. One could not get workers made to order. Witness denied that her letters to defendant were of an antagonistic nature.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: And is that the reason you didn't send more medicine?]

Mr. Close: We wanted particulars of accounts.

Witness (continuing) said she wrote to San Francisco every week, because the company there was interested in the company out here.

Mr. Close: But Mr. Anderson was the agent out here, and as long as he paid them it was quite sufficient. You wrote to San Francisco running the defendant down.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Is that the reason you refused to supply the medicine. If it is not it is quite irrelevant to the case.]

Examination continued: When witness found that defendant objected to her writing to San Francisco she stopped doing so.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said he could not stop the cross-examination, but counsel certainly seemed to be going outside the points relevant to the case. If these letters that were being read constituted a reason for stopping the supply of medicine he could understand cross-examination on them, but they did not.

Mr. Close said he regretted his lordship should have had to say that. The position taken up by the defendant was that he would have sent the medicine if the plaintiff had carried out her agreement loyally, but he contended that she had not done so, and the letters would prove his contention.

In further cross-examination, witness said she ran out of saleable stock, but she had other stock in hand.

By the Court: Very little stock had been put into the place after witness took it over.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

The defendant, William Thomas Anderson, in his evidence, bore out the statements made in his plea. After which he went into detail as to the different stock he decided not to order, as there was no sale for it. Some of the goods he did order were attached by the Court, and were at present in the King's Warehouse. Witness would have been able to supply the goods only for that reason. Tonics were not a very essential part of the treatment. The list of workers submitted by the plaintiff comprised a lot of persons, who were not workers, and a good many more whom she said she taught were working for the company before the arrival of the plaintiff in this country. Witness objected to one lady, who only gave lessons in French, and did no work. Witness first refused to supply stock, because he wanted to receive an account of the stock she had, and after that he refused, because she did not forward him the money which she told him she was holding over. Witness was quite willing to keep the contract on provided the plaintiff consented to prove that she was keeping her side. The action of the plaintiff about the heading of the newspaper did witness considerable harm.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: You asked to have "Cape Town Branch" put on, and that was done.]

Witness: It was typewritten, and I wanted it printed, because one could easily be typed to me and the others could go out without it.

Mr. Close: Did you actually find letters that were sent out like that.

Mr. Gardiner: They must be produced.

Witness (continuing) said that when he engaged plaintiff he had his own office, but after a short time there plaintiff moved into another office. Witness did not agree to her taking an office on a three years' lease.

In cross-examination, witness said that out of his Johannesburg stock he had to supply seven or eight different places. He denied that complaints were received from various places with regard to the supply of stock.

I put it to you that you received complaints?—No.

The stock you would sell in Johannesburg would pay you better?—No; all branches received the same terms.

You could always tell how your stock was going on?—Yes.

Well, I put it to you that you did not require these lists?—Yes; I did.

Why this pressing necessity in May?—I wanted a return of the stock.

Witness (continuing) said good workers were hard to get. When he got complaints from Mrs. Halvorsen that ladies were ill and requiring the medicine, he thought he was justified in keeping it back until he got the information he was asking from the plaintiff. He claimed £500 damages, which on the basis of what was done in East London he calculated was his loss through Mrs. Halvorsen not going on.

Buchanan, A.C.J., remarked that in that case Mrs. Halvorsen could also claim £500 damages.

James Smith, shipping agent in Cape Town, said in May last he got a case of Viavi remedies for Mr. Anderson, and his instructions were to hold them for Mrs. Halvorsen pending instructions from Johannesburg.

Mr. Close closed his case, and counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said an agreement was entered into in May last between the plaintiff and defendant, by which it was agreed that the plaintiff was to manage the Cape Town branch of the defendant's business, and was to hire and train workers for the business, and that she was to be supplied by defendant with the patent remedies used in the business, by the sale of which she was to be paid. The Cape Town branch had been opened some time before the plaintiff took it over, and at that time the business was a small one. The plaintiff began work in January, and worked on until May, at which time the business had greatly increased. In April the defendant refused to renew the stock, which was very low, and as a consequence plaintiff could not supply the orders received by her, and was prevented from earning her commission. As she was paid by results this was a matter of serious importance to her, and she eventually had to put the matter in the hands of her attorneys. Defendant in the ensuing correspondence made complaint of want of loyalty and the refusal to give information as to the branch business. But at most there was a delay owing to illness, not a refusal to give the information asked for. The plea mentioned another ground of complaint, namely, that the plaintiff failed to carry out her contract in having failed to give proper financial statements. As a fact, she rendered regular statements, and it was only in the last statement that she mixed up the stock on hand with stock sold on credit and not yet paid for. There was nothing in all this to justify defendant breaking his contract. His Lordship held that defendant had broken his contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. The plaintiff said she had £49 in hand which she had not remitted, but held it pending this action. This amount would have been sent to defendant in the ordinary course had the contract gone on. The defendant in reconvention claimed that amount. Now, the question of damages was one that could not be settled on a mathematical basis, and the Court had to look at all the circumstances, and take into consideration future as well as past losses. As a juror he would feel justified in awarding her £150, and from that amount would be deducted the amount claimed in re-convention. There would be judgment for £100 and costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REINEKE AND ANOTHER V. (1905.
LAKE.) Sept. 5th.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Somerset East. Mr. Van Zyl was for the appellants.

Counsel said exception was taken to the summons on the ground that the one defendant Maasdorp, being a surety, it would be necessary for the principal debtor to be excused before Maasdorp could be sued. The Magistrate decided against the exception. The defendant Reineke admitted his signature to the note, and claimed in reconvention £4, by reason of wrongful detention of furniture by the plaintiff. The defendant Maasdorp denied liability, as the principal debtor had not been excused.

The Magistrate held that Lake was the bona-fide owner of a promissory note for £3, and Maasdorp, if he had not wished to be personally liable, could have added the words, "without recourse to me." Counsel contended that Maasdorp's exception should have been upheld, as Reineke had property in his house at that time, and should therefore have been excused. The respondent had locked up Reineke's property, and sought to excuse himself by saying that Reineke had given his consent.

Hopley, J., upheld Maasdorp's appeal, with costs, in both Courts.

IMMELMAN AND MULLER V. DU PLESSIS.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Resident Magistrate, Calvinia. Mr. Burton was for the appellants. It appeared that the respondent, who was an agent of the London and Lancashire Insurance Co., had ordered certain goods from the appellants, and part of the goods which he had been charged for was chargeable to the account of the London and Lancashire Insurance Co.

Mr. Burton contended that the respondent had ordered the goods, and was liable to the appellants. The Magistrate had neglected the central point that the contract was one between the respondent and the appellants.

Hopley, J.: This is a paltry case, and unless there was something behind the matter, which does not appear in evidence, it seems to me the case ought never to have come even into the Magistrate's Court. If it is true that this amount is due on behalf of a wealthy company like the London and Lancashire Insurance Co., these people ought to experience no difficulty in recovering it from the agent, or from the company themselves. But it has been rightly contended on appeal that the legal point that was before the Magistrate was one as to with whom the contract was made in the first instance. It may very well be known, and probably is known, that a certain man is an agent for a company when he goes to a small business, and it may very well have been known in this town—Sutherland—that the respondent (Du Plessis) was the agent for the London and Lancashire Co. In this case a man goes to people who are general dealers, and buys some articles, which he places to his private account, and some articles which ought to have been paid for by his principals. Now, as a matter of fact and common sense, they contracted with the agent personally for everything he gets, and they leave the agent to settle with the principals. That, no doubt, was what happened in the present case, and that is what Muller, one of the plaintiffs in this case, swore was the course of business in this particular case. I have no doubt that such was the course of business. I think the Magistrate ought to have made Du Plessis responsible for the amount, and left him to settle with his principals. It seems to me that the Magistrate was wrong when, even if he held a guinea was all that Du Plessis was liable for, he should not have made the appellants pay the costs of the action. Although Du Plessis admitted he owed a guinea, he never tendered it, not even at the trial. In my opinion, the Magistrate's judgment should be reversed, and judgment entered for the plaintiffs for the sum prayed in the Court below, with costs in both Courts.

ROSS AND CO. V. SMITH. } 1905.
Supt. 5th.

Surety—Insolvency of principal —Costs of excussion.

S. had guaranteed certain debts of C. to the amount of £30. Shortly after S. had given his guarantee, C. made further purchases from the same dealer to the amount of near'y £5. A few days after entering into this latter transaction, C. paid to the vendor of the goods some £7 10s., and thereafter her estate was sequestrated. Some £2 costs were incurred in excussing her for the principal debt. In the Court below the Magistrate refused to give judgment for these costs.

Held on appeal, that a surety is liable for costs of excussion.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg, wherein judgment was given for the plaintiffs for £12 13s., with costs. The defendant introduced one Mrs. Connolly to the plaintiffs, and guaranteed payment of the account in the event of non-payment by Mrs. Connolly. Provisional judgment was taken, with costs, against Mrs. Connolly, whose estate had been sequestrated. The original claim was for £29 17s. for a stove and utensils supplied to Mrs. Connolly, but to bring it within the jurisdiction of the Court the amount was reduced to £20. The Magistrate, in his reasons, held that the defendant did guarantee payment for the stove £30, and utensils £4 19s. 11d. On the account £7 10s. was paid, making the amount £27 9s. 11d., with costs of the action brought against the principal debtor, £2 7s. 1d., the amount stood at £29 17s. There was no evidence that the defendant was liable for £4 19s. 11d. for utensils and £2 7s. 1d., the costs against the principal debtor. Taking those amounts from the amount claimed, it left judgment for the plaintiffs for £12 13s., with costs. The plaintiffs appealed on the ground that they were entitled to judgment for the full amount of £20, an amount for which the Magistrate could have given judgment when he allowed for the waiver in the first instance.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones for the defendant; Mr. Burton for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J.: In this case the defendant was sued as a surety to one Mrs. Connolly, whom he introduced to the plaintiffs as being a person worthy of credit, and for whom he promised to be surety in the matter of the purchase of a stove for £30, of which she was to pay instalments of £7 10s. Apparently some days afterwards she purchased utensils to the extent of £4 19s. 11d. A few days after she purchased this stove she paid off the first instalment of £7 10s., so that, with the utensils in the case there would have been owing, or at all events there would have been an amount standing in the books of the plaintiff of £22 10s., for which the defendant was surety to the plaintiffs in case of the failure of Mrs. Connolly. As a matter of fact, Mrs. Connolly never paid anything but the first instalment. She became insolvent, and notice was given to the surety that she would be excused, and he would be held liable for any costs. She was excused, and £2 7s. 1d. were the costs incurred. The surety thereupon became liable for the costs of the excussion, as well as for the debt for which he was surety, which amounted at that date to £24 17s. 1d. The plaintiff claimed from the defendant in the Court below the sum of £20, and he showed by his account how that was arrived at. It was arrived at by taking the items I have already enumerated, amounting to £24 17s. 1d., and adding to them £4 19s. 11d. for the utensils which Mrs. Connolly had bought. That brought the whole amount up to £29 17s., and the plaintiff professed to waive £9 17s., so as to bring the amount within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate's Court. The Magistrate found that the defendant was not surety for the utensils for £4 19s. 11d., and he therefore struck that amount out, and he also found that there was nothing to make him liable for the £2 7s. 1d., which appeared to have been the costs incurred, and I think it is quite clear that they are the costs of the excussion. I do not feel inclined to send the case back to the Magistrate's Court whereby further expenses would be incurred to prove that that amount was the costs incurred. The Magistrate simply overlooked the fact that a surety was liable by law for such costs when he had due notice that they were going to be incurred. Taking the items the plaintiff presented, it would appear that his account would stand at £29 17s., and then he waived £9 17s. Now, what is the effect of the waiver, and what does it mean? I think it means that the plaintiff says in effect: "I have a claim for over your jurisdiction, and I show the various items, and I only ask you for judgment for £20, because that is all you can give me." Looking at it in that way, what was the state of affairs as it should have presented itself to the Magistrate's mind? There were the amounts fairly due to the plaintiffs by the surety of £24 17s. 1d. He is only asked of that amount to give judgment for £20, and he takes the whole waiver as being an amount of which he can reduce from anything he can find from the £20, and he gives the judgment for the balance. It does not seem to me in doing so he did full justice between the parties, because it is perfectly clear that the whole amount of £20 was properly and fairly owing by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and that the waiver was merely to bring the matter within his jurisdiction. In spite of the waiver when he found there was a fair debt of £20 owing, the Magistrate should have given judgment for the plaintiff for that amount. In my opinion, there should be judgment for the sum of £20 for the plaintiff, with costs.

TOBB V. ZIEHL.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate at Cathcart, in an action in which the plaintiff (respondent) claimed from the appellant £15, being the balance on an exchange of certain carts. On 6th December, 1904, plaintiff and defendant exchanged carts by mutual consent, the defendant agreeing to pay £15, as the difference in value. The Magistrate held that the counter-claim of the defendant was not a bona fide one, and counsel, after reading the record, submitted the evidence did not justify that finding. In his reasons, the Magistrate stated that the plaintiff sued the defendant for £15, in terms of an agreement. The defendant, however, denied the debt, on the ground of mala fides on the part of the plaintiff, and claimed the cancellation of the agreement. He put in a claim in reconvention for the return of his cart, or its value (£30), and excepted to the jurisdiction of the Court. The Court held that the exception could not be entertained until the defendant substantiated the allegations, and the Court further held that the counter-claim was not a bona fide one. The defendant noted an appeal on the exception to the counter-claim and to the jurisdiction of the Court.

Mr. Upington was for the appellant, and Mr. Burton was for the respondent.

Counsel submitted that the exception was properly taken. The counter-claim, if upheld, would have the effect of extinguishing the plaintiff's claim.

Mr. Burton contended that the Magistrate would have to satisfy himself about the bona fides of the defendant's counter-claim.

Hopley, J.: In this case the respondent sued the appellant for the sum of £15, which he alleged to be due to him as a balance from certain exchange of carts. It would appear from the evidence that the respondent did give a certain Raleigh cart to the appellant, who gave him in return an old cart of his own, and promised him in addition, or to boot, £15, to be paid at a future date. Before the arrival of the date when the cart was to be delivered, apparently the appellant had reason to examine more closely the cart which he had received from the respondent, and he says that he then found it was totally unfit for his use, and not in accordance with the representation made to him at the time of the exchange by the respondent, and that he immediately tried to rescind the contract by an amicable arrangement, but the respondent refused to meet him, and held him to his bargain. The time for the payment of the £15 passed, and the respondent sued in the Magistrate's Court the appellant for the sum of £15. Now, it seems to me perfectly clear that each cart in itself was value for over £20, or had been so treated by the parties. On the evidence in the Court below, the plaintiff valued his own cart at something like £40, and the defendant at something like £15 less. Everything the Magistrate had to decide grew out of the contract of exchange between the parties. The defendant pleaded that there had been practically fraudulent misrepresentations to him as to the condition of the cart. Taking the transaction as a whole, it seems to me there were matters involved which the Magistrate ought not to have tried as within his jurisdiction. When the defendant not only raised the issue of fraudulent misrepresentation, but a claim in reconvention for a rescission of the contract or the payment of the value of his cart (£30), it was beyond the Magistrate's jurisdiction. It became evident if such a plea was a bona fide one, and the counter-claim was a bona fide one, his jurisdiction was ousted. The defendant produced, not only his own evidence, but some strong evidence, which might go very far towards establishing his claim of misrepresentation. It is certainly clear that the cart was in a disabled condition shortly after the sale. It seems to me that the Magistrate ought to have come to the conclusion that the defendant was going to set up this as a bona fide plea and a bona fide counter-claim, and it was not for the Magistrate to go into the merits of the case, but he should have referred it to a higher court. On the evidence given by the defendant, the Magistrate ought to have held that his jurisdiction was ousted. Judgment will be for the appellant on the appeal. The judgment in the Court below will be changed to "exception allowed, with costs," the appellant to have the costs of appeal.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN]

CAPE TIMES, LTD. V. FISHER. } 1905.
 } Sept. 6th.

This was an action brought by the Cape Times Ltd. against A. M. Fisher, broker, of Cape Town, to recover £86 9s., money due for advertisements.

From the pleadings it appeared that about six months ago the plaintiffs signed a deed of composition with other creditors, by which no claim would be made on the defendant, so long as he paid some money within six months, however small, but that was on condition that the defendant paid the legal expenses incurred in a previous summons, which the defendant had failed to do. The defendant, in his plea, denied there was any stipulation before the deed was signed, and stated that there was an understanding that the expenses were to go on to the principal sum. In accordance with the agreement to pay something, 5s. had been tendered to the plaintiffs yesterday. The debt was admitted.

Mr. Close was for the plaintiffs, and Dr. Greer was for the defendants.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: The onus is on you to set up the defence. You admit the debt?]

Dr. Greer: Yes, my lord.

Joseph Fisher, son of the defendant, who acted in obtaining signatures on the deed of composition, stated at that time his father was very ill. His father obtained the first signature, and witness completed the list. The managing director of the "Cape Times," Mr. F. L. St. Leger, agreed to sign the deed of composition. There was no one present at the time, and when the deed was signed a gentleman came over and asked about previous costs, and witness said the costs would be added on to the principal sum. None of the other creditors raised this question about costs. His father was too ill at the time to trouble him with any business.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: The document was taken round after a summons for £86 9s. had been issued by the "Cape Times." Mr. St. Leger did not say that he would not sign the document unless the costs were paid. There was nothing said about the costs until the document was signed.

Adolph Marks Fisher, defendant in the case, stated that at the time the document was being signed, he was in a very weak state of health. It was only afterwards that he learned that his son had taken round the document and got the signatures. He was too ill to reply to the letter sent by Mr. Knox Baxter, reminding him of the agreement with the "Cape Times," and demanding the amount due, as he had failed to pay the costs. Witness subsequently wrote asking for time, and offering to pay the costs if any such promise had been made on his behalf. Each creditor was sent 5s. on Tuesday, in accordance with his agreement to pay something within six months, however small.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Before he sent his letter in reply to Mr. Baxter, he was satisfied that his son gave him the same version then as was given in the court.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Summons was taken out against you last February?]

Yes.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: You had no defence in the action?—I cannot say.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Why did you enter an appearance then, and increase the costs?—I did not enter an appearance.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Is that your signature?—Yes.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: You had no defence in the case—why did you enter an appearance?—I did not know anything about it.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: You increased the costs by this conduct of yours, which is unnecessary.]

Dr. Greer closed his case.

F. L. St. Leger, manager of the plaintiff company, stated that in February last summons was taken out against the defendant, and witness was anxious to get the money in. The defendant's son called at the office when Mr. Wheeler was present. Mr. Wheeler said summons had been issued, and then witness asked about the costs, and Fisher said the costs would be paid. Witness would not have signed the document otherwise. Fisher was to settle the matter of costs with Mr. Baxter.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: Witness did not sign the document before there was any question of costs. When Fisher said he would see the costs paid witness did not think the costs were to be added to the principal amount.

William John Arthur Wheeler, assistant general manager of the "Cape Times," said he took young Fisher in to Mr. St. Leger, and witness was present during the whole of the time the arrangement was being entered into. The question of costs was mentioned before the document was signed. Fisher went out to get the money for the costs, but did not return.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: Witness was positive that he was present during the whole of the conversation between Fisher and Mr. St. Leger.

Mr. Close closed his case, and counsel, having been heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant in the beginning of February last for £86 odd due to the plaintiff for advertising charges, and appearance was entered to the summons, and on the 6th March, the defendant's son called on the plaintiff, and got him to sign the document produced, which gave time for the payment of the debt. The managing director of the plaintiff company says it was signed on condition that the legal expenses which had already been incurred should be paid forthwith. This had never been done. The case quoted by Dr. Greer might possibly have applied to this case if in consequence of the signature the other creditors of the defendant had been induced to forego any portion of their claims. But it was simply an agreement to wait, and not to take proceedings for six months, on condition some sum of money was paid on account. The whole of the liability remains exactly as it is. The document did not prejudice the other creditors; and it is a coincidence that the six months time allowed expired yesterday. The defendant has sent the sum of 5s. to the plaintiff, and he says, having paid 5s. within six months he is now entitled to further time. There is no further time stipulated for. This agreement to give time was, I think, entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant on the express condition that the legal expenses incurred should be paid. The defendant has had plenty of time within which to pay the legal expenses, and has not done so. The agreement was signed on the 6th March, and a demand was made in May for the legal expenses. The defendant then asked for a little time, and not until June was a declaration filed, I can see no legal defence to the action brought. The defendant certainly seems to be in a bad financial position, but the plaintiff is entitled to his decree. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff, with costs.

BAKKER V. LUDOLPH. { 1905.
Sept. 6th.

Magistrate's jurisdiction—Counterclaim—Evidence of bona fides—Set off.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate, of Wynberg. The appellant brought an action against respondent for trespass. The respondent let a house and certain surrounding land to the appellant. During the term of the appellant's tenancy, the respondent placed on this ground without the appellant's leave or licence certain building material for the purpose of erecting a stoep, whereupon the appellant brought an action for £20 damages in the Magistrate's Court, at Wynberg. The respondent counter-claimed a sum of £30, made up of two items of £5 odd, being a liquidated claim, and unliquidated claims for certain damages for waste of water and damage to certain trees. The Magistrate set off one unliquidated claim against the other, and dismissed the case. The appeal was on the ground that the finding of the Magistrate that the counter-claim was a bona fide one, was against the evidence, and his decision setting off the one unliquidated claim against the other was contrary to law. In his reasons, the Magistrate said the counter-claim was a mixed one. The plaintiff's claim was for damages, and he was of opinion that the defendant's claim could be set off. The amount claimed by the defendant exceeded the jurisdiction of the Court, and the Court was of opinion that the counter-claim was a bona fide one, and dismissed the case.

Mr. Rowson was for the appellant, and Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent.

Mr. Rowson: This appeal is brought on the grounds (1) that the evidence ought not to have convinced the Magistrate that the counter claim was a bona fide one. This is not a question of the Magistrate's finding on facts, but of the Magistrate's inferences from facts. The respondent candidly admits that he would never have claimed damages in re-convention had not damages been claimed against him. Then the price he sets on his wood and water is excessive. The appellant had a right to take wood for his own use, and there is nothing to show that he exercised this right unreasonably.

(2) Our chief ground of appeal is that the Magistrate's judgment was bad in law. He set off one unliquidated claim against another unliquidated. An unliquidated claim cannot be set off against anything. Van der Linden (1—18—4—3, Cod. (4—32—14—1). There are many decided cases which show that an unliquidated claim cannot be set off against a liquidated. See (v.g.) Humphreys v. Humphreys (14 C.T.R., 244), and the very full judgment of De Villiers, C.J. If an unliquidated claim cannot be set off against a liquidated, a fortiori, it cannot be set off against another unliquidated. On this point Voet (16—2—17) is explicit. The Magistrate should have heard appellant's claim for damages, liquidated it by his judgment, and then have tried the liquidated part of the counter-claim which was clearly within his jurisdiction. Jooste v. Petzer (11 S.C.R., 60). As to the exception regarding future rights, see Mai v. Borana and Others (13 C.T.R., 1151).

[Mr. Gardiner said he was not prepared to uphold that exception.]

Counsel was proceeding to argue on the second exception to the effect that a landlord might be a trespasser on his own property, and cited Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant (C. 16, Sec. 3), when he was stopped by the Court.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: The Magistrate gave no decision on these exceptions, so we need not discuss them.]

Mr. Gardiner: All the decided cases as to set-off refer to cases in which an unliquidated claim was set-off against one which was liquidated. That is not the present case, for here both the claims were unliquidated. The fact that the respondent admitted that he might not have claimed damages in reconvention had not damages first been claimed in convention is no evidence of mala-fides. A bona-fide claim is a claim which the person who makes it honestly believes he can substantiate; no matter whether he intends to enforce it or not. Then, was the counter-claim really unliquidated? There was a charge for certain trees and for water. These were really goods sold and delivered, and if the Court is with me in this view, I submit that the Magistrate's jurisdiction was ousted. See Brady v. Michiel (3 Juta, 178).

Without calling on Mr. Rowson,

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The claim set up by the defendant was divisible, and the Magistrate has not dealt with the question as to whether a landlord could be guilty of trespass on his own land. He has simply satisfied himself that the defendant's claim was a bona fide one, but that was not sufficient. He should have heard plaintiff's claim, and the defendant's claim so far as it was competent to be set off. The appeal would be allowed, and the case ordered to be reheard by the Magistrate to whom the question of costs in both courts would be remitted.

HODGSON V. VAN SCHALKWYK.

Costs—Tender.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Williston. The plaintiff claimed £20 damages for a trespass of sheep. The defendant had offered £5. previous to the case, although he did not tender it, and claimed in reconvention £10 for malicious prosecution. The appeal was brought on the ground that a legal tender had not been made, and that costs should not have been given to the defendant.

The Magistrate, in his reasons, held that the damage was fully covered by the tender of £5. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that no legal tender was made. In his opinion, the tender was practically a legal one, and there was sufficient evidence to show that the action was the outcome of a previous case. He held that the proceedings were malicious, and gave judgment for the defendant for £5, with costs.

Mr. Close for appellant. Mr. Benjamin for respondent.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said if the defendant had repeated his tender in the plea, the Magistrate would have been justified in making the plaintiff pay all costs subsequent to the date of the tender. But instead of repeating the tender the defendant claimed in reconvention £20 damages, alleged to have been occasioned by the plaintiff maliciously proceeding with the case. The plaintiff brought his action to recover damages, and the fact that a tender was made justified his taking legal proceedings. The mere fact that he refused the tender and proceeded to trial would not justify any Court in saying that the civil proceedings were malicious. The Magistrate decided that the proceedings were malicious, and gave judgment for £10, but this judgment of the Magistrate could not possibly be sustained. The appeal must be allowed, with costs. Judgment in the Court below will be entered for the plaintiff on the claim in convention for £5, and in the claim in reconvention for the defendant with costs.

STUPART V. CROSS.

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant, and Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent. The appeal was from a judgment of the Acting Resident Magistrate of Somerset West, by which the defendant was ordered to pay £10 and costs for the removal of wood and material.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

His Lordship, in giving judgment, said: The plaintiff in this case bought a farm, and on this farm there was a stable at the time of the sale. Mrs.

Kruger lived on the farm, and he had professed an interest in the farm, and was allowed to remain for six months. The defendant, who had no right on the farm, had gone to live there three years before with one Joubert, who was the lessee of the farm. He had lived with Mrs. Kruger apparently, and while so living with her he built this stable. Having built the stable, he removed the roof before he left the farm. He certainly was not entitled to be put in any better position than a mala fide possessor. One of the principles in the case of De Beers and the London and S.A. Exploration Company (10 Juta 350) is that a mala fide possessor, who has affixed materials to the land, and before demand by the owner, has disannexed and removed them, is not deemed to have parted with his ownership in the materials. That was a very well-considered judgment, and must be deemed as an exposition of our law on the subject. The defendant, Stupart, removed these materials, which he had placed on the land, and having removed the materials, I think the rules laid down in the De Beers case must apply. It is with some hesitation I allow the appeal, with costs, and judgment, with absolution from the instance in the Court below, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ESTATE STEENSMA V. (1905, STEENSMA. (Sept. 6th.

This was an action brought by the trustee in the insolvent estate of W. J. Steensma, jun., against W. J. Steensma, sen., insolvent's father, for an order for the cancellation of a certain deed of transfer of a certain piece of property, situated at Maitland, passed by the son in favour of the father.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiff was duly appointed trustee in the insolvent estate of W. J. Steensma, jun., and the defendant was the insolvent's father, residing at Maitland. On December 12, 1904, the insolvent's estate was compulsorily sequestrated. On November 16, 1903, W. J. Steensma, jun., obtained transfer of a certain piece of land, situated at Maitland; and on the same day a mortgage bond was passed on the property by the insolvent in favour of his father, W. J. Steensma, sen. On October 21, 1904, transfer of the land in question was passed by the son to the father, under cover of an alleged purchase and sale, the purchase price being £2,000, of which £1,200 was covered by the bond, and £800 paid, it was alleged, in cash. In December of the same year the estate of W. J. Steensma, jun., was sequestrated; and the trustee alleged that no valuable consideration was given by the father, and that transfer was made when the liabilities in the estate exceeded the assets; or, alternatively, that the transaction was not bona fide, and was carried out with the object of defrauding the creditors in the estate. The defendant, in reply, said that the sale was bona fide.

[Hopley, J.: The whole point is whether there was a cash balance?]

Mr. Burton: Yes; and whether, if a cash balance was paid, the transaction was bona fide.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) appeared for the plaintiff; and Mr. Upington (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) was for the defendant.

Gother Mann stated that he was the plaintiff in the present action as the sole trustee in the insolvent estate of W. J. Steensma, jun. Upon the confirmation of witness's appointment, he called for the books and papers in the estate. After some trouble, the books were handed over; and witness now produced certain three ledgers. One appeared to refer to a shop business, which was carried on for about 18 months, stopping about December, 1903. Another ledger—it was journal and ledger combined—referred to the same business. In December, 1903, the whole stock of the shop was disposed of to Friedman. The third book referred to a forage business. In one of the books there was an index reference to the insolvent's private transactions; but the pages 210 to 215 were torn out of the book. Page 213, one of those torn out, was indicated in the book as referring to insolvent's private transactions. Otherwise, there was no reference to the insolvent's private transactions. There was considerable difficulty in getting information from the insolvent; and witness prosecuted him; and eventually the insolvent was sentenced to two months' imprisonment, for failing to attend a meeting of creditors. From June, 1904, the insolvent did not keep any banking account. Witness had prepared a statement of the insolvent's position on September 30, 1904. He set down the liabilities as follows: Unsecured liabilities, £628 2s. 2d.; bonds, £5,250. The assets consisted entirely of immovable property, which witness took at the municipal valuation. The statement showed a deficiency of £1,628. As a matter of fact, the total amount realised by the sale of the properties was less than the total municipal valuation. Witness produced the proofs of debts on the estate. The assets put in the statement did not include the property now in question, Steensdale, Maitland. Had Steensdale been taken in, it would have made a difference of about £300 in favour of the insolvent; the deficiency would have been brought down to about £1,528. The estate appeared to have been in an insolvent position for a long time—even at the time at which the first bond was passed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The only concurrent liabilities proved amounted to £326 2s. 11d. The first bond was passed in 1903 for £4,500; two others were passed, one in March, 1904, and the other in April of the same year. Witness considered that the municipal valuation of the properties in the estate was a fair one. The other entries in the book out of which the two pages were torn referred to transactions in 1898 and 1899. There had been a fraud with regard to the raising of a loan on an adjacent property. Witness had not prosecuted the insolvent for that. The loan purported to be on Steensdale, whereas it was put on the plot of land. You were deluded into the belief that the property valued at £1,500 was the adjacent plot. How can you explain that? The insolvent will be able to do that.

Witness (continuing) said that in September last none of the properties would have realised the municipal valuation. The bond for £500 on Steensdale was passed in March, 1904. Witness was not aware then that there was a bond on it for £1,200. The loan was granted subject to the land being free.

You never looked up the title deeds? That would have been looked into when the loan was passed.

There was no record of land transactions in the insolvent's books.

Johannes E. Neethling, auctioneer, and partner in Hofmeyr and Son, stated he had a good deal to do with landed property. He knew the property of the insolvent, Steensma. Witness was engaged to sell the place. He valued the property at the market value existing in September last at £2,500. There were tenements and a shop, and witness valued them at about £1,400. The insolvent had been owing him £37 since February, 1903, over the sale of two horses.

John Mellville Marquard, bookkeeper for Marquard and Sons, said that since the end of 1903 the insolvent had owed his firm £290 3s. for goods supplied.

Pieter Steyn, farmer, Malmesbury, said Steensma, jun., had been owing him £53 for hay for more than a year.

Ernest John Richard Janson, plumber, Zonnebloem, said a sum of £40 had been owing him by the insolvent since August of last year. When he saw the old man the latter told him that he had lent £2,000 on the property, and was going to claim it.

Hubert Corder, clerk in the R.M.'s Court, Cape Town, produced extracts from judgments in that court against Steensma, jun., for £26 17s. 3d. on September 23, 1904; for £60 2s. on September 27, 1904; decree of civil imprisonment for £20 3s. 6d., in September, 1904; and £52 on October 21, 1904.

William Muller, clerk in the Deeds Office, produced the transfer of the property, dated October 21, 1904.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Anthony van Ryneveld, of Dempers and Van Ryneveld attorney, said the defendant was a client of his firm, and in 1903 the defendant had £1,100 on deposit. Later on defendant obtained £300 from another client, Mr. Le Roux, about February, 1904, and the bond for £1,200 was passed in November, 1903. The father and the son came on the occasions when the instalments on the £300 were paid, and went away together with the cheques. The transfer from Steensma, jun., to Steensma, sen., was proposed by his firm, and the same day transfer was passed a mortgage was raised for £850; of that, £300 was utilised in paying Le Roux, and the balance was paid out according to the instructions of Steensma, jun.

William Jan Steensma, sen., father of the insolvent stated that in May, 1904, he advanced the insolvent £200 for the purpose of erecting a building on the property in question, for which amount he gave a promissory note, falling due on August 28. He also advanced him £1,200, for which a bond was passed on the property on November 16, 1903, and went off as part payment of the purchase amount of the property. In August, 1904, witness purchased the property for £2,000, £1,200 of which was deducted to pay off the bond. For the balance he raised a loan from Messrs. Dempers and Van Ryneveld, for which he passed a bond on October 21, 1904, simultaneously with the passing of the transfer. £318 was deducted by Messrs. Dempers and Van Ryneveld, being amount due by the insolvent to that firm. Witness paid £290 due to Messrs. Marquard and Co on a promissory note. When witness paid these amounts, and purchased the property he believed his son was quite solvent.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness did not have to claim anything against the estate. Witness did not know of any judgments being obtained against the insolvent prior to September. The insolvent did not apply to witness for the loan of money to meet certain judgments obtained against him in May.

Do you read the papers?—Yes; I read the "News" and "One Land."

[Hopley, J.: Do you read the "Times"?]—I do occasionally.

[Hopley, J.: Mr. Burton wants to know if you read the proceedings at the Magistrate's Court.]

Mr. Upington: Cases of this sort are not reported.

Mr. Burton: There is a gazette published for the protection of merchants, which contains them.

[Hopley, J.: Do you read that gazette?] - I did when I was in business, but I don't now.

Witness (continuing) denied that he told Johnson that he had lent his son £2,000 on the property. He also denied having told Johnston that he was sorry for him, as he was the biggest creditor.

Witness remembered Steyn telling him that a cheque given by his son was not honoured at the bank. It was in August that witness agreed to purchase the property from his son.

Mr. Upington closed his case, and counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J., said the plaintiff in this case claimed that a certain transfer of a certain property at Maitland, made on or about the 31st of October, 1904, should be set aside under the terms of the 83rd section of the Insolvent Ordinance, or otherwise by virtue of the common law, as being an alienation in fraud of creditors. The allegations made in the declaration were very serious, and when the aid of the 83rd section was invoked, the onus on the plaintiff is very strong in order that the relief he sought might be granted. It had to be proved that the assets at the time of the alienation were less than the liabilities, and that the contract was not a bona-fide one. Then only could the prayer be granted. The circumstances of the present case seemed to show that the insolvent was carrying on business, and must have been able to get plenty of credit. He owned considerable immovable property, on which he appeared to have got big loans. Possibly on account of the depression that had recently taken place, the insolvent seemed to have got into financial difficulties. In December, 1903, he sold a business, but what the nature of his employment in 1904 was, was not known. During last year judgments were obtained against him, and it was proved that he was in monetary difficulties, and that the defendant must have known of it. One reason given was because the insolvent was the defendant's son. One fact was that a cheque of the son's was dishonoured in the July, and another fact was that the father went security for the son to Messrs. Marquard for the sum of £290. It was apparent that at this time the father intended purchasing one of the properties. These isolated circumstances did not necessarily bring to the attention of the father that the son was in financial difficulties, as he was well known to have other valuable properties, on one of which there was a bond of £4,500. Not a word had been said to show that the defendant knew that the value of the property had dwindled so low. The father might very well have thought that his son would pull through all right, and that he was only temporarily embarrassed. His whole evidence tended to show that he was anxious to help his son but the evidence did not show that the son confided in his father, which would be a thing that he would not be likely to do, as it might tend to close up the fountain from which he was obtaining financial relief. It was evident that about September 1 the sale to the defendant was under consideration, as a power of attorney was made by him regarding it. All the documents tended to show that the sale must have taken place in September. All that made it impossible to get transfer before October 23. In September there was no knowledge on the part of the defendant of the insolvency of the son. It seemed to the Court that there had been a disastrous sale of a portion of this property, when the bondholder was the only bidder, and got the property for the amount of his bond. The amount of £800 had actually been paid by the defendant for the one property to the insolvent, in addition to the bond, and the Court believed that it was a bona fide transaction of the father to assist his son in his temporary embarrassment. If this was a mala-fide transaction, as was suggested, it was most peculiar that in every step of this transaction the defendant should have had the advice of an attorney of the Court. It seemed to the Court that the transactions were perfectly bona fide, and that the plaintiff must fail in his action as far as the 83rd section of the Insolvent Ordinance was concerned, and judgment would be for the defendant with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

VAN BIERCK AND CRAW- (1905.
FORD V. STABLEFORD. (Sept. 7th.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg, in a case in which Van Blerck and Crawford, of Cape Town, sued William Stableford for the recovery of £16, for goods alleged to have been sold and delivered.

The Magistrate gave judgment for the appellants for £5 3s. 6d. This sum was arrived at by taking from the amount claimed the charges for certain goods in dispute. The appeal was brought on the grounds that the evidence did not support the decision of the Magistrate, and that judgment should have been for the plaintiffs for the full amount claimed.

Mr. Alexander was for the appellants, the plaintiffs in the Court below; the respondent did not enter an appearance.

Mr. Alexander was heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that there was a direct conflict of evidence in this case, and the Magistrate disallowed some portions of the claim, and allowed other portions. It all depended on the credibility of the witnesses; and the Court could not say that the Magistrate was so utterly wrong in his judgment as to justify it in altering his decision. It was not possible for the Court, in a case depending solely on the credibility of witnesses, without having the witnesses before it, to set aside the finding of the Magistrate, who had had the witnesses before him. The appeal would be dismissed, with costs.

DE VILLIERS V. GROENEWALD AND ANOTHER.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Murraysburg, in a case in which the plaintiff, the appellant on appeal, sued the defendants, the respondents on appeal, on a promissory note for £40. Dr. Greer appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Benjamin for the respondents.

Dr. Greer said that in the Court below one of the defendants, Doornik, confessed judgment, and the Magistrate refused to give judgment against the other, Groeneveldt. The one against whom judgment was given was worthless, and the appellant now sought to obtain judgment against the partnership. The plea was a denial of signature, and stated that Doornik had no right to sign for the partnership, in terms of the deed for partnership between the defendants, and that he had no right to sign a promissory note on the partnership for his private requirements. The appellant set up the case that the money was required for the purposes of the partnership, and not for Doornik's private requirements.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said the defendants Groenewald and Doornik were partners under a written deed of partnership, and by the deed Groenewald had charge of the bookkeeping and the management of the accounts, and the cheques were to be signed by Groenewald. Doornik, at the express direction of his partners, bought the pair of mules. Under ordinary circumstances, one partner could bind the other. But in this case there was the express authorization to pledge the credit of the partnership, and the property bought went into the partnership assets, and were now in the actual possession of Groenewald, the objecting partner, who also when spoken to by the appellant, acknowledged his liability. Under these circumstances he thought the Magistrate erred in keeping to the wording of the deed of partnership between Doornik and Groenewald, when in this transaction it had been departed from by the parties thereto. The appeal would be allowed, with costs, and judgment entered for the appellant in the Court below, with costs.

SCHWARTZ V. LOUW.

Mr. Burton was for the appellant, and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent. The appeal was from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Wellington, in a claim by the plaintiff against the defendant for the delivery of a heifer, the property of the plaintiff, or its value (£15). The Magistrate upheld an exception that the name of the plaintiff's attorney was not disclosed, and dismissed the case.

Counsel for the respondent having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said the summons was duly signed by the clerk of the Court, and was duly served on the defendant. The Magistrate's Court Act said nothing about the summons being also signed by an attorney. The exception ought never to have been allowed. The appeal would be allowed, with costs, and the exception over-ruled, and the case remitted to the Magistrate to be tried on its merits.

DU TOIT V. LILIENFELD BROS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the appellant, and Mr. Burton was for the respondents. The appeal was from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Hope Town, in which the plaintiff claimed £20 for goods sold and delivered, the transaction being in respect of two guns, which the defendant contended were not in order. The Magistrate granted absolution from the instance, against which the plaintiff appealed.

Buchanan, A.C.J., dismissed the appeal, with costs.

DU PREEZ V. BRINK.

This was an appeal from the Resident Magistrate's Court of Wellington, in which the plaintiff sued for £185, less £7 paid on account, being the balance due for goods sold and delivered. The judgment of the Magistrate was absolution from the instance, with no order as to costs, and the point of the appeal was as to the question of costs. The defendant (appellant) contended that he was entitled to costs.

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the respondent.

In the course of the hearing of the case, Buchanan, A.C.J., remarking on the Magistrate's decision, said: "That's a most extraordinary judgment. Persons like that should not be allowed to try cases. The reasoning is in one direction, and the judgment is in the opposite direction. I am sorry that there is not a cross appeal, and then I might have settled the whole question."

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the Magistrate had in this case, granted absolution from the instance, without costs. If the Magistrate believed the plaintiff's evidence, he ought to have given judgment for the plaintiff, with costs. If he did not believe the plaintiff, he should have given judgment for the tenderer. Instead of that, he granted absolution from the instance, but he had not given satisfactory reasons for his refusal to allow the defendant his costs. The defendant ought to have had his costs. There should be some grounds for departing from the rule that the victorious party was allowed costs. The judgment of the Court would be that the appeal would be allowed, with costs; judgment to be entered for the plaintiff in the Court below for the sum of £1 15s. 7d., the amount of the tender, and absolution from the instance in the case of the remaining claims, the plaintiff to pay costs.

REYNOLDS AND CO. V. LUYT.

Mr. Van Zyl (for the appellant) stated that this was an appeal from the Resident Magistrate of Prieska, in which respondent was allowed judgment for an amount of £4 4s., loss sustained through breach of contract. The respondent alleged that he had been engaged by appellant to go and fetch 8,400 lb. of goods at an agreed charge of 1s. per 100 lb. When he arrived at the place where the goods lay, the appellants' agents refused to hand all the goods over. Appellants stated that they never entered into any such contract, and merely told respondent that if he was anxious to get the goods at all, he must hurry. They were quite willing to pay for the goods he brought back.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that there was a direct conflict of evidence as to whether or not a contract had been entered into between the parties. The respondent stated Reynolds told him that there was 8,400 lb. weight of goods to be transported, and that they asked him to hurry up and go and fetch them. Appellants denied this, and said that they told respondent that if he wanted to fetch the goods he would have to hurry. The question was one entirely of fact. The Magistrate based his judgment upon the evidence and telegrams put in, and in his lordship's opinion, there was not sufficient grounds for upsetting the Magistrate's decision. The appeal would therefore be dismissed, with costs.

WELLS V. M'BANGA.

This was an appeal brought by the appellant Wells to have the judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Maclear set aside. The case arose out of the ownership of a certain horse, which the plaintiff M'Banga averred had been lost by him in 1902, and which was afterwards found in the possession of the present appellant. Respondent identified the horse by certain marks and by a split ear.

Mr. Close appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Van Zyl for the respondent.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said this was a question of bare facts. The respondent claimed the horse, which he believed was stolen from him. It was stated that a native who was at present undergoing five years' imprisonment, had stolen the horse. In his opinion, the appellant took a risk in buying the horse from a person like the thief. The identity of the horse as being the one stolen from respondent was mainly based on the facts of the age of the horse and the docking of its tail. As regarded the age, the evidence was very conflicting. The Magistrate, however, heard all the witnesses, and had the further advantage of seeing the horse, and he came to the conclusion that the horse was the property of the respondent, and must be restored to him. In his lordship's opinion, the Magistrate had acted according to the evidence adduced, therefore the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

APPEALS.

FORTUIN V. ENGELBRECHT. { 1005.
Sept. 7th.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate of Springbokfontein, given on March 30 last. The appellant was the plaintiff in the action in the Court below, and the respondent was the defendant. The claim was for £20 damages for assault, and the defendant admitted the assault. It was alleged that the defendant struck the plaintiff with his fist, kicked him in the side, and caused him injuries. He admitted the injuries, but denied the damages, and judgment was given for the plaintiff for £3 damages, and costs of suit. The plaintiff appealed on the grounds of the insufficiency of the damages awarded.

Mr. Upington appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Gardiner for the respondent.

Hopley, J., said he thought this was rather an up-hill fight for the appellant.

Mr. Upington said that in another case it might be, but in this case it was not so, as certain specific damages were proven.

The evidence of the appellant, Paulus Fortuin, taken in the Court below, was to the effect that he was a post-cart driver, and also a grain farmer. On February 5 last he was taking a load of fish from the coast to Springbokfontein, and in the course of his journey he outspanned on the farm Elansklop. He asked the proprietor—Willem Engelbrecht, the respondent—for a pipe of tobacco, and the latter, without saying a word, struck him under the jaw and knocked him down, and then kicked him about the face and body. For this offence the respondent was fined £2 and costs, or 14 days in the Criminal Court; and as a result of the injuries he received the appellant claimed £20 damages, but the magistrate only awarded him £3. The evidence of medical men who attended the appellant during his illness was to the effect that prior to this onslaught the appellant was very healthy, but since then he had been suffering from the effects of the kicks he received. Amongst the items claimed for in the damages was the value of a foal born dead, and the progeny of a mare which the appellant had to hire to ride to see the doctor.

The respondent's evidence in the Court below was to the effect that the appellant stole his forage and wasted the water, which had to be brought a considerable distance, and although cautioned about doing so, continued to do so.

The Magistrate in his reasons stated that the assault for which some considerable provocation existed was of a very mild nature. The evidence of the plaintiff and his father could not be relied upon in any particular. Many contradictory statements were made by them, some of which were proved to be lies. The doctor in his evidence clearly stated that no evidence of kicks in the side could be found. The plaintiff's statement that he rode a long distance after the assault went to prove that his injuries were not of a very serious nature. The Magistrate, in making his award, treated the matter without taking into consideration the provocation.

Mr. Upington contended that the Magistrate was not justified in considering an assault where a man was kicked about the head and face and body was a mild assault. There was no evidence on the record to support the view the Magistrate took. Then, again, there was no evidence forthcoming to prove that the appellant gave the respondent any provocation for the assault.

[Hopley, J.: I consider there is sufficient provocation in a man stealing your forage and wasting your water, for which you have to send a wagon and team of mules miles.]

Mr. Upington said there was very little doubt but that the respondent kicked the appellant when he was lying on the ground. If he did not, then he must have possessed the acrobatic skill of a "Savate."

[Hopley, J.: That is not impossible, knowing the ways of these Hottentots.]

Mr. Upington: But these are white men.

[Hopley, J.: Oh, are they! We are not so sure about that. There is a part of this country where there are very few white people, and the natives possess the names of Europeans.]

On reference to the charge sheet, Mr. Upington ascertained that the respondent was described as a European.

Mr. Upington further contended that when European farmers had little differences they did not usually stand on one leg and kick at their opponent's head and face with the other. Continuing, Mr. Upington said that his client had been badly treated, and asked for a favourable consideration of his appeal.

Hopley, J., commented upon the distances from Magistracies in Namaqualand, and to that might be due the fact that the assault had taken place. He (the learned Judge) said that no one would have complained if the Magistrate had found for a little more, but when one considered that the Magistrate had heard the evidence of both sides, it seemed strange that the Supreme Court should, without hearing witnesses, be asked to set the Magistrate's decision aside. The appeal would be dismissed, with costs.

SMITH V. DE JAGER AND OTHERS.

This was an appeal against the decision of the R.M., Colesberg.

From the record it appeared that eight of the appellant's oxen had been attached by respondents in execution of a writ against appellant's father. Appellant was a minor, and had been a rebel during the late war. The cattle were given him the day after he returned from commando by his father, as it was appellant's birthday. He had paid for a considerable amount of his school fees, and managed his own affairs. He had not allowed his oxen to be considered as belonging to his father, because the military authorities were paying attentions to the cattle of rebels. The R.M., Colesberg, had declared six of the cattle to be non-executable, but in doing so had said that the plaintiffs and his witnesses' (with the exception of two) evidence was not of the best.

Mr. Upington was for the appellant (plaintiff in Court below), and Mr. Gardiner for the respondent.

Hopley, J., said he was of the opinion that the matter should be remitted back to the Magistrate for further inquiry as to the ownership of the oxen, which he had declared to be liable for execution, and the further costs of such inquiry and the costs of the appeal would have to abide the results of the inquiry. With regard to the costs of the interpleader action, he thought that the Magistrate had not exercised his judicial discretion in ordering each party to pay his own costs. The Magistrate had given the appellant six out of the eight oxen, practically making him successful in his action. There had been no tender made to the plaintiff, and he had succeeded in the major portion of his claim. His lordship thought that the Magistrate ought to have awarded him the costs. He thought that the judgment should be changed on that point. The costs in the Court of Appeal would have to be paid by the respondent.

STARTUP V. BUJEYE.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate of Maclear, granting a decree against the appellant for £9 10s.

From the record it appeared that the appellant was engaged in winding up the estate of a Mr. Roberts, of Maclear, which had been sequestrated. Prior to the insolvency, the respondent, a native named Bujeye, pledged some cattle with Mrs. Roberts for a loan of £9 10s. During the period in which the estate was being wound up, Bujeye, hearing that the cattle had been seized, went into the appellant's office, and paid the £9 10s., which he said he owed to Roberts's estate. His name not being found on the list of debtors, the appellant decided not to pay the money over again until Bujeye returned. He came in a few days after, and on being again asked, said he owed the money to Mr. Roberts, and the appellant then paid the money into the estate. An action was brought to recover the amount, and the Magistrate gave a decree for it against which decision Startup appealed.

Mr. Gardiner for appellant. Respondent in default.

Hopley, J., said the attorney was behaving very wrongly when he did not rectify a mistake of this sort.

Mr. Gardiner: But the money has been paid into the estate, and Startup had not got it.

Hopley, J.: He is the trustee's agent, and surely he can pay the money out of the estate to this unfortunate fellow.

Mr. Gardiner said the trustee always had great difficulty in dealing with an estate between man and wife.

[Hopley, J.: And this poor ignorant Kafir has also got into a difficult position.]

Mr. Gardiner: When the name of this Kafir was not on the list of debtors to the estate, Startup took precautions to ascertain that the money was due to the insolvent's estate, and asked him before handing the money over, and Bujeye clearly stated that he owed the money to Mr. Roberts.

Counsel contended that Startup had received the money, and had distributed it in good faith after having made every inquiry, and he was not legally responsible for it. The trustee was the responsible person.

Hopley, J., said he considered that these people had dealt with this unfortunate native in a terribly careless way. It made one indignant to think of it. Mrs. Roberts lent him money at interest close on 100 per cent. per annum, and when the stock which he had given as a pledge were being seized in the insolvent's estate, nobody took the trouble to explain that the cattle did not belong to the estate. Startup, who was the legal adviser, should have done something in that direction. The result of it all was that this unfortunate native, in the hands of these Europeans, was going to be absolutely ruined. The Court might have to give judgment against this native, but such judgment would not reflect very much to the credit of the Europeans. He did not wish to say that Startup did anything that was really wrong. It was rather Roberts that he (his lordship) blamed.

ed, because they must have known whose the cattle were, and did not take the trouble to explain. He could not understand why Startup did not say to the native when the matter came to light that the estate had not been wound up, and that as the native was not a concurrent creditor, he would get his money back, and have saved all this expense which the unfortunate native had been put to.

Counsel having been further heard in argument,

Hopley, J., said this appeal he feared would have to be allowed, but he regretted exceedingly the whole of these proceedings. He regretted them very much, because he felt certain the unfortunate native, who was affected by the order and the reversal of the decision in the Court below, would never properly get into his head that he had not been properly treated to British justice by the British Courts. He seemed to his lordship to have received very questionable treatment at the hands of the Europeans with whom he became involved. His lordship then proceeded to review the evidence, after which he said it became the duty of the Roberts, when they discovered the mistake, to have protected this native. If they had done so, and disclosed the real owner of these cattle, then there would have been no further trouble in this matter, and the native would not have been deprived presumably of all the property he possessed. The Magistrate seemed to have founded his judgment on the facts of the case, as they appeared before him. He examined the documents, and came to the conclusion that the money was due to Mrs. Roberts, and not Roberts's estate, and he came to the conclusion that it was paid on behalf of Mrs. Roberts. Under all the circumstances there did seem to be no claim against Startup personally. Bujeye might have sued the estate for the refund of the money they got hold of, and which was not theirs. He would still be able to get back the money if the estate was not wound up, or there might have to be a contribution account by the creditors to give this money back to the native. Although these proceedings would probably ruin Bujeye, he feared he would have to give absolution from the instance, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

CIVIL APPEALS.

SMITH V. WATNEY. } 1905.
{ Sept. 8th.

Messenger of R.M. Court—Attachment—Sale in execution.

It is the duty of a messenger who has been entrusted with a writ of execution to attach the goods named therein and sell them on the due date, even if they are claimed by a third person. In such case he should take security for indemnity from the judgment creditor.

This was an appeal from the decision of the A.R.M., of Malmesbury, in a case heard before him, in which the present respondent was the plaintiff and the appellant was the defendant. Judgment was given for £12 8s. in favour of the plaintiff, who was the messenger of the Magistrate's Court. The defendant Smith had previously obtained judgment against one H. J. Hoffman, and thereafter took out a writ of execution. The plaintiff seized two mules which were afterwards claimed by one Lombard, who had a lien on them for rent. The plaintiff refused to sell the mules, until the defendant guaranteed to pay the rent due to Lombard. Upon receiving the guarantee the mules were sold for £22 10s., and the defendant (Smith) duly received the proceeds. The plaintiff paid Lombard the £14 rent, but the defendant refused to refund the money. The Magistrate, for the purposes of the case, said he would take Smith's version of what took place at the office between him and the plaintiff, and he held that whatever the messenger did, after he informed the judgment creditor, that he must be assumed to have done so as the agent of the creditor.

Mr Close was for the appellant, Mr. Van Zyl was for the respondent.

Hopley, J., said that in this case there was an action by Smith against Hoffman and Smith recovered damages for the sum of £16, and costs, and a writ of execution was issued from the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Malmesbury, ordering the Messenger of the Court to take Hoffman's goods to satisfy Smith's claim. He went out apparently as he was intended to do, and there attached two mules and a cart. Lombard gave security that he would produce these at the right date for sale. It appeared that a few days after Lombard put in a claim, and he had some right to these mules, as they were pledged to him as rent for a farm he had leased to Hoffman. He produced a note to that effect, and about four days after the attachment he seemed to have gone into Malmesbury, and made an affidavit that the mules had been handed to him, and that they were his bona fide property. The Messenger of the Court drew the attention of Smith to the fact that the mules were pledged to Lombard, and Smith admitted that he saw the note of pledge. Now, it was at this interview if at all that the Court must fix the subsequent rights of the parties, with which they were concerned in this appeal. The Messenger of the Court said that upon his showing the note and bringing Lombard's claim to the notice of Smith, Smith said that he did not think much of it, and that he asked if the cart would realise sufficient to pay more than his claim, and the Messenger of the Court said he thought it would, whereupon Smith authorised him to settle with Lombard, and told him to let the sale go on on the basis. That was the Messenger's clear and distinct version of what took place at that interview, but Smith, in his evidence, denied that anything of that sort took place. He admitted seeing the pledge note, and stated he expressed his contempt for it, and that he never authorised the Messenger to guarantee or promise to pay Lombard his rent. It seemed to the Court that it would have been well for the Magistrate to have found either one way or the other as to which of these was the more likely version, but he had not been able to make up his mind to the point of being able to pronounce which of these people he believed and he had gone with considerable ability and care into the law of the case with the object of showing that the messenger's duty ceased when a third party claimed the property. The magistrate held that the messenger of the Court acted merely as the agent to Smith. The Court could not hold that view. The messenger had been commanded to do certain things by the writ that was entrusted to him, and it was his duty to do those things unless something stopped him, the mere putting in of a claim by a third party should not have done so. It was his duty to go on and sell on the right day. He could protect himself from loss at the hands of the judgment creditor, whose writ was in his hands. The messenger of the Court was, he supposed, an experienced messenger, and he should have known that there were ways of protecting himself. He did not do that. The proper thing for the magistrate to have done was to give absolution from the instance, and the appeal would be allowed and the judgment altered. The plaintiff would have to pay costs.

FUMBA V. DICKERSON. } 1905.
Sopt. 8th.

Carrier—Negligence.

D. hired F.'s wagon to carry certain grain and saw it loaded on the wagon, and also saw that there was a sail cloth wherewith to cover it. The wagon was in charge of F.'s brother. On arrival at the store of D.'s agent, the grain was found to be wet, and the agent refused to accept delivery.

Held on appeal, that as there was no evidence of negligence against F. or his servants, D. was not entitled to recover damages.

D. had lent to F. certain bags in which to carry the grain under the agreement that they should be returned. On F.'s failure to return them, D. sued him for their value as "goods sold and delivered."

Held, that this action having been wrongly brought, D. was not entitled to recover.

Van der Merwe v. Colonial Government (15 C.T.R., 456) distinguished.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate of Tabankulu in a case in which the plaintiff, Dickerson, the present respondent, sued the defendant Fumba, the present appellant, for the recovery of £33 15s. damages, alleged by the plaintiff to be owing to him on account of the negligence of the defendant and for goods delivered.

From the record it appeared that the plaintiff came to the defendant and engaged with him for his (Fumba's) wagon to carry 20 bags of mealies and 10 bags of Kafir corn to a place in the Flagstaff District. The mealies and corn were valued at £1 per bag. On the journey they got damaged by rain, with the result that when they reached their destination the plaintiff's agent refused to take delivery. The plaintiff alleged that the damage to the corn was caused by the defendant's negligence, and he claimed £1 value of the corn and mealies, £30, and £3 15s. for goods given to the defendant in consideration of the cartage. The magistrate in the Court below gave judgment for the plaintiff for £26 5s. The plea was a denial of liability for the damage, the £3 15s. being admitted.

In the course of the evidence for the plaintiff in the Court below, it was stated that Dickerson offered to allow Fumba for the bags which were in good condition, and that the defendant led him to believe he would bring back the good grain, the arrangement being that he was to be paid for the return cartage. No bags were, however, returned by the defendant. The grain was good when placed on the wagon.

The magistrate, in giving judgment, based his decision on the case of Van der Merwe v. The Colonial Government (15 C.T.R. 456), where the defendant was held liable for damage caused by not furnishing a sail-cloth with a wagon. He gave judgment for £26 15s., being 15s. per bag for the grain and £3 15s. in respect of the goods, which was admitted.

Mr. Le Roux appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Benjamin for the respondent.

Mr. Le Roux said that the mistake the magistrate had made in basing his decision on the case of Van der Merwe v. The Colonial Government was in looking upon the present appellant as a common carrier. In the case of Tregidga v. Sirewright, reported in Vol. 14 Supreme Court Reports, p. 76, and 7 C.T.R., 67, the Chief Justice held that the Praetor's edict extended to carriers by land; but he (counsel) contended that this was to be taken as applying only to common carriers by land. In the present case the plaintiff came to the defendant and engaged his (Fumba's) wagon; therefore the defendant could not be regarded as a common carrier, and Golini Fumba, the appellant's brother, who drove the wagon, could be regarded only as the respondent's agent, in so far as he looked after the grain, and as the appellant's agent, in so far as he looked after the horses. The case was really one of letting and hiring. Bower, the respondent's servant, helped to load up the wagon, and it was admitted by the defendant that it had a sail-cloth. In the Court below no evidence was called to rebut the allegation of negligence; neither was there any to prove negligence. There was a sail-cloth on the wagon, and there was no proof that they, on appellant's side, had not done the best they could to avoid the damage.

[Hopley, J.: Your point is that the defendant saw the wagon, and he saw the sail-cloth with which it was furnished, and should have seen if they were fit to carry the grain?]

Mr. Le Roux: Yes, and, further, there is no proof of negligence.

[Hopley, J.: There was a sail-cloth on the cart; of course, if the driver were to take the sail-cloth off and sleep in it in a rain-storm, leaving the grain exposed, that would be different?]

Mr. Le Roux: Exactly, but there is no proof that we did not do our best—that there was any negligence.

Hopley, J., said that in this case some important points arose, and if it had not been that that was the last possible day in which he could give judgment before proceeding on circuit, he would have taken time to consider it, but as he had not very much doubt himself, he felt ready to give judgment on the case as it stood. The plaintiff sued a native in the Territories who owned a wagon, as a great many natives there did, whom he had hired for a special trip from Mount Ayliff to Lukisikisi to carry some grain. This was about January or February last—during the rainy season in these parts. The appellant sent his wagon to the respondent's store, where the latter had an opportunity of examining it, and seeing that it was all right, and where it was to be presumed he loaded it. Now, it had been argued that if any damage occurred to this grain thereafter, the carrier should be held responsible for it. Mr. Justice Maasdorp had laid down in a similar case that where a man contracted to do carrying work, he must do so to the best of his ability, and that he was liable for negligence if he should exhibit any negligence in the course of the work he undertook. In the present case the journey was undertaken, and it was said that it should have taken four days, when in reality it took 12 days, and on arrival at the end of the journey the respondent's agent refused to take delivery of the grain, as it was wet. That was the clearest way to increase the damage which had been incurred. What the agent should have done was to open the sacks, and have seen how much of the grain had been damaged. The respondents, it was presumed, had seen to the loading of the wagon before it started on its journey, and the covering of it, and as no negligence was proved against the carrier he could not be held responsible. The Magistrate based his judgment on the case of Van der Merwe v. The Colonial Government, which was to a large extent similar. It did not seem to the Court that the judgment in that case should affect the present case, for in that negligence on the part of the carrier was proved. In the present case nobody seemed to have asked how the wet occurred, and they ought to have gone more deeply into the question, and ascertained if the damp was due to the negligence of the carrier. That had not been done, and it seemed to His Lordship that that portion of the case in the Court below failed, and there should be a reversal of the judgment, and there would be absolution from the instance. GENERAL MOTIONS.

WOOD V. OXENDALE AND CO. { 1905.
Sept 12th.

Dr. Greer moved as a matter of urgency for the attachment of certain property ad fundandam jurisdictionem, pending the result of an action to be instituted by applicant for £2,500 damages for breach of contract, and for leave to sue by edictal citation. Respondents, it was stated, were an English company. Applicant alleged that he had been appointed their agent for Cape Colony, and that respondents had broken their contract with him.

Rule nisi granted, authorising the applicant to sue by edictal citation, and to attach one case of goods belonging to respondents, pending an action to be brought by the applicant, rule to be returnable on the 15th November, and to be served personally.

TUTT V. TUTT.

Mr. Lewis moved for a decree of divorce, in default of compliance with an order of the Court for the restitution of conjugal rights.

The application was granted.

Ex parte* WILSON.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved to have a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act made absolute.

The application was granted.

HENDRICKS V. CAPE TOWN TRAMWAY COMPANIES.

Dr. Greer moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis.

Mr. Molteno opposed the application.

The applicant's affidavit was to the effect that, owing to the negligence of the defendant companies, a cart he was driving was upset. He was taken to hospital, where his leg was amputated. He claimed £2,000 damages. He was not worth £10, and consequently sought to sue in forma pauperis.

The affidavit of Donald McDonald stated that the pole against which the applicant's cart collided was a fixture, and that the applicant, when he reported the matter, made no statement with regard to a projection of the rails. He saw the rails three months after the accident, and there was nothing wrong with them. The applicant's wife admitted to deponent that her husband ran against the pole, and that the accident was caused through no fault of the Tramway Company, but through that of her husband.

An affidavit made by Henry van den Westhuizen stated that the accident was not due to the negligence of the defendant company. In the interval between the accident and when the applicant reported the accident, the road had been repaired.

Other affidavits made by spectators stated that the horse bolted, and collided with the post.

A replying affidavit by the applicant denied that the horse bolted.

The affidavit of Charles Millar stated that at the spot where the accident occurred, the rail was about an inch above the level of the road.

Catherine Hendricks denied having told Mr. McDonald that the accident was the fault of her husband.

Mr. Molteno said the Court had made the rule that the probabilities should be in favour of the petitioner before granting an order. On the affidavits before the Court, could it be held that the applicant was likely to succeed in his suit. The result would be that the Tramway Company would be put to heavy expense, whilst the applicant would have nothing to lose.

Dr. Greer said he placed himself in the hands of the Court. If there was no chance of the applicant succeeding in his action, of course, it would be inadvisable to proceed with the action. Mr. McDonald had stated that he saw the place where the accident occurred three months after the accident, and that nothing had been done to it in the meantime; whilst Mr. Van der Westhuizen stated that the road had been repaired and reguttered. If the cart had struck the telegraph pole, the boy would have fallen towards the road, but he was thrown towards the path.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that under the 125th Rule of Court provision was made for a person who was a pauper, on the certificate of counsel, suing in forma pauperis. Several cases had been before the Court as to the effect of a barrister's certificate, and in the case of Almond v. Jordan, in the Eastern Districts Court, the practice of the Court was pretty fully stated. Since then a case had been before that Court when the question of the effect of counsel's certificate was also discussed, and it was decided that the right to sue in forma pauperis was not dependent solely on counsel's certificate. If the respondent could show that the applicant had no case the Court might well refuse leave. It was not a matter of right, but a privilege granted by the Court. Counsel in the present case declined to withdraw his certificate, and maintained that the opposition to the rule was founded on a conflict of testimony. The Court, under such circumstances, had discretion, and his Lordship thought the rule should be made absolute. His Lordship wished to adhere to the opinion that the mere certificate of counsel was not final, but when the case rested on the mere conflict of evidence, the Court would generally act on counsel's opinion. The rule would be made absolute, and Dr. Greer would be appointed to act as counsel, and Mr. J. Bujrski as attorney. His Lordship added that the Court looked upon counsel in these cases not as counsel for the party, but as advisers to the Court.

Ex parte THE ESTATE MOSTERT.

Mr. Gardiner moved to pass transfer of certain lands.

Mr. Benjamin opposed the application on behalf of the trustee of the estate.

Dr. Greer opposed on behalf of the respondent, Williams.

Mr. Gardiner said he had not been served by the respondent Williams with copies of the affidavit.

Dr. Greer said his client did not oppose. He had been called into court to explain why he should not pay costs.

The applicant in this motion, Willem Frederick Zipp, executor dative in the estate of the late Adrian Sybrandt Mostert, applied for an order authorising him to deal with and dispose of certain property situate at Observatory-road.

From the petition of the applicant it appeared that the late Adrian S. Mostert surrendered his estate as insolvent on the 22nd August, 1863, and at the time of the surrender he was the registered owner of a certain property situate at Observatory-road. The property was brought up in the schedule of the insolvent, and the transfer was handed over to the trustee of the estate. About 1864 Mostert died, leaving a mutual will, in which his wife and the children of the marriage were appointed the heirs. On the 29th December, 1868, the joint estate was rehabilitated. There still remained registered in the name of Adrian S. Mostert a certain portion of the land surrendered. Owing to the order of rehabilitation not having been made in terms of the 106th section of the Ordinance of 1843, the Registrar declined to pass transfer.

Counsel for the trustees read the affidavit of George Wm. Steytler, in which he stated that he was one of the trustees in the insolvent estate of Adrian Sybrandt Mostert. The applicant was not entitled to the property claimed in his petition, as it was still vested in the insolvent estate, and as trustee of the estate he claimed the same for the benefit of the creditors, the deficiency of whose claims amounted to £2,094 1s. 9d. At the time of the liquidation of the estate some of the property in the estate was sub-divided into lots, and it must have been an omission that these lots were not dealt with, or possibly not sufficient was offered, and they were not sold and subsequently forgotten.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said he thought this application was covered by the decision of the Court in the case of Parker. In this case a certain property was registered in the name of one Mostert. He became insolvent, and by the insolvency, he became divested of his property. Mostert died shortly afterwards, and his widow afterwards obtained the rehabilitation of the joint estate. This rehabilitation, however, was not one which would reinvest them with their estate. Part of the estate had been sold by the trustees in insolvency, and part had since been discovered not to have been sold. One of the trustees, who was still alive, could not say why it was not sold. The property was vested in the trustees for the benefit of the creditors, who had not been paid in full, and consequently were now entitled to payment out of the unreleased property of the estate. He thought the creditors would never have had the benefit of this property had not the applicant moved in the matter, and as he had brought the existence of this property to the notice of the creditors, it was only fair to say that the property should pay the costs of that and previous applications. The only question the Court had to decide was whether the executor dative should not be made to pay the costs of the second respondent.

Mr. Benjamin said he thought the costs of the second respondent should be paid by the applicant. The second respondent had been brought to the Court for no reason at all, in fact, such a proceeding seemed to be gross negligence on the part of the applicant.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that these costs were incurred in consequence of the order of Court, and the property would have to pay all costs.

BENNETT V. GILLANDERS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved as a matter of urgency for an interdict to restrain the defendant, Dr. J. Gillanders, from removing furniture from a cottage, occupied by him at Muizenberg. The affidavit of the petitioner stated that the respondent was indebted to him in the sum of £38 10s., being for seven months' rental of Blackpool Cottage, Muizenberg. Although petitioner did repeatedly demand the rent, the respondent had failed to pay it. The respondent had hired another house at Wynberg, where he intended removing his furniture, and if he was allowed to do this the petitioner would be defeated in obtaining payment of his claim, and would lose his lien on the furniture, and that he intended instituting an action to recover the amount of his rent.

The application was granted pending an action to be forthwith instituted.

1905.
STEPHAN BROS. AND OTHERS } Sept. 12th.
V. THE B.S.A. ASPHALT CO. } " 13th.
Oct. 17th.

This was an application on behalf of Stephan Bros. and others for the compulsory winding-up of the B.S.A. Asphalt Co., carrying on business in Strand-street, Cape Town.

The petition of H. R. Stephan, trading as Stephan Bros., and Jack Carey and Co., and Sidney Charles Gearing, trading as Cunningham and Gearing, set forth that the B.S.A. Asphalt Co. was registered on February 25, 1903, for the object inter alia of manufacturing asphalt and paving material, and laying of the same. The nominal capital of the company was £50,000, divided into £1 shares. According to the records of the Deeds Office, 36,517 £1 shares had been issued and allotted, and the full amount of £1 a share had been called up thereon. Calls to the amount of £1,206 5s. remained unpaid on divers of the said shares, but it was not expected that any considerable sum would be recovered from this source. The petitioners were creditors of the company, and had made repeated applications for the amount due to them, but the company had neglected to pay or satisfy the same, although they did not dispute their indebtedness. In August, 1905, the insolvent estate of James Garvie and Co. obtained judgment against the company for the sum of £281. A writ of attachment was issued, but the amount was still unpaid. The business of the company had been carried on since its formation at a loss, and was still being carried on at a loss, and the sooner the company was placed under liquidation, the better it would be for creditors and shareholders. The company was unable to pay its debts, and the assets were insufficient to provide for and satisfy all its debts and liabilities. At a general meeting of shareholders, the position of the company was so unsatisfactory that a committee of investigation, consisting of Messrs. J. Maynard Nash, Harry Gibson, C. H. W. Fleming, and A. B. Godbold, was appointed to go into the affairs of the company, and the result of their investigation brought to light serious irregularities and mismanagement. Having regard to the circumstances, it was just and equitable that that company should be wound up by the Court. It was desirable that provisional liquidators be appointed, and that the committee of investigation be appointed as such liquidators. The petitioners prayed: (1) That the said company may be wound up under the provisions of the Companies Act of 1892, and that for such purpose all necessary and proper directions may be given; and (2) that Messrs. Nash, Gibson, Fleming, and Godbold be appointed provisional liquidators, or that the Court would grant such other relief as may to their lordships seem meet.

The supporting petition of the Cape Town and District Gas, Light, and Coke Co., stated that the B.S.A. Co. had a contract with them for the surplus tar available at petitioners' works. In terms of this contract, the Asphalt Co. were indebted to petitioners for tar supplied up to the end of August, 1905, in the sum of £276 11s. 10d., to which must be added the value of the quantities supplied during the current month of September. Petitioners had experienced difficulty during the last few months in getting the surplus tar removed, in terms of their contract, having their works kept clear by the Asphalt Co. Petitioners found on inquiry that the Asphalt Co. were in difficulties, that a judgment had been obtained against the company for debt, and that the writ of execution remained unsatisfied. Petitioners were also informed that the affairs of the company had formed the subject matter of investigation, and that a report had been submitted for consideration by its shareholders, from which it was clear that the Asphalt Co. was hopelessly insolvent. Petitioners had learnt that the firm of Stephan Bros. and others were petitioning to have the Asphalt Co. liquidated, and placed under the winding-up-clauses of the Companies Act. Petitioners begged to support such application for compulsory winding up, and as it was evident that the administration of the affairs of the company by Andrew Allen, the managing director thereof, must form the subject matter of investigation by the liquidators when appointed, it was their opinion that some person other than Andrew Allen should be appointed as such liquidator. Petitioners were informed that the said Andrew Allen had intimated his intention of applying to be appointed one of the official liquidators of the Asphalt Company, to which petitioners were opposed. Petitioners were, next to the said Andrew Allen, the principal creditors of the Asphalt Company, and were apprehensive that if the liquidation be not speedily decreed the assets of the company would be gradually attached and sold in execution, to the prejudice of the claims of petitioners and others. Petitioners, therefore, suggested that the four gentlemen who were members of the committee of investigation should be appointed official liquidators.

Mr. Molteno for the first petitioners. Mr. Benjamin for the supporting petitioners. Respondents in default.

Buchanan, A.C.J., asked counsel whether it was necessary to appoint four liquidators.

Mr. Molteno said that the committee had presented a voluminous report.

The committee were appointed by the shareholders and the parties interested, and he thought it was well that they should still be associated. He added that he thought the Court was likely to hear more about the matter, inasmuch as very serious allegations were made.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the Court would not go into the report at present. A rule would be granted calling upon all persons to show cause why the company should not be placed under compulsory winding up, and why the persons named in the petition should not be appointed liquidators, rule to be returnable on the 16th October, and to be published once in the "Government Gazette" and once in the "Cape Times."

Postea (September 13).

Mr. Alexander (with him Mr. Watermeyer) moved to set aside the provisional liquidation proceedings.

Mr. Alexander based his application upon a petition by Mr. Andrew Allen, managing director of the company, which was in the following terms:

1. That a petition was presented in the Chamber-book by Stephan Bros. and others praying for the winding-up of petitioner's company, and for the appointment of Messrs. Gibson, Nash, Fleming, and Godbold as liquidators thereof.

2. That your lordship refused to deal with such a petition save in open court.

3. That on the 12th (yesterday), the petition was presented in court, and your lordship made a provisional order of liquidation, and at the same time appointed the gentlemen above named as liquidators.

4. That no notice whatsoever has been given your petitioner or to the company or to any of the company's officials of such intention to so petition, and that the first intimation that any such proceedings were contemplated was conveyed to him through the Cause List published in the "Cape Times."

5. That your petitioner begs leave to assert that, in his opinion, the said order was obtained by wilful misrepresentation.

6. That the claim lodged by Messrs. Stephan Bros. has repeatedly been offered to them and refused.

7. That the amount originally owing to them was £2,000, plus interest, and that in security thereof 10,000 shares of this company belonging to your petitioner were deposited with Stephan Bros.

8. That on 14th January, 1905, this sum had been paid off with the exception of £258 10s., and that, upon that date and on subsequent dates, a cheque hereunto attached, and dated 14th January, for the said balance, was rendered to Stephan Bros., and that the said cheque was declined, and that, on or about 7th August, the bank, as per certificate on the said cheque, certified that there were enough funds available.

9. That petitioner begs leave to refer your lordship to the letters of 20th June from Stephan Bros.; 8th August, from Van der Byl and De Villiers; and the letter of 15th August from the secretary of the company to the bank, and other relative letters hereto attached.

10. That the reason that Messrs. Stephan Bros. declined to accept payment was solely and simply in order to prevent your petitioner from voting on the 10,000 shares referred to, and which belonged to him.

11. That the claim lodged by Mr. E. P. Reilly on behalf of the Cape Town and District Gas Light and Coke Company is not due.

12. That an action in connection therewith was raised in the R.M. Court, and the decision of the Magistrate was that under clause 7 of the agreement between the Gas Company and petitioner's company, the sum sued for was not due.

13. Against this judgment the Gas Company have appealed, but at present the Magistrate's judgment stands, and your petitioner would crave leave to refer your lordship to the records therein.

14. On August 7, at a meeting of creditors of petitioner's company, an investigation Committee, consisting of Messrs. Gibson, Nash, Fleming, and Godbold, was appointed to investigate the affairs of the company.

15. That the appointment is set forth in the minute book of the company.

16. That at a meeting of shareholders, held on Monday, the 11th inst., the committee's report, together with a reply thereto by your petitioner, came up for discussion.

17. That at the outset of that meeting Mr. Attorney A. J. MacCallum took exception to the legality of the whole proceedings in connection with the appointment of the committee subsequent to August 7, the date on which a resolution was passed appointing the said Committee of Inquiry, and that his objection was noted.

18. That the grounds of objection were that such a committee is appointed under section 120 of the Companies' Act, 1892, and that consequently a second general meeting should have been held to confirm the resolution of the first meeting in terms of section 110 of the said Act.

19. That no such subsequent general meeting was held, and that your petitioner therefore holds that all proceedings in connection with the appointment of this committee subsequent to August 7 are illegal, and constitute a direct contravention of the Companies' Act, and of the said sections in particular.

20. That although Messrs. Gibson, Nash, Fleming, and Godbold were present at the meeting above referred to that none of them gave any notice or made any reference whatsoever to the application brought before the Court yesterday, although they well knew that steps were being taken thereto, and that also with their consent and on their initiative.

21. That the report of the Committee of Investigation was presented to the shareholders at a meeting held on September 7, and that discussion was postponed until a meeting on the 11th inst., in order to permit of my reply being placed before the shareholders.

22. That a copy of said report is attached to the petition lodged by the Gas Company and above referred to.

23. That your petitioner desires to state that the said report is an absolute, wilful, and malicious mis-statement of fact, a deliberate misconstruction of your petitioner's intentions, and a gross travesty of truth.

24. That your petitioner in giving evidence was treated in a most unfair and biased manner, and that the report issued is not in accordance with the evidence given, but rather to the contrary.

25. That your petitioner has repeatedly requested a copy of the evidence, but that the chairman of committee (Mr. Nash) has declined to furnish him with a copy or to permit him to examine the original.

26. That at a meeting held on 7th September, the directors' report, copy of which is hereunto annexed, was passed, and in that report the following extract occurs: "It will be necessary if this company is to continue trading to find additional capital, and the Board advises a reconstruction of the company, reducing its present capital and inviting fresh capital or by the issue of debentures. . . . At the instance of the chairman, at our last meeting a committee was appointed to inquire into the affairs of the company. . . . The directors wish it placed on record that, in their opinion, the committee as constituted is not an impartial committee, moreover their actions during the past few weeks in making public the affairs of the company . . . is not calculated to be in the best interests of the shareholders. . . . The directors regret having to take up this attitude, as they had hoped the committee would be an assistance to them, instead of which it has been the opposite."

27. That your petitioner further takes exception to the legality of the report on the ground that the committee, even though the appointment had been legal (which petitioner, as indicated in section 19, denies) have exceeded their power in that they have dealt with matters other than the financial aspect and affairs of the company.

28. That even although the company, as your petitioner holds, was thoroughly solvent at the date of the presentation of Stephan Bros.' petition to the Court for liquidation, the mere fact of the publication of provisional liquidation while the company had no chance of replying, renders its position very serious indeed both in regard to creditors and to work in hand.

29. That in this connection petitioner begs leave to produce a telegram from Johannesburg stating that certain works there are about to be stopped.

30. That your petitioner, in common with the other directors and with the shareholders named in the accompanying affidavit, and with certain creditors, verily believe that the appointment of Messrs. Gibson, Nash, Fleming, and Godbold as liquidators is to the greatest disadvantage of the creditors, shareholders, and the business of the company alike.

31. That your petitioner represents by far the largest creditors, viz., the Neuchatel Asphalt Co., Ltd., who are creditors to the extent of about £4,000, and that petitioner is also a personal creditor to the extent of over £600.

32. That your petitioner emphatically denies the assertion in the Gas Company's petition to the effect that he intends to apply to be appointed joint-liquidator.

33. That the company is solvent, and that the report of the committee (if held legal) does not show anything to the contrary.

34. That if your lordship does not see fit to rescind the order of provisional liquidation, then your petitioner humbly suggests that four liquidators is an utterly unnecessary and needless expense.

35. That in connection with the appointment of Mr. Nash, your petitioner desires to point out that Mr. Nash was the auditor of the company, and that to appoint him as a liquidator would be a most unusual proceeding.

36. That your petitioner begs leave to represent to your lordship that in the event of provisional liquidation still being upheld by your lordship, the appointment of Messrs. J. M. P. Muirhead and Mr. Gerald Orpen, of E. R. Syfret and Co., as joint official liquidators, would be in the interests of the company and of all concerned, they being impartial men.

37. That your petitioner desires to refer the Court to the report by Mr. W. A. Palliser, the manager of the company's branch in Johannesburg, which report is in the form of a letter dated 31st August, 1906, and to which is subjoined a copy of his former report dated May 29, 1905, which is lodged herewith, and especially to the statements regarding the managing director contained on pages 2 and 3 of the said letter-report.

May it therefore please your lordship to make an order to one or other or all of the following effects, viz.:

1. For an order setting aside the whole actions of the Investigation Committee and all matters and actions relative thereto, subsequent to the date of appointment (7th August).

2. For an order that the said committee have acted illegally, and, ultra vires, in discussing in their report matters other than the financial affairs of the company.

3. That the order appointing Messrs. Gibson, Nash, Fleming and Godbold to be provisional liquidators, and directing that the company be placed in provisional liquidation, should be set aside in so far as concerns the appointment of the liquidators, and that Messrs. Muirhead and Orpen be appointed liquidators in their place.

4. That the order be held over and not permitted to take effect until such date within one month from the date hereof, as a meeting of shareholders shall have discussed and come to a decision upon the question of the reconstruction or liquidation of the company.

[Buchanan, A. C. J. (to Mr. Alexander): Have you given notice to the other side?]

Mr. Alexander: No, my lord. Yesterday's application by the creditors was ex parte, and this also is ex parte. We are anticipating the return day of the order granted yesterday.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: I can hear your application if it is a matter of urgency, but I don't see how I can give any order without notice to the other side.]

Mr. Alexander read the petition of Mr. Allen, and said that in the present state of affairs very serious injury was being done to the company.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: If you had given notice to the other side, you might have anticipated the return day.]

Mr. Alexander: There was no time. The company is now hung up completely. In the petition of my client two independent persons are suggested as liquidators.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: There are two men appointed already in whom the Court has every confidence.]

Mr. Alexander said that he had to suggest the names of Mr. J. M. P. Muirhead and Mr. Orpen, of Messrs. E. R. Syfret and Co., both of whom were competent men, who had had nothing to do with the matter previously. The petition set out that the petitioner would be very much prejudiced by the fact that the provisional liquidators who had been appointed had presented a certain report, which took up a certain view in regard to the petitioner.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: They won't present any report until the rule nisi has been confirmed.]

Mr. Alexander: I was referring to the report mentioned yesterday. They make very serious allegations against the present petitioner, and surely they should not be the men to have in hand the winding up of this estate until those matters have been investigated. They have presented this report, and they want to have the sole management of the company.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Those may be very good arguments, but no notice has been given of the application, and the Court cannot proceed to go into the matter now.]

Mr. Alexander: I don't know whether there will be any opportunity of hearing this matter before the return day?

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: The Court will be sitting before next term. Nothing can be done on this application until notice has been given. I do not want to go into the merits of the petition unnecessarily.]

Mr. Alexander: Can your lordship suggest any day when you will be prepared to hear the application?

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: The Court will be sitting as soon as the Criminal Sessions are over.]

Ex parte NASH, GIBSON AND OTHERS.
In re STEPHAN BROS. V. B.S.A. ASPHALT CO.

Subsequently Mr. Molteno appeared, and moved on the petition of Messrs. Nash, Gibson, Godbolt, and Fleming, the provisional liquidators, for the committal of Mr. Andrew Allen, the managing director, and Mr. Charles Gibbs, the secretary of the company, for contempt of Court. The petitioners stated that on Tuesday, when their legal representative went to the office of the company, after the order given by the Court, the secretary refused to recognise liquidators. Their representative was threatened with forcible ejection. Gibbs said that he could do nothing without consulting Mr. Andrew Allen, the managing director. One of the petitioners (Mr. Nash) subsequently went to the office, and found only a lady typist and a small boy there, neither of whom had any knowledge of the whereabouts of Gibbs or any official of the company. Later Gibbs appeared, and when requested to wait for petitioners, he said that he was going to be back, and, as a matter of fact, he disappeared, and had not since been seen, although he resided on the premises. It had been found that one safe had been removed bodily from the office, the main safe had been opened, books and other documents of the company removed, and the drawers and files of the office ransacked. The taking away of these books and papers was done on Tuesday night, or, at all events, since the order of the Court was granted. Petitioners verily believed that Gibbs and Allen were in collusion, and that it had been arranged between them that the office should not be handed over to the liquidators. Petitioners further said they had ascertained that Allen had sold his landed property about three weeks ago, and they were afraid that he was about to leave the country. They prayed for an order for the arrest of the said Andrew Allen and Charles Gibbs, and their committal for contempt of Court. Mr. Molteno also read an affidavit by Harry George Davies, who said that, until the month of August, he was secretary of the company. Latterly, he had noticed large quantities of steel ceilings being removed from the store of the company, far in excess of any orders placed with the company. He noticed a load being removed as late as four p.m. on Tuesday. Counsel added that he was not aware whether his lordship had read the report of the committee of investigation.

[Buchanan, A. C. J., said he had not.]

Mr. Molteno: It is a most damaging report.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: Then there is no wonder that Allen objects. Still, he is not entitled to remove the property of the company. A rule nisi will be granted, operating as an interim interdict, restraining respondents Gibbs and Allen from removing any papers or property of the company from their premises, and the Sheriff is authorised to follow up any goods removed since the order of liquidation was granted, respondents to show cause on the 11th October why they should not be committed for contempt.

Postea (October 17th.)

Mr. Alexander said that the petitioners, whom he represented, no longer asked that the sequestration of the company be stayed, but they asked that the provisional liquidators be removed and others be appointed. With reference to the temporary interdict which had been granted against Allen and Gibbs, on the application of the provisional liquidators, he supposed now that nothing further would be heard about that, as the provisional liquidators had full access to the books and other documents of the company.

Mr. Molteno read the original petition of the Stephan Brothers, upon which the company was placed under provisional sequestration.

Mr. Benjamin read the supporting petition put in by the Cape Town Gas Coke, and Light Co. Counsel was proposing to read the report of the committee of investigation when

Mr. Alexander interposed and contended that the Court should first hear the petitions.

Mr. Molteno said that the report contained very serious allegations in regard to the conduct of the managing director, and it was important that the Court should be put in possession of the facts.

Mr. Molteno said that the other side had now withdrawn from the position they originally took up, and were prepared to admit that the liquidation must go on. Their opposition was to the appointment of the provisional liquidators as the official liquidators of the company, so that, in so far as the liquidation was concerned, the sole point now was as to who should be appointed official liquidators.

Mr. Alexander denied that they had withdrawn from their position, but pointed out that, seeing that liquidation had been forced upon them, it was impossible now to get away from it. The most serious charges were made in the report against the managing director and other members of the company by the very persons whom it was now proposed to appoint as liquidators.

Buchanan, A. C. J., asked Mr. Alexander what value of the shares he represented.

Mr. Alexander said that they had a petition signed by thirty-four shareholders, representing 16,195 shares.

Mr. Molteno: The man whose conduct is called into question represents the bulk of the shares. It was a one-man company.

Mr. Alexander, replying to the Court, said that the total shares of the company numbered 36,517, of which 12,600 were held by Allen, though there was some dispute as to his actual holding.

Mr. Molteno said that his learned friend (Mr. Benjamin) and himself represented practically the whole of the creditors of the company. They had got the unanimous support of the shareholders at the half-yearly meeting. They represented now in the last few days the Neuchatel Co., which was the largest creditor, for £4,000. The company were originally represented by Allen, but they had since withdrawn their power from Allen and appointed Messrs. Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset as their legal representatives here. Mr. Molteno added that his clients represented nine-tenths of the creditors.

Mr. Alexander: My learned friend (Mr. Molteno) represents four creditors, and we represent seven. We represent £4,150.

Mr. Molteno: That includes the Neuchatel Co.?

Mr. Alexander: Quite so; we have their power of attorney. Counsel, in answer to the Court, said that the total liabilities, he understood, were £6,100, and the petition he was now putting in was signed by seven creditors, representing £5,450 11s. 1d. There were no shareholders supporting the application on the other side.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: If there is likely to be a close contest, I will order a poll to be taken of the shareholders and creditors.]

Mr. Molteno reminded his lordship that this was not a voluntary winding-up, and that an allegation was made that most fraudulent proceedings had been carried on.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: We want to know whom the persons interested wish to have appointed liquidators.]

Mr. Molteno: Practically this is a one-man company, and naturally that one man is anxious that this inquiry should not go through. He originally joined with these four gentlemen, who investigated the company's affairs.

Buchanan, A. C. J., intimated that the reading of the petitions, and the report should be proceeded with.

Mr. Benjamin went on to read the report of the committee of investigation. The report stated:

This committee was appointed by the shareholders in general meeting assembled on Monday, August 7, 1905, for the purpose of investigating the past affairs of the company, including the formation and general administration of the business since that event. The resolution appointing them, also provided that the committee should act in a consultative capacity, should the Board of Directors desire it.

As far as the time at our disposal has allowed, we have gone carefully into the various circumstances submitted to us with reference to the formation of the company. For this purpose we have examined the managing directors and such other directors as were available, past and present; the late secretary (Mr. Davies) and the present acting secretary (Mr. Gibbs), had gone carefully into such books and records as were thought necessary.

We think it only our duty to place on record the obvious reluctance on the part of Mr. Andrew Allen, the managing director of the company, to furnish the committee with information, and the want of candour which marked his answers to many questions. He distinctly stated that he was unable to produce the books or balance-sheets of his business prior to the flotation, and that one of the latter had been stolen from the office, when he must have known, or could easily have ascertained that those books which contained materials for reconstructing all but one of the balance-sheets were in the company's office, and in fact in one instance had been continued as a record of the transactions of the present concern. On more than one point his statements were of a contradictory nature, but we have, fortunately, been able to ascertain the facts from other sources.

It is a matter for regret that the general nature of our report cannot be more satisfactory, but it may clear the ground to state at the outset that the very inception of the concern appears to have been somewhat dubious, whilst the subsequent administration has been distinctly open to question.

In later portions of this report allusions will be made to the various points in further detail, but we cannot omit to say that our investigation indicates that the general management of the company was very defective, and showed a want of business ability and effective control of the company's operations on the part of the managing director, who was, it must be remembered, the vendor and promoter.

From the very commencement there does not seem to have been any system by which the Board really controlled the affairs of the company, the management of which would seem to have been left almost entirely in the hands of the managing director, Mr. Andrew Allen, who mainly devoted his time to inspecting the works at Woodstock, preparing tenders, and canvassing. The secretary opened and answered correspondence and a great portion of the details of working the concern seems to have devolved on him.

There was apparently no co-ordination between the town office and the works at Woodstock, which latter were in charge of Mr. Allen's brother. The directors seem to have had little or no knowledge of what was really going on, and the difficulties at one time in this direction seem to have been so great that two of the Board (Mr. Amos Bailey and Mr. Alfred Mathew) resigned. We only regret that at the time these gentlemen took that step they did not think it advisable to state publicly, or place on record in some emphatic form, the reasons which actuated their decision. Perhaps, however, the most serious matter in this connection was the fact that, whilst the managing director was at any rate more or less in contact with the Board, the branch managers at Durban and Johannesburg, who were not so placed, held larger powers than were possessed by the managing director, from whom they received their instructions.

Mr. Allen, in the earlier stages of the company's history, was authorised to accept contracts to the extent of £300, without reference to the Board. This limit was subsequently raised to £1,000. On the other hand, however, the branch managers have had, it is stated, no limit placed upon their powers. They seem, on Mr. Allen's own admission, to have sent in tenders for work without reference to the head office, and to have been in a position, as Mr. Allen admitted in his evidence, to commit the company to an unlimited extent—at any rate Mr. Allen said there was nothing to prevent them from binding the company to the extent of half a million sterling.

It is hardly necessary for us to dilate upon the disastrous effects of this policy. They are only too well known to the shareholders; first, in the difficulty which has been experienced in getting returns from the two branches, as already reported by the auditors, and also in the very serious losses at the branches, which have already been reported. The position may, perhaps, be put shortly, by saying that the policy of the company has, to a large extent, been practically shaped and forced by the actions of the branch managers, instead of these gentlemen acting as subordinates to the head office of the company.

When the draft of the report had been practically completed, we received from Mr. W. A. Palliser, the Johannesburg manager, a copy of a report he sent to the Board on May 29 last, when he took up his duties on the Rand. The report contains much useful information, and confirms the opinions already expressed as to the want of effective control and management of the concern from Cape Town. It also contains recommendations of undoubted value, but the means of carrying that out were wanting, and Mr. Palliser did not write as if he were aware of the company's financial position. His report was brought to Cape Town by Mr. Palliser, and discussed at a Board meeting, which he attended, but the directors could not see their way to entertain his proposals, owing to lack of funds.

During the last few months it is quite evident that friction has resulted not only at the Board table, but between the managing director and the secretary, placing the latter official in a distinctly disadvantageous position, and rendering efficient working of the affairs of the company well-nigh impossible.

The Board of Directors, by resignation and absence, was reduced to a bare quorum, and under such circumstances, it is no wonder that the affairs of the company drifted from bad to worse.

A good deal might be written on the past history of the company, but we think it unnecessary at the present juncture to enter into elaborate details, and have contented ourselves with noticing various matters which have come to our knowledge, and which we propose grouping under suitable heads for convenience of reference.

The committee went on to review the formation of the company and to criticise the prospectus. The assets of the company were referred to at length, as well as its relations with the Neuchatel Co.

Dealing with the works management and contracts, the committee made the following observations:

The works at Woodstock are under the management of Mr. Alexander Allen, a brother of the managing director. He does not appear to have been in any way controlled by the Board, who left such details in the hands of Mr. Andrew Allen, apparently because he had such a large holding in the company. No proper costing books, such as would have enabled the managing director at any time to know if any contract was being carried on at a profit or a loss, were kept, nor was there any system which enabled anyone to find out whether the business was paying.

Stock-taking was done in a most careless manner, and in preparing the stock sheets for the annual balance-sheets the stock was brought up, not at cost price, but at a figure which in some cases anticipated a profit. The stock sheets presented at December 31, 1904, were treated in this manner, and the inflated values correspondingly affected the profit and loss account. These returns were certified by the secretary, Mr. Davies, and it is noteworthy that the managing director has, during this inquiry, claimed that the stock had been undervalued. We are unable, on the evidence before us, to sustain his contention, and prefer the figures adopted by Mr. Davies, though even they are apparently in some cases too high. The contracts for work to be executed made by the managing director were seldom brought before the Board, nor does their authority or advice in such matters appear to have been sought. Mr. Allen prepared the contracts and fixed the rates, so that the details of the business were only known to himself. In his absence Mr. Davies, the secretary, would perhaps quote for small contracts, and, if accepted, put the work in hand.

As an instance of the manner in which Mr. Allen ignored the Board, it may be mentioned that, since the appointment of this committee, Mr. Allen, without consulting his brother directors, tendered to the Cape Town Corporation for a contract amounting to £60,000, or about twice the paid-up capital of the company. He does not appear to have thought it necessary to make any special financial arrangements for providing materials for carrying this work to completion in the event of that tender being accepted, at least none have been disclosed to us, though the point was brought to his notice.

There does not appear to be any considerable work in hand at Cape Town, where for some time past the turnover has been of no great magnitude. At Johannesburg, Mr. Allen states, the contracts with the municipality for fair sums are still running, and he describes them as being profitable, but there has been insufficient time to procure any reliable data. From a letter addressed to us by the manager at Johannesburg, dated August 31, 1905, it seems more than likely that the Durban branch is at present handicapped in many ways and any profit from that source is problematical.

The committee in conclusion said:

On the facts reported, shareholders will, not unreasonably, accept some recommendations for their future protection. They have a valuable asset in the tar contract with the Gas Company, provided its terms can be complied with, and the Agency of the Neuchatel Company should under ordinary conditions be a source of considerable revenue.

We should have liked to recommend a reconstruction of the concern; closing the branches at Durban and Johannesburg, and writing off the capital list of those points; writing down the value of machinery, patents, and goodwill in the same manner; providing a moderate working capital for the development of the works here, and, lastly, a reorganisation of the management.

In face of the fact that a judgment has already been obtained by one creditor at whose instance certain assets at Woodstock have been attached, and that the total claims on the concern, according to the books at June 30 last, were £5,917 17s. 6d., we feel it is hopeless to attempt to carry on the business, and there seems no course open but liquidation, when the shareholders are not likely to see any return, and we very much doubt whether creditors will secure more than a fraction of their claims. We feel bound, however, to notice the fact that the Neuchatel Company is apparently the largest creditor with a claim of £3,824, and they are represented by Mr. Allen, whose action in renewing the agreement in his own name has already been mentioned. In terms of the articles of association, this company is only interested in the agreement so long as Mr. Allen is managing director of the company.

The committee have been put to certain out-of-pocket expenses for shorthand notes of evidence, typing, etc., amounting to twenty guineas, and they request that payment thereof may be authorised by this meeting, subject to production of vouchers therefor.

Mr. Alexander read a replying affidavit filed by Mr. Allen the day after an order for the provisional liquidation of the company was granted.

Mr. Alexander was about to read the reply made by Mr. Allen to the report of the committee of investigation when

Mr. Molteno objected, as no notice of the reply had been given to him.

Mr. Alexander contended that as the Court had considered the report, that they ought to be allowed to read the reply.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that it was only fair that if one was made public the other should also have publicity. Mr. Molteno said he had no objection to having anything put in that would assist the Court.

He did not wish the report to have been read beyond that he thought it might have a bearing on the appointment of liquidators, as the report had been read he thought the Court should hear the reply.

Mr. Alexander then proceeded to read the "notes" of Mr. Allen's reply to the statements in the committee's report. The following extracts will be of interest:

1. The statement in the opening clause is entirely wrong. The exact wording of the resolution which was carried is as follows, viz.: "Mr. Godbold moved that a committee of inquiry be formed consisting of Messrs. Nash, Gibson, and Fleming on behalf of the shareholders, and to bring forward at a future meeting a statement of the affairs of the company." I hold that the committee should have confined themselves to the financial aspects.

2. I have to state that their examination of myself was conducted in a most arbitrary and one-sided manner, and did not convey to my mind the feeling that impartiality existed among the members of the committee in reference to myself. It appeared to me that the committee had already made up their minds before they had started to examine me, and knowing as I did that Mr. Gibson was employed by Stephan Brothers and that Mr. Fleming was also connected with Stephan Brothers, and knowing also that Mr. Miller was Stephan's manager, Stephan himself, of course, being a director of the B.S.A. Asphalte Manufacturing Co., Ltd., and taking into account the repeated disagreements between himself and me, I felt that, taking all these circumstances into consideration, I could hardly expect an impartial report from such a committee. The terms of this report have justified my feeling. Upon the appointment of this committee I made efforts to get men appointed upon whom we could depend for an impartial report, and men who had some interest in the company other than that of being possible liquidators. Unfortunately, this was not so, and when we look and examine closely into the personnel of the committee we find that not one member of this committee holds a single share of the company in his own right.

3. I deny the statement that I was reluctant to give information. On every possible occasion I gave every possible assistance. The committee accuse me of want of candour, but I have only to say that so far as the committee themselves are concerned, a spirit of antagonism was exhibited to me during the whole course of the examination. I was unable to produce on the moment the balance-sheet and books used by me prior to the flotation for the simple reason that the balance-sheets had to be obtained from E. R. Syfret and Co. It is an absolute fact that the balance-sheets were removed from the office prior to the flotation, but by whom I have never discovered. I, however, informed the committee that copies could be obtained if desired from Syfret and Co. If, as the committee alleges, there were any contradictory statements on my part, I most emphatically state that any such were due to the incompetent manner in which I was examined.

4. I deny absolutely the innuendoes in Paragraph 4. It is to be regretted, of course, that these gentlemen were placed in so dual a position, but as to the inception of the concern I most emphatically protest against any statement to the effect that it was other than absolutely genuine.

5. So far as I am concerned, it was to my interest to work the company for its greatest benefit.

6. It is an extraordinary matter that the board, if they took the view that this committee does, did not suggest or put forward any other better or more effective system for the more satisfactory working of the affairs of the company. One of the greatest difficulties so far as I was concerned was that of getting the secretary to carry out the system and to provide details of the board meetings. The only details of working the concern which were carried on by the secretary were those connected with the secretarial and book-keeping duties. With regard to these you will find from the reports of the auditor for 1903 and 1904 and 1905 that continuous complaints regarding the manner in which the secretary's duties were fulfilled were lodged by him. I am not a bookkeeper nor am I an accountant, and these matters were not for me to interfere with or to examine into other than generally. These, you will admit, were duties which pertained to the secretary and should have been superintended absolutely by the auditor. I wish to state, however, that Mr. Nash never made any complaints to me either during 1903 or 1904. Complaints by Mr. Nash were always reserved by him for his annual report, when, in common with the rest of the shareholders, I saw them for the first time.

7. The works and office were in direct telephonic communication, and the co-ordination existing between the two could hardly have been improved upon. The lack of knowledge, if any, on the part of the directors were certainly due to the secretary not producing the necessary detailed statements. It was on this account that the chairman and myself during the early stages of the company's existence, considered it advisable to make a change. This was proposed at a meeting and was at first agreed to, but we were afterwards overruled, as it appeared that the secretary was beginning to pay more attention to his duties. The letters of resignation from Mr. Bailey and Mr. Mathew themselves distinctly state why they desire to retire. Needless to say those reasons differ from those which the committee desire you to believe. It was not the fault of the managing director if the branch manager at Durban and Johannesburg held larger powers than he did himself. This was a matter for the directors here, and I can hardly see how on earth it would be to my interest to concur in any such state of affairs.

9. In my opinion the most disastrous part of the company's policy was the hampering of the managing director in regard to the acceptance of contracts. In the branch business up to the present year little or no contracting was done in the way of engineering work. The chief business carried on was in disposing of the products of the company. The board had every control compatible with business affairs over the branches, and it was only after I was able to secure the services of Mr. Palliser to manage our Transvaal business that I would admit of any engineering contracts being entered into.

10. The committee here refer to a report drawn up by Mr. Palliser, in which they state that Mr. Palliser attended a meeting of directors. This statement is true only in so far that Mr. Palliser came to Cape Town with his report. The other facts are that Mr. Miller absolutely declined to consider his report. That I ineffectually attempted to arrange several meetings of directors for the purpose of having Mr. Palliser's report thoroughly discussed, but that, as Mr. Palliser will tell you, after waiting here two weeks, he returned to Johannesburg disgusted with the conduct of Mr. Miller, and the result of his visit, which visit cost the company money. Now, the committee referred to the report as one which contains much useful information, and confirms the opinion already expressed as to the want of effective control and management of the concern from Cape Town.

11. In this paragraph the committee state that friction has resulted at the Board meetings. That friction was between Mr. Miller, the late secretary, and myself, and the cause thereof I have already explained. These gentlemen were not, in my opinion, acting in the best interests of the company, and it was my duty to object. The late secretary had himself to blame for the position in which he found himself. He was absolutely incapable, and for the benefit of the company, I wished his removal.

17. The amount of applications received is absolutely correct, applications having amounted to 21,142 shares. I may point out I was not a member of the Board till after allotment.

18. This is, so far as I am concerned, an absolutely false statement. No entries were ever made on the list of applications without the authority of the parties concerned. As to my own holding, I received 1,000 shares in lieu of £1,000.

20. Every statement in the prospectus is, so far as it concerns me, and so far as I have had anything to do with the matters treated of therein, absolutely correct.

21. The amount of profit, as shown by the committee, averaging £1,242 2s. 4d. per annum for the 4½ years previous to the flotation, was certainly substantial, considering that the business was floated with a very small capital, and considering further that in bringing out this profit a large amount was spent each year in extending the business to other centres. This meant that I personally had to visit the different towns in order to establish agencies, which cost a considerable amount of money. Again, prior to the profit of £1,242 2s. 4d. before referred to being brought out, a large sum was drawn each year for my own personal requirements, and yet, in spite of all this, we have an average annual profit shown of about and amounting to over 20 per cent. on a capital of £6,000. I have no hesitation in saying that the statement made in the prospectus is absolutely genuine.

26. As to the flotation expenses, the arrangement was that I should pay all expenses up to the date of the formation of the company. That I took to mean the date when the Board was formed, and everything ready to go on with the flotation, and I still hold that this view is correct. The accounts were paid by the company, and afterwards the amount was transferred to my account. To this I, of course, objected, but in order to have the matter settled, and on account of my receiving 1,000 shares in lieu of cash, I agreed to forego 500 shares. This was accordingly done, and the matter closed.

26. Regarding the 4,350 vendors' shares distributed by me, I have to point out that these were my sole property, and that I had an absolute right to do whatever I wished with them. The obvious intention of the committee in bringing this matter forward was in order to mislead the shareholders into believing that these shares were given as a kind of sop to the gentlemen named for assisting in the flotation. This is an absolute falsehood. Not one of these gentlemen assisted in the flotation in any way.

27. The assets acquired by the company were clearly stipulated and duly registered.

30. I have not got the books in my possession, as they are still in the hands of the committee, but the value of the machinery and plant was increased immediately before the flotation by the addition, so far as I remember, of a new tar still and other improvements. The machinery was valued, and the value taken for the leasehold is, in my opinion, considerably under-estimated. The patents and goodwill I could not dispose of at a less figure, as, in my opinion, that represented its lowest value. Further, in common with other business men in the Colony, I naturally anticipated that the flotation, taken in conjunction with the anticipated revival in trade in the inland towns subsequent to the war, that as the business had previously been so successful in the coast towns, it would increase on all sides, and especially so when a larger field was to be opened up. We all know how far these anticipations were realised.

32. Regarding the Neuchatel Asphalt Company's agency, the committee have pointed out that the word "agencies" is omitted in the document registered; this is the first time that I have known such was the case. However, I cannot see wherein there is anything wrong in this connection. I was simply the Neuchatel Company's agent, and therefore it was not my business. The committee have carefully left out of their report the fact that everything derived from the working of this agency has been received by the company.

33. In connection with the renewal of the agreement with the Neuchatel Asphalt Co., Ltd., in November, 1904, there was no attempt made to conceal that fact. I am positive that the secretary was acquainted with it, as I handed the new agreement to him to go carefully through before I signed it.

34. Regarding my instructions to the branches that all future payments for work done by the Neuchatel Asphalt Co. should be paid direct to the Neuchatel Asphalt Co., these were specific instructions given to me by Mr. Hollis on account of his company. It is an absolute misrepresentation of fact to say that my interests as agent of the Neuchatel Asphalt Co., Ltd., were at direct variance with the B.S.A. Co.

35. Regarding the tar contract, the committee has carefully avoided making any mention of the action at law which this company found necessary to institute in order to establish this contract beyond doubt. It is only since then that we have been able to run this contract on anything like satisfactory and profitable lines. Only recently the Cape Town District Gas Co. sought by an action in the Magistrate's Court to vary this contract, an action which they lost, with costs.

36. It is false to state that no costing books were kept, as a contract costing book was produced to the committee, showing all expenditure on each contract. It will be found that on the contracts a good profit was made. The trouble was that there were so few contracts during the latter year or so. When the chairman was in Natal, and had been negotiating with another secretary, the Board decided to retain Mr. Davies's services, as they thought he would improve; subsequent events, and our auditor's report, go to show that the Board, although their intentions were of the best, were wrong. It is untrue that the stocktaking was done in a careless manner. It was most carefully done, and the prices were fixed by the secretary from invoices, etc. In my opinion, the position of this company is due in no small measure to the action of the City Council, and I may here state that during the hearing of an action in the Supreme Court between Nuttall and Co. and the Gas Co. a letter was read from Nuttall's manager to Nuttall, stating that the manager had arranged with the City Engineer to make trouble with Allen on the Early Morning Market contract, and also with Riley, the Gas Co. manager, to plug all the tar possible into Allen, so that Allen would be compelled to sell tar cheap to Nuttall and Co.

38. Under the heading, "General Remarks and Recommendations," one would expect to find some information and advice, but the total advice indicated therein appears to be that the company should go into liquidation, the reason being given that a certain creditor had obtained judgment. It should be noted that throughout the committee's report no mention is made of the numerous irregularities on the part of Miller and the secretary. It will be noted that the report is directed almost wholly against myself, and bears the mark of Mr. Miller's dictation on almost every paragraph. It is also a fact that this movement has been in operation for several months, and is not only confined to this company, but has also been extended to other companies in which Stephan Bros. and myself are interested. It is very easy for these gentlemen to go into any business and find fault. I do not pretend to be perfect. I can make mistakes as well as anyone else; so can most men who have got any initiative. Had I known that we were just about to enter on a period of depression, the severity of which has never before been experienced, I would not have floated my business. When I floated my business I was absolutely confident that it was a first-class business. The greater part of the liabilities taken over by the company on flotation was incurred during the six months previous in the purchase of the Omaha business and other matters for the benefit of the company, and our profit, had there been no depression, should have wiped off all liabilities and paid a satisfactory dividend. I have the confidence of these shareholders who have been more or less in touch with me, and know the difficulties we have to contend with, and if I have lost the confidence of those who only know me by name, it is caused by a few designing parties who are not working for the best interests of the shareholders, and who are anxious to do me a bad turn to suit their own schemes in connection with another company with which I am closely connected.

Mr. Alexander and Mr. Molteno were heard in argument.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The B.S.A. Asphalt Company commenced operations in 1903, and this year the financial state of the company was not satisfactory. A meeting of shareholders was held, and at that meeting a Committee of Investigation was appointed, consisting of Messrs. Nash, Gibson, Godbold, and Fleming, and this committee reported to the shareholders the result of their inquiries. The reflections made in their report against Mr. Allen, who may be called the promotor of the company, were such as required further investigation, and a resolution was passed by the shareholders in favour of appointing an official liquidator of the company, and moreover, certain creditors also join in the petition for the liquidation of the company's estate. The order granted was equivalent to proceedings in the compulsory sequestration of an insolvent's estate. At the time the petition came before the Court, prima-facie grounds were shown for granting a provisional order for liquidation, and a return day was fixed upon which persons interested were entitled to show cause why this order should not be made absolute. Immediately after this provisional order was granted Mr. Allen and others applied, ex parte, and they wished to have this order set aside. It was pointed out that this could not be done without notice being given as they wished to anticipate the return day of the order. leave was granted to do so on notice being given to the petitioners, but the case was allowed to stand over, and it now comes before the Court for final decision. Mr. Allen and the others who objected to the liquidation, have now withdrawn their objection on the ground that, after what had taken place, it is not desirable to cancel the provisional order, and they consent to the liquidation going through. There is no objection, therefore, to making the rule absolute ordering the B.S.A. Asphalt Company to be placed under liquidation. A great number of affidavits have been made which would have been revelant to the question whether the company should or should not have been placed under compulsory liquidation. The statements of these affidavits now fall away, and it is not necessary to consider them. The only reason why those affidavits should be considered now, is with reference to deciding who should be appointed official liquidators of the company. In deciding upon this question, undoubtedly the Court should take into consideration the wishes of the persons interested. At the previous application, as I said, four provisional liquidators were nominated pending the result of further proceedings. For myself, I do not see the necessity of so many liquidators being appointed, and if there had been no opposition, probably the Court would have been satisfied in appointing one liquidator only. The four people who were appointed provisional liquidators were the four members of the Committee of Investigation. Two of these gentlemen do not wish to press their claims for being appointed liquidators, I refer to Messrs. Godbold and Fleming. If there had been no objection to the two remaining ones being appointed, probably the Court would have been satisfied in appointing Messrs. Nash and Gibson, but Mr. Allen states that he wishes to have his position considered in the liquidation, and he is a very large shareholder in the company. I think Mr. Allen's wishes deserve some consideration. I have heard the report of the liquidators read, and there are some charges made, but they are more irregularities and want of attention to proper business requirements than express charges of fraud. I do not wish to say anything more about these charges, as it is said they may form the basis of future proceedings, but I think that, under the circumstances it would be better, as there is some dispute, to have three, instead of two liquidators. I should have preferred only one in this case, as the estate is not a very large one; but as three will be appointed they will be Messrs. Nash, Gibson, and Gerald Orpen. I can see the force of the objection taken to the appointment of an official as liquidator, but Mr. Nash is not an official of the company in the sense of having had anything to do with the management. He is the auditor of the company, and there is nothing whatever in his conduct which would require investigation, and which would be inimical or opposed to his duties as liquidator. on the contrary, he called attention to the irregularities which had taken place. These three gentlemen are well known, and the Court has every confidence that they will perform their duties faithfully. The objection taken to Mr. Gibson is, that he has an interest in one of the creditors, but this is no bar to his being a liquidator. As to Mr. Orpen he is suggested for appointment by Mr. Allen himself and is unconnected with the company in any way. The rule nisi will be made absolute ordering the company to be placed under liquidation, and Messrs. Nash, Gibson, and Orpen will be appointed official liquidators, with powers under the 149th section of the Act. There is only one other question, and that is as to the security to be given by the liquidators. The amount at issue is at the outside £5,000 or £6,000, and I think it will be sufficient if the liquidators give joint security for £1,000. The costs of the application will be costs in liquidation. There is another matter before the Court, and that is the rule nisi which was granted after the liquidation was ordered, Messrs. Gibbs and Allen, it was alleged, removed after the granting of the order certain papers and a safe from the offices of the company. Mr. Gibbs has filed an affidavit stating that he acted in ignorance of the order of Court, and explaining the circumstances under which he removed this property. The rule will be discharged, but the respondents did what was improper, and if they had been acting with any malicious or fraudulent intent, the Court would have considered it contempt of Court and would probably have imposed a penalty which would have made them understand that they could not disobey an order of Court with impunity. The respondents must, however, pay the costs of that particular application.

Mr. Alexander asked for leave to be heard on the question of the costs of the rule against Gibbs and Allen.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that he thought affidavits had been read.

Mr. Alexander said that he had also an affidavit sworn by Mr. Allen, which he now proceeded to read.

Buchanan, A. C. J., held that the respondents must pay the costs of the rule.

Mr. Benjamin: I take it that the Gas Company will obtain their costs from the liquidation?

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that that was so.

Attorneys: For the creditors—Van der Byl and De Villiers. For the Cape Town Gas Company—Van Zyl and Buissiné. For the B.S.A. Asphalt Company—A. J. McCallum.

Ex parte THE KRAAIFONTEIN HOTEL COMPANY.

Mr. Molteno moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of G. W. Steytler and other liquidators of the Kraaifontein Hotel Company (in voluntary liquidation) for an order for the compulsory winding up of the company. The petitioners stated that the hotel had been advertised to be sold by public auction on Saturday next, and they feared that if such a course were persisted in there would be some prejudice to the claims of the creditors. Ever since the commencement the business of the company had been carried on at a loss owing to the state of trade and other circumstances beyond the control of the company.

A rule nisi was granted placing the company under the Act of 1892, and provisionally appointing the voluntary liquidators as liquidators. rule to be returnable on the 16th of October, and to be published once in the "Government Gazette" and once in the "Cape Times."

Postea (October 16). The rule was made absolute,

Ex parte THE ROYAL HOTEL COMPANY.

Mr. Molteno moved that an order of the Court for the winding up order and the appointment of official liquidators in this case be made absolute. He also applied for the appointment of Messrs. Siberbauer, Wahl, and Fuller as attorneys to the liquidators.

Buchanan, A. C. J. said that if necessary the liquidators could appoint the attorneys, but the Court would not make an order to that effect.

The application was granted.

THE CAPE MARINE SUBURBS V. THE RECREATION SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. Roux moved that a rule of Court for a winding up order and the appointment of Mr. Syfret as official liquidator in this case be made absolute.

The application was granted.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

HEYDENRYCH V. WEAKLEY. { 1905. Sept. 13th.

Mr. Searle, K.C., mentioned the matter of the application of the plaintiff for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of Mrs. Elizabeth Heywood, of Aliwal North. The matter had previously been before a judge in Chambers, and had been ordered to be mentioned in the open Court. Counsel stated that the other side had now consented to the application.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the difficulty was that no pleadings had been filed, but, seeing that the other side had consented, the application would be granted, the Resident Magistrate of Aliwal North to be commissioner.

REHABILITATION.

Ex parte GROMER.

Mr. Alexander stated that, in regard to the application of Alexander Gromer for discharge from insolvency, he had now to present an affidavit from the applicant's attorney in reference to the refusal of the Master to grant the necessary certificate. Counsel said that the applicant had obtained the consent of three-fifths of the creditors in number, and more than three-fifths in value.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that in the Insolvency Ordinance the word "number" meant creditors over £30—only those of that amount were entitled to be reckoned by number. In this case there were five creditors, three of whom were entitled to be reckoned by number. Of these three only one had consented to the rehabilitation of the applicant. The Master was right in refusing the certificate, seeing that three-fifths of the creditors by number as well as in value must consent. The application would be refused.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

In re INSOLVENT ESTATE { 1905.
FON. { Sept. 18th.

Mr. Close moved for the removal of Rachmiel Karter, alias Kartel, from his office as trustee in the insolvent estate of Solomon Fon, general dealer, Malmesbury, and the appointment of Frederick Fortunatus Werdmuller to the office.

An order was granted appointing Mr. Werdmuller provisional trustee, and authorising the Master to call a meeting of creditors for the election of a permanent trustee in the place of Mr. Karter, who had become incapacitated from his office by reason of his insanity, costs of this application to come out of the estate.

Ex parte HAZELL.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the release of the applicant from curatorship in the estate of one Everton, who, it now transpired, had been discharged from the Valkenberg Asylum. He had recovered the use of his reason, and had gone to Canada.

Order granted, subject to the filing of accounts and payment of moneys found to be due to the respondent.

DU PRE V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Roux moved for certain award of arbitrator to be made rule of Court, with costs.

Mr. Nightingale, for the Government, consented.

Award made rule of Court, with costs.

O'CONNELL V. O'CONNELL.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on behalf of Mrs. O'Connell, for leave to sue her husband by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights by reason of his malicious desertion. The parties in 1900 sold up their home in London, intending to settle in this colony. They came out to the Cape, and defendant became attached to the staff of Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener, and went with them to Pretoria. Owing to his intemperate habits, he went on a voyage to Europe in September, 1902, and had since contributed nothing towards petitioner's support. Petitioner at first resided at Claremont, and had since removed to Observatory. In March last petitioner's husband returned to Cape Town, and, after remaining about three weeks, left for Europe. He was drinking very heavily.

Leave to sue by edictal citation was granted, citation to be returnable on the 15th November, to be served personally, if possible, or at the respondent's last known address, West Kensington, London, and to be published once in the "Government Gazette" and once in the "Daily Telegraph."

REICH V. McNALLY AND { 1905.
ALI WAL NORTH MUNICI- { Sept. 13th.
PAL COUNCIL.

Municipal Council — Election —
Act 45 of 1882, Sec. 17—
Office of profit.

N. had been elected as a Councillor of the Municipality of A. At the time he was municipal poundmaster, for the duties of which he was remunerated by fees.

Held, that as this was an office of profit under the Municipality, he was disqualified from being elected by Sec. 17 of Act 45 of 1882.

This was an application upon notice calling upon the first-named respondent to show cause why his election as a member of the Aliwal North Council should not be declared illegal and invalid, and why he should not be declared to be disqualified from continuing as a Councillor.

The petition of the applicant stated that at the election for the said Council in July last there were seven candidates for four vacancies, including petitioner and the first-named respondent. At the poll McNally was elected, and petitioner was fifth in the list. By an agreement dated April 9, 1903, McNally entered into a lease with the said council for certain ground, and although that lease expired in March, 1904, he continued as pound master of the Council, and was at the time of his nomination, and still was the municipal pound master. The position held by the said McNally was one of profit under the said Council, and he participated in the profits of a contract. The election was, therefore, invalid, and McNally was not capable of being a Councillor of the said municipality. The agreement provided for the payment by the lessee of £12 per annum.

The affidavit of the respondent, McNally, stated that he admitted that he acquired the municipal pound at Aliwal North under an agreement dated the 9th April, 1903. He further admitted that, although the said agreement expired on 31st March, 1904, he continued to farm the said pound on the said terms as stated in the said agreement. No further agreement was entered into by him with the said Council. The said Council had accepted payment of his rent every quarter. In March, 1903, the Municipal Council at Aliwal North, by advertisement in the public Press, called for competition by tender for the farming of the said pound. He submitted a tender of £12 per annum for the same. He denied the allegation that he had held, or now held, an office or position of profit, or that he participated, or was concerned in, the profits of any contract. He submitted that he acquired the right to farm the said pound by public competition, and any profit that he had made out of the said pound had not been made from the said Municipal Council of Aliwal North, but from the general public using the said pound. Deponent added that no objection was raised to his candidature until after the result of the poll had been declared. The supporting affidavit of the Town Clerk of Aliwal North stated that any profit the said McNally may have made out of the farming of the said pound would be made out of the general public, and not from the funds of the Municipal Council of Aliwal North.

Mr. Benjamin for applicant; Mr. Gardiner for respondent.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that it was clear that the poundmaster was entitled to certain fees, and to that extent he held an office of profit under the Council. Under the English law it was stipulated that any person participating in any contract with the municipality was disqualified from being elected to the Council. He (Mr. Benjamin) contended that in the present case the respondent was a contractor to the municipality.

Mr. Gardiner contended that his learned friend's arguments were somewhat inconsistent. The position of the respondent was either that of an office of employment or that of lessor or lessee. This was not a case of employment; it was not a case of holding an office. He did not say that it was absolutely necessary that in holding an office that a salary should be attached to it, but there must be certain elements. There must be some choice in persons when appointing to an office when the Council would be deciding who was the most fit. Here one of the elements of choice was the getting of a rent or the payment for the office, and counsel contended that the payment by the employee to the employer was not consistent with the Act. He also submitted that in the case of an office or employment there should be the power of dismissal. Here there could be no power of dismissal, as long as respondent fulfilled the conditions of the contract. There was no power of dismissal on account of his personal misbehaviour, such as an employee was liable to. In the case of employment there would be a power of control, but here there was none. The Municipal Council was not responsible for the acts of the poundmaster. He alone was responsible. Counsel submitted that all these things went to show that the office of poundmaster was not an office of profit. It was a case of a lease into which he entered, and if it was a lease it could not at the same time be an office of employment. He submitted that it was not.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said respondent had been returned at the last election of Municipal Councillors for Aliwal North. There was a contest for the position, and the candidate who received the next number of votes was the applicant, who, however, was not elected. He was interested in making this application not only as the defeated candidate, but as a ratepayer. His objection to McNally's election was founded on the 17th section of the Municipal Act. Two years before this election the Council of Aliwal North leased the pound, and the respondent was appointed poundmaster under a contract for twelve months. The contract was not renewed, but the respondent had been allowed to continue as poundmaster up to the present time. The contract showed the various duties he had to perform, how he was to keep his books, etc. The contract did not involve the payment of salary to McNally, but he was to receive payment from fees of office. As to McNally's present occupancy of the office being of a temporary nature, that was an argument rather against than for him. The question was whether or not McNally held an office of profit. His Lordship thought that he did hold such an office. He thought that both the contract and the office held came under the section, and that the respondent had no right to stand for and be elected to the Council. It had been stated that although holding this view the Court should not grant the application, with costs, because of the delay in taking proceedings. There might have been something in that objection if McNally had resigned his position on objection being taken, but he had not yet resigned. Under those circumstances the Court could not see any reason for departing from the usual rule. The application would be granted as prayed, with costs against the respondent.

GATES V. INSOLVENT ESTATES OF SMITH AND RUSSEL.

Mr. Alexander moved for leave to have a certain proof of debt amended.

The affidavit of the applicant stated that the respondents owed him £51 for rent, and £86 17s. 6d. for repairs done to the house. Through some oversight he had forgotten to file his claims. He wished the first claim to rank as preferent.

There was no opposition to the application.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte BEZUIDENHOUT.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property.

Order granted.

Ex parte POTGIETER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order for the registration of a certain transfer of a farm to the petitioner from her husband, to whom she had been appointed curator in March, 1904.

Order granted.

ANSTICE V. ANSTICE.

Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant, and Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the respondent.

Mr. Jones said the respondent had made an affidavit asking for a postponement in order that he might obtain certain documents in connection with the money claimed by the applicant.

Mr. Gardiner objected, as the respondent had been in Cape Town since Saturday, and had had ample time to obtain the documents.

Ordered to stand over until the next sitting of the Court.

Ex parte TEUBES.

Mr. De Waal moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register a certain notarial bond.

Order granted.

HOULDER BROS. V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Close was for the applicants; Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the respondent. The application was on notice of motion to have certain pleadings of the defendants removed from the record.

Mr. Close said the declaration had been filed about eighteen months ago, and after several amendments and exceptions, the respondents now filed a plea, which went beyond the order of the Court.

Formal leave was granted to the defendants to amend their pleadings as tendered, with costs to date of amendment, and a joint commission issued to take the evidence either party wishes, costs of the application to be costs in the cause, Mr. Oliver appointed as commissioner.

Ex parte ARNOLD.

Mr. Benjamin moved to have certain transfer passed in the district of Somerset West.

Order granted.

Ex parte SETTERY.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the removal of one Frank Percival Smith from his office as executor dative in the estate of Panai Polo, petitioner's late husband, and the appointment of Daniel McLaren Brown, jun., of Port Elizabeth, as executor dative.

A rule nisi was granted calling upon F. P. Smith to show cause on the 16th October why he should not be removed from the office of executor, rule to be served personally, failing which, one publication in the "E.P. Herald."

Ex parte GERICKE.

Dr. Greer moved for leave to attach a certain farm at Barkly East ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and to sue by edictal citation. The petitioner was suing for provisional sentence on a certain promissory note.

Leave granted to attach the interest of the respondents in the farm, and to sue by edictal citation, citation to be returnable on the 16th October, and to be served personally.

Ex parte GRAYLING.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem for petitioner's wife, an inmate of the Graham's Town Asylum. Counsel said that the matter had previously been before the Court, when some question was raised as to whether the matter came within the jurisdiction of the courts of this colony.

Order granted, the Resident Magistrate of Graham's Town to be curator ad litem, with leave to report to the Court on affidavit, summons to be served on the curator and on the alleged lunatic, and to be returnable on the 16th October.

LESTER V. LESTER.

Mr. Watermeyer applied for a return day to be fixed in regard to the rule for leave to sue by edictal citation.

His Lordship said that no edictal citation was granted. The rule had been made absolute upon an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis.

BRADBURY V. THE NATIONAL DRILL AND MANUFACTURING CO.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the removal of bar and leave to the applicant to defend the action.

Mr. Benjamin was for the respondents.

It appeared that the respondents had obtained judgment, under Rule 329d, on the 31st August last against the applicant. It was now sought to have that judgment set aside, and leave given to the applicant to defend the action, applicant having been absent from the Colony, and having no knowledge of the previous proceedings until his return.

Leave was granted as prayed, costs of the application under Rule 329d to be paid by applicant, and costs of the present application to be costs in the cause.

HALVORSEN V. ANDERSON.

(See 15 C.T.R., 750.)

This was an application upon notice of motion for the interpretation of a certain order of Court.

Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant; Mr. Close was for respondent.

Mr. Gardiner said that the question was whether the contract on which the applicant sued was cancelled by reason of the judgment of the Court.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that that was clearly so. The application would be refused, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

IN CHAMBERS.

INSOLVENT ESTATE WIL- } 1905.
LIAMSON V. BERGL. } Sept. 26th.

This was an application by the defendant in the action (Bergl), for an extension of the time within which his evidence might be taken on commission in London before Mr. Oliver. Mr. Gardiner is for applicant; Mr. Russell was for respondent.

The affidavit of Mr. Robinson, of the firm of Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton, stated that on the 13th July last this Court granted a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of applicant in London before the 1st October. Defendant's attorneys were informed that the examination had not yet been held, and had received a letter from Mr. M. Bergl, defendant's father, who represented A. Bergl in London, and who said that he was engaged on a contract to superintend the erection of works for the Borrowje Preserving Works, in Siberia. It was impossible for him to get permission to leave Siberia before January. The company would not grant him his passports to leave for Europe, and he could not cross the frontier without them. Defendant had (deponent added) received permission from the company for a fortnight's holiday, and he intended to leave Siberia about the beginning of January, and he had instructed his attorneys to apply for an extension of time for his examination, until the 1st February. If such postponement be granted, defendant would be able to give his evidence in London in January.

The answering affidavit of Mr. Dold, respondents' attorney, stated that the Court ordered the evidence to be taken on commission before the 1st October. The Master of the Supreme Court was pressing the plaintiff to file an account in the insolvent estate, but plaintiff was unable to do so until the action was decided. If the present application were granted, the case would probably not be heard until the April term, and the creditors in consequence would be delayed in the settlement of their claims. When defendant entered into the contract with the Russian company, the case was already ripe for hearing.

Mr. Gardiner for applicant. Mr. Russell for respondent.

In answer to His Lordship, Mr. Russell said that the action was to set aside certain proof of the debt filed by defendant. A sum of £3,000 was at stake, and plaintiffs' case was that defendant owed money to the estate.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that he did not see why the case should not come on for hearing in the February term, even if the present application were granted. Had the case, he asked, been set down for trial?

Mr. Russell replied that it had not yet been set down.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that there was no reason why the commission should not arrive in time for the February term.

Mr. Russell submitted that, if that were his lordship's view, the costs of the present application, at any rate, should be borne by defendant.

Mr. Gardiner argued that costs should be costs in the cause.

Buchanan, A. C. J., granted an extension of time as prayed, and directed that the case should be set down for trial on the 23rd February. There had now, he said, been two applications in this matter, and in the previous one the order was that costs be costs in the cause. Costs of the present application must be paid by the applicant.

ESTATE SCHOLTZ V. PRINCESS RADZIWILL.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to set down this case for trial on the 9th November. He said that the respondent was being sued by edictal citation, and notice was sent to England of the trial for Thursday, the 7th November. That date was an error, and should have been Tuesday, the 7th November. When the agents in London saw the papers, they noticed the discrepancy, and put the matter down for Thursday, the 9th November, instead of Tuesday, the 9th. This just brought the case within the seven days, according to which a case could not be set down for trial without the special leave of the Court. Notice had been sent for Thursday, the 9th November. That was the correct date, but unfortunately plaintiffs could not set the case down for that day without special leave. It was necessary to make this application now, because the edictal citation would have to be published on Friday.

In answer to His Lordship,

Mr. Benjamin said that the case would probably be undefended. They had no reason to believe that the Princess would enter appearance.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that applicants should set down the case for the 9th November, and it would probably then be ordered to stand over till the 10th November, when it could be disposed of.

Stock theft—Hard labour—Act 7 of 1905, Sec. 4.

Where a prisoner is sentenced to pay a fine under Sec. 4 of Act 7 of 1905, or in the alternative to a further term of imprisonment, the Act does not authorize the imposition of hard labour during such additional term.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: A case has come before me, as Judge of the week, from the Magistrate's Court at Britstown, in which certain natives (Hottentots) were convicted of stock thefts, and were sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour for 12 months, and to pay a fine of £1 each, or in default a further term of one month's imprisonment with hard labour. It has been repeatedly pointed out that the Act No. 7, 1905, does not provide for hard labour in the alternative imprisonment, where a fine has been imposed. The sentence and conviction will be confirmed, but the sentence will be amended by striking out the words "hard labour."

LUPTON V. EDELSTEIN.

Mr. Swift moved, on the petition of Bingley Fairbank Lupton for an order restraining Anastasius Trupos from paying over certain money to the respondent, Charles Edelstein, pending an action to be instituted by the petitioner, and for leave to sue by edictal citation. The petitioner set out that respondent owed petitioner a sum of £50, with interest, in respect of a promissory note, and that he had caused a summons to be issued. This, however, had not been served, the endorsement stating that the respondent now resided at Bethulie, O.R.C. Petitioner believed that respondent resided beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. He had ascertained that on or about September 30 a sum of £100 would become payable to the respondent by one Anastatius Trupos. of Cape Town, and he prayed that this sum should be attached, pending an action.

Rule nisi granted, attaching the sum of £100 in the hands of Anastatius Trupos, due to the defendant, Edelstein, and leave granted to the petitioner to sue by edictal citation, citation to be served personally, and to be returnable on October 26, leave to be reserved to set aside the rule to any other creditor having rights against the said sum.

MOORE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on behalf of the defendants in the action, for leave to amend the plea.

Mr. M. Bisset (for plaintiffs) applied for leave to amend the declaration and replication.

The amendments were allowed, and ordered to be filed within fourteen days, costs to be costs in the cause.

WORDON V. ESTATE WORDON.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment in terms of a consent paper. The action, he said, had been brought to set aside a certain will. Various allegations were made, and those allegations had now been withdrawn, and a consent paper had been signed between the parties. He appeared for the first, second, and further defendants. All the parties had signed the consent paper.

Judgment entered in terms of consent paper.

WAITE AND HARVEY V. YOUNG.

Water Court—Act 40 of 1899—
Appeal—Review.

Act 40 of 1899 makes no provision for an appeal from a decision of a Water Court thereunder constituted. Such decision may, however, be brought under review by a superior court on any of the usual grounds.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Water Court of Humansdorp. Mr. Benjamin was for the appellants; Mr. McGregor was for the respondent.

Mr. McGregor said that he had had no notice of the appeal, and he understood from the Registrar that none had been given. At the same time, the question arose, why was his learned friend there? This was an appeal from a decision of the Water Court of Humansdorp. Under certain sections there was an appeal, and under other sections there was not.

Mr. Benjamin said that the other side had had notice, inasmuch as his learned friend Mr. Burton had appeared from time to time, and the matter had been allowed to stand over.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: You were not in the case originally, Mr. McGregor?]

Mr. McGregor: No. I am told there is no notice of appeal.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: I think there must have been some notice, because here the assessors give their reasons for judgment.]

Mr. McGregor said that he had no objection to the appeal being proceeded with subject to right being reserved to raise subsequently the questions of whether notice had been given, and whether an appeal lay against the decision of the Water Court.

Mr. Benjamin said that this was an appeal under section 15, Act 40 of 1899, from a decision of the Water Board for the district of Humansdorp. The appellants were sued by the present respondent for an order to compel them to observe a certain distribution of water, alleged to have been agreed upon between the predecessors-in-title of the parties. Shortly put, the point was this, that the defendants (the present appellants) had no notice of such an agreement, and that such agreement, if it existed at all, had not been registered against the title-deeds of the predecessor-in-title of either the appellants or the respondent. The third question that arose was as to what this arrangement was whether it referred to the water that was led out of a particular dam, or whether it referred generally to the water in the river, which either ran through the properties or which was the boundary of the properties? The farm in question was called "Klein River," and situate near Hankey. The plaintiff (now respondent) became owner in 1874; the first defendant (now appellant) became owner in 1885, and the second defendant became owner about two years ago. The farm was, roughly, divided into four equal parts, three-fourths being owned by the present respondent, and the remaining fourth by the appellants. It appeared that about sixty years ago the farm Klein River was owned by one Ferreira, who had four children, and sub-divided the farm between the four children. They took undivided shares in the farm. C. J. S. Ferreira, who was the predecessor in title of the present appellants, owned one-fourth. The three other shares of one-fourth each came into the hands of the husband of one of the children, and Mr. Harvey, apparently no relation of the defendant Harvey. Those shares afterwards came into the hands of one Board, and from his hands they passed into the hands of the present respondent. At the time when old Mr. Ferreira divided the property between his children there was a dam called No. 1 dam, with a sluic leading out. The appellants, owning one-fourth, were the upper proprietors, and the respondents, owning three-fourths, were the lower proprietors. Old Mr. Ferreira, in dividing his farm between his four children, made some arrangement as regarded the water, each of the children to have a fourth share, in the order of four days each in each period of sixteen days. In regard to this point there was a dispute as to whether the arrangement referred merely to the water in No. 1 dam or whether it referred to the water to which the farm Klein River was generally entitled. Young acquired the property about 1874. In 1878 another dam was constructed by one Laatz, who had leased from C. J. S. Ferreira. That dam did not come into the case, having subsequent to its construction been disused and closed up. When Mr. Waite acquired the property he made No. 3 dam, which was higher up the river, and from which his lands could be watered. That was about 20 years ago. The dam was constructed on another property called Klein Fontein. A protest was made by Young, but nothing came of it at the time. When Mr. Harvey came, Waite and he proceeded to irrigate their land through certain pipes which they laid down, and conveyed water from dam No. 3. Recently action had been taken by the respondent to have it declared, firstly, that the arrangement which had been entered into between the Ferreira children when they had taken possession of the property from their father was an arrangement which referred not to the water in the dam, but to the water in the river, and, secondly, to have it declared that this arrangement made between the Ferreira children was binding upon the present appellants. The plaintiff claimed an order in terms of the arrangement and £50 damages. He said that the defendants had repeatedly drained the river, and had taken water from it out of their turns.

The Water Court, in their reasons for judgment, said that they found in favour of the plaintiff, and assessed the damage that he had sustained at £32 10s.

Mr. Benjamin said that, as regarded the side issue raised in the reasons for judgment as to what was a fair and equitable distribution of the water, no evidence had been lead in the Court below upon that point, and the defendants were not called upon to meet an indefinite case of that kind. He submitted that the only question to be determined by the Court was whether there was an original agreement between the parties which was now binding upon the present owners of the property. He submitted that there had been no registration of any alleged servitude in the interests of the present plaintiff. If there had been no registration, then the question arose, had there been due notice to the present owners of the property of any arrangement that would be binding upon them? He contended that no such due notice had been given. He submitted that the distribution that took place when the division of the farm was made was the distribution of the water in the dam, and not the river was made.

Mr. McGregor argued that if an agreement had been admitted, then the parties must be deemed to have taken the Water Court as being the arbiter, and his learned friend could not come into court under section 15 of the Act. It was significant that in this case the Water Court had gone into the question of what would be a fair and reasonable distribution. His learned friend had intimated that he came into court on section 15; section 15, according to his own showing, did not apply, and he had not yet satisfied his lordship on what ground he was entitled to come to this Court. He submitted that his learned friend could not be heard on appeal that day at all. It was significant that counsel should say that this matter must be dealt with rigorously, and only as a matter of agreement. It was true that no servitude had been registered against the property, but against that they had the only standing system which had existed from time immemorial, and the further fact that the division, after being informally entered into between the father and the children many years back, was thereafter, owing to difficulties arising between the parties, made a matter of arbitration. The award could not be traced, but one might fairly presume that the arbitrator would give to the party that had three-fourths of the land three-fourths of the water. Mr. McGregor dwelt at some length on the point as to whether this matter should have come before the Court by way of appeal or review.

Mr. Benjamin, in reply, submitted that if the Court should hold that there were no grounds of appeal his clients were entitled under the Charter of Justice to ask the Court to review the decision of the Water Court.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: I am not aware that there has been any decision of this Court upon the construction now sought to be placed upon the Water Court Act, No. 40, 1899, on the points raised in issue in this case. The Parliament of this country sought by that Act, it seems to me, to revert to the former practice which was in existence in this country of having disputes between farmers relative to water rights settled on the spot by a Court of Heemraden, and the place of that Court of Heemraden, which has been abolished, was sought to be filled by the Water Court created by this Act. The powers, duties, and mode of procedure of the Water Court, as indicated by the Act, are very similar to those which were followed by the old Court of Heemraden. Their decisions, unlike the decisions of arbitrators, would under this Act be binding upon the parties, and I see under one section the decisions of the Water Court may, without reference to the Supreme Court for confirmation or otherwise, be registered against the titles of the persons affected by the decision of the Water Court. The Water Court in the present case found, as a fact, that the agreement related to the whole of the water in the river, and not the distribution only of such water as happened to get into the sluic which was led out of the river. The Court below, I think, decided this question on sufficient evidence. The Water Court found that the use of the water in the Klein River was intended, and that the present applicants are entitled to the use of water for 4 days out of every sixteen, and that Young is entitled to have 12 days out of every sixteen in the older portion of the river, and they made an order accordingly. This order does not interfere with any right which the applicants may or may not have to take their four days' turn of water out of the stream higher up. That matter is still left open. The Water Court support their finding upon the older portion by saying that, after being on the spot and investigating the case, this apportionment seems to be a fair apportionment of the water. Now the 5th section of the Act which empowers the Water Court to investigate any agreement or understanding whether written or unwritten, does not contain any reference to a means of bringing a decision of the Water Court before this Court on appeal, and I think it may well be that the Legislature intended the Water Court to settle the question without further appeal, and I am supported in this view by looking at the next section. I think that the Act, as worded, supports the construction sought to be put upon it by Mr. McGregor, that there is no appeal in a case such as is now before the Court, and I think it is quite possible that it was intended that there should be no such appeal. I hold, therefore, that under this Act the question which was referred to the Water Court in this case is one which there is no right of appeal against. At the same time, of course, this Court has always the right of control over the proceedings of any inferior Court, and to correct any informality or malpractice. As I hold that there is no appeal from the Water Court, the only question that remains is whether in order to save expense the Court should say whether there is anything indicated which would induce the Court to interfere with the decision of the Court below. Looking at all the circumstances of the case, looking at the decision given by the Water Court and the fact that their finding is justified by the evidence, I think that this is a case in which there would be no likelihood of a review succeeding against the decision of the Water Court. This must be treated as an application to the Supreme Court, and the order of this Court will be that the application is dismissed with costs.

In re INSOLVENCY STEVENSON.

Mr. Benjamin moved, as a matter of urgency, on behalf of the Board of Executors, as executors in the estate of the late William Hiddington, for the appointment of Mr. Johannes H. N. Roos, secretary of the Board, as provisional trustee in the insolvency of Henry Stevenson, of the Annandale Hotel, Cape Town, for power to carry on the hotel pending the election of a trustee by the creditors.

An order was granted appointing Mr. Roos as provisional trustee with power to carry on the hotel.

COULTON V. BULL. { 1905.
Oct. 11th.

This was an application on notice of motion for an order of release from civil imprisonment, and for a discharge of the decree of civil imprisonment against the applicant (Bull). The applicant is a doctor, who had recently opened practice at Uitenhage, and the respondent is also a medical man. The respondent had promised not to press his claim until the applicant satisfied another debt, and the applicant pointed out in his affidavit that some of his patients were in a critical state, while he was being detained in prison. The applicant, in his affidavit, set out that his income was not sufficient to enable him to pay anything.

Mr. Upington was for the applicant and Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent.

Buchanan, A. C. J., pointed out that the paucity of information in the affidavits with regard to the applicant's property, and suspended the decree on the applicant paying £3 a month.

MZUBELO AND OTHERS V. { 1905.
NDABA AND ANOTHER. { Oct. 11th.

Deed of grant—Rectification—
Tribal tenure—Trust.

One Manguzela, a native Chief, had purchased two farms with subscriptions raised among the people of his tribe for the purpose of extending his location. At the suggestion of the R.M., the property was transferred to the Chief, his Headmen and Councillors, without mention of any trust. Two of these people now claimed dominium in pro rata undivided shares of the farms purchased.

Held, that the farms had been transferred to them only in trust for their tribe: and that the deed of grant must be so amended as to express that trust.

This was an action for the rectification of a certain deed of grant of two farms in East Griqualand.

The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs and defendants are members of that section of the Amahlubi tribe under the late Chief Manguzela, and reside at Matatiele, in the district of East Griqualand, in this colony.

2. On or about the 26th day of April, 1894, and during the lifetime of the said Mangubela, one John Shepherd Simpson, duly authorised thereto, purchased from the Colonial Government, under the conditions and regulations contained in the Act 15 of 1887, and in certain deeds of grant, hereinafter referred to for and on behalf of the people of the said section of the Amahlubi tribe, certain two farms situate in the said district and known as "Simpson" and "Polygon," for the sums respectively of £1,010 and £780 sterling.

3. The said sums so far as necessary were raised by public subscription amongst the people of the said section of the said tribe, and the whole of the said purchase prices has been paid for and on behalf of the said people.

4. On or about the 25th day of June, 1895, certain two deeds of grant were executed in pursuance of the said contract of sale, whereby the said two farms were granted, ceded, and transferred to the said Chief Manguzela, Rarnati, Sobago, Jafta, the plaintiffs and defendants with full power and authority thenceforth to possess the same in perpetuity, subject to certain conditions therein set forth to which it is unnecessary to refer more fully. The plaintiffs annex hereto copies of the said deeds of grant which they pray may be considered as if inserted herein.

5. It was at all times material to this case the true intention and meaning of all the parties to the deed of grant that the said farms should be granted, ceded, and transferred to the persons mentioned in the last preceding paragraph in trust for the said section of the said tribe, which is entitled to all the right, title, and interest in and to the said farms, under and by virtue of the said deeds of grant, but by mistake or "justus error" the said deeds of grant were signed, and executed in the form set out in the last preceding paragraph.

6. Subsequently to the signing and execution of the said deeds of grant the Chief Manguzela and the said Rarnati, Sobago, and Jafta died.

7. Thereafter the defendants claimed and still claim to be entitled in full and free ownership to an undefined one-eleventh share each, in each of the said farms, and have wrongfully, unlawfully, and in violation of the true intention and meaning of the parties to the said deeds of grant, purported to sell and have attempted to transfer their said shares.

8. Thereafter on or about the 17th day of November, 1903, this Honourable Court granted an interdict restraining ing the transfer by the defendants of any portion of the said farms, pending an action to be forthwith brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants for rectification of the title deeds of the said farms.

9. By reason the premises the plaintiffs are entitled to claim that the said deeds of grant be rectified so as to carry out the true meaning and intention of the parties thereto, by the insertion in each of the said deeds of grant between the words, "Willie Ndaba," and "the aforesaid piece of land" of the words "in trust for that section of the Amahlubi tribe under the late Chief Manguzela," or of such other words as will give effect to the said meaning, and intention of the parties.

The plaintiffs claim: (a) Rectification of the said deeds of grant as set forth in paragraph 9; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

For a plea in abatement the defendants set out that the plaintiffs were not entitled to have and maintain the action against them without joining the Colonial Government, who, as grantors, were directly interested. On 29th July, 1895, the parties jointly and severally executed and registered in favour of the Colonial Government a mortgage bond for the sum of £1,432. The defendants admitted they belonged to the Amahlubi tribe, but denied that they were members of the section which was under the late Chief Manguzela. They denied that Simpson was authorised to purchase the farms for the people of the section, and they set out that they were entitled to sell their shares and to obtain from the plaintiffs the original deeds of grant for the purpose of passing transfer to one Kirk.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) for plaintiffs. Mr. Benjamin for defendants.

Mr. Upington said that the Government did not wish to intervene in the action, but the Acting Chief Justice ordered the Government to be formally joined as co-defendants, in order that the mortgage bond, if necessary, might also be rectified. The evidence taken on commission was read.

Mr. Upington said that in this case the plaintiffs sought to have the grants of two pieces of ground rectified so as to carry out what they alleged to be the true intent and meaning of the parties at the time when the purchase was entered into, and they alleged that the form in which the documents were drawn up did not carry out that true intent and meaning, and that this was due to a mistake. As to what the true purpose, intent, and meaning of the two deeds of grant actually was there could be very little doubt, because upon that point, so far as the main features of the case was concerned, in spite of the vast amount of evidence that had been led, there really was very little at issue between plaintiffs and defendants. It was admitted that Manguzela called his people together, that the people contributed, that at the first meeting, or some time before and after, the sum of £300 was contributed, and that a large number of people who had contributed did not appear on the title deeds. He did not intend to enter into a nice analysis to show the names of the contributors and the amounts they had contributed, because these were admitted. Consequently, he submitted that a large portion of the plaintiffs' case was made out. It was highly improbable that these people contributed for the purpose of making 11 natives, including the two defendants, Breakfast and Ndaba, co-proprietors in their own right of the two farms "Simpson and Polygon, and, in fact, when the direct evidence was looked to it was at once seen that that clearly was not the case. Counsel proceeded to quote from the evidence of Mr. Simpson, who stated that while R.M. of Matatiele he was approached by the Chief Manguzela, who was afraid that the farms were going to fall into the hands of the Europeans, and who was anxious to keep the property for his own tribe. These farms, according to Mr. Simpson, were purchased in order to enlarge the location and to protect the location, and in the course of his evidence he said that from an administrative point of view it was necessary that the farms should be added to the location, and that he considered it his duty, as Magistrate of the district, to interest himself on the natives' behalf. Counsel went on to comment on the fact that of the £500 or £600 contributed, every penny, with the exception of £20 or £30, was subscribed by people other than the two defendants. He also pointed out that these farms had always been looked upon by the Government as part of Manguzela's location.

Mr. Benjamin said that a great mass of evidence had been led, and there was a great conflict in the testimony given by the witnesses. The defendants clearly intended to purchase a share of the farms, and they contributed certain sums towards the purchase of the property. It was true that a contract had been entered into between the defendants and Mr. Kirk, but it was not Mr. Kirk who was now before the Court, but the defendants. It was clear from their evidence that the defendants would not have contributed unless they had thought they were going to have a fixed, definite interest in the farms. Whatever Mr. Simpson's explanation may have been, the defendants thought they were going to have a heritable right. If Mr. Simpson did say at the time that the farm was to be bought "in trust," then one would like to know what were the words used by the interpreter in conveying the idea to the defendants. He submitted that, while the defendants would not be entitled to a full eleventh share each of the property, they were at least entitled to a share proportionate to the amount of money they had contributed. If the prayer in the plaintiff's declaration were granted then the defendants would be outcasts. Counsel submitted that, as against defendants, plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed in this action.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: Prior to the year 1894 the native chief or headman Manguzela and his people occupied a location on Crown ground in the Matatiele district. Adjoining this location were certain other Crown lands, which the Government resolved to sell. Before the sale the chief and some members of his tribe had spread their borders on to some of these unoccupied Crown lands, and were living there at the time of the sale. When the sale was first mooted Manguzela had an interview with Mr. Simpson, the Magistrate of Matatiele, with a view to the chief buying the land which was about to be put up for auction adjoining his location for the use of his sub-tribe. On looking into the diagram it is very clear why it was desirable that the farms Polygon and Simpson should be bought for the tribe or should be annexed to the location of the Chief Manguzela, not only as giving them access to the water, but also as affording additional grazing and arable land. The Chief took Mr. Simpson's advice and called a meeting of his people for the purpose of discussing the purchase, and at the meeting in the language of allegory so much in favour with the natives, as one of the witnesses said, "he represented as the Chief of his people that he was about to marry a daughter of the Government, and wanted their assistance in providing the usual dowry"—in other words, that he wanted to buy this land and that he wanted his people to assist him in buying it. The people responded to the request, and a number of them subscribed cattle, which were afterwards sold, and the proceeds paid over to the Magistrate. The two defendants Ndaba and Breakfast, each contributed cattle, which were afterwards sold for £10. The Chief himself contributed some £30 or £40 and other members of the tribe contributed, some more and some less. The money subscribed was about £300. Later on Mr. Simpson, acting for the tribe, bought these two farms. Mr. Simpson was then removed from Matatiele to Mount Fletcher. When the land had been bought he had suggested that the transfer or grant should be made not only in the Chief's name, but that the names of the headmen and counsellors should be inserted in the deed. This suggestion was adopted. The grant was made out in the names of the Chief and these ten counsellors, but without mention of any trust, but, from the evidence given in this case, and about which there is no conflict, it is clear that the Magistrate had made the purchase, not on behalf of the Chief and these ten people named in the grants only, but on behalf of the members of the tribe under Manguzela. The purchase was made in 1894, and when the land was subsequently granted, a mortgage bond was passed to the Government for the balance of the purchase price. Since then, by contributions of the people, a portion of the capital has been paid off, and during the last ten years sums have been raised from time to time by the people of the tribe for the annual interest and for the expenses of survey and transfer. Breakfast has contributed £10 towards the purchase, and he says that he has contributed £5 a year towards the interest. Ndaba contributed £10 towards the purchase, and he says that he has paid £7 towards the expenses of transfer and survey and £5 towards the interest. Mr. Temple, in his evidence for the defendants, says that the £5 contributed by Ndaba was not one year's contribution, but was for his share of the contribution for several years towards the interest. It appears to have been the custom of the tribe, whenever a call was made either for capital or interest, either for the Chief to call a meeting or to send round, and have the amount collected, and when the required amount was collected from his people no further collections were made. In 1902 the defendants, wishing to leave the place for several reasons, entered into negotiations with one Kirk, who bought from them their interest in this farm for £60. Kirk alleges that at that time he bought a one-eleventh interest in the whole property, and proceedings were taken in this court to compel the plaintiffs to deliver the title deeds to Kirk, or to the agents of the two defendants for the purpose of transferring this eleventh portion. But, as I have said, it is clear from the evidence that the defendants were not intended to be the owners in their own right of one-eleventh of the property; and the learned counsel for the defendants now says that he is prepared to give up the claim for one-eleventh, and to take what may be considered a fair proportion of the land purchased. It appears to be the custom of natives for the Chief to allot to the men who come to his tribe ground to cultivate. One of the defendants said the Chief promised him a "blanket," meaning a piece of land, for himself if he would assist in the purchase. The Chief did afterwards point out to each defendant a place where they could build their huts and make gardens. Whether the defendants will be entitled to dispose of their allotments is a question that we are not called upon to decide. It may be well that the defendants took the allotments from the Chief under the usual custom of the natives, with regard to lands in locations, and they may be bound to abide by those customs, which, if I am rightly informed, amount to this, that when a chief allots land to a member of the tribe he is entitled to occupy that land only so long as he is a member of the tribe, and that, if he likes to give it up or to leave the tribe, then he has to abandon to the common land what was specifically allotted to him as a member of the tribe. There is no doubt that deeds of grant and title deeds are important documents, and that they would not be lightly interfered with by the Court. The defendants' case depends mainly, if not entirely, upon these documents. But motions to amend title deeds or deeds of grant are not unknown in this colony, and when it is clearly made out that there is an error in the documents the Court has ordered the amendment, so as to represent the actual position in the case. But for Mr. Simpson's interference, the defendants' names would probably never have appeared on the deed of grant at all, and they would have been made in favour of Manguzela. I consider that they were grantees, not in their individual rights, but as trustees for the tribe. I think that the plaintiffs have proved in this case that they are entitled to have the grant amended in terms of the declaration. The prayer of the plaintiff's declaration will therefore be granted, and the deed of grant will be amended by adding the words "in trust for that section of the Hlubi tribe under the Chief Manguzela." As the property has been bonded to the Government, and the Government do not object to this action, and to any amendment in the bond following the amendment of the title, an order will also be given for an alteration of the mortgage bond by inserting the words "in their capacity as trustees for that section of the tribe under the Chief Manguzela," so that it will agree with the deeds of grant. The plaintiffs will have to pay the costs of amending the mortgage bond. As far as the defendants (Ndaba and Breakfast) are concerned, they will have to pay the costs of the action.

Hopley, J., concurred.

Mr. Benjamin said that he desired to draw the attention of their lordships to the large amount of unnecessary matter attached to the declaration. He noticed, for instance, that the whole of the Act of Parliament had been printed twice over.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: That will be a matter for the Taxing Master. His Lordship added that he wished to express his disapprobation of certain of the evidence led before the commissioner, especially with regard to the charges brought without foundation against witnesses.

Dr. Rainsford moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be discharged.

Order discharged.

LAITE V. SCARLES.

Mr. Lewis moved for a provisional order of the sequestration to be discharged.

Order discharged.

TOORT V. DALY.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £220, less £75 paid on account, together with interest and costs.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (for defendant, who resides at Rosebank) read an affidavit. The defendants absolutely denied that the said sum or any portion thereof was owing. Defendant said that she had made certain payments, and that there had been transactions in connection with certain racing ponies, which wiped off the balance. The matter was complicated by transactions with a third party, Thomas Fisher, whose estate had recently been compulsorily sequestrated.

The answering affidavits of the plaintiff and Thomas Fisher entered into the relationships and transactions between the parties at length. The affidavits dealt principally with racing matters, and an allegation was made that defendant had offered to pay certain sums in settlement of the debt.

Dr. Greer for plaintiff; Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers for defendant.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that this was not a case for provisional sentence at all. The application would be refused, and the parties must go into the principal case, costs to be costs in the cause.

SWART V. CROUS.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Periodical Court of Heidelberg. The debt was £5 11s. 4d., with £1 13s. 10d. costs.

Defendant offered 5s. a month.

Provisional sentence granted, and property declared executable.

TREDGOLD, MCINTYRE AND BISSET V. CONRADIE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest and costs, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE WRIGLEY V. WRIGHT.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £400 and £350 respectively, with interest and costs, and for payment of premium of insurance and stamp duty. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MARKLEW V. ABRAHAMS.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,950, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of capital as provided therein. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and for rents receivable from the property to be attached.

Order granted.

Order granted.

HOLROYD V. MCBRIDE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £250, with interest and costs, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.
Order granted.

MACOWAN V. HERRER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for judgment on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest and costs, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.
Order granted.

JAGGER AND CO. V. DROOMER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be discharged.
Order discharged.

TAYLOR V. GROENEWALD.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £100, and judgment for, under Rule 329d, £19 11s. 2d., balance of account owing for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.
Order granted as prayed.

BROWN V. PADYACHE.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £73, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest and instalments. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.
Order granted.

OHLSSON'S BREWERIES V. HALVORSEN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Cape Town, for £128 3s., and £2 10s. 4d. and 9s., being taxed costs and charges.
Order granted, subject to copy of judgment being filed.

TOUCHER V. HOGGARD.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.
Order granted.

VOS V. ANDRIES.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £350, less £100 paid, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.
Order granted.

VAN EEDEN V. DU PLESSIS.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond, due by reason of the non-payment of interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £58, being nine months' interest, and for costs.
Order granted.

PETERSEN V. VAN DEN HEEVER.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £800, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.
Order granted.

LANEY AND DURING V. ROUX.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £45, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.
Order granted.

GRAAFF V. ROLLNICK AND MATZ.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £5,000, with interest, less £28 paid on account, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Counsel said that he had to apply for the case against Matz to be postponed until the 26th October, and he had to apply for judgment against Rollnick only at present.

Rollnick appeared, and offered £25 a month.

Order granted as prayed.

HARRIS V. DOYLE.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £120.

The defendant's affidavit denied that there was a balance of more than £50 owing, which amount he tendered.

The answering affidavit of the plaintiff stated that no payments had been made on account of the promissory note now sued upon.

Dr. Greer for plaintiff; Mr. Upington for defendant.

Mr. Upington argued that the matter was not one for provisional sentence, but that plaintiff should be ordered to go into the principal case.

Dr. Greer submitted that the plaintiff was clearly entitled to his judgment on the note.

Judgment was given for £50, no order as to costs, plaintiff to go into the principal case with regard to the rest of his claim.

VOS V. TURNER.

Mr. Roux moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

DANZIG V. REX AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £377 10s., payable at the Standard Bank, Oudtshoorn, and for interest at the rate of 12 per cent.

Order granted.

EARL V. HUMPHREY AND TURKINGTON.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estates as insolvent.

Order granted.

WILSON, SON AND CO. V. } 1905.
ROCHESTER BRICK CO. } Oct. 16th.

This was an application for provisional sentence on certain promissory notes, and for balance of account for goods sold and delivered.

The affidavit of W. Stevens, one of the defendants, admitted certain debts, but said that plaintiffs were indebted to them in the sum of £299, rent due for certain coal deposited on defendants' property, leaving a balance due in their favour of £157 9s. 11d.

Plaintiff's answering affidavit emphatically denied that they were indebted to defendants in £299 or any other sum.

Mr. Burton for plaintiff; Mr. Upington for defendant.

Mr. Upington having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that provisional sentence was claimed on two promissory notes. These notes were admitted, though defendants said that they had a counter-claim against plaintiffs for rent, in respect of certain coal stored on their property. This claim was positively denied by the plaintiffs. They had two liquid documents, which were admittedly genuine, and there was a disputed amount, which was alleged to be a set-off against those claims. Plaintiffs were entitled to provisional sentence on the liquid documents, less £20 paid on account. Order accordingly.

GRAAFF-REINET BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. MENTJES.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £335 with interest and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

STEPHEN FRASER AND CO., LTD. V.
IMMELMAN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Order granted.

PEDLAR AND CLAPHAM V. LEWIS AND DINNER.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a bill of exchange for £125 5s., with interest.

Order granted.

SCANLON V. DI BIASIO.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of the R.M. Court for £88 and £2 12s. 4d. taxed costs.

Defendant admitted that he owed the money, but said that he was unable to pay anything. He was employed as a stone-cutter at the Paarl.

Mr. van Zyl, in reply to the Court, said that the matter arose out of a libel action brought in the Supreme Court by defendant against one Harrison. Plaintiff succeeded, but he had had to pay the costs, as Harrison could not pay.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the action should have been brought in the R.M.'s Court.

Decree of civil imprisonment granted, to be suspended on payment of £2 a month, with leave to plaintiff to move the Court further.

Buchanan, A.C.J., remarked that these heavy costs should not have been incurred by the attorneys.

NORTHERN ASSURANCE CO. V. BAREND AND OTHERS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £600, with interest, due by reason of notice having been given and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Counsel said that only Cornelis and Barend had been served with the summons.

Order granted against the two defendants named.

NATIONAL BANK OF SOUTH AFRICA V. ABRAHAM.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment upon two dishonoured cheques amounting to £3,601 8s. 10d. and an illiquid claim of £15 17s. 8d. and taxed costs.

Defendant said that he was without means or property. He had been a speculator and bookmaker. He had agreed to pay £10 a month to the bank, but at that time "books" were allowed, and they were now excluded.

Cross-examined: He was residing in Kimberley, and was hardly making sufficient to live on. He had a wife and nine children. He was engaged in bookmaking and following up sales. The cheques were accommodation cheques for Mr. Harris, a well-known broker in Cape Town, who assigned his estate about eighteen months ago. He had not proved against the Harris estate because it was not worth while.

By the Court: He was already paying £5 a month on another judgment.

No order was made, leave being given to applicant to move the Court further.

DEMPERS AND VAN RYNEVELD V. SACHS.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on mortgage bonds for £150, £150, £75, £200, £83 18s. 6d., £150, £50, and £350, with interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable and for leave to collect the rents of the property.

Order granted and power given to the Sheriff to attach the rents.

ESTATE AHBENS V. CONRADIE.

Dr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £150, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of rent. Counsel also applied for £3 5s. insurance premium and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

LOTRIET V. BOONZAIER.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the R.M.'s Court at Fauresmith, O.R.C., for £43 odd and taxed costs, defendant having removed to the jurisdiction of this Court.

Order granted.

HEIDE V. DANIELS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,300, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

OOSTHUYSEN V. FOTHERINGHAM.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £22, with interest.

Order granted.

LUYT V. SMYTH.

Mr. Swift moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Order granted.

LIND V. GESWINT

Mr. M. Bisset said that this was an application for the final sequestration of the defendant's estate as insolvent, but his client was prepared to consent to the matter standing over sine die.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan (for defendant) moved for an order authorising the sale of certain property in the estate of their father to enable the petitioners to pay off the debt. The debt was incurred on behalf of the father, and the petitioners were his curators.

Order granted as prayed.

The application for final sequestration was ordered to stand over sine die.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

HOWSE, REYNOLDS AND CO. V. DAVIE.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment under Rule 329d, in terms of prayer (a) of the declaration, calling upon the defendant to render a true, full, and detailed account, supported by vouchers and for costs of suit.

Order granted, account to be rendered within one month.

ST. LEGER AND WILSON V. BONCKER.

Mr. Upington moved for judgment under Rule 319, in default of plea, upon a declaration which claimed (1) an account of certain moneys collected by defendant on behalf of plaintiffs; (2) debate of the account; and (3) return of all papers and documents handed by plaintiffs to defendants for the purpose of collecting debts. It appeared from the declaration that defendant had made a statement, in which he claimed that a sum of £8 was due from plaintiffs to himself.

Defendant said that he wished to plead to the declaration. He had rendered to plaintiffs a detailed statement of account.

Ordered to stand over until Thursday next.

Postea (October 19.)

Mr. Bisset said this case had been adjourned from Monday to enable defendant to file an affidavit.

Defendant now appeared, and informed the Court that he had done so.

Mr. Bisset said the defendant had only handed the affidavit to him at 10.30 this morning.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: I see you were supposed to collect these accounts, and you gave their collection to somebody else?

Defendant: But they agreed to it. He added that he had given his attorney authority to file the defence and it had not been done.

The Court allowed defendant two days to file his plea.

Ex parte VORSTER. { 1905.
Oct. 16th.
Nov. 16th.

Mr. Benjamin mentioned this case as a matter of urgency.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that he thought there should be some alteration in regard to these urgent matters. The suggestion that commended itself to him was that there should be a divisional court sitting every morning to hear urgent matters.

Mr. Benjamin then moved for a temporary interdict restraining petitioner's husband, Cornelius Dirk Vorster, at present confined in Colesberg Gaol, from alienating any portion of the joint estate, and from entering on the farm Dwarsbalk, pending an action for divorce to be instituted by petitioner.

Rule nisi granted, to operate as an interim interdict, and to be returnable on the 2nd November.

Postea (November 16th).

Mr. Benjamin moved for the rule nisi to be made absolute interdicting the respondent Dirk Cornelius Vorster from selling or alienating 300 sheep and goats, and ten head of cattle, on the farm Dwarsbalk, in the district of Colesberg, and from entering on the farm. Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for respondent.

From the petitioner's affidavit, it appeared that the respondent had been arrested on a charge of rape upon the petitioner's daughter, and that he was in gaol awaiting trial. The petitioner intended to institute an action for divorce. She applied for an interdict, because she understood that it was the intention of the respondent to remove the stock, and she also said that respondent had threatened her with violence. Petitioner and respondent were married in community.

Respondent, in an answering affidavit, said that petitioner had no cause to make the present application, and he prayed that the order might be discharged. Respondent entered at some length into the position of the property on the farm, and claimed that a good deal of it was due to his exertions.

A replying affidavit by petitioner was also read.

Mr. Buchanan contended that, under all the circumstances, there was no ground whatever for the application. No proof had been given of any intention on the part of the respondent to alienate any portion of the property. He said in his affidavit that he wished the applicant to remain in control of the farm until he had an opportunity of getting out of gaol and clearing himself from the charge.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: Applicant obtained a rule nisi calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from alienating any of the property of the joint estate, and also from entering upon the property Dwarsbalk, where his wife is living. The rule is returnable to-day, and the respondent appears to show cause why the rule should not be made absolute. The ground on which the rule was granted restraining the respondent from entering upon the farm is two-fold, but mainly because he had previously threatened his wife with violence, and she expected violence if he were allowed to return to the farm. That this expectation is not without good ground appears from the fact that the husband is now in gaol on a charge of incest and rape upon the daughter of the wife by her previous marriage. I think, therefore, it would be very good ground for restraining him from returning to the property, especially when it is remembered that the farm is a property the life interest of which has been bequeathed to the estate, and has not been brought into the estate by the husband at all. As to the other part of the application to restrain the respondent from alienating or disposing of any of the movable property in the estate, there is great force, no doubt, in Mr. Buchanan's argument, but in this case, considering the circumstances which are disclosed in the affidavits, the relationship which is existing between the two parties, and the fact that this property was really acquired out of the wife's estate, not separate estate, but an estate which has come to her, I think there would be no harm in continuing the interdict, as no creditors would be injured. The applicant ought to institute an action forthwith. I don't know when the criminal trial is to take place—

Mr. Benjamin: It has been instituted.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: When will it take place?

Mr. Benjamin: It will probably come on in the Northern Circuit.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: That won't be before next March.]

Mr. Buchanan urged that it would be very hard upon respondent to restrain him from parting with any of his own property. It was clear that he had property, as he had been in the employ of the military during the late war. Respondent would want some money for his defence to the criminal charge.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: He does not say that he needs the money. He may apply again. I think, for the present, the rule will be made absolute, pending proceedings to be instituted forthwith, costs to be costs in the cause.

REX V. BROODRYK.

Murder—Bail.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the release upon bail of Broodryk, who is charged with murder.

Mr. Nigtingale (for the Crown) consented, on condition of accused providing personal security in £1,000 and two sureties of £500 each, sureties to be to the satisfaction of the R.M. of Beaufort West. The trial, counsel said, would take place at the next Circuit Court.

Bail granted, subject to the conditions named.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. De Waal moved for the discharge from sequestration of F. H. C. Hutchings.

Granted.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the discharge from insolvency of Jacob G. Buhlmann.

Granted.

Dr. Rainsford moved for the discharge from insolvency of Frederick E. G. Aspelier.

Granted.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the release from sequestration of Anna Maria Raubenheimer.

Order of sequestration superseded.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

HIGSON V. HIGSON. { 1905.
Oct. 16th.

Mr. Russell moved for a decree of divorce, in default of compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

Ordered to stand over until the 14th November for production of an affidavit setting out that the defendant had failed to comply with the order of the Court.

Postea (November 14). Rule made absolute.

Ex parte NORVAL AND OTHERS.

Rules nisi under the Derelict Lands Act were made absolute in the following petitions: Estate John Norval (Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers), Estate Jonas Thomas (Mr. Gardiner), J. M. Steyn (Mr. Bailey), Angas Emily Poole (Mr. Bailey), Greeff and Bouwer (Mr. Lewis).

PLOTTEL V. BURMAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for a rule nisi calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be dismissed from executorship in the estate of petitioner's brother to be made absolute.

Mr. Gardiner, on behalf of the respondent, opposed the application.

Respondent was ordered to file an account within three months, and to pay costs of the application, with leave reserved to the applicant to again move the Court after the expiration of three months.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

LIQUIDATORS, BUFFALO SUP-PLY AND COLD STORAGE CO. { 1905.
V. M. BERGL (LONDON). { Oct. 17th.

Mr. Burton moved, on the petition of Mr. H. M. Fleming, in his capacity as official liquidator of the plaintiff company, for an order authorising the acceptance of a certain proposed compromise set out, in an annexure, subject to one Alexander Bergl being made a party thereto.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: There is a case pending in the English courts, and they have come to terms.]

They have not quite come to that yet. We come here as the liquidators to ask the Court to allow us to enter into this compromise.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: The application should hardly be for judgment by consent.]

It will not be a case of signing judgment. The agreement will be arrived at out of court, and all that will happen, I believe, will be that the case will be withdrawn.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: I take it that the judgment will be registered in the English courts?]

An order of authorisation is asked for of certain amendments, which we ask the Court to sanction, and which we will put to them. At present, their consent to the compromise does not embrace that.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: My point is that there ought to be a judgment of the English courts. His Lordship added that it was a good rule when a compromise was arranged in a matter such as this that public notice should be given.]

In regard to the publicity of the matter, your lordship may perhaps see from the petition that there are certain reasons why it should not be made public.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: We cannot dispense with that in the ordinary course.]

Here is a case in the court which, I take it, will be settled, and the general requirements of the law as to publicity would be complied with if there were a regular judgment by consent.

Buchanan, A.C.J., granted an order authorising the liquidators to consent to judgment in their favour in the action instituted by them in the High Court of Justice, based on the offer made by the defendant, with such other conditions as might be agreed upon between the defendant and the liquidators.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte JORDAAN. { 1905.
Oct. 17th.

Mr. Molteno moved, on the petition of the executrix testamentary, for authority to confirm the sale of certain property. Counsel said that the sole point was as to the interpretation of the will of the petitioner's late husband, the Master in his report stating that it was so contradictory that it was difficult to understand what was the intention of the testator.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further information as to the position of the heirs.

Ex parte SETTERY.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the rule nisi calling upon Frank Percival Smith to show cause why he should not be removed from certain executorship to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

SHARPE V. SHARPE.

Dr. Greer was for the applicant (Elizabeth Jacoba Sharpe); Mr. Alexander was for the respondent (Archibald J. Sharpe, a platelayer).

This was an application by the defendant in the divorce suit calling upon her husband to show cause why he should not pay to her the sum of £30, to enable her to defend the proceedings.

Affidavits were read, in which the respondent took up the position that he could not pay any sum to the applicant, as he was without means. Applicant said she denied the allegation of adultery made against her by the plaintiff in the suit. Respondent said that his wife's present action was quite unnecessary and a waste of money. He also stated that he was deeply involved in debt. His wife had been turned out of one house by the landlord on account of her disgraceful behaviour, the landlord (the Rev. Mr. De Villiers) saying that he would rather have a Hottentot in the house. Deponent had had judgments against him on account of his wife's debts, and had been twice arrested. He denied that he drank more than once a week, and even then, he said, not more than an average man's drink. He also said that when his wife received £20 from him, she spent it upon a dance at Gordon's Bay, and continued dissipation.

Leave was given to remove the bar, plea to be filed in seven days, but no order was made as to the payment of alimony. Leave was, however, granted to the applicant to defend the action in forma pauperis, Dr. Greer to be counsel, and Messrs. Herold and Gie, attorneys, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte ESTERHUYSEN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on the petition of the executrix testamentary, for confirmation of an agreement of sale.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte BOARDMAN.

Attorney — Admission — Service of articles—Breach of continuity.

B., an articled clerk, had served upwards of two years with a firm of attorneys in this Colony. He then joined the Imperial forces and now applied for leave to complete the remainder of his service in the Transvaal.

Held, that the breach of continuity of service must be condoned, but that leave could not be granted to complete service in the Transvaal.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order as to the completion of the articles of clerkship of one Wm. Boardman, petitioner having had his period of service interrupted by joining His Majesty's forces during the late war. He was now acting as managing clerk to a firm in the Transvaal.

Mr. Upington, on behalf of the Law Society, opposed the application, in so far as it was asked that service should be allowed in the Transvaal.

Mr. Benjamin pointed out that the applicant had actually served two years and three months with an attorney at Barkly East, when he joined the Imperial forces. He was only nine months short of the service required by the Court.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the applicant appeared to have rendered meritorious service to the country, in consequence of which the continuity of his service as an articled clerk had been broken. The Court would condone the breach of continuity of service, and grant an order for the applicant to be allowed to qualify for admission by serving a further nine months, so as to complete the requisite period of three years. As to the second part of the application, for leave to serve the balance of the period in the Transvaal, His Lordship said that he could not see his way at present to grant leave.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

COURTENCY V. COURTENCY. { 1905.
Oct. 17th.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a commission to take the evidence of the plaintiff. Mrs. Courtney, who was residing at Johannesburg. She had been deserted by her husband, and, having to earn her living as a boarding-house keeper at Johannesburg, was unable to come to Cape Town.

Application granted, the commission to take the evidence of the plaintiff and any other of her witnesses, Mr. J. van Heerden to act as commissioner.

KOCH V. KOCH.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default. The action was brought by the husband against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Leave was given to sue by edictal citation, and personal service was ordered on the defendant at Johannesburg, but after a diligent search by the Sheriff her whereabouts could not be discovered. Substituted service was ordered, and publication had been effected in "Ons Land" and "The Transvaaler."

Buchanan, A.C.J., pointed out that the publication in "The Transvaaler" ought to have been in Dutch, as the parties to the suit were Dutch.

Dr. Greer said that the publication was in Dutch in "Ons Land," and explained that the publication would be made by the agents in Johannesburg. There was some evidence, however, that the defendant was in Europe.

The plaintiff, Frederick Johannes Koch, a farmer, of Rietfontein, said he was married to the defendant, Catherina Margarita Koch (born Bothas), at Prince Albert, in November, 1892. There was no issue of the marriage alive. He lived happily with his wife until 1902, when the defendant went to Beaufort West to fetch her bicycle, which had been handed over to the military. She never returned to the plaintiff. Six months later she wrote a letter to her sister from Johannesburg stating her intention of never returning, and making certain allegations against her husband. Plaintiff was possessed of some 400 sheep and goats, and his wife had brought nothing into the community of property.

It was ordered that the defendant return to the plaintiff and restore to him conjugal rights on or before 15th January, 1905, failing which to show cause on the 1st February, 1906, why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and the defendant declared to have forfeited benefits arising out of the marriage in community, publications as before.

COLDREY V. COLDREY.

Mr. Gutsche was for the plaintiff and the defendant was in default. The plaintiff sued his wife by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce for malicious desertion and personal service was ordered, failing which publication twice in the weekly "Cape Times" and the "Daily Telegraph." It was found impossible to effect personal service. The parties were married in community of property in December, 1895, and of the marriage there was one girl, three years of age. In August, 1903, the defendant deserted the plaintiff and had not been heard of since. Plaintiff claimed a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce and forfeiture of the benefits under the marriage in community.

The plaintiff, Harry Pritchard Coldrey, stated he married the defendant, Ann Jane Coldrey, born (Campbell) in December, 1895. In January, 1903, witness, acting on medical advice, sent his wife for trip to England for six months, which was extended to nine months. He wrote to her regularly every mail and sent remittances. There was nothing peculiar until July, 1903, when he got a somewhat short note from his wife stating that she had not made arrangements for her return for reasons which she would state later on. Witness, in reply, sent a letter, which was returned unopened. In August he received a letter from the defendant containing the following passages: "You will, no doubt, be surprised when you receive this letter. After months of careful thinking I have come to the conclusion it is best I should not return. . . . It will be useless to try to find me, as I am leaving here this week, and for the future I am dead to everyone."

By Hopley, J.: He had no idea why she was staying away. When she left he took exception to her leaving debts behind, after he had stipulated she should not do so.

[Hopley, J.: There do not seem to be extraordinary differences between these people.]

Mr. Gutsche: For two years he has not heard from her.

[Hopley, J.: She has had time to think about it. You can take a similar order to the last, with the same publication as before. If possible, have it brought to her personal notice.]

WARREN V. WARREN AND TAYLOR.

Mr. Lewis was for the plaintiff and the defendants were in default. The action was brought by the husband against his wife, Jeanetta Warren, for divorce, and against James Arthur Taylor for £500 damages, on the ground of the adultery of the defendants.

William George Warren, the plaintiff, stated he was married to the defendant at Cardiff in May, 1880.

Witness went to Australia and remained there twelve years. In 1887 his wife went to England on a trip to see her parents. In 1895 his wife and he returned to England, and in 1897 they came here. At the beginning of the war witness sent her home to her parents for a trip. The letters between the parties were couched in affectionate terms. In August, 1902, she returned with the child. Witness was then at Kimberley with the military, then he came down to Cape Town and subsequently took up his residence at Bloemfontein. Taylor's name was mentioned to him by his wife, who said that the second defendant had been very kind to her on the voyage home. Witness and his wife went to Springfontein, and from there his wife left for Cape Town to spend a few days with some lady friends, and on her suggestion witness addressed letters to a Post Office box instead of the address where she was staying at Sea Point. In July, 1903, she returned to Bloemfontein and stayed twelve or fourteen days, during which time he noticed that she was very cold—there was something strange about her. She again returned to Sea Point, and in September, 1903, witness came down to Cape Town and endeavoured to find his wife, but he could not find the address given at Sea Point. Referring to the P.O. box address, he found it was the property of people in Kloof-road, but he could not find her there. Subsequently he received two letters, in which the first defendant denied any misconduct, but absolutely refused to see him. He returned to Bloemfontein and received more letters in the same strain. In February, 1905, he came down here, and, finding the defendants living as husband and wife, he visited them at Observatory, and, ultimately, in a scuffle, he was shot by the second defendant. Taylor, at the Criminal Sessions, was ordered to pay £50 or undergo four months' imprisonment for the assault, and the jury recommended him to mercy on the ground that there was evidence that he believed the first defendant was a widow and that she was in a delicate state of health when the plaintiff forced his way into the house.

Hopley, J., granted a decree of divorce, the plaintiff to have custody of the child, and taking into consideration the circumstances of the second defendant, who had been imprisoned for a time for being unable to pay his fine, ordered him to pay £25 damages and the costs of the suit.

EVANS V. EVANS AND MAGEE.

Mr. Gardiner was for the plaintiff and the defendants were in default. The action was brought by Joseph James Evans against his wife for divorce, and against the second defendant for £500 damages by reason of the defendants' adultery.

Joseph James Evans, the plaintiff, said he was married to his wife at Belfast on 15th July, 1895. Eventually he came out here and settled at Diep River under Government employment. The co-defendant got an introduction to the house through a friend, and on Sunday, 16th July, 1905, he (witness) became suspicious of the relations between Magee and his wife.

[Hopley, J.: What made you suspicious?]

Witness: He was making "eyes" at my wife. Proceeding, plaintiff said that on the following Tuesday morning, instead of going to his work, he returned to the house, only to find the defendants in the same room. He proceeded to give evidence of the misconduct.

Evidence was called as to the scene which then happened, the plaintiff evicting the defendants from the house and throwing the first defendant's boxes into the street.

Decree of divorce granted, the defendant to pay £50 as damages and costs of the suit. In awarding damages His Lordship laid stress on the unhappy relations between husband and wife prior to the occurrence.

HEYDENRYCH V. AMYOT.

Mr. Roux moved for an order to attach certain property in order to found jurisdiction in an action to be brought for the recovery of £248 18s. 1d. on an acknowledgment of debt.

Order granted and leave granted to sue by edictal citation, the citation and notice to be served together, personal service returnable on 12th December.

SWEENEY V. SWEENEY.

Mr. Jones moved, on behalf of the applicant (Bridget Sweeney) for alimony and funds to enable her to defend an action brought by the respondent against her for divorce.

Mr. Lewis opposed the motion.

The applicant's affidavit stated that respondent was in receipt of £17 15s. a month wages. The applicant had no means of defending the action, as she had seven children dependent on her.

The respondent's affidavit denied that she had no funds. She had a boarding-house, which paid her well.

The applicant, in a replying affidavit, denied that the boarding-house was paying her.

Hopley, J., inquired what amount it would take the respondent to support himself monthly.

Mr. Jones said the respondent's duties towards his family should also be taken into consideration.

Hopley, J., said that in the present case the applicant had a boarding-house, and in that way had a home. There were very serious charges alleged on both sides. It did not appear that there were any accumulated funds, and the Court did not see its way to make an order to stop the proceedings. There would be no order for contribution to the applicant's costs, but he would have to pay 15s. weekly towards the support of the children until the case was decided. The respondent would have to proceed forthwith with his action.

Mr. Lewis: Will your Lordship assign any date?

Hopley, J.: He will have to file his declaration within a week.

Ex parte SOLOMON AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Russell moved for an order authorising the Master to pay over certain moneys to the trustee for the maintenance of minors.

The application was granted.

Ex parte HOLMES.

Mr. Swift moved to have an arbitrator's award made a rule of Court. He put in consent papers.

The application was granted.

Ex parte BOWERS.

Mr. De Waal moved to have the transfer deed of certain property at Camp's Bay amended. He was described in the deed as Arthur Bowers, when it should have been Arthur Fitzgerald Bowers. The Registrar raised no objection to the motion.

The application was granted.

Ex parte KILLINGSWORTH.

Mr. Gardiner moved, on behalf of applicant, for leave to sue his wife, Kate Killingsworth, by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights.

The applicant's affidavit stated that he paid his wife's passage to England, and that she now refused to return to him.

The case was allowed to stand over to enable the applicant to state how long he had been domiciled in this country.

Ex parte THE ESTATE DU PLESSIS.

Mr. De Waal moved, on behalf of the trustees in the above estate, for leave to pass transfer of certain property. A consent paper by those interested was put in.

The application was granted, petitioner to pay costs of petition.

KEMLO V. KEMLO.

Mr. Van Zyl moved, on behalf of Alexander Kemlo, to have an arbitrator's award made a rule of Court. The applicant and respondent had traded together, but owing to their being unable to agree, an arbitrator was called in, and the parties decided to abide by his ruling.

The application was granted.

MASTERTON V. OBREE.

Mr. Gardiner moved, on behalf of Masterton, to make a certain award a rule of Court.

Mr. Roux, who appeared for the respondent, consented to the application, but opposed costs being given against him.

Mr. Gardiner explained that Masterton was assignee in Obree's estate, and after he had paid out the various claims, he handed the balance to Obree. The latter contended that more than he received was due to him, and as a result, an arbitrator was called in, who found that Obree had got what he was entitled to.

Mr. Roux contended that Masterton had not rendered an account as he should have done when he had wound up the estate, and as a result, the arbitrator was put to considerable trouble and expense to ascertain it, which amount he contended Masterton should pay.

The application was granted, the applicant being given permission to meet his costs out of the funds at present in his hands.

Ex parte DYMOND.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to register an ante-nuptial contract. The parties were married seven years ago in community of property, but were not aware of the fact until recently, consequently they brought the present application.

The matter was ordered to stand over pending counsel quoting authority for the order.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte THE ESTATE { 1905.
DU TOIT. } Oct 18th.

Mr. McGregor moved for the confirmation of a certain sale. The case had been before a Judge in Chambers, but counsel was advised to bring it up in court.

Rule nisi granted, to be served on heirs under the will of the Boshofs, rule returnable on the 14th December.

Ex parte LOVELL.

Mr. Close moved, on behalf of applicant, for leave to sue her husband William Lovell by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights.

The affidavit stated the parties were married in 1903 at Cape Town. In April last the respondent, who was a sergeant in the C.G.A., deserted, and has not since been heard of.

Leave to sue granted, citation to be the notice published in the "Cape Times" and "Government Gazette," and to be returnable on the 15th December.

Ex parte MINORS COETZEE.

Mr. Gutsche moved for leave to pass transfer of certain property. The property had been purchased from a vendor who had never received transfer. Usual rule under Derelict Lands Act granted.

Ex parte POULTON.

Mr. Payne moved for the registration of a certain transfer to an executrix.

ESTATE KARR V. COLOMBICK.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on behalf of the executors in this estate, for attachment of certain property, and leave to sue the defendant, who was resident outside the jurisdiction of the Court, by edictal citation.

Order granted.

GODFREY V. FRANK.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of the applicant, to have the hearing of this case set down for trial by jury.

Dr. Greer appeared for the respondent.

Mr. Jones read the affidavit of Mr. Wrensch, plaintiff's attorney, stating that the matters at issue in the suit were mainly matters of fact.

Dr. Greer said his client had not received the necessary notice as required under section 6, Act 23 of 1891, but he did not intend to raise that point.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: But the Court may.]

Dr. Greer read an affidavit made by respondent's attorney (Mr. C. Brady), in which he stated that the defendant was obliged to leave this colony for Europe, and would be unable to return until December 31. Defendant was a very material witness, as he was in the motor-car when the accident happened, and he prayed that the hearing of the case be set down for some date after December 31.

The affidavit of the applicant stated that on or about the 18th August he was informed that the defendant was making active preparations to leave the Colony. He thereupon reported the fact to his attorney, and the next day caused a letter to be written to the defendant's attorney, calling upon defendant to give security to answer the action and abide by the judgment to be given therein. On the 21st August applicant's attorney received a letter from defendant's attorney stating that, as far as he was aware, the defendant had no intention of leaving the Colony. On the same date a letter was received from defendant's attorney emphatically denying that the defendant was contemplating departure from this colony. In view of that letter, plaintiff took no further steps in the matter. Plaintiff objected to the application to have the case set down for a date after the 31st December, as the defendant was fully aware that the action would come on for trial this term. He firmly believed that the defendant did not intend to return to the Colony, and had left the Colony to avoid judgment.

Buchanan A. C. J., said it was a pity that the defendant was not arrested and forced to give bail before he left the country.

Dr. Greer said he believed that the defendant intended to return to Cape Town. He was a veterinary surgeon, employed by the German Government, and had large interests in Cape Colony.

Mr. Jones said the defendant had sold his horses and motor-cars before leaving South Africa.

The case was set down for trial for February 6.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that, in the meantime, he would like the attorney for the defendant to make an affidavit explaining to the Court how he came to write the letters he did to the plaintiff's attorney, and also to know if he would give security for the defendant's appearance.

Ex parte THE ESTATE DE BEER.

Mr. Payne moved, on behalf of the executor in this estate, for the confirmation of a certain sale.

Order granted.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY and a Jury.]

WESTON V. CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL. { 1905.
Oct 18th.
.. 19th.

This was an action brought by Frank Jonah Weston, merchant, of Rondebosch, against the Corporation of Cape Town, to recover £2,000 damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained through the negligence of the defendants or their servants. Plaintiff, in the evening of the 16th March last, fell into an excavation near Claridge's Hotel, at the top of Plein-street, made in connection with works which were being carried out by the Waterworks Department, and met with severe injuries to his left knee.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a merchant residing in Rondebosch, in the Cape Division, and the defendants are the Corporation of the city of Cape Town.

2. The defendants are responsible for keeping the streets of the city of Cape Town in a proper state of order and repair.

3. On or about the 16th March, 1905, certain excavations were being made by the defendants or their servants or agents at the corner of Plein and Roeland streets, in the said city, facing Claridge's Hotel.

4. It was the duty of the defendants to provide or cause to be provided sufficient and proper hoarding, lights, or other protection in and around the said excavations on the date aforesaid, for the protection and safety of the public using the said street, but the defendants wrongfully, unlawfully, and in breach of their duty failed and neglected to provide any or sufficient protection as aforesaid.

5. On the night of the said 16th of March the plaintiff was walking, as he lawfully might, in the said street, for the purpose of his business, when, owing to the negligence and default of the defendants, as aforesaid, he suddenly fell into the said excavation, which was 7 ft. in depth.

6. Owing to his said fall, the plaintiff sustained injuries to his leg, the knee-cap being broken in several places in consequence of which he has been obliged to undergo an operation; he also sustained other injuries, and still is suffering severely from the result of the said injuries, which have practically crippled him.

7. The plaintiff has, moreover, been obliged, by reason of his said fall, and its results, to incur considerable expense, and has further been prevented and is still prevented to a great extent from pursuing his business upon which he is entirely dependent for the support of himself and his family, and his said business has become neglected thereby, to his great detriment.

8. The plaintiff estimates the loss and damages which he has suffered in the premises damages to the extent of £2,000.

The plaintiff claims: (a) The said sum of £2,000 as damages aforesaid; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was:

1. The defendant is not aware of the plaintiff's occupation. The liabilities of the defendant are defined by Act 26 of 1893. Subject to the above, paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration are admitted.

2. The said excavation was situated between the lines of rail of the Tramway Company, which has the right to have the lines there, and there were at the said excavation the earth thrown up, sufficient and proper barriers, and lights and other protection for the safety and protection of the public using the said street were provided, and the defendant denies that there was any breach of duty on their part or any failure or negligence to provide any or sufficient protection as aforesaid.

3. In addition to the aforesaid, watchmen were employed by the defendant to open and close the barriers upon the approach and departure of a tram passing the said excavation, and, on the 16th March, when the said barriers were opened for the passing of a tram, the plaintiff, with notice and knowledge of the above facts, and in spite of warning, crossed the metals and fell into the said excavation; the said fall was occasioned by the carelessness and negligence of the plaintiff. Save as aforesaid, the defendant denies paragraphs 4 and 5.

4. The defendant has no knowledge of paragraphs 6 and 7, and does not admit them, and he denies that plaintiff has sustained damage to the extent of £2,000, or to any amount for which defendant is liable. Wherefore defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Lewis) for plaintiff. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Dr. Rainsford) for defendants.

Sir Edmund Sinclair Stevenson, medical practitioner, Rondebosch, said that he saw the plaintiff in consultation with Dr. Guillemard about the 17th or 18th March, and found that he has sustained a fracture of the knee-cap, which was serious because of the large spaces between the fragments. He considered that it was wise to perform an operation, and this was done. He did not think the plaintiff would ever have the full use of his leg as he had before the accident; he did not think he would be able to bend his knee as he did before.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Even to-day he would be prepared to certify the plaintiff as a first-class "life" from an insurance point of view.

Dr. Bernard J. Guillemard, partner of the previous witness, expressed the opinion that plaintiff would always have a more or less crippled leg. He would be liable to pain in his after-life; his leg would ache from time to time.

He thought the plaintiff's general health would suffer because he would not be able to take as much exercise as he otherwise would have done. He thought the plaintiff would have to use a stick in going about for the rest of the year.

George May, photographer, Plein-street, identified a series of photographs of the locality of the accident taken about a month ago.

The plaintiff, Frank J. Weston, who walked into the box with the aid of a stick, said that at the beginning of March he was carrying on business as a draper in Station-road, Observatory. On the 16th March he had removed his home to Rondebosch, and had taken a shop in Plein-street, Cape Town, formerly the Weiner Bakery premises. On the evening of the 16th March he had taken his shop goods and had them placed on a wagon. Witness came to town by train, and went to the shop, where he arrived about half-past seven. He had sent the wagon on in charge of a coloured "boy," named John Julius. Witness waited for about 15 or 20 minutes and looked down Plein-street, but did not see the wagon. On looking up the street he saw the "boy" standing at the corner of Claridge's Hotel with the wagon. He whistled to him, but could not attract the "boy's" attention. Witness went up the street to cross the road towards the wagon. He saw a large mound or heap of earth round the curve of the tram-lines, which he would have to pass to reach the wagon. The mound was outside the lines on the Stal Plein side between witness and the wagon. As he walked he saw the "boy" commence to drive straight ahead, as though he were about to pass Madeira House. He thought the "boy" was going to turn into Plein-street, and in order to meet him witness turned, but fell into the excavation. Witness first struck his chin, then his arm struck, and he dropped to the bottom of the hole with his left leg underneath. A coloured man named Gabriel and a white man came to his help and drew him out of the hole. There was nothing to indicate to him that the mound of earth was not solid. There was no protection or barrier of any sort. He saw one light on the corner of the heap, but it did not show on the excavation. He saw no watchman at the spot, and he received no kind of warning. Witness claimed £2,000 damages. His out-of-pocket expenses included a bill of £73 10s. 6d. from his medical attendants, about 11 guineas for massage, about £3 for medicine, and 15 guineas hospital expenses. Prior to the accident his business was showing a profit of about £100 a month. His business principally consisted in travelling, his shop being used more as a depot than a money-making concern. His business could not be conducted by any deputy during his illness. Witness had formerly been manager of Mr. Amos Bailey's drapery branch at Woodstock. During the time he was laid up he could do no business; he claimed for three months' loss of trade. He had done a little business since June last. He had a promise of a lease of the Plein-street shop for three years, but it was not signed. His goods were taken to his home at Rondebosch. He was even yet constantly in pain, on account of the injury. He could not move without the aid of a stick except on the level.

Cross-examined: Witness had had a sample-room at Station-road, Observatory about four months prior to the accident. He received a salary of £16 a month and commission while in Mr. Bailey's employ. He was employed at Mr. Pearce's at Claremont from 1899 to 1901 at a salary of £20 a month, and was dismissed without notice. He then went to the Transvaal and had a position in the mines at £22 a month. He had lately been engaged in travelling Cape Town and suburbs.

Mr. Schreiner: Where was the profit of £100 a month picked up this year in travelling about Cape Town and suburbs?—Witness: From the sale of my goods.

Whom were you selling to?—Private people.

What were your big lines?—There were no big lines; the accounts were, say, from £2 downwards and upwards.

Were you doing business in what I may call a "classy" line?—Yes.

Ladies' goods?—Yes.

Give me the largest account that any one lady in the suburbs had between July and March?—I think the largest I had was £15.

Was it at Wynberg, or where was it?—At Observatory.

Cross-examination continued: His best business was in Mowbray. He was not surprised at the amount of the doctor's bill, and in fact had expected it to go to £100. Witness had not seen the works that had been going on in Plein-street until the 16th March, having returned from Caledon on the 15th. He was in Plein-street on the morning of the 16th, but he did not notice any barriers about the excavations. When he went up to his shop, he saw there was work going on in the street.

Mr. Schreiner: Did you see the tram?

Witness: Which tram?

Mr. Schreiner: Behind which you hurried to get across the road.

Witness: I never saw a tram.

Mr. Schreiner: The tram for which the barrier was opened to let the car pass.

Witness: I absolutely deny that.

Cross-examination continued: He only saw one lamp near the mound. There was not a barrier carrying other lamps. It was absolutely untrue that he rushed out from the kerb as if he intended to catch the car.

By the Court: Even after he got out of the hole, he never noticed barriers or lamps.

Re-examined: He certainly did not run after any tram.

James Parker, Mayor of Mowbray, spoke to making an inspection the day following the accident of the excavation. The protection was very small, consisting as it did, so far as he could see, of only a rope about 18 inches high. He would consider it dangerous even at that time.

John Gabriel, an eye-witness of the accident, said there was no tram there at the time. There were no planks, but he saw two lights, one on a heap of dirt on Claridge's Hotel side, about a foot and a half from the hole, and the other at the bottom half, a foot from the hole. There were no other lights, except further down the street.

Anastasia Candiotes, a Greek fruiterer, carrying on business in Plein-street, said that on the night in question plaintiff called at his shop between 6.30 and 7 for a candle. He did not see the accident, but after it had occurred, plaintiff again came to his shop. Witness went to the hole about ten minutes later, and saw an Indian boy carrying a lamp. He saw a rope being put at the front of the hole by an Indian. There were iron posts in the ground, to which the rope was being fixed. He also noticed two or three lights.

By the Court: The custom of the Indian boy was to take the rope off the posts until a car passed, and then fix it on again.

Cross-examined: Witness saw a tram pass up Plein-street a little while after the accident. He stayed about for some time, but did not see a tram go down the street. He only saw two or three lamps over the whole length of the excavation.

ness was standing by the hole, his duty being to remove a plank when the car came and replace it when the car had gone by. The plank rested on tins filled with earth. Witness had only to remove one plank. He did not see the plaintiff until he was close to him. Witness had removed the plank to let a tram pass from the Roeland-street end. Immediately the tram had passed, plaintiff came along and fell into the hole. Plaintiff, who was walking quickly, entered at the place where witness had removed the barricade. Witness was at the time holding the plank and the lamp, and he shouted "Hi!" to the plaintiff. Witness could not stop him. Plaintiff was close behind the car. There were about ten or eleven lamps round the hole when the accident happened. Witness was carrying a lamp, which was alight.

Cross-examined: Witness did not see a wagon standing near Claridge's Hotel. He did not see anybody start to walk across the street from the butcher's shop side. The plank which witness removed to let the tram pass was about two or three paces from the hole. Witness did not know from which side of the street the plaintiff got to the hole. The hole was well lighted, and the man ought to have seen it.

[Hopley, J.: If plaintiff was close behind the car, he would not see the hole before he fell into it?]

Witness: There were lights on both sides of the excavation.

Further cross-examined: No ropes were placed round the hole on the night in question. Ropes were, however, fixed round the hole on the following day instead of planks.

Hallo, another Hindoo (who also gave his evidence through an interpreter) said that he was employed by the Council to watch the lower part of the works in Plein-street. There were eight or nine lamps about the upper hole. He saw a number of people at the hole, and he shouted to Dwear. He saw a man being removed a little later from the hole. There was a tram coming down the street towards the point where witness was standing.

Mustafa Hendricks, a Malay cabman, said that he usually stood at the Plein-street cab-rank. On the night in question he had the first cab on the rank. He saw a man fall into the hole. Plaintiff was close behind the tram.

[Hopley, J.: You would not see the hole because of the tram?]

Witness: I can't say as to that. In further evidence, witness said that he saw Dwear removing a 9 by 3 ft. piece of deal, so as to let the car pass. Dwear was standing at his post all the time.

Cross-examined: Witness made a statement to the police in St. John-street in his Malay name. His European name was Mustafa Hendricks. He had never said that a car passed from the Palmerston Hotel side. Witness did not see plaintiff run across the street. The Indian was waiting to replace the plank when the plaintiff fell into the hole. Witness did not think that the plaintiff was more than a foot behind the tramcar.

Christian Paulson, also a cabman, said that he was by the Stal Plein stand when the accident happened. He had a view of the spot. He saw the plaintiff hurrying to the Greek shop. Plaintiff came out and stood a little while, and then walked towards the corner of Roeland-street. A little later he heard a tram coming from Roeland-street, and he saw a man, who was carrying a light, take a plank away. The car passed, and he saw the plaintiff move from the corner and walk rapidly towards the car. The man fell into the hole. Witness's attention was called to plaintiff because he thought he was going to take a cab.

Cross-examined: Witness thought the man was trying to catch the car. He did not see plaintiff move from the verandah at the street corner. He saw lights about the hole.

Albert Sidney, manager of the Palmerston Hotel, said that he remembered seeing the excavations in Plein-street in March last. The excavations were well lighted and barricaded at night. He was not speaking of any particular night, but from general observations.

Mr. Davis, confectioner, Plein-street, said that in March last he saw the works carried on by the Corporation in the street. The works seemed to be properly lighted and barricaded at night.

Gustave Hanson, draughtsman in the Waterworks Department, gave evidence as to the preparation of the plan put in by the defendants.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Mr. Burton said that counsel were agreed that the question to be determined was one of fact, that the jury, as men of business and common-sense, could well decide. As far as one could see, there was no particular legal point arising. The matter resolved itself into this, whether they were going to believe the version of the occurrence given by the plaintiff and his witnesses, or the version given by defendants' witnesses. Either the plaintiff was entirely responsible by his neglect or carelessness for the accident, or the Council was responsible, through the negligence of its servants. Either the plaintiff was entitled to nothing at all, or he was entitled to damages in a substantial amount. It was clear that the plaintiff did not see the hole before he fell into it. Was it not the duty of the defendants to make such protection that no member of the public could walk into the excavation? Counsel at some length analysed the evidence.

Mr. Schreiner argued that his learned friend had put the case before the jury on such propositions as he would not have ventured to address to a Judge. His learned friend had put the case in such a way as to imply that the onus lay upon the Council to prove that they were not negligent. The Council, in pursuance of its duty had made holes that were required for the improvement of the city. The burden of proof rested upon the plaintiff to show affirmatively that there was negligence on the part of the Council in discharging this duty. If the view put before the jury by his learned friend were true, then the officials of the Corporation had conspired to defeat the ends of justice, and instead of having been in the witness-box, they should have been in the dock. The Council was standing in this matter on a point of principle. Counsel went on to submit that from the evidence the conduct of the plaintiff was consistent with that of a man who wanted to board the tram. He must have seen, and did see, the numerous lights and the barriers. In his desire to reach the other side of the street, he disregarded the hint conveyed to him by the barriers and lights. Mr. Schreiner proceeded to argue that plaintiff entered upon what he must have known to be a danger area, and he did not exercise due care and precaution, and liability for what happened was not, therefore, upon the Council's shoulders.

Mr. Burton, in reply, repudiated the suggestion that he had asked the jury to believe that the officials of the Corporation had put before them a forged plan and a false scheme of protection. What he (Mr. Burton) did say was that the Corporation officials had given them a scheme of protection which should have been there if everything had been properly done. It did look as if that night the servants of the Corporation began to lock the stable-door after the horse had gone.

Hopley, J., in summing up, directed the jury to dismiss from their minds any considerations they might have in regard to the relative positions of the parties, and to give their attention solely to what occurred when the accident happened. At the same time, it must be borne in mind that these works had been going on for some time, having been commenced in Adderley-street and reached the top of Plein-street. The plaintiff was, on his showing, an energetic man, and it was quite natural to expect, when he saw the wagon carrying his goods turning in what he believed to be a wrong direction, that he would go across the street, and quite conceivably without noticing the obstructions in the street. His lordship reviewed at some length the evidence in regard to the state of things in the neighbourhood of the excavation where the plaintiff met with his accident, and in his concluding remarks inclined strongly to the theory that a tramcar passed just before the plaintiff tried to cross the street, and that a shadow would be thrown on the hole.

The foreman asked his lordship whether it was necessary that the jury's verdict should be unanimous?

Hopley, J., replied that the verdict must be unanimous, unless the jury had deliberated for an hour, and in that case there must be a majority of six.

The jury having retired, and having subsequently returned into court,

The foreman intimated that they had agreed upon a verdict for the defendants. He added that they wished to express their sympathy with the plaintiff in what was to them a regrettable accident.

[Hopley, J.: I am sure we all feel myself that the verdict is quite correct.]

Mr. Schreiner then moved for judgment for the defendants, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Friedlander and Du Toit; Defendant's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

BOSSELIER V. PIPMAN. { 1905.
Oct. 19th.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, with interest from April 1, at 6 per cent.; also for £14 2s. 6d. for insurance, etc., and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ALLIE V. DULLA.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

Order granted.

WARREN V. WATSON.

Mr. Payne moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.
Order granted.

PAARL BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. MYBURGH.

Mr. Roux moved for the final adjudication of the defendant estate. Provisional order had been granted on the 26th September, 1905.
Order granted.

WILSON V. GLYNN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate. The provisional order was granted on October 2

The defendant appeared and said judgment had been given for £50, whereas the amount was only £45. He had tendered property valued at £100, but it was not accepted. A friend of his had guaranteed to pay the amount. Some of the other creditors did not wish to have the estate compulsorily sequestrated. The defendant proceeded to explain that he had no knowledge of the debt until it was due, as it was contracted by the person to whom he had given his power of attorney. Defendant had tendered £5 a month, but it was not accepted. If he was allowed a month's time, he believed he would be able to pay the debt, as he was expecting an inheritance.

Mr. Benjamin said the defendant had been asked to allow the plaintiff to draw on the inheritance, but he refused.

The defendant said he had assigned the inheritance, but a friend of his was willing to satisfy the plaintiff's claim.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Why has he not done so?]

Witness: He was busy.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Can you settle it this morning?]

Witness: I will try to do so.

The case was postponed until 2 p.m.

Subsequently Mr. Benjamin asked to have the application postponed as he believed an arrangement would be come to.

This was allowed.

ZUCKERMAN V. BERNHARDT AND SARIF.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on three promissory notes endorsed by plaintiff, and paid by him as surety for the defendants.

Order granted.

DALA V. HASSIEN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against defendant, because of his failure to pay £12 2s., costs incurred in an action in the Court.

Mr. Buchanan explained that this case arose out of an action in the Magistrate's Court. Judgment was entered for the defendant instead of the plaintiff, when the error was discovered the mistake was rectified, and the amount of £12 2s. was incurred in moving the Courts.

The defendant admitted owing the money, but said he was unable to pay the amount due. He was only earning 30s. a month.

In reply to Mr. Buchanan, the defendant admitted that he had a shop at the Paarl, when the debt was contracted, but he had since disposed of it. He had no money.

By the Court: He could pay 10s. a month.

The Court granted a decree, but ordered it to be suspended upon payment of £1 a month.

LAUBENCE V. SARGENT AND CO.

Mr. Bailey moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate. A consent paper was put in.

Order granted in terms of consent paper.

MORKEL V. DEYDIER.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £700, less £100 paid on account, with interest at 6 per cent., and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. LAZENBY. 1905. Oct. 19th.

Mr. Nightingale moved for judgment under Rule 329 (d) for £142 17s. 6d. quitrent and stamp duty due by defendant.

Order granted

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. CONRADE.

Mr. Nightingale moved for judgment under rule 329 (d). He drew the attention of the Court to the fact that short service had been effected. It was believed that service could have been personally effected, but six days after the time for service had expired, it was found that this was impossible, consequently the advertisement was inserted in the "Government Gazette."

Buchanan, A.C.J., extended the return day to December 12.

CYRIACUS V. CYRIACUS.

Mr. Bisset moved for a decree of judicial separation between the parties in terms of a notarial consent paper put in.

Order granted in terms of consent paper.

HERBERT V. HERBERT.

Mr. Close moved for judicial separation in terms of consent paper put in.

Order granted.

CALMEYER V. DAMERELL

Mr. Bisset said that although this case was entered on the list under the names of Calmeyer v. Damerell, it was really to compel the attorney of the defendant to pay certain costs. Calmeyer originally took certain proceedings against Damerell to recover the price of certain property at Rosebank. In consequence of a conversation with a Mr. Lloyd, a clerk in the office of Mr. Waton, Damerell's solicitor Calmeyer decided to allow the case to fall through, and shortly afterwards Damerell applied to the Court to have judgment signed against Calmeyer for not proceeding with his action. In the meantime Damerell left Cape Town, and Calmeyer wrote to him, asking him why he had moved to have judgment signed; he replied by telegram as follows: "No instructions whatever given. Coulton cannot proceed." Calmeyer's attorney immediately served Coulton with notice that they were going to apply for a rule nisi, to show cause why he should not pay the costs.

The Court granted an order calling on Coulton on next motion day to show cause why he should not pay the costs.

IMGADI V. TEMBA.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved under Rule 190 to have the judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Idutywa reviewed. He explained that in the Court below the plaintiff claimed defendant, his wife, or the dowry of 8 head of cattle. Plaintiff married defendant's sister 20 years ago, and paid six head of cattle for her. She deserted him and returned to live with defendant. Defendant demanded more dowry for her, and plaintiff paid two more cattle. She would not return, and plaintiff claimed her or the return of his eight cattle. The Assistant Magistrate on the authority of the Chief Magistrate heard and dismissed the summons.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Isn't this an appeal?]

Mr. Searle: No. It is a review based on the ground that there was no jurisdiction for the Magistrate to try the case. Under the Act of 1894 there can be no appeal from the decision of the Chief Magistrate in native cases. It appeared from the evidence given in the Court below that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction in the case as the defendant was a constable engaged at Sterkstroom, and resided there. He had a kraal at Idutywa, which he only visited occasionally. He had resided at Sterkstroom for 20 years, and therefore the Magistrate had no jurisdiction.

Counsel contended that even if the man had a wife in another district, and visited her occasionally, he could not be held to be domiciled there, whilst he could be held to reside there.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said it was a pity that counsel was not appearing on the other side, as rather an important point was raised.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said this matter had been brought by way of review before the Court, as if it was an appeal it could not be heard. Under the present state of affairs disputes between natives in the Transkei had to be settled by the Magistrate, and the only appeal was to the Native Court in the Transkei. This was a review on the grounds that the Native Court had exercised rights to which it was not entitled. The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Court of Idutywa. The defendant at that time was employed as a constable at Sterkstroom, where he lived with one wife, but he had a kraal at Idutywa, where another wife lived. In that kraal he paid hut tax. The Native Court held that the defendant's residence was in the Idutywa district, whilst the Magistrate's Court was against that. There was a conflict between the two Courts as to a question of fact. If that question could have been settled, the Supreme Court would not have had to interfere. His Lordship quite saw that it was possible for a person to reside in more than one district. He might have a residence in two districts, and between them he could spend his time; but if he was to be summoned in one or the other district, he must be residing in that district for the time being. It was true that, according to the English law, that where a person's wife lived, was considered his home. The chief wife of the defendant was living in Idutywa, but this wife did not stand in the same position in native law as a wife did in the English law. He thought, under the whole of the circumstances, that the Magistrate at Idutywa had no jurisdiction in trying the case, and the order of the Native Appeal Court directing the Magistrate to try the case would have to be set aside.

Ex parte THE DUTCH REFORMED CHURCH OF HEIDELBERG.

Mr. Close moved, on behalf of the churchwardens of the Dutch Reformed Church, for leave to sell certain property. This was the return day for a rule nisi granted by the Court on the 1st August last, calling upon all persons to show cause why an order should not be granted allowing the petitioners to sell certain four lots of land, known as Church-square.

Mr. Benjamin opposed the application.

Mr. Close explained that when the town was laid out, a Mr. Fourie, the owner of a certain farm on which the town was built, agreed to give the farm if he was guaranteed £5,000 for it. This was done, and he proceeded to lay out the village, and on the plan which he laid out, the lots in question were indicated as Church-square. The churchwardens now wished to sell the lots to pay off certain church debts.

Mr. Benjamin contended that the Court had not the power to authorise the disposal of a property which was donated to an ecclesiastical body. The only way to accomplish that would be by Act of Parliament.

Buchanan, A.C.J., held that the reservation of the square for church purposes induced persons to pay higher prices for it than they otherwise would. He was of opinion that the church should not transfer the property in question for the purpose of making it into a town erven for the village. To do so would be contrary to the terms of the agreement. Considering the inducements that were offered to the purchasers when the place was sold, he thought the application should be discharged, and the costs of the opposition paid by applicant.

Ex parte LUCK.

Mr. De Waal moved for an order authorising the Master to pay over a certain inheritance. The Master reported favourably.

Order granted.

Ex parte THE ESTATE PIENAAR.

Mr. Struben moved for the appointment of a commissioner in the insolvent estate of Jacob Johannes Pienaar, to take the evidence of the insolvent's wife.

Granted. The Magistrate of the district was appointed as commissioner.

Ex parte VERSFELD.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the cancellation of the sale of a certain property to one Arnold Woolf, who had purchased it, but had not taken transfer.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Is there any precedent for such a motion?]

Mr. Benjamin replied in the affirmative, stating that a rule nisi had been granted.

A rule nisi calling on respondent to show cause why the sale should not be cancelled was granted. The return day was fixed for November 16.

Postea (November 16th). Rule made absolute.

FOOCH V. COOPER.

Mr. Benjamin moved to have a certain dividend declared executable.

Order granted.

Ex parte FOURIE.

Mr. Benjamin moved to stay a certain writ of execution for fourteen days, as the petitioner intended to sequestrate his estate.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said he did not think an order was necessary, as the proceeds would remain in the hands of the Sheriff.

Ex parte WIGGET.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the extension of the return day of citation in this case to January 16.

The application was granted.

Ex parte ERASMUS.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave to register the gross of an ante-nuptial contract drawn up in the Transvaal. The Registrar refused to do so until the original contract was produced. This the petitioner found it impossible to do.

Granted.

Ex parte STONESTREET.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to sue Barnard and Moses Herbert by edictal citation. They owed the petitioner £700, and when last heard of were seen in Cape Town, but they had disappeared.

The application was granted, the return day being set down for December 12.

Ex parte DIAMOND AND WIFE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to register an ante-nuptial contract. The parties believed that the Married Woman's Property Act was in force in the Colonies as it was in England.

Buchanan, A.C.J., inquired what property the parties had.

Mr. Buchanan: She has £1,000, but I do not know what he has.

The case was ordered to stand over.

Ex parte RAY.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on behalf of petitioner, to sue his wife for divorce by edictal citation. The parties were married and lived in England. He left her to come to South Africa, and when he arrived offered to send for her. She refused to come, but went to Australia instead.

The application was granted. The return day was fixed for February 14.

Ex parte THE EQUITABLE FIRE ASSURANCE AND TRUST CO.

Mr. Searle, who moved for the relinquishment of certain trusts, said the company had been wound up, but it had still six trust estates, which it wished to relinquish. The petitioners had been authorised to take the necessary steps to wind it up. They wished certain of the estates to be handed over to the Colonial Orphan Chamber.

In the estates of Hannon and Blore, the Court ordered the trust to be relinquished when the accounts were filed with and approved of by the Master. In the trusts of Ross and Hodgskin, Mr. Currey was appointed as trustee in lieu of the petitioner.

SMARTT SYNDICATE V. PHILLIPS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the removal of bar and the appointment of a commission de bene esse and costs.

Dr. Greer, who appeared for the respondents, said they did not oppose the application, but they refused to pay the costs.

The case was ordered to stand over.

Ex parte EDROSS.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to pass a bond on certain property in Hanover-street, which was originally a Mahomedan mosque, and was now falling into ruin unless money could be raised on bond to repair it.

Granted.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

HAMMOND V. DE ZUID AFRIKAANSCH RIJTING EN BOUW MAATSCHAPPIJ, BEPERKT. 1905. Oct. 20th.

This was an action brought by Pieter Eduard Hammond, of Worcester, against De Zuid Afrikaansche Rijting en Bouw Maatschappij Beperkt to recover damages in the sum of £500 for personal injuries to his child, Pieter Eduard Hammond, jun., alleged to be due to the negligence of the defendants or their servants.

From the pleadings, it appeared that in May last the plaintiff entered into a written contract of lease with the defendants to hire from them for a year a certain house situate in Behring-street, in the town of Worcester. A little later plaintiff, who had moved into the premises, vacated them, and on the 4th July the Rev. Mr. De Villiers entered into occupation. Plaintiff said he had sub-let the house to the Rev. Mr. De Villiers. Between the house and the adjacent premises was a passage, which gave access to the back part of the premises leased by plaintiff. The allegation in the declaration was that defendants had stacked a number of planks on this passage, and that on Sunday, the 2nd July, plaintiff's child was seriously injured by the planks falling upon him, breaking his left leg and inflicting injuries on his body. By the wrongful, unlawful, and negligent conduct of the defendants, plaintiff had, he said, sustained damages in the sum of £500. Defendants, in their plea, said that when the alleged accident occurred, the plaintiff was not in lawful possession or occupation of the premises, and denied that the premises had been sub-let by plaintiff to the Rev. Mr. De Villiers. Plaintiff had got into arrear with his rent, and had been ordered to quit the premises. Defendants denied that in stacking the planks they acted unlawfully, wrongfully, and negligently, and said that due precautions were taken, and that if the accident did happen, as alleged, it was caused by the negligence and carelessness of the plaintiff in permitting the child to enter and trespass upon the said passage, where the plaintiff and his children had no right to be, and to play upon and about the said planks. The children had been warned about playing in the passage. Defendants denied any liability for the injuries. The plaintiff, in his replication, denied that the accident was caused by his negligence and carelessness, and said that he was in lawful occupation of the premises, and both he and his children had a right to go on the passage.

Mr. Van Zyl was for the plaintiff; Mr. Alexander was for the defendants.

The plaintiff, Pieter Eduard Hammond, said that about May last he entered into a contract with the defendants for the hire of a dwelling-house for a year, rent to be paid monthly in advance. He took possession of the premises on the 15th May, and paid £9, the first month's rent, in advance. During the first month he saw Mr. Fuch, a director of the defendant company, and told him that the house was not in a habitable state. He asked him whether, if he sub-let the house, they would cancel the contract. He took steps, and spoke to the Rev. Mr. De Villiers and the churchwardens. At the beginning of the second month he did not pay the rent. Mr. Muller (secretary of the company) did not give him notice on the 21st June to quit the house, because he had not paid the rent. On the 27th June Mr. Muller asked him whether he could vacate the premises if the minister would take it. Witness said that the notice was very short. He met the Rev. Mr. De Villiers the following day, and it was arranged that witness should remain in the house until the 3rd June. Mr. De Villiers removed into the house a few days later. The arrangement was that if the Kerkraad hired the house, he would pay the rent for the half-month of June. Witness had not paid the rent for that month. On the 27th June a case filled with iron fell on one of witness's children. The company's house was next door. The company often put boxes, planks, etc., in the passage between the houses. On the 30th June or a couple of days before planks were stacked in the passage. Witness made constant use of this passage to reach his yard. The planks were stacked to a height of more than 6 feet. On Sunday, the 2nd July, his child's leg was broken. There was a north wind blowing, and rain was falling. There was nothing to keep the planks from rolling down. Witness was not at home at the time of the accident. The child could now walk, but his leg was crooked, and he seemed to be lame. In bad weather he complained of pain from the injury. Witness denied that he had been cautioned about his children playing near the planks. On the day after the accident he went and asked Mr. Muller, the secretary of the company, whether they would pay him compensation for the injury to the child. Mr. Muller said that he would speak to the directors.

Cross-examined: Witness had never offered the rent for the half month. He would have been able to pay the rent if it had been demanded. Just before then he had given notice of his intention to surrender. He was aware that he could not sub-let the house without the consent of the defendants. He had never applied for their consent to the sub-letting of the house. He was not aware that any warning was given to his children.

[Buchanan, A.C.J. (to Mr. Alexander): He was in lawful possession of the property under his lease.]

Further cross-examined: Witness made a complaint to the company when the case fell upon his child. On the 2nd July witness and his wife were away from home, having left the children in charge of two older girls.

Elizabeth Petronella Hammond (wife of the plaintiff) gave evidence as to certain interviews with Mr. Muller, representing the company. As to the injuries to the child, she said that the child was confined to bed for eight weeks. The boy complained just when they were about to have rain that he experienced pain from the injury.

By the Court: She did not know the amount of the doctor's bill.

Rachel Hammond (daughter of the plaintiff) spoke to the finding of her little brother under the planks on the day in question.

Johannes Hammond (son of the plaintiff) said that on the day in question he was "playing horse" with his two little brothers. While he was tying one brother the other ran down the passage, and the planks blew down upon him. They did not play upon the planks. Witness did not see the planks fall, his attention being drawn to the accident by hearing cries from his brother.

Jacobus Johannes Erasmus, of Worcester, Pieter Jacobus de Wet, and Arnholdt Zeeman gave evidence as to having viewed the stack of timber after the accident. They were of the opinion that it was not safe.

Reitz Carol Wolff, a medical practitioner, said that he examined the boy after the accident, and found three fractures of the bones of the left leg. The injury was a serious one, and the leg had to be placed in plaster of Paris on three occasions. The child had suffered considerably, and the leg was still crooked in shape. He would not advise the child to play football.

Cross-examined: The boy would be unfit for military service, but could follow other walks in life.

The plaintiff (recalled) said that he assessed the damages at £500, because all the time the child was suffering he and his wife had extra trouble with the child. The pain the boy suffered was unnecessary, and he would never be fit to do heavy work. A special boot would be necessary, and the boy would not be able to secure a girl with a large "dot."

Mr. Van Zyl closed his case for the plaintiff.

Percival Noel Muller (secretary to the defendant company) said that the wood was stacked in the passage because the company was stock-taking.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Who gave you permission to stack the wood there?]

Witness: No one; we had the right to do it.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: No, you had not; you had let the place.]

Witness (continuing) said that Hammond had told him that he could not pay the rent, and if the company was willing to cancel his lease, he would move out, and let the house be used as a manse. The directors assented. In the course of further evidence, witness said that on the Friday before the accident he had had to warn the children about playing upon the planks. After the accident, witness saw the plaintiff, who remarked that he did not know why the Lord had punished him, because he had paid for his sins long ago. Witness did not think the stack of planks could have been blown down, because the passage was well protected from the wind by the trees.

Mr. Van Zyl was about to cross-examine witness as to the legal right of the plaintiff's children to be in the passage, when Buchanan, A.C.J. interposed, and observed that he did not think there was any necessity to labour that part of the case. The plaintiff was lawfully occupying the house.

Cross-examined: Witness had the boards stacked very carefully, and they could only have been overturned by the children. He denied that the planks were so shaky that they could easily have been blown down.

Philip Botha H. Fuchs, one of the directors of the company, spoke to having seen plaintiff's children playing on the boards in the passage on Friday, the 30th June.

Carl B. Denah, an assistant in the defendant company's employ, said that he helped to stack the floor boards. On the Friday and Saturday, while the stacking was being carried out, he had to speak to the plaintiff's children about playing on the boards. He did not think the planks could have been blown down by the wind.

Johannes Goridges, another assistant, Gerhardus Goridges, also in the employ of the company, and Jan Reitz, assistant carpenter, gave evidence to the effect that the planks were properly stacked, and that it had been necessary to warn plaintiff's children in regard to playing about the boards.

Peter Francois Hugo, farmer, said that on the afternoon in question he was passing along Behring-street, when he saw two children on the top of the planks, and another clinging to the planks, trying to clamber up. Just after he had passed he heard a child's cries. He did not go back.

Cross-examined: Witness could not say whether the children he saw were the plaintiff's. The passage was open to the street, and any children could have gone there. He did not warn the children about the danger. He did not trouble about the danger of the youngsters being killed.

Mr. Van Zyl having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said he found that the plaintiff was in lawful occupation of the premises when the accident occurred. From the evidence it appeared that the timber was properly stacked, and that there was no negligence on the part of the defendants. He had come to the conclusion that the wood was sufficiently stacked if it had not been interfered with, and that it was brought down by the acts of the children when playing there. Under these circumstances, it could not be said, as the plaintiff alleged, that the accident was entirely due to the negligence of the defendants in stacking the wood in the passage. There was no contributory negligence pleaded, but it was pleaded that there was negligence on the part of the defendants. He (the learned Judge) could not find that negligence had been proved on the part of the defendants, but he did find that they had disproved any negligence, and they had also proved that the accident was entirely due to the conduct of the plaintiff's own children in playing on this wood. There was no doubt that one must feel a great deal of sympathy with the plaintiff in the trouble and expense to which he had been put and with the little boy who had been hurt, but the Court was not there to decide the matter from that point of view, but to decide whether the defendants were legally answerable for what had taken place. Judgment would, therefore, be given for the defendants, with costs.

In re INSOLVENT ESTATE MCPHERSON.

Mr. Wright moved, as a matter of urgency, upon the petition of Wm. Arthur Currey and other creditors, for the appointment of provisional trustees in the estate of George Campbell McPherson, trading as McPherson and Co., at Cape Town, and in the private estate of McPherson. The petitioners stated that they represented claims to the amount of £26,800, and the liabilities of the estate were estimated, approximately, at £30,000. Insolvent had carried on a large business, and it would be to the interest of the creditors to carry it on for the benefit of the estate without interruption during the insolvency. Amongst the stock-in-trade were certain perishables, which must be disposed of or attended to at once, and it was necessary that provisional trustees should be appointed to take charge of the business, pending the election of permanent trustees, the names of Messrs. W. A. Currey and A. N. Foot being suggested.

Order granted as prayed, appointing Messrs. Currey and Foot as provisional trustees.

Ex parte GOWAN.

Divisional Council—Voters' list
—Act 40 of 1889.

Where applicant's name had, per incuriam, been omitted from the list of voters for a Divisional Council. The Court granted an order authorizing its insertion.

Mr. Upington said that he had an unusual application to bring before the Court as a matter of urgency, so as to enable the petitioner to be nominated on Tuesday next as a candidate for election to the Divisional Council of Oudtshoorn. Counsel read an affidavit by the petitioner, who said that he was the registered proprietor of immovable property in the division of Oudtshoorn, Ward No. 2, of the value of over £6,000. He had, for the last fifteen years, been a registered voter for the division of Oudtshoorn for Divisional Council purposes. When the present list was framed, he found that his name had been registered as a voter on the rough draft. Thereafter, the secretary of the Divisional Council, in having a fair copy made of the said list, inadvertently omitted petitioner's name therefrom. Petitioner possessed the necessary qualification to enable him to be elected as a member of the said Divisional Council. He had been requested by several persons to allow himself to be nominated as a candidate for the Divisional Council, to which he had consented. On inspecting the voters' list, he found that his name had been omitted therefrom. Nominations for the ensuing election must be filed not later than the 24th October. There were no reasons why petitioner's name should not be placed on the voters' list, and he therefore asked for an order authorising his name to be placed on the list or such other relief as to the Court may seem meet. Counsel also read an affidavit by Mr. Arthur C. Sheard, secretary of the Divisional Council of Oudtshoorn, stating that the facts and allegations contained in the petition were true and correct. He added that he was not aware of any reason why the petitioner's name should not be placed on the list. Counsel referred to the Divisional Council Act, No. 40, 1889, and said that its provisions did not seem to touch a case of this kind, where an omission was due entirely to a clerical error.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that, if the Court which sat to hear objections to the voters' list passed Mr. Gavan's name, then he saw no objection to the list being corrected, as prayed. The important point was whether Mr. Gavan's name was included in the list submitted for public inspection, and the point must be made clear whether his name was passed by the Court. A rule nisi would be granted calling upon the Court appointed to hear objections to the list to show cause, on Tuesday next, why applicant's name should not be inserted on the final list, applicant to pay costs, leave being granted to telegraph the notices, in order to enable the applicant, if no objection is raised, to be nominated for the election on Tuesday next.

Postea (October 24th).

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that a telegram had been received from the chairman stating that "there is no objection to the application being granted." His Lordship added that he had desired counsel to tell him whether the list which was published bore petitioner's name?

Mr. Upington: I have made inquiries, but I have no information.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: I wanted it to be made perfectly clear that the omission was due merely to a clerk's error in copying from the draft.

Rule made absolute, authorising petitioner's name to be inserted upon the roll of voters.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLKY.]

WAGNER V. WAGNER. { 1905.
{ Oct. 20th.

This was an action brought by Charles Wagner for an order for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, against his wife, Clara Wagner, because of her unlawful desertion. Mr. Roux was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

The defendant was personally served with the notice in Johannesburg.

The plaintiff's declaration stated he was a stonemason, residing at Wynberg. He was married to the defendant on April 22, 1895. On October 5, 1904, defendant deserted plaintiff, and refused to return.

Mr. Birch proved the marriage in April, 1895.

Charles Wagner, the plaintiff, stated he was married to defendant in April, 1895. There was no issue of the marriage. A man named Fredericks lived with witness and his wife, and the defendant misconducted herself with him, but witness forgave her. This was the second occasion on which the defendant left witness. In October, 1904, the defendant left the house, taking with her her clothes and about £50 in money. She left a letter stating she had left through no fault of her own. He had heard that the defendant was residing in Vredenberg. The defendant wrote telling witness that she would not return to him, as she was happier where she was. The letter further alleged that there was no happiness in her home, and consequently that she preferred to earn her own living. The defendant came to Cape Town about three weeks ago and created a row at the house he was living at. He had not seen her since. Witness would take her back if she would return.

An order for the restitution of conjugal rights by December 31, failing which to show cause on January 12 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, was made.

Ex parte BROWN, LAWRENCE AND CO.

Mr. Baily moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of provisional trustees in the estate of Frederick Wickham, trading as Sargent and Co. He suggested Messrs. G. W. Steytler and Muirhead.

The application was granted.

BAILY V. DRUMMOND. { 1905.
Oct. 20th.
" 23rd.

Contract—Acceptance by letter.

B. had agreed, verbally, to sell a house to D., and D., by letter posted at 5.10 p.m. on the same day, accepted B.'s offer. At 5.47 p.m. and before receiving D.'s letter, B., by telegram, revoked his offer.

Held, that B. was bound by his contract.

This was an action in which Percy Baily, of Claremont, claimed from Hildyard Home Drummond £30, amount due for three months' rent and damages at the rate of £10 per month, for such time as the defendant should continue to occupy the premises after July 31 last.

The plaintiff's declaration stated:

1. The plaintiff is James Marcus Smith, under a duly executed power of attorney as agent for Percy Baily, late of Claremont, and at present travelling in Europe. The defendant is Hildyard Home Drummond, at present residing at Villa Marbella, Claremont, in the division of the Capo.

2. By an agreement bearing date April 3, 1905, plaintiff agreed to let, and the defendant to hire, a certain partly furnished house, known as Villa Marbella, Claremont, the property of the plaintiff, at the monthly rental of £10 sterling, payable on the first day of each month, the tenancy commencing as and from 1st April, 1905.

3. Plaintiff gave defendant possession of the said premises, and defendant paid plaintiff the apportioned rent for the month of April.

4. All things have happened, all times elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled to entitle plaintiff to payment by defendant of the sum of £30 sterling—being rent due at the rate of £10 per month for the months of May, June, and July, 1905, but though frequently requested so to do, defendant has refused or neglected, and still refuses or neglects, to pay the said sum of £30, or any part thereof.

5. Plaintiff further says that defendant has broken the agreement by failing to pay £10 on the first of each month, as therein provided, that the said agreement is thereby ended, and plaintiff is entitled to recover back the possession of the said premises. Plaintiff says that so long as defendant continues to occupy the same, he is suffering loss and damage to the extent of £10 sterling per month, being the rent of the said premises. Wherefore plaintiff claims: (a) Judgment against the defendant in the sum of £30 sterling; (b) an order for the ejectment of defendant from the said premises by reason of his breach of agreement; (c) damages at the rate of £10 per month for such time as defendant shall continue to occupy the said premises after July 31, 1905; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

For the plea to the declaration the defendant says as follows:

1. Paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 are admitted, save that the agreement was entered into and possession of the premises given by Percy Baily, and not by his agent, James Marcus Smith.

2. Defendant denies paragraphs 4 and 5, and says that on or about the 2nd day of May, 1905, he contracted with the said Percy Baily to purchase the property known as the Villa Marbella in the circumstances hereinafter set forth in the claim in reconvention, and to which the defendant craves leave to refer, and thereupon the agreement of lease was cancelled by mutual consent. Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

And for a claim in reconvention the defendant (now plaintiff) says as follows:

1. Defendant (now plaintiff) craves leave to repeat the allegations stated in the above plea.

2. On or about the 2nd day of May, 1905, the plaintiff (now defendant) agreed to sell and the defendant (now plaintiff) to purchase a certain property known as the Villa Marbella, situate in the 3rd Avenue, Claremont, in the district of the Cape of Good Hope, for the sum of £1,350.

3. It was a term and condition of the said contract that the defendant (now plaintiff) should immediately take possession as owner, but that the purchase price of £1,350 (as agreed) be paid and transfer executed on the 1st August, 1905.

4. On or about the 6th day of June, 1905, the terms of purchase were confirmed to defendant (now plaintiff) by plaintiff's (now defendant's) agent, one James Marcus Smith.

5. On or about the 16th day of July, 1905, the defendant (now plaintiff) completed negotiations for a re-sale of the aforesaid property to one Charles Edward Mackintosh, of the city of Cape Town, for the sum of £1,500, to be paid and transfer taken on the 1st August, 1905.

6. Defendant (now plaintiff) duly notified plaintiff (now defendant) or his agents of his preparedness to take aforesaid transfer, but same was refused to defendant (now plaintiff) by plaintiff (now defendant) or his agents.

7. The aforesaid Charles Edward Mackintosh claims from defendant (now plaintiff) £50 as damages.

Wherefore the defendant (now plaintiff) claims: (a) £200 damages; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

For a replication to defendant's plea, plaintiff says that, save for admissions, he denies all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the said plea contained, joins issue thereon, and again prays for judgment as before, with costs.

And for a plea to the claim in reconvention, plaintiff (now defendant) says:

1. He denies all the statements in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the said claim. He says that on May 2, 1905, he did offer to sell to the defendant (now plaintiff) the said Villa Marbella for the sum of £1,350 sterling, but that the said offer was withdrawn on the same day before being accepted by the defendant (now plaintiff), and that no contract of sale ever existed.

2. Plaintiff (now defendant) says that he has no knowledge of the allegations made in paragraphs 5, 6, and 7 of the said claim, and puts defendant (now plaintiff) to the proof thereof.

Wherefore plaintiff (now defendant) prays that the defendant's (now plaintiff's) claim in reconvention may be dismissed, with costs.

Dr. Greer for plaintiff; defendant in person.

Percy Baily, the plaintiff, stated he owned the property in dispute, situate at Claremont. The house was furnished, and as witness contemplated a trip to England he let it as it was to defendant. An agreement was drawn up between them. Witness gave defendant possession in April. The rent was paid for the period of that month defendant was in occupation. No rent had since been paid. The defendant had written to witness, asking him to sell the property. On May 2 witness received a communication from the defendant, asking him to call on him at Whitehall. Defendant was sitting in a Mr. Peregrino's office. As soon as witness entered the room defendant said: "Well, Baily, what is the lowest you'll take for the house?" Witness replied that he would take £1,350—£850 in cash and £500 on bond. The defendant sat down and wrote out a broker's note, which witness copied. The note was to the effect that the property was to be taken possession of on August 1, 1905. Witness did not know Drummond before this. Witness and Drummond went and had a drink, and witness went to see his agent, and as a result wired Drummond to the effect that the offer to sell the property was withdrawn. He confirmed this by letter. Witness received a letter from the defendant the next day, accepting the place at £1,350. That letter was dated May 2, but was not received until 3.30 p.m. on May 3. Witness did not receive a letter from defendant dated May 3. Witness left for England on May 5, and returned to Cape Town for the purpose of this case.

Cross-examined by defendant: Witness built the house himself.

Everything you put in it was of the best?—Yes.

You built the house for your own use?—Yes.

Before you commenced building you were a Cape policeman?—Some years back I was.

In further cross-examination the witness said the duplicate copy of the lease was not stamped. After witness left Peregrino's office he went and saw Smith, and sent the telegram. Witness denied that he had told Peregrino that he had sold the property to defendant. Witness had great confidence in Smith. The mistake witness made in giving defendant the option was that he would lose three months' rent. Before going to England witness passed a bond on the house. Witness left debts in Cape Town, which he directed Smith to pay.

The witness objected to these questions, as they were irrelevant. "He's trying to get me into a net," remarked the witness.

"They generally do," replied His Lordship, "when one is in the witness-box."

James Martin Smith, broker and accountant, of St. George's-street, stated he held defendant's power of attorney whilst plaintiff was in England. Witness recollected plaintiff letting his house to defendant. Shortly after the plaintiff told witness of the offer to sell. Witness told him his action was foolish. As a result the telegram was sent, and a letter followed it. On May 5 plaintiff left for England, and witness endeavoured to collect the rents from defendant, but was unable to do so. Witness received a letter on May 6, stating that defendant refused to pay the rent, but that if witness would guarantee to refund it when transfer was effected he would pay the three months' rent. Witness agreed to this course.

To the Court: Witness could have sold the property if the price offered had been sufficient.

Witness (continuing) said he had not received any rent from defendant.

Cross-examined: Witness offered the property to defendant in April for £1,400. Witness drew up the lease. Witness allowed defendant to draft another one. Witness was under the impression that defendant would not pay the rent. Witness would have got his commission whether the property was sold privately or not. When Mr. Baily went to England witness went to a money lender, and mortgaged four months' rent for a loan.

What was the amount?—That has nothing to do with the case.

[Hopley, J.: If Mr. Baily was complaining of his conduct, this would be very relevant; but as far as you are concerned, it is not.]

Witness denied that he was short of money at the time.

Dr. Greer drew the attention of the Court to the fact that the questions were irrelevant.

The defendant was about to further cross-examine the witness with regard to rents he collected, when Hopley, J., said he would have to stop all the irrelevant questions.

Witness stated that for £5,000 cash he would not sell the property to defendant.

A letter signed by Robert Greening was put in.

[Hopley, J.: Who is Robert Greening? There was an attorney of that name suspended from practice in this Court. Is that the same gentleman?]

Dr. Greer: Yes, my lord.

Witness denied having received a letter from Drummond repudiating Greening's services.

Witness said Greening was in Drummond's office on one occasion when witness visited him, and Drummond turned to him and said, "Greening, you have got me into a hole several times, so you can get me into another now."

Defendant: That would be an extraordinary thing for a man to say.

[Hopley, J.: It is possible he may have misunderstood you.]

Michael Cavanagh, superintendent of the Telegraph Order Branch, produced the telegrams which passed between plaintiff and defendant.

John Reid, clerk in the Magistrate's Office, Wynberg, produced the records of actions which had been tried there. One of them was for civil imprisonment against the defendant, who on July 6 admitted renting a furnished house, that he had paid no rent, and that the house was rented for his mother-in-law.

Dr. Greer closed his case.

F. Z. S. Peregrino stated the defendant occupied his office in April. He saw plaintiff there on one occasion, and he told witness that Drummond was buying a house from him. From the conversation he had heard between Drummond and Baily, he had the impression that the former had bought the house. Witness was asked to join in a liquid refreshment to celebrate the purchase.

In cross-examination, witness admitted that defendant did not pay for the use of the office or the stationery. They were negotiating for a partnership, but it fell through.

Elizabeth Home Drummond, wife of the defendant, stated the latter told her that he had purchased the house they were living in. She was very much annoyed, and defendant showed her a letter to the plaintiff, which he posted at Lansdowne-road. Defendant told her he intended selling the house again.

Cross-examined: Witness knew nothing about her husband's financial position.

You know that he has been sued for debt?—Yes.

You know that decrees for civil imprisonment have been applied for against him?—There has been a person down at the house to ask if we had any effects, if that is what you mean?

Have you not seen the newspapers?—I never open a newspaper from one year's end to the other.

Dr. Greer: That is rather unfortunate.

Charles Edward Mackintosh, a speculator and company representative, stated he accepted the defendant's offer to sell the house and furniture for £1,500, and claimed £50 for breach of contract.

Cross-examined: Drummond had nothing but certain articles of furniture which were excluded under his agreement. During May, June, and July, when negotiations were going on, Drummond said not a word about any dispute about his purchase of the house.

The defendant, Hilyard Home Drummond, gave evidence. He stated he was a pupil to Mr. Coulton—

[Hopley, J.: Are you articled?]

Witness: No.

[Hopley, J.: We do not know what a pupil is in our profession. Are you still carrying on in hopes of being a law agent?]

I have rather higher aspirations than that. I am endeavouring to understand the business of an attorney, through being in Mr. Coulton's office.

[Hopley, J.: Then you are employed as a learner?]

Yes.

Witness (continuing) said his friend Mackintosh wanted to buy a house. Witness saw the house advertised in the "Times," and approached Bailey about it. MacIntosh was willing to give £1,200 for it, so witness thought that if transfer was not to be effected until August, he could take up possession and live rent free for three months. Witness believed MacIntosh would pay £1,350 for the place.

[Hopley, J.: Who would pay the transfer fees?]

MacIntosh.

But I mean the transfer fees from Bailey to you?—I didn't think of that.

[Hopley, J.: And you would probably have found yourself being prosecuted for trying to defraud the Revenue.]

Witness corroborated the evidence given by the plaintiff with regard to the agreement to purchase the house. Continuing, he said that he wrote the letter accepting the offer of the house about an hour and a half before he received the telegram from plaintiff. He met plaintiff next morning, and told him that he intended to keep him to his agreement. The witness denied that he authorised Greening to write to Smith agreeing, on his behalf, to pay the three months' rent.

[Hopley, J.: Then you think that Smith and Greening were conspiring to get this £30 from you?]

Witness: I believe Mr. Greening's share of that transaction was a pair of boots.

[Hopley, J.: You say that Smith gave him a pair of boots?]

Witness: Yes; for his assistance in enabling Mr. Smith to raise £30 when he was hard up, he got these boots. I had had some experience of Mr. Greening, and it is not likely that being left with any degree of sense, that I should get him to do anything for me.

Witness added that Smith told him if he would give up possession, he would give him a clear quitance to July 31.

The witness gave the Court a short resume of his legal experiences.

In cross-examination, witness said he had not always been known as Home Drummond. Witness did not pay the rent of Mr. Bidewell Edwards's house for certain reasons. Witness was still living in the house rent free. "I was working out my damages by staying there," added the witness. Witness had not the means to purchase the house.

Had you £4 or £5 at that time?—I had.

And yet we see that you were decreed for that amount?—Yes; but that was later on.

Witness denied that he was proprietor of "South African Truth." He also denied that Greening was a personal friend of his. He often took him into his house, because he was sorry for him.

Dr. Greer and the defendant were heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (October 23rd).

Hopley, J.: In April last a lease for 12 months was entered into between the plaintiff and defendant of certain premises known as Villa Marbella, at Claremont, belonging to the plaintiff, at a rental of £10 a month, and it is clear that during the same month certain overtures were made by the defendant to purchase the place, the sum of £1,400 being then mentioned as the purchase price. The defendant is, and then was, a man of no means, and it was impossible for him to conclude a contract of sale at that price with any prospect of carrying out his share of the transaction, unless he could gain time for payment and could see a possibility of a resale. The latter he seems to have had, even at that time, as a Mr. McIntosh had visited him at the property in the early days of his tenancy, and had expressed his wish to buy it. The plaintiff was at that time about to visit England, and seems to have been anxious to effect a sale of the property, and he, on May 2, met the defendant in the office of Mr. Peregrino, where, after some discussion, he made an offer of the place to the defendant, which the latter asked him to put in writing, he himself preparing a rough draft of the offer. The plaintiff thereupon wrote out a formal offer of the place at £1,350, of which £500 might remain on first mortgage at 6 per cent., the balance to be paid on August 1, when transfer was to be given. These terms, the defendant says that he then and there verbally accepted, and I am inclined to believe that he did, as it is common cause that the plaintiff and defendant went to a neighbouring publichouse to have a drink, inviting Mr. Peregrino to join them in "wetting" the transaction. Mr. Peregrino refused to join them, but his impression was—and he overheard most of the conversation—that a final sale had been effected.

The plaintiff says that the drink was merely to "wet" the offer he had made, but I think it more likely that it was, as the defendant deposes, to celebrate the conclusion of the bargain. However, the case, as far as the conclusion of the contract is concerned, does not rest on verbal evidence alone, for the defendant returned to the office and wrote a formal acceptance of the offer, which he enclosed in one of Peregrino's envelopes, and intended to have delivered by his messenger. This is borne out by the evidence of Peregrino, and is distinctly sworn to by the defendant, and I believe that the acceptance was written as above stated. It was not, however, sent by messenger, nor immediately posted in Cape Town, as the defendant's wife happened to be in town, and called for him, and he went with her to have a cup of tea at a restaurant opposite the Railway Station, whence they went, just in time to catch the 4.40 train to the suburbs. This would land them at Claremont Station at 5 p.m., and I believe their evidence that they walked home and dropped the letter into a pillar-box in Lansdowne-road at about 5.10 o'clock. Even then, if there had been no verbal conclusion of the contract at about 4 o'clock in Cape Town, as I think there was, this posting of the letter would conclude it at 5.10 p.m. The plaintiff seems, after he parted from the defendant, to have met or gone to his agent, a Mr. Smith, and told him what had happened. Smith told him that he had been foolish, as he would lose three months' rent, and also that he himself had a better offer for the property. As far as these two knew, the only writing affecting the matter at that time was the offer to sell, and they made up their minds that it would be wise to back out of such a contract without delay. They thereupon despatched a telegram to Claremont informing the defendant that the offer was withdrawn. This telegram was handed in at the Post Office in Cape Town at 5.47 p.m., and was not received by the defendant at his residence until shortly before 7 o'clock. Next day the plaintiff received the defendant's letter, but apparently under the conviction that it was written and posted after receipt of his telegram, he has treated the matter as if there had been no concluded contract, while the defendant has equally consistently maintained that there was one. The parties met in Cape Town on May 3, and each maintained his position. The plaintiff shortly thereafter proceeded to England, leaving his affairs in the hands of Smith under a general power of attorney; and the defendant proceeded with his plan of reselling the property to McIntosh. From time to time Smith made attempts to get rent for the property from defendant, who, however, always refused to pay, on the ground that he had purchased it. Eventually, in July, defendant effected the resale of the property to McIntosh for £1,500, transfer to be given on August 1; but when that date arrived the plaintiff's agents refused to give transfer to him, and he was accordingly unable to fulfil his contract with McIntosh, who immediately claimed damages from him for breach of contract. I am therefore clearly of opinion that there was a concluded contract of sale on the 2nd of May from the plaintiff to the defendant of the Villa Marbella for £1,350, and that transfer was to be given, and the contract was to be performed on both sides on the 1st of August, that the plaintiff signified his intention of not carrying out that contract on the 3rd of May, that the defendant held the plaintiff to his contract, and that the plaintiff finally committed the breach of the contract by refusing to transfer the property on the 1st of August. In such circumstances it has been laid down in a number of cases, of which Philpotts v. Evans and Frost v. Knight may be mentioned, that the correct method of measuring the damage for such a breach is by estimating them with reference to the date at which the contract should have been carried out. That date in the present case was August 1, when, if the plaintiff had carried out the contract, the defendant would have made a profit of £150 on the resale to McIntosh, but the Government dues on the transfer, to himself, and the various fees and charges of effecting that transfer, and the further transfer to McIntosh, would probably have come to something like £40, so that the clear profit would have been, say, £110. This amount must, however, be reduced in a final settlement between the parties by the sum of £30 for the use and occupation of the premises by the defendant during the months of August, September, and October. The order of the Court is that the defendant do give up possession of the said premises to the plaintiff on the 31st inst., that the plaintiff do pay to the defendant the sum of £80, and that the plaintiff do pay the costs of suit.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: Stanley-Jones; Defendant in person.]

caused by his negligence and carelessness, and said that he was in lawful occupation of the premises, and both he and his children had a right to go on the passage.

Mr. Van Zyl was for the plaintiff; Mr. Alexander was for the defendants.

The plaintiff, Pieter Eduard Hammond, said that about May last he entered into a contract with the defendants for the hire of a dwelling-house for a year, rent to be paid monthly in advance. He took possession of the premises on the 15th May, and paid £9, the first month's rent, in advance. During the first month he saw Mr. Fuch, a director of the defendant company, and told him that the house was not in a habitable state. He asked him whether, if he sub-let the house, they would cancel the contract. He took steps, and spoke to the Rev. Mr. De Villiers and the churchwardens. At the beginning of the second month he did not pay the rent. Mr. Muller (secretary of the company) did not give him notice on the 21st June to quit the house, because he had not paid the rent. On the 27th June Mr. Muller asked him whether he could vacate the premises if the minister would take it. Witness said that the notice was very short. He met the Rev. Mr. De Villiers the following day, and it was arranged that witness should remain in the house until the 3rd June. Mr. De Villiers removed into the house a few days later. The arrangement was that if the Kerkraad hired the house, he would pay the rent for the half-month of June. Witness had not paid the rent for that month. On the 27th June a case filled with iron fell on one of witness's children. The company's house was next door. The company often put boxes, planks, etc., in the passage between the houses. On the 30th June or a couple of days before planks were stacked in the passage. Witness made constant use of this passage to reach his yard. The planks were stacked to a height of more than 6 feet. On Sunday, the 2nd July, his child's leg was broken. There was a north wind blowing, and rain was falling. There was nothing to keep the planks from rolling down. Witness was not at home at the time of the accident. The child could now walk, but his leg was crooked, and he seemed to be lame. In bad weather he complained of pain from the injury. Witness denied that he had been cautioned about his children playing near the planks. On the day after the accident he went and asked Mr. Muller, the secretary of the company, whether they would pay him compensation for the injury to the child. Mr. Muller said that he would speak to the directors.

Cross-examined: Witness had never offered the rent for the half month. He would have been able to pay the rent if it had been demanded. Just before then he had given notice of his intention to surrender. He was aware that he could not sub-let the house without the consent of the defendants. He had never applied for their consent to the sub-letting of the house. He was not aware that any warning was given to his children.

[Buchanan, A.C.J. (to Mr. Alexander): He was in lawful possession of the property under his lease.]

Further cross-examined: Witness made a complaint to the company when the case fell upon his child. On the 2nd July witness and his wife were away from home, having left the children in charge of two older girls.

Elizabeth Petronella Hammond (wife of the plaintiff) gave evidence as to certain interviews with Mr. Muller, representing the company. As to the injuries to the child, she said that the child was confined to bed for eight weeks. The boy complained just when they were about to have rain that he experienced pain from the injury.

By the Court: She did not know the amount of the doctor's bill.

Rachel Hammond (daughter of the plaintiff) spoke to the finding of her little brother under the planks on the day in question.

Johannes Hammond (son of the plaintiff) said that on the day in question he was "playing horse" with his two little brothers. While he was tying one brother the other ran down the passage, and the planks blew down upon him. They did not play upon the planks. Witness did not see the planks fall, his attention being drawn to the accident by hearing cries from his brother.

Jacobus Johannes Erasmus, of Worcester, Pieter Jacobus de Wet, and Arnholdt Zeeman gave evidence as to having viewed the stack of timber after the accident. They were of the opinion that it was not safe.

Reitz Carol Wolff, a medical practitioner, said that he examined the boy after the accident, and found three fractures of the bones of the left leg. The injury was a serious one, and the leg had to be placed in plaster of Paris on three occasions. The child had suffered considerably, and the leg was still crooked in shape. He would not advise the child to play football.

Cross-examined: The boy would be unfit for military service, but could follow other walks in life.

The plaintiff (recalled) said that he assessed the damages at £500, because all the time the child was suffering he and his wife had extra trouble with the child. The pain the boy suffered was unnecessary, and he would never be fit to do heavy work. A special boot would be necessary, and the boy would not be able to secure a girl with a large "dot."

Mr. Van Zyl closed his case for the plaintiff.

Percival Noel Muller (secretary to the defendant company) said that the wood was stacked in the passage because the company was stock-taking.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Who gave you permission to stack the wood there?]

Witness: No one; we had the right to do it.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: No, you had not; you had let the place.]

Witness (continuing) said that Hammond had told him that he could not pay the rent, and if the company was willing to cancel his lease, he would move out, and let the house be used as a manse. The directors assented. In the course of further evidence, witness said that on the Friday before the accident he had had to warn the children about playing upon the planks. After the accident, witness saw the plaintiff, who remarked that he did not know why the Lord had punished him, because he had paid for his sins long ago. Witness did not think the stack of planks could have been blown down, because the passage was well protected from the wind by the trees.

Mr. Van Zyl was about to cross-examine witness as to the legal right of the plaintiff's children to be in the passage, when Buchanan, A.C.J. interposed, and observed that he did not think there was any necessity to labour that part of the case. The plaintiff was lawfully occupying the house.

Cross-examined: Witness had the boards stacked very carefully, and they could only have been overturned by the children. He denied that the planks were so shaky that they could easily have been blown down.

Philip Botha H. Fuchs, one of the directors of the company, spoke to having seen plaintiff's children playing on the boards in the passage on Friday, the 30th June.

Carl B. Denah, an assistant in the defendant company's employ, said that he helped to stack the floor boards. On the Friday and Saturday, while the stacking was being carried out, he had to speak to the plaintiff's children about playing on the boards. He did not think the planks could have been blown down by the wind.

Johannes Goridges, another assistant, Gerhardus Goridges, also in the employ of the company, and Jan Reitz, assistant carpenter, gave evidence to the effect that the planks were properly stacked, and that it had been necessary to warn plaintiff's children in regard to playing about the boards.

Peiter Francois Hugo, farmer, said that on the afternoon in question he was passing along Behring-street, when he saw two children on the top of the planks, and another clinging to the planks, trying to clamber up. Just after he had passed he heard a child's cries. He did not go back.

Cross-examined: Witness could not say whether the children he saw were the plaintiff's. The passage was open to the street, and any children could have gone there. He did not warn the children about the danger. He did not trouble about the danger of the youngsters being killed.

Mr. Van Zyl having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said he found that the plaintiff was in lawful occupation of the premises when the accident occurred. From the evidence it appeared that the timber was properly stacked, and that there was no negligence on the part of the defendants. He had come to the conclusion that the wood was sufficiently stacked if it had not been interfered with, and that it was brought down by the acts of the children when playing there. Under these circumstances, it could not be said, as the plaintiff alleged, that the accident was entirely due to the negligence of the defendants in stacking the wood in the passage. There was no contributory negligence pleaded, but it was pleaded that there was negligence on the part of the defendants. He (the learned Judge) could not find that negligence had been proved on the part of the defendants, but he did find that they had disproved any negligence, and they had also proved that the accident was entirely due to the conduct of the plaintiff's own children in playing on this wood. There was no doubt that one must feel a great deal of sympathy with the plaintiff in the trouble and expense to which he had been put and with the little boy who had been hurt, but the Court was not there to decide the matter from that point of view, but to decide whether the defendants were legally answerable for what had taken place. Judgment would, therefore, be given for the defendants, with costs.

In re INSOLVENT ESTATE MCPHERSON.

Mr. Wright moved, as a matter of urgency, upon the petition of Wm. Arthur Currey and other creditors, for the appointment of provisional trustees in the estate of George Campbell McPherson, trading as McPherson and Co., at Cape Town, and in the private estate of McPherson. The petitioners stated that they represented claims to the amount of £26,800, and the liabilities of the estate were estimated, approximately, at £30,000. Insolvent had carried on a large business, and it would be to the interest of the creditors to carry it on for the benefit of the estate without interruption during the insolvency. Amongst the stock-in-trade were certain perishables, which must be disposed of or attended to at once, and it was necessary that provisional trustees should be appointed to take charge of the business, pending the election of permanent trustees, the names of Messrs. W. A. Currey and A. N. Foot being suggested.

Order granted as prayed, appointing Messrs. Currey and Foot as provisional trustees.

Ex parte GOWAN.

Divisional Council—Voters' list
—Act 40 of 1889.

Where applicant's name had, per incuriam, been omitted from the list of voters for a Divisional Council. The Court granted an order authorizing its insertion.

Mr. Upington said that he had an unusual application to bring before the Court as a matter of urgency, so as to enable the petitioner to be nominated on Tuesday next as a candidate for election to the Divisional Council of Oudtshoorn. Counsel read an affidavit by the petitioner, who said that he was the registered proprietor of immovable property in the division of Oudtshoorn, Ward No. 2, of the value of over £6,000. He had, for the last fifteen years, been a registered voter for the division of Oudtshoorn for Divisional Council purposes. When the present list was framed, he found that his name had been registered as a voter on the rough draft. Thereafter, the secretary of the Divisional Council, in having a fair copy made of the said list, inadvertently omitted petitioner's name therefrom. Petitioner possessed the necessary qualification to enable him to be elected as a member of the said Divisional Council. He had been requested by several persons to allow himself to be nominated as a candidate for the Divisional Council, to which he had consented. On inspecting the voters' list, he found that his name had been omitted therefrom. Nominations for the ensuing election must be filed not later than the 24th October. There were no reasons why petitioner's name should not be placed on the voters' list, and he therefore asked for an order authorising his name to be placed on the list or such other relief as to the Court may seem meet. Counsel also read an affidavit by Mr. Arthur C. Sheard, secretary of the Divisional Council of Oudtshoorn, stating that the facts and allegations contained in the petition were true and correct. He added that he was not aware of any reason why the petitioner's name should not be placed on the list. Counsel referred to the Divisional Council Act, No. 40, 1889, and said that its provisions did not seem to touch a case of this kind, where an omission was due entirely to a clerical error.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that, if the Court which sat to hear objections to the voters' list passed Mr. Gavan's name, then he saw no objection to the list being corrected, as prayed. The important point was whether Mr. Gavan's name was included in the list submitted for public inspection, and the point must be made clear whether his name was passed by the Court. A rule nisi would be granted calling upon the Court appointed to hear objections to the list to show cause, on Tuesday next, why applicant's name should not be inserted on the final list, applicant to pay costs, leave being granted to telegraph the notices, in order to enable the applicant, if no objection is raised, to be nominated for the election on Tuesday next.

Postea (October 24th).

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that a telegram had been received from the chairman stating that "there is no objection to the application being granted." His Lordship added that he had desired counsel to tell him whether the list which was published bore petitioner's name?

Mr. Upington: I have made inquiries, but I have no information.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: I wanted it to be made perfectly clear that the omission was due merely to a clerk's error in copying from the draft.

Rule made absolute, authorising petitioner's name to be inserted upon the roll of voters.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

WAGNER V. WAGNER. { 1905.
(Oct. 20th.

This was an action brought by Charles Wagner for an order for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, against his wife, Clara Wagner, because of her unlawful desertion. Mr. Roux was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

The defendant was personally served with the notice in Johannesburg.

The plaintiff's declaration stated he was a stonemason, residing at Wynberg. He was married to the defendant on April 22, 1895. On October 5, 1904, de-defendant deserted plaintiff, and refused to return.

Mr. Birch proved the marriage in April, 1895.

Charles Wagner, the plaintiff, stated he was married to defendant in April, 1895. There was no issue of the marriage. A man named Fredericks lived with witness and his wife, and the defendant misconducted herself with him, but witness forgave her. This was the second occasion on which the defendant left witness. In October, 1904, the defendant left the house, taking with her her clothes and about £50 in money. She left a letter stating she had left through no fault of her own. He had heard that the defendant was residing in Vredenberg. The defendant wrote telling witness that she would not return to him, as she was happier where she was. The letter further alleged that there was no happiness in her home, and consequently that she preferred to earn her own living. The defendant came to Cape Town about three weeks ago and created a row at the house he was living at. He had not seen her since. Witness would take her back if she would return.

An order for the restitution of conjugal rights by December 31, failing which to show cause on January 12 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, was made.

Ex parte BROWN, LAWRENCE AND CO.

Mr. Baily moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of provisional trustees in the estate of Frederick Wickham, trading as Sargent and Co. He suggested Messrs. G. W. Steytler and Muirhead.

The application was granted.

BAILY V. DRUMMOND. { 1905.
Oct. 20th.
" 23rd.

Contract—Acceptance by letter.

B. had agreed, verbally, to sell a house to D., and D., by letter posted at 5.10 p.m. on the same day, accepted B.'s offer. At 5.47 p.m. and before receiving D.'s letter, B., by telegram, revoked his offer.

Held, that B. was bound by his contract.

This was an action in which Percy Baily, of Claremont, claimed from Hildyard Home Drummond £30, amount due for three months' rent and damages at the rate of £10 per month, for such time as the defendant should continue to occupy the premises after July 31 last.

The plaintiff's declaration stated:

1. The plaintiff is James Marcus Smith, under a duly executed power of attorney as agent for Percy Baily, late of Claremont, and at present travelling in Europe. The defendant is Hildyard Home Drummond, at present residing at Villa Marbella, Claremont, in the division of the Capo.

2. By an agreement bearing date April 3, 1905, plaintiff agreed to let, and the defendant to hire, a certain partly furnished house, known as Villa Marbella, Claremont, the property of the plaintiff, at the monthly rental of £10 sterling, payable on the first day of each month, the tenancy commencing as and from 1st April, 1905.

3. Plaintiff gave defendant possession of the said premises, and defendant paid plaintiff the apportioned rent for the month of April.

4. All things have happened, all times elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled to entitle plaintiff to payment by defendant of the sum of £30 sterling—being rent due at the rate of £10 per month for the months of May, June, and July, 1905, but though frequently requested so to do, defendant has refused or neglected, and still refuses or neglects, to pay the said sum of £30, or any part thereof.

5. Plaintiff further says that defendant has broken the agreement by failing to pay £10 on the first of each month, as therein provided, that the said agreement is thereby ended, and plaintiff is entitled to recover back the possession of the said premises. Plaintiff says that so long as defendant continues to occupy the same, he is suffering loss and damage to the extent of £10 sterling per month, being the rent of the said premises. Wherefore plaintiff claims: (a) Judgment against the defendant in the sum of £30 sterling; (b) an order for the ejectment of defendant from the said premises by reason of his breach of agreement; (c) damages at the rate of £10 per month for such time as defendant shall continue to occupy the said premises after July 31, 1905; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

For the plea to the declaration the defendant says as follows:

1. Paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 are admitted, save that the agreement was entered into and possession of the premises given by Percy Baily, and not by his agent, James Marcus Smith.

2. Defendant denies paragraphs 4 and 5, and says that on or about the 2nd day of May, 1905, he contracted with the said Percy Baily to purchase the property known as the Villa Marbella in the circumstances hereinafter set forth in the claim in reconvention, and to which the defendant craves leave to refer, and thereupon the agreement of lease was cancelled by mutual consent. Wherefore the defendant prays that

5. In or about the said 1897 the said Bassardien did by himself, his servants, or agents proceed wrongfully and unlawfully to encroach over the said boundary upon the land of the plaintiff, and to trespass thereon, and to remove therefrom a large portion of ground, the property of the plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff has suffered damage.

6. By reason of the premises, the plaintiff has suffered damage in the sum of £500.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) £500 damages, (b) alternative relief, (c) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea stated:

1. The defendant admits the allegations in paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of the declaration, in all save that he says he received letters of administration on 26th July, 1900.

2. He admits that in or about the year 1897, Saliem Bassardien did by himself, his agents or servants, excavate a portion of ground upon his (Bassardien's) land, but he denies that he thereby deprived plaintiff's land of any lateral support to which he was legally entitled, and the plaintiff has suffered any damage for which he (defendant) is legally responsible. He says that if there is any subsidence or danger of subsidence in or upon plaintiff's land, or any other damage done thereto, it was in no way due to Bassardien or any person for whom he is liable, but is due to the acts, defaults, and neglects of plaintiff or some other person for whose acts, defaults, and neglects he (defendant) is not liable, and more especially by the acts in the claim in reconviction set out.

3. Defendant denies the allegations in paragraphs 5 and 6, especially that the said Bassardien did by himself, his agents, or his servants, trespass on plaintiff's land, or remove large portions of ground therefrom, or otherwise do damage to plaintiff, in respect whereof the said plaintiff is entitled to claim the sum of £500 or any other sum.

Wherefore he prays that plaintiff's claim be dismissed, with costs.

And for a claim in reconviction, the defendant (now plaintiff) says:

5. He says that at divers times plaintiff (now defendant) has cut away portion of his own land, and has thus deprived the remainder of his own land of its natural support; he has erected heavy cement work on or towards the edge of the land from which the cutting has been made, and he has, through himself, or the occupiers, or tenants of his land, suffered large quantities of water to flow towards and to such edge.

6. By reason of the acts set out in the preceding paragraph, large quantities of earth, soil, and rock have fallen upon the defendant's (now plaintiff's) premises, and have caused damage which he estimates in the sum of £200, and large quantities will continue to fall unless plaintiff (now defendant) be ordered to take sufficient steps to abate the nuisance.

Wherefore the plaintiff in reconviction prays: (a) Judgment for the sum of £200 as and by way of damages; (b) An order calling upon defendant in reconviction to build a retaining wall of sufficient height and strength to abate the nuisance aforesaid; (c) such further and other relief as may seem meet, together with (b) costs of suit.

For a replication the plaintiff says:

1. He admits that the defendant received letters of administration on 26th July, 1900.

2. Save as above, he denies all and several the allegations in the plea, and joins issue thereon, and prays for judgment, with costs, as before.

For a plea in reconviction, the plaintiff (now defendant) says:

1. He craves leave to refer to the matters pleaded in his replication.

2. He denies that he has at any time cut away portions of his own land so as to deprive the remainder of his land of its natural support, or that he erected heavy cement work on or towards the edge of any land from which a cutting has been made by him, or that he has, through himself or the occupiers or tenants of his land, suffered large quantities of water to flow towards or to such edge.

3. He denies that by reason of any act set out in paragraph 5 of the claim in reconviction, or for which the plaintiff (now defendant) is liable, any quantities of earth, soil, or rock have fallen upon the defendant's (now plaintiff's) premises, or have caused any damage. He denies, further, that there is any nuisance on his land which he is liable to be called upon to abate.

4. He says that if large quantities of earth, soil, or rock have fallen upon the defendant's premises, or if quantities of water above the amount of the natural flow have flowed towards or to the said edge, or have caused damage, which he does not admit, the same is due to the wrongful acts of the defendant (now plaintiff), as set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the declaration.

Wherefore he prays that the claim in reconviction be dismissed with costs.

Rejoinder and replication in reconviction:

1. For a rejoinder to the replication in convention the defendant repeats all the allegations in his plea, and again prays that the claim in convention be dismissed with costs.

2. And for a replication he (now plaintiff) says that, save in so far as any of the allegations in the claim in reconviction are admitted by the plea thereto, he joins issue thereon, and again prays for judgment with costs.

Mr. Russell for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Bailey) for defendant.

James C. Bisset, Government land surveyor, testified to having drawn a plan of the grounds in question. The depth of the excavation was 22 feet, and it was about 11 feet broad. The boundary ran about nine inches from defendant's house.

Doffa Abrahams, the plaintiff, said he knew defendant, whose ground was just below witness's. Defendant had made certain excavations, when building his houses. If witness had his proper ground, he could get increased rental for his property.

In cross-examination, witness said that when he found Bassardien excavating the ground he went to him and told him to stop. Bassardien promised to put up a wall, but failed to do so. If the successors consented to build it now he would be quite satisfied.

Mr. Benjamin said he thought after the defendant's admission that there was not much necessity to lead further evidence. The cause of action for which the plaintiff sued was for damages for encroachment, and the plaintiff, by his own evidence, admitted that there was accord and satisfaction.

Hopley, J., considered it would be advisable to lead further evidence. He was not prepared to deal with the case at that stage.

In further cross-examination, the plaintiff said it was eight years since the excavation had been made.

Mr. Russell closed his case.

Robert Esdon, C.E., stated he knew the defendant's property. He was called in in 1897 to draw a plan for a house the defendant was about to erect. Witness believed he saw the title deeds, which showed two strips of land, one acquired in 1890 and the other seven years after. Witness taped off the frontage to Pepper and Bryant streets. It was necessary to prepare the site, and excavations would be necessary. It was necessary to make provision for a stormwater drain on the site. It became necessary for the builder to build over-hand from the inside wall. It was also necessary to excavate for an air space. That was all excavated within the defendant's property. Witness allowed 18 inches for the stormwater drain. The cliff was now "weathering," and two or three loads was lying against the wall, which caused the wall to dampen considerably.

In cross-examination: Witness said he must have considered the site for the building a good one, or he would not have drawn the plan.

Willem Versfeld, land surveyor, Cape Town, stated that he surveyed the defendant's property, and discovered two pegs, one being at the corner of Pepper-street and Bryant-street, and the other further down Bryant-street. He was satisfied that the former was a boundary peg. According to his survey, defendant was well within his boundary.

Cross-examined: The difference between himself and Mr. Bisset's survey was eight inches.

Armena Bassardien, widow of Salim Bassardien, said her husband did not cut away the face of the old quarry at all. The ground had been falling down from the cliff on to the house.

Counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J., said this case, like all cases brought against the estate of a deceased man, was somewhat unsatisfactory, because the man who did the acts complained of could not be present. In all such cases the Court was very exacting in having proof of the plaintiff's claim. The present action was for damages done by Bassardien in his lifetime. Taking it that in this colony one property had to give lateral support to another, there was nothing wrong in a person working up to the boundary of his own land; but if he injured his neighbour's property by removing anything, he should secure the safety of the place from which he moved it. In the present case, it was clear that when the parties bought the property, there was an old quarry. The exact locality of the quarry could not now be very well located, as it had been converted into building lots and streets, so that, when a set of witnesses told the Court that such a building was outside the boundary of the quarry, he held that their evidence had to be carefully scrutinized. There had been a conflict of evidence in the case. If people bought property on the edge of a quarry, they could not complain if in the natural crumbling away of the face of the quarry, their property was injured. The plaintiff held that the quarry was outside Bassardien's property. The engineers differed on that point. That the cliff did extend beyond the boundary was evident from the diagrams put in. From the evidence given, the Court was not satisfied that the accumulation of retuso was wholly due to the act or default of Bassardien. It was very difficult for the Court to say that Bassardien had done all this. If the plaintiff now came to the Court and said this damage had been done to his property, what was his duty when he saw it being done, instead of waiting until he could recover heavy damages? That point had been settled by the Supreme Court in 1895. The duty of the plaintiff when he saw Bassardien digging at the foot of the property was to apply to the Court for an interdict, unless Bassardien agreed to make it safe. He did not do so, but said that Bassardien promised a protecting wall. If he made that agreement, he should have moved to make Bassardien erect the wall. If there was this contract, it was very difficult to prove it, and he had not proceeded on it, and he (his lordship) thought the contract was so stale that no Court would give him relief on it. He felt that on these points the plaintiff's case was weak. It was difficult to believe that he would have allowed the case to go so far if he had thought he could get relief. All these things made it difficult for the Court to believe that he was entitled to judgment. There would be absolute from the instance, with costs.

Beacons — Adverse possession —
Long continued occupation —
Onus probandi.

This was an action brought by Christian Abraham Mauritz Visser, of Kriegerspoort, division of Hanover, against Gert Petrus van der Heever, of Beeste Kuil, also in the division of Hanover, for a declaration of rights, interest and damages.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a farmer residing at Kriegerspoort, in the division of Hanover, and the defendant is a farmer residing at Beestkuil, in the same division.

2. The parties are the registered owners respectively of the said farms, which adjoin each other.

3. The plaintiff annexes hereto a plan (marked "A"), showing the relative positions of the said farms, and he says that the true boundary line between them is represented by the line A, B, C, on the said plan.

4. For some eight or ten years back the defendant, by himself and his servants, has wrongfully and unlawfully trespassed with his cattle, and otherwise upon that portion of the plaintiff's said farm, which is represented on the said plan by the letters A, B, C, D, and is coloured in white, and the defendant has enclosed the same by means of a fence erected along the line A, D, C, and he still continues to trespass and encroach upon the said ground.

5. The defendant asserts that the boundary line between the two farms is the said line A, D, C, and he claims the whole of the area A, B, C, D, as his own property.

6. By reason of the wrongful and unlawful acts of trespass aforesaid, the plaintiff has been, and still is, deprived of a fertile and well-watered portion of his said farm, and has suffered damages to the extent of £384.

The plaintiff claims: (a) A declaration of rights as to the boundary line between his and the defendant's said farms; (b) that the true boundary line is the said line A, B, C, on the plan annexed; (c) an order compelling the defendant to remove the said fence back to the true boundary, as above defined; (d) a perpetual interdict restraining the defendant from trespassing upon the said portion of the farm Kriegerspoort marked A, B, C, D, on the plan; (e) the sum of £384 as damages aforesaid; (f) alternative relief; (g) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1, 2, and 5 of the declaration, save that he now resides in Hanover.

2. The defendant admits the relative positions of the farms as shown on the plan A, but he denies that the line a, b, c is the true boundary, and says that the line a, d, c is the true boundary.

3. The defendant says that since 1865, when he and his brother bought the said farm Beestekuil, he and his co-owners have uninterruptedly, and, as of right, used and occupied and grazed their cattle on the said farm up to the line a, d, c, and since 1873, when the defendant became the sole owner of the said farm, the defendant has likewise uninterruptedly and of right used and occupied the said farm up to the said line, and in or about the years 1890 and 1891 the defendant fenced in his said farm along the line a, d, c, and the then owner of plaintiff's land, plaintiff's predecessor in title paid his share of the cost of the said fence, and the plaintiff bought his said farm with knowledge of the foregoing. Save as aforesaid the defendant denies the allegations in paragraphs 4 and 6 of the declaration.

Wherefore defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

For a claim in reconvention defendant says: (1) He begs to refer to the pleadings in convention, wherefore he prays: (a) For an order declaring the line a, d, c to be the boundary between the parties; (b) alternative relief and costs of suit.

The plaintiff's replication was:

1. As to paragraph 3 of the plea, the plaintiff admits that the defendant erected a fence along the line a, d, c, but says that the said fence was erected without the consent of the plaintiff's predecessor in title, who was then the owner of the plaintiff's land. The said fence was erected with the consent of one B. J. du Plessis, who was at the time in occupation of the said land, and who gave his consent and contributed his share of the cost in consequence of certain incorrect representations, as to the boundary line between the said farms made to him by the defendant, but the said Du Plessis had no right nor authority to give such consent nor to pay such share of the cost, and the plaintiff is in any case not bound by his actions herein.

2. Save as above set forth, and save as to admissions, the plaintiff joins issue with the defendant upon his plea, and specially denies that the defendant or his co-owners have uninterruptedly and as of right used or occupied the said ground as alleged either since 1865 or since 1873.

For a plea to claim in reconvention, plaintiff said:

1. The plaintiff craves leave to refer to the pleadings in convention.

Wherefore he prays that the defendant's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The rejoinder was general.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton) for plaintiff. Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Sutton) for defendant.

Christian Abraham Mauritz Visser (the plaintiff) said that he attended the sale at which the farm Kriegerspoort was sold, in the estate of J. D. van der Heever, about ten years ago, witness's wife being a daughter of C. J. van der Heever. Witness was then living at Middelwater. He knew that there was a fence on the farm Kriegerspoort. The question was put, he thought by Dalton, as to how the farm was to be sold. The auctioneer (Mr. De Villiers) said that he was going to sell the farm according to diagram. Witness did not bid. The highest bid reached was £6,000, offered by Dalton. The farm was subsequently sold to Mrs. Du Plessis (witness's mother-in-law). His wife afterwards bought the farm in 1895 from her mother for £3,700, and in 1900 witness became the owner, the purchase price being £3,900. Witness went to the farm, and remained in possession until the war had broken out. Mr. Cillie then occupied the farm for two years and nine months, and witness returned, and was now in occupation. Witness described the steps which he took to secure the removal of the fence. As to the land in dispute, he considered that it was of great value, seeing that it comprised the river veld and gave access to the water.

By the Court: He valued the land in question at about £1,600.

[Buchanan, A.C.J. (to witness): Would it not be a fair thing to divide the land between you and defendant?]

I thought we should do so. That was why we got a surveyor. Everything was in the hands of my agents.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Of course, the question I have to decide is as to the legal rights, but I think that that would be a very fair basis of compromise between the parties.]

Mr. Murray, land surveyor, Colesberg, said that it was inconsistent with the data of the diagram of Beeste Kuil that the disputed ground should be in Beeste Kuil. It was not completely consistent with the diagram of Kriegerspoort that the ground should be in that farm, but it was less inconsistent that the land should belong to that farm than that it should belong to Beeste Kuil.

By the Court: The data which he had obtained from actual survey did not agree with the diagrams.

Mr. Schreiner put in correspondence which had taken place since the trial was commenced, with a view to a compromise. The plaintiff's attorneys had written to the defendant's attorneys suggesting that as this litigation would be a possible source of friction between neighbours and relatives in the future, the land in dispute should be equally divided between plaintiff and defendant, so that the parties could have access to the perennial water, each party to pay his own costs and the expenses of Mr. Surveyor Murray to be equally shared. The reply of the defendant's attorneys was that he (defendant) felt that he had been forced into court by the plaintiff, and that at this stage he could not entertain the proposed compromise. A further letter was addressed by plaintiff's attorneys to the other side, allowing them until ten o'clock this morning to consider the offer. No further communication had, however, been received from defendant's attorneys.

Hannah Catherina Visser (wife of the plaintiff), Pieter Jacobus Visser (cousin of the plaintiff and defendant), Abram Jacobus Cillie, farmer, formerly of Kriegerspoort, and William Muller, clerk in the Deeds Office, were also called on behalf of the plaintiff.

The defendant, Gert Petrus van der Heever, said that he was a retired farmer, and now lived in Hanover. Beeste Kuil was bequeathed in his father's will to witness and his brother, but it was afterwards sold to them by his father. Kriegerspoort was at that time owned by his father.

Mr. McGregor was about to put in a certain "koop brief" or agreement of sale of Beeste Kuil to witness and his brother, when

Mr. Schreiner objected that the document was inadmissible. The document was signed, the witness had stated, by his father and mother; it was produced from the private custody of the other side; it had not been registered; and counsel urged that the Court had no opportunity of testing it.

Buchanan, A.C.J., noted the objection, but ruled that the document was admissible.

Defendant, in further evidence, said that he became owner of the whole of Beeste Kuil in 1873. They had occupied the farm up to the limits of Booï's Kraal.

Postea (October 27th).

Mr. Schreiner addressed the Court in argument on the facts.

Without calling upon Mr. McGregor, Buchanan, A. C. J.: Mr. Schreiner has argued this case and raised all the points most carefully and fully, and I have listened very attentively to his argument; but he has not convinced me that he has succeeded in this action. The farm Kriegerspoort is held by the plaintiff; the farm Beeste Kuil belongs to the defendant. The dividing line between these two farms is in dispute. The boundary beacon on the west side and the one on the east side are admitted, but the line running between these two beacons takes an angle, and it is the angle beacon which is in dispute. A corner beacon at Wolveberg is marked "A," and the other corner beacon, at Hoogmoedsfontein, is marked "C." The plaintiff claims that the line should run "A.B.C.," and the defendant says that the line is "A.D.C." These two points are about half-way between the two places, and involve a dispute of some 386 morgen. The defendant is in possession of the disputed land. The present occupation is against the plaintiff, and the plaintiff must come into court and establish his right to alter the present occupation. Moreover, the line which is claimed by the defendant is fenced off, and has been fenced off for some time. As the plaintiff is not in possession of the land, it is desirable that we should go back to the original grant of these farms, to see how far the plaintiff's claim is sustained by the original grants, by any of the diagrams which have passed between the owners since that time, or by the conduct of the parties ever since. The two farms were probably occupied before any grants were given to them. Kriegerspoort, the plaintiff's farm, was granted in 1841, and Beeste Kuil was granted first in 1842, and afterwards in 1846. From the diagram, it will be seen that these farms must have been surveyed some time before the grant. In the survey by Van Abo, in 1830, of Beeste Kuil, the farm Kriegerspoort is shown to be adjoining, and when we look at that of the farm Kriegerspoort we see that the farm Beeste Kuil is marked as adjoining Kriegerspoort. Eventually, the whole of these farms must have been occupied before the grants were got. The surveyor of Beeste Kuil and Kriegerspoort is the same surveyor, and the two original diagrams made by him were evidently intended to fit in one with another, so as to leave no vacant space between Kriegerspoort and Beeste Kuil. His Lordship went on to refer to the course taken by the stream through the property, as marked on the diagrams, and proceeded: From the evidence of the surveyor who has now surveyed the land, I must say that there is no indication whatever of any change of the course of the stream, as now found in actual survey. It must be running more or less in the actual position in which it was when these farms were granted originally. Mr. Murray, the surveyor, said that the stream could not be seen for the whole distance, and the diagrams, as they stand, are certainly in favour to some extent, but not altogether, of the plaintiff's claim. But when we look at the position of the parties, the occupation seems to me to have been altogether against the plaintiff's claim and in favour of the defendant's claim. The grants, as I said, were given in 1841 and 1842 and 1846, if I am correct in my dates. The farm Beeste Kuil was bought by old Mr. Van der Heever, and in 1860 he bought the farm Kriegerspoort. While Mr. Van der Heever was owner of both these farms, he entered into an agreement with two of his sons, the present defendant and Christoffel, to sell them the farm Beeste Kuil in half-shares. It is common among gentlemen like Mr. Van der Heever to dispose of their property to their sons as a kind of half-bequest, half-sale, as was done in this case, and a "koop brief" was entered into between old Mr. Van der Heever and his wife and the two sons. From the old diagram of 1865 I think it is clear that the corner beacon which is now in dispute is shown by the "koop brief" to be the beacon now claimed by the defendant, marked D. Here, then, in 1865, we have the owners of both properties describing the beacons, and therefore the line which divides the two farms, and that description is altogether in favour of the defendant's claim. The transfer was made to the defendant and his brother of Beeste Kuil in 1866. Three years after, in 1869, a further division of the property seems to have been desired by old Mr. Van der Heever, and he directed Surveyor Breda to cut off a portion of the farm Kriegerspoort. The object for which this part was cut off is not clearly stated in the evidence. On the one side it is stated that the object was to hand over this to Beeste Kuil and give the remainder to the other brother, Johannes, and on the other hand it is stated that the object was to reserve a residence for the old gentleman and give the remainder of Kriegerspoort to Johannes, the step-brother of the defendant, and Christoffel. Johannes, however, would not fall in with this agreement, and nothing was done beyond the survey. When we look at the survey, we find that it lays down a line in accordance with the line now claimed by the defendant. On this diagram, framed by Breda at the time, which Mr. Schreiner suggests was made for the purpose of obtaining an amended title to Beeste Kuil, he (Mr. Breda) says: "Surveyed by me according to the existing beacons held by the proprietors of this and neighbouring farms, etc." This was in 1869. This diagram, therefore, is against the plaintiff's claim. After the proposed arrangement fell through, Christoffel Van der Heever sold back to his father his half-share of Beeste Kuil, which was transferred to the father absolutely for £600, the original price being £225. He must have sold it in 1872, I presume, according to the diagram put in. The father immediately transferred this half of Beeste Kuil to the defendant, who has since 1873 been the owner of the registered title of the whole farm of Beeste Kuil. Christoffel had at that time received transfer of the farm Kriegerspoort, and in the receipt which has been put in, signed by old Mr. Van der Heever, he acknowledges receipt of the purchase price of this farm, the whole of Kriegerspoort. Now, it is suggested that this receipt in the words, "the whole of Kriegerspoort," includes the whole of the ground now in dispute; but I think it is quite as reasonable to say that it means the ground which had been cut off from Kriegerspoort, and is now given to it. At the time Christoffel was owner of half of Beeste Kuil, I think it is clearly proved that he claimed or exercised dominium over the ground now in dispute, as part owner of Beeste Kuil, and I think he also took steps to whitewash the beacon now claimed by defendant. Mr. Schreiner suggested that the original intention of the surveyor was to give access to both farms to the western branch of the stream marked No. 1. Now, if that had been the intention of the surveyor, nothing would have been easier than to have made the river the boundary line between the two parties, but he has not done that. Up, therefore, to the time of Christoffel's ownership of part of the farm Beeste Kuil, I think there is no doubt that Ooi's Kraal beacon was the true beacon and boundary of this farm. I am not prepared to say, on this evidence, that there is no support for the contention that at no time afterwards did he dispute that beacon. It is no doubt unfortunate for plaintiff that Christoffel is dead, and several witnesses who might have thrown light on the subject have not been before the Court. The defendant has been in occupation since 1865 onwards. We have produced for the plaintiff, witnesses
